In questions of this kind the facts of geography must be recognized, as a most important factor. In this respect Japan is particularly fortunate in her central position, with her well lighted coasts, deep water harbours, and ample facilities for docking and repairing vessels, all of which are of first importance in attracting commerce to these shores.

A wider object in view than to promote travelling for pleasure is, as has been outlined, the development of through traffic in the interchange of merchandize. This is not the time or place to discuss the details of this problem. I believe it can be solved by the close co-operation of all the interested carriers, so that all shall participate on equitable terms and that well recognized documents, through Bills of Lading, shall have the same high protection as a Government Bond. These are important measures to link up the peace and prosperity of the Orient, to increase friendly intercourse between the East and the West, they will rest on a firmer foundation than "scraps of paper," and we shall hope for their consummation with the early return of peace.

After the speeches, toasts were proposed to Mr. Wang and Baron Goto. Mr. Hsu Shih-ying, the Minister of Communications of China sent a telegram to Baron Goto yesterday congratulating him upon the success of the conference and the celebration.

In the evening the Chinese guests were entertained at the Imperial Hotel to dinner at which covers were laid for a large number of guests. After the national toasts had been honoured, Baron Goto rose and the following well-chosen words welcomed the guests:

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen,

My object in inviting you to this evening's gathering is, on the one hand, to relieve the fatigue incident to the prolonged journey of His Excellency Mr. Wang, Vice-Minister of Communications, and the several high officials of the Ministry of Communications of the Chinese Republic, who are here in this city to attend the Celebration Commemorating the Japan-China Railway Through Traffic, and, on the other, to spend an enjoyable evening with all of you gentlemen directly or indirectly interested in the aforesaid Through Traffic. I consider it an especial honour that, in spite of the very busy season, both public and private, my invitation has met with the gracious acceptance of His Excellency the Chinese Minister and so many other distinguished gentlemen, both foreign and Japanese.

As regards the history of the Japan-China Railway Through Traffic and its future hopes, I took advantage of the Ceremony of Celebration to dwell upon the subject in some detail and therefore shall avoid repeating it here this evening. But as the interested parties, though very closely related to each other in their business, have seldom been favoured, much to my regret, with opportunities to meet together on account of the distance lying between us, I wish that all here present would avail themselves of this opportunity, so as to make this gathering result in cementing the already existing friendship among the interested parties.

Indeed there have been many plans made in various quarters to beguile the tedium of the delegates now on a visit to Tokyo. But we have refrained from keeping our guests too busy with partaking of entertainments, so as to allow enough time for their primary object of investigation into the various phases of Japan's national activities, and for their interviews with our leading people, in and out of the Japanese Government, with whom they are directly and indirectly associated. With this idea in view, we have arranged so as to make the number of banquets as few as possible, and we are a little afraid lest you may think us somewhat lacking in hospitality. But it is our sincere hope that you will kindly fall in with the arrangements we have specially made and which we trust to be opportune for the present occasion. Thus, I shall be delighted if you will make yourselves quite at home and exchange views without reserve.

In conclusion, allow me to thank, and propose the health of, our guests of honour, His Excellency Mr. Wang, the Vice-Minister of Communications, and the delegates, His Excellency Mr. Chang, the Chinese Minister, representatives of Japanese and foreign trans-Pacific steamship lines, and other gentlemen whose presence makes this evening brilliant and joyous.

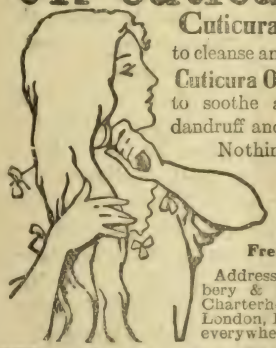
Mr. Wang, who rose to reply spoke as follows:

Your Excellency Baron Goto,

We are most delighted to have the honour of being present at this magnificent dinner party on the day of Celebration Commemorating the China-Japan Through Traffic.

Our Ministry of Communications was very grateful for the cordial invitation of the Imperial Government Railways of Japan, and nothing gave us more pleasure than to accept it. We, therefore, at once selected some delegates out of the leading officials in various departments of the Ministry of Communications and they are here. We are expected by our Government to take advantage of this opportunity and to study the recent development and progress of this country, besides attending the Ceremony of Celebration to which we were invited. Naturally the company of our delegates comprises representatives of various branches of Government service, such as railway, post and telegraph, savings, and merchantile marine affairs. Especially with regard to railway, we include in our company the representatives of the Divisions of our main lines and of the railway lines which are most closely connected with your railways.

Our party were very pleased to be accorded with the warmest reception by the government as well as by the people all the way up here from Peking. We made most delightful trips to Dairen and through Chosen and again in Japan proper, and have seen a great deal already which were of a great interest to us.



The amity of China and Japan which has long been advocated in both the countries should now take a concrete form out of words and letters. In fact I believe, the time is fast ripening for the realization of the ideal.

When we look back upon the mutual relations between China and Japan regarding the through communications, we cannot but recognize, much to our regret, not a few things to be desired. In recent years, economic relations in general between China and Japan and also relations in educational point, have developed into ever closer ones, but with regard to the enterprise of railway and other transportation facilities in China both the countries have not yet come into a closer contact in point of finance as well as in engineering work. To say this more plainly, capitals for railway constructions, as you know very well, have been mostly defrayed by European or American financiers, and consequently the engineering as well as management of the railways have in most cases taken after those in Europe and America, and there are only few instances where examples have been taken from this country.

It goes without saying that the construction, maintenance, management, etc., of the transportation organs should conform to the special conditions of the country. The conditions in China are different from those of Europe and America. To take the railway as an example, in Europe it is very easy to raise capitals and while the interest is comparatively low, the labour is very dear, but in China the contrary is the case, that is, it is very difficult to get capitals and naturally we must pay a very high interest, but the labour is very cheap. In many other respects we see such a difference between Europe or America and China, so I believe more can be learnt from Japan rather than from Europe and America in the establishment of a new railway and the management thereof. This of course holds good with other transportation organs such as post, telegraph, merchantile marine and also with postal savings.

The total length of our railways has now reached 4,000 miles, and it will be almost 10,000 miles when the lines under construction or in contemplation are included. Up to this date it has been the period of imitation in both the construction and management of transportation organs, but I think from this date onward, we must construct, maintain, and manage our railways so that they may conform to the conditions of our country. The main object of our present visit to this country is to collect data to be utilized in this direction. Fortunately we have already gained not a little in Dairen and Chosen and it is our earnest desire that we shall obtain more by studying various works directly or indirectly connected with railway, post, telegraph, merchantile marine and so forth, under your kind guidance.

Among the delegates from China there are many men who were educated in Japan, myself being one of them. As they studied in this country for from four to eight years, they feel as though they came back to their second home and many pleasant recollections are arising in their mind one after another. Therefore, although we are so busy to study the recent development and progress of your country, that even an hour is most precious to us, we personally wish very much to enquire after the health of our old teachers, to visit our alma mater, to see our school mates and have talks with them recollecting cheerful days of our school life.

Moreover we have been given an opportunity to see in person many distinguished persons in and out of the Government including Count Terauchi and other cabinet members, and to listen to their useful discourses. This is really the greatest honour that we have ever been conferred upon.

When we think of this and that, we feel all sorts of sentiments arising at a time in our heart, which disable me to say even one tenth of what I think and feel. I can only express our most grateful thanks to you all from the bottom of my heart.

Count Terauchi was the next speaker:

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen,

The present celebration commemorating the Japan-China Through Traffic has been honoured with the presence of many distinguished personages from various quarters, and our thanks are especially due to our guests from the Republic of China for coming so far in response to our invitation. With regard to the through traffic arrangements, Baron Goto, President of the Imperial Government Railways, dwelt upon them in full detail at the ceremony of celebration, and nothing is left for me to add. But, as I am not only connected with railways in public life, but also have been closely related to them in private life as the president of the Railway Society for years past, I should like to say just a few words about the relations between Chinese and Japanese railways on this auspicious occasion.

From personal observation, I am convinced that the future development of China largely depends upon the services to be rendered by the railways. It need scarcely be pointed out that China, our neighbouring country, has the enormous population of 400 millions and is endowed with inexhaustible sources of wealth. Now the efficient utilization of such huge supply of labour and the development of such abundant natural resources can only be realized by the extension of railway lines, and with this opinion of mine, I believe, all here present will agree. When China becomes rich by solving several questions, either political or economic, through the service of railways, it will be a benefit not only to China, but also to Japan, which stands in close economic relations with China, because Japan will be able to obtain a supply of cheap raw materials and to extend the markets of her manufactures. Therefore, the development of Chinese railways is advantageous to both China and Japan.

The close relations between China and Japan are traceable not only to their inhabitants' being of the same race and using the same written characters but also to the fact that Japan in the past owed a great deal to China in the development of her literature, religion, fine arts and so forth. Even now the two countries keep up relations in which one supplies the other's want with what it itself has in abundance. But two adjacent countries are easily led into a disparity of opinions on account of their being too intimate. It is most regrettable that China and Japan should have shared this fate, having often experienced misunderstandings and the collision of feelings in the past, but in recent years, the well-educated people in both countries have come to understand well their common interests and we hear on all sides the demand for the amity of Japan and China. This phenomenon is, needless to say, a matter of congratulation making for the peace of the Orient as well as promoting the welfare of our two countries.

Of course it would be valueless, if the amity of Japan and China were to be expressed only in words or letters and not put into practice. If both the nations sincerely desire the promotion and maintenance of friendly relations between themselves, they must translate their words into actions, engraving deeply on their minds the sincere wish to be kind and friendly to each other. As past experience has taught us, when our mutual relations become closer in future, it may be inevitable that many disputes should arise between us. But when such questions do crop up, intelligent observers in both countries must try to solve them with sincere kindness and friendship, that nothing may be left to rankle on either side. I desire the Chinese delegates especially to concur with me upon this point.

Your Excellencies and Gentlemen,

I consider it a great honour and feel very grateful to have been privileged to be present at this magnificent dinner party given by Baron Goto, President of the Imperial Government Railways, and to have been given an opportunity to speak a few words before Your Excellencies and gentlemen on this memorable occasion. With regard to the China-Japan Through Traffic, detailed statements were made by the representatives of both the countries at the Ceremony of this morning, and I think it need no superfluous words from me, but I think I may be allowed to express my sentiments on this occasion. I take a special interest in the China-Japan Through Traffic Conference, because each conference has never failed to contribute its share toward the improvement of through traffic facilities between the two countries. The railways in our country cannot be said to have reached a perfection in through traffic arrangements, but as main points regarding the enforcement of through traffic between China and Japan, have already been agreed upon, I can say with confidence that the through traffic between the two countries as well as the domestic traffic in our country will achieve gradual development, although some unexpected minute questions may possibly arise on account of the present condition of our railways. This state of affairs is really a matter of hearty congratulation for both the countries. Such a rapid development of the through traffic between us, I believe, is due to mutual advantages that can be gained out of it. It is my belief that the amity of our two nations can only be realized upon the basis of mutual advantages.

NEWS & NOTES

The Foreign Office announced on Tuesday that foreigners desiring to enter Mexico need to have passports issued by the Mexican Legations or Consulates.

The Japanese postal authorities can now accept wireless message to Hawaii San Francisco, etc., via the Funabashi Wireless Station, owing to the reopening of the Kahuku Wireless Station in Hawaii by sanction of the American Navy authorities.

The Mountain Association, will hold its tenth meeting at the Sankaido Akasaka, on April 22nd. An exhibition of literature about mountains, specimens of mountain plants and other interesting articles will be opened from 9 o'clock in the morning. In the evening, Dr. H. Takeda will deliver a lecture on the mountain plants of Japan.

Athletic champions from China to the Far Eastern Olympic Games, states a Shanghai dispatch to the "Jiji," will leave Shanghai on April 26 by the N.Y.K. Kasuga Maru, arriving in Tokyo on May 1. It is reported that contests of various colleges and schools will be held on Saturday in Shanghai, Wuchang and Tientsin with a view to nominating Chinese representatives to the Olympiad.

A bribery case has been recently unearthed in Formosa. The case involves many Government building contractors who are alleged to have pocketed enormous profits from the works for the Government-General of Formosa by bribing officials of the Government. Representatives mixed up of the contracting firms of Sawai-gumi, Kajima-gumi, Takaishi-gumi, Okura-gumi, and Morijima-gumi have been arrested, and astonishing developments are expected.

An alteration will be made in the time table of the ferry service between Moji and Shimonoseki on and after May 1, announces the Imperial Government Railways. According to the proposed change, the first ferry from Shimonoseki will leave at 5.55 a.m., arriving at Moji at 6.10 a.m., while the first boat from Moji will start at 8.05 a.m. reaching Shimonoseki at 8.20 a.m. There will be four ferry services a day from Shimonoseki and Moji and vice-versa.

The Foreign Office received on the 14th from Moscow a report that the Russian Government conferred on its Finance Minister the right to issue internal bonds at 5 per cent. interest for a term of 55 years under the designation of "1917 Free Bond." The bonds were placed on the market on April 6 and lists will be closed by May 31. The amount of the issue is not made public and is left for the Finance Minister to decide.

The Department of Communications announces that the gross receipts through the postal, telegraphic and telephone enterprises during the fiscal year for 1916 just ended amounted to 73,904,563 yen, showing an increase of 12,313,130 yen over the estimated figure. The receipts are itemized as follows:

Postage stamps, 37,154,655 yen; postal revenue, 12,182,551 yen; telegraph, 7,075,077 yen; telephone, 17,492,280 yen.

Friction has recently occurred in Osaka over the question of appropriating a sum of 43,000 yen as suggested by the city authorities as expenses for celebrating the completion of the electric railway. Certain lawyers of Osaka city raised a strong objection to the measure. The city council met and adopted a decision to appropriate the above-mentioned sum out of the city treasury to defray the cost of a banquet to which were to be invited prominent citizens and officials of Osaka, besides arranging entertainments for the citizens in general. The lawyers claim such a step forms an unlawful drain on the public coffers. No settlement appears in sight.

It has been discovered that cherry trees at Yoshino-yama, the most celebrated cherry flower resort in Japan, have been attacked by white ants. This has given no small surprise to the care-takers of the resort and on the 9th Dr. Nawa, prominent entomologist, and several members of the Nawa Institute for Entomological Research visited Yoshino-yama and instituted investigations as to the damage wrought by the white ants. A vigorous crusade against invaders has been launched and is reported to be still in progress. It is regrettable to learn that a number of ancient cherry trees have already fallen victims.

TOKYO FOREIGN OFFICE HAULED OVER COALS

The "Jitsugyo no Nihon" in its editorial columns, criticises the policy of the Foreign Office in hindering the development of the Japanese in the Orient and South Sea Islands. The article says that the Foreign Office has not given any encouragement to the development of the Japanese in the Orient and South Seas, and it has in the past prevented the possible progress of Japanese trade and industries in these quarters.

After the conclusion of the European war, reads the article, Japan should endeavour to make a world-wide development, and while the trade with Europe and America is to be encouraged, the magazine believes that the future field of activity for the Japanese will be in the Orient and South Sea islands. At present, Japan is exporting Japanese products to Europe and America to the extent of 330,000,000 yen, and the imports from Europe and America amount to 180,000,000 yen. So large a trade should be encouraged and improved, but the European and American countries are all superior to Japan as industrial nations, and in equipment and organizations for industrial activity, they are far more advanced than Japan. What Japan imports from these countries are the finished products, and Japan exports only the raw material or half finished articles.

There is no doubt that the present amount of trade with Europe and America will no decrease even after the conclusion of the present war, and there is a good possibility of increasing the amount by the development of the Japanese industries and expansion of the trade. However the progress in this direction will be far more difficult than the development of trade with oriental countries and the South Sea Islands.

The people of the orient and south seas are more backward than Japanese, and they have not yet developed as an industrial people, and Japan occupies a favourable geographical position to become the supplier to these countries. With the decrease of the entry of the European products recently, the export of Japanese articles to these parts has greatly increased, but when peace is concluded, the European and American nations will try to regain the lost trade with the people of the Orient and the South Seas. Japan should be, consequently, prepared to meet such competition, and develop a better trade relation with these parts of the world.

Not only the Orient and South Sea islands offer a profitable market for Japanese products, but the territories are suitable as homes for the surplus population of Japan to develop the undeveloped resources of these lands. The economical development of Japan in future depends upon the expansion of the Japanese trade in the Orient and the South Seas.

For this development the magazine, sincerely hopes that the Foreign Office will open the road for expansion by Japanese, and give the Japanese traders and settlers, the best possible assistance. But the magazine is sceptical about such assistance from the Foreign Office. The Department of Foreign Affairs, is nicknamed the branch office of the Foreign Office of the British Government, and is always watching the favours of the foreign government. At the beginning of the establishment of the Foreign Office, it imitated the European government, and tried in every way to win the favour of other governments, and the exhibit is still prevailing even to-day. The magazine sincerely hopes that the Foregn Office, will consider the benefit and interest of the Japanese public instead of trying to favour other countries.

The coming peace conference is important to the future development of Japanese trade, and judging from past examples, it is difficult to hope for a favourable decision at the peace Conference for the progress of Japanese trade. A trade war after the conclusion of the present fighting is inevitable, and in the Orient, Japan will be the nation which has to meet the competition of all European and American nations. The Foreign Office, should carefully study the trade conditions in the Orient and South Seas, and take necessary steps to protect the Japanese interest and encourage the future expansion, and further prevent any step on the part of other Governments to restrict the development of Japanese trade.

The supply of the raw material is the most important problem in the industrial development, and if foreign nations stop the export of such raw materials as cotton, wool and other commodities the Japanese industries will have to face bankruptcy. For the protection of their own industries, the other nations may impose a heavy tax upon the export to Japan, or even stop the export. The Paris Economic Conference of the Allies, declared that the supply of raw materials will be only given to the allied powers, but when their own industries are to be protected and developed, it is possible that some country may tax heavily the export of such materials. If the Foreign Office fails to take proper steps to protect the Japanese interest, the Japanese industries may suffer extremely in the coming trade war.

It is necessary for Japan to send her surplus population to other nations where there are opportunities for their progress, and the educationists of the country are teaching the young men to plan their activity in foreign lands. But the Foreign Office is opposing such a plan, and it has prevented the travel of the Japanese in the Orient and South Seas. The reason for this prevention is reported to be the fear of the Foreign Office that such Japanese may fail in foreign lands and become the object of ridicule of other people.

Recently a Japanese who had resided in the Dutch East Indies for over ten years, found himself in difficulty with the Dutch authorities over a certain misunderstanding, and he requested the Japanese Consul to come and solve the problem. But the Japanese Consul refused to do anything with such a personal affair, and finally the Japanese crossed the sea and went to see the Consul in person, and earnestly requested his visit. Finally a clerk of the Consulate was sent, but the Consul demanded the payment of the travelling expenses of the clerk, which the Japanese refused to pay. But after a discussion the Japanese paid the cable tolls for the transmission of messages to the Foreign Office on the matter. Upon the arrival of the clerk at the scene, the question was easily and satisfactorily solved. This proves, says the magazine, that the Foreign Office, is always wishing not to do anything, and the Consulate established for the protection of the Japanese and development of the Japanese trade refuses to do anything to protect the Japanese, which is actually its duty.

Recently the government of the Federated Malay States prevented the leasing of land larger than fifty acres, and it will greatly hinder the future development of the Japanese in the rubber plantations in the Malay Peninsula. The magazine regrets the attitude of the Malay States Government, considering the fact that the British and Japanese Government have been so friendly. It is due to the inactivity of the Foreign Office, that the Japanese subjects have to suffer from these disadvantages.

After the conclusion of the war, all industrial and commercial problems will become international in nature and scope, and while impossibilities are not demanded of the Foreign Office, the magazine hopes that at least the Foreign Office, will try to remove the obstacles in the development of the Japanese trade and commerce, and not prevent the natural progress of the public.

SINO-AMERICAN PACT IS NOW SUGGESTED

The "Peking Daily News," in its editorial columns of April 12 dealing with the current diplomatic question of China under the caption "A Sino-American Alliance Proposal," recommends the conclusion of an alliance between China and America as a step likely to bring about results profitable to both parties. The paper has it that the trend of the affairs of the world has assumed such an aspect as does not allow the United States to stick to its principle of isolation any longer and she finds herself in a position which makes it necessary to join hands and sail in the same boat with one or other of the world's powers. For the United States, opines the paper, it is most advisable and timely to enter into an alliance with China, which is a republican nation like the United States herself, and therefore her meet ally. By combining with China, it asserts, the United States will derive very good results, and secure no less profit than it gives to China. In the concluding part of the article the paper quotes the articles of the "New York Herald" and other American papers advocating the conclusion of an American-Chinese alliance and calls attention to the recent conference of the ministerial committee on international affairs in Peking.

A Peking dispatch dated April 12 to the "Tokyo Asahi" states that according to the Chinese press reports Dr. Reinsch, the American Minister to Peking, recently submitted a detailed report on the proceedings of the American Congress on its decision on the measures towards Germany and at the same time questioned as to China's final decision on the question vis-à-vis Germany. It is also stated that the American Minister called on Premier Tuan Chi-jui and advised him to follow the example of the United States in dealing with Germany.

Another Peking dispatch, under the same date, reports that President Li Yuan-hung invited Dr. Reinsch, the American Minister, to a lunch on the 11th and had an informal conversation on current politics. That evening the President invited to dinner several prominent leaders of the political parties in the Chinese Parliament and informally exchanged views on political and diplomatic questions of the moment. It is learned that on this occasion President Li insisted on the advisability of taking most prudent attitude regarding the question of China's participation in the war and pointed out the inadvisability of China's following the example of the United States vis-à-vis Germany.

The Peking Government has decided to convene a conference of the military governors of all provinces with a view to submit to them the pending military and diplomatic questions and settle its final decision according to their views. Instructions have been already issued to various provinces. The conference will take place on the 16th in Peking, and already the military governors of Hupeh, Anhui, Kianghsi, Shanshi, Mukden, Kirin and Honan have responded to the call of the Central Government. The military governor of Kiangsu will not be present at the conference, but will send a representative. The military governors of the distant provinces, who find it impossible to come to the capital in due time, will be represented by the governors of other provinces. The conference which has been called at the instance of Mr. I Ssu-chung is understood to be mainly intended for finding measures for the solution of the diplomatic difficulty of the present moment, and the attention of the public is drawn to the result of the coming conference, inasmuch as President Li Yuan-hung is reported to have stated on the occasion of the dinner given to the leading parliamentarian representatives that the question relating to China's participation in the war would be submitted to the conference of the military governors for final settlement.

A Shanghai dispatch of the 12th says that at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet Council Premier Tuan Chi-jui asked the Ministers present to express their views about the question of declaring war against Germany. None of the Ministers present advocated such a drastic step as declaring war on Germany, Mr. Hsu Shi-ying, the Communications Minister, strongly opposing the idea. Premier Tuan alone insisted on the urgent necessity of declaring war against Germany. Under such circumstances, it is observed that no final decision will be arrived at until after the conference of the military governors. The committee on international politics also held a conference the same day and discussed the same subject. At the committee meeting, many members insisted on the advisability of declaring war on Germany in view of America's having taken up arms and urged the necessity of taking prompt action in doing so. But Premier Tuan stated that as an opposition was voiced among the trading community it was advisable to submit to the discussion of the military governors' conference to be held shortly. Thus the meeting ended without arriving at any definite decision.

JAPAN AND CHINA

"The Japanese Government did not coerce China to diplomatically break off with Germany nor is it coercing China to join the war on the side of the Allies." This statement was made by a high official of the Foreign Office Monday when asked to define the exact position in which Japan is standing in relation to China's dilemma in her present international affairs.

"While it is true," continued the official, "that the Japanese Government told the Chinese Government, when it was approached for its opinion, that it would be better for China, in view of her actual position, to join the war, the Japanese Government has gone no farther. Giving our views upon China's solicitation was the point of limitation we went to."

PLANS FOR REFORM SET ON FOOT IN GERMANY

In connection with the recent disquietude in the internal political circles of Germany the following telegram reached an authoritative quarter here on the 13th from Stockholm, Sweden:—

During the present session of the Reichstag and Prussian Diet the debate over the question of reforming the internal political system of Germany was very prominent. Of late the people of Germany have been stimulated by the recent revolution in Russia and the address by President Wilson in Congress in declaring war on Germany; and the Socialist, and Liberal parties, joined by the Central Party, have demanded that the Goverment reform the political organization of the nation in spite of the war, insisting upon the adoption of a Parliamentary government system. Under the pressure of these parties the Reichstag, despite the opposition offered by the Conservative parties, decided to establish a Committee on Revision of the Constitution. On April 7 Emperor Wilhelm handed to Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg an Imperial order, the gist of which was as follows:—

"In pursuance of my desire to promote the interest of the nation as a whole in concert with my people, I have decided to carry out the political, financial, and social reformations of the country, so far as they can be accomplished without hampering the prosecution of the war or hindering the best of the nation's energy. The fundamental revision of the Constitution must be postponed until after the termination of the war, but the government authorities will turn their atention to preparations for that programme.

"With regard to the Election Law of the Lower House of the Prussian Diet, a definite bill will be immediately drafted recognizing the rights of universal suffrage, and direct and secret voting. The Upper House will also be so reformed as to represent more thoroughly all classes and vocations in the country."

In a message date March 31 at Amsterdam, we read:

Stormy scenes occurred in the Reichstag on the 30th, Socialists, amid shouts of "Treason!", declaring that a republic in Germany is inevitable and demanding larger powers for the Reichstag in matters of foreign policy.

The Socialist deputy, Dr. David, said that a separate peace with Russia was not so easy to consummate as the Chancellor imagined. He demanded the creation of a constitutional democratic State.

Herr Ledebour, another Socialist deputy, asked: "If the Kaiser advised the Tsar in 1905 no longer to oppose the demands of the Russian people, why does not the Chancellor venture in a similar manner to advise the Kaiser? We regard a republic as an inevitable development in Germany (Uproar in the House). History is marching with seven-league boots. The German people are incredibly patient" (Shouts of "Treason.")

The President of the Reichstag cautioned Herr Ledebour, who continued: "The Reichstag must have a voice in the conclusion of alliances, treaties of peace and declarations of war. The Chancellor must be dismissed when the Reichstag demands his dismissal."

Again, a message from the same source the following day says:

A message from Vienna states that the press in Austria and Hungary, following the lead given by the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, clamours for peace, declaring that Count Czernin's proposal offers an honourable settlement.

HELP FOR HOMELESS BELGIANS UNDER HUN

In aid of the households of the deported Belgian martyrs a tea-concert was held yesterday on the 12th at the Imperial Hotel. It was one of the most successful social affairs of the year, being attended by the entire diplomatic corps and many prominent Japanese. It was held under the patronage of Marchioness Okuma, Countess Terauchi, Viscountess Motono, Countess Toda, Princess Tokugawa, Princess Mori, Countess Ogasawara, Baroness Iwasaki, Baroness Mitsui, Baroness Furukawa and Countess della Faille.

An interesting programme had been arranged by the committee. Mme Polain opened the concert with the singing of the Albert and Elizabeth March, the marching song of the Belgian Army. Miss Wootton entertained the audience with a dance, and Mrs. P. Metz sang two pretty songs. Mr. Gooch sang a comic descriptive song which made the big dining room echo with laughter. He was followed by Mrs. Pamies of Yokohama who danced three Spanish dances. Mr. and Mrs. Metz delighted the audience with the exhibition of a ball room dance.

The feature of the programme of the afternoon was the Duologue entitled "The Arm-chair Warrior" given by Miss Fleisher and M. Polain. The comedy in French tells an incident which takes place in the drawing room of Mr. Durand at Paris. He is impatiently waiting for his wife who has taken to coming home later everyday. At last, she arrives and he hears that she had gone to look after some refugees and had entirely forgotten his dinner. He is far from pleased and shows that he is getting tired of that kind of existence. On the other hand, his wife is somewhat jealous of her lady friends whose husbands are in the trenches. Mr. Durand, thanks to influential friends has been declared unfit for military duties. Suddenly the telephone rings, and a friend of Mr. Durand who is friendly with a certain general, announces that Dr. Durand may enlist. The latter, sick of being snubbed by his wife, decides to leave the next day. His wife is now very sad nd sobs bitterly. In her heart she is proud of her husband. She remembers that she is on duty at a station to look after the wounded soldiers. She must go. Mr. Durand is furious at seeing his last evening spoiled so untowardly. He wonders who is responsible for all his trouble and misery. The Boches!

The sketch was delightful all through, and M. Polain and Miss Fleisher played their parts exceedingly well.

After the sketch, the national anthems of Japan, the United States and Belgium were sung. Count Georges della Faille de Leverghen, the Belgian Minister, in a few appropriate words, expressed his thanks for the sympathies shown for the people of his country, and especially for the attendance at the tea-concert.

Tea was served during the progress of the programme. Among those noticed at the concert, were Viscount Motono, Marchioness Nabeshima, Count and Countess Ogasawara, Count and Countess Mayeda, and the entire foreign diplomatic corps of Tokyo.

GERMAN INTRIGUES

The "Tokyo Asahi" publishes a statement from Rear-Admiral Keishiro Moriyama in connection with the article re German intrigues aiming at the estrangement between Japan and America and Mexico, written by Mr. David Lawrence, Washington correspondent of the New York "Evening Post," which was published in the "Evening Post" of the 11th and a gist of which was wired to the "Asahi" by the New York correspondent of the Tokyo journal. Rear-Admiral Moriyama, who was formerly adjutant to the Minister of the Navy and the naval attaché to the Japanese Embassy in Washington successively, was the captain of the cruiser Izumo when it was sent to Mexico in January 1914 by the order of the government for the protection of Japanese residents in Mexico. In the article of Mr. David Lawrence, a summarised translation of which was published in the "Japan Times" of the 13th as reported by the "Asahi" correspondent, it was stated that when the cruiser Izumo went to Mexico some years ago the captain of the Japanese warship visited the City of Mexico and during his stay there had an interview with General Villa, who happened to be in the Mexican capital, and that later when General Villa met General Scott he told him that the captain of the Izumo had remarked during an interview in the Mexican capital that the United States was a common enemy of Japan and Mexico.

Referring to the above paragraph Rear-Admiral Moriyama, talking to the editor of the "Asahi," said that it was scarcely necessary to point out that all this report was based on the malicious machination of German agents or spies in America. The statement as published in the "Japan Times" of Friday morning gave the true aspect of the affair said Rear-Admiral Moriyama, but still he thinks it necessary to add a few words of explanation regarding the report which was an absolute canard. Rear-Admiral Moriyama, who was then captain of the cruiser Izumo, was ordered to proceed to Mexico with the warship to protect the lives and interests of the Japanese residents in Mexico in connection with the revolutionary risings in Mexico. He went there in January 1914 when the revolutionary disturbance was at its height. The Constitutionalist forces under General Carranza (present President) and General Villa with their headquarters in the northern part of Mexico were engaged in severe fighting with the government army under the then President Huerta who was in the City of Mexico.

Under such circumstances it is as clear as daylight that it was absolutely impossible that Rear-Admiral Moriyama could have had an interview with General Villa, who was then in the north as the leader of the Constitutionalist force, at the Mexican capital. Rear-Admiral Moriyama has never seen General Villa and does not know what sort of man he is. Rear-Admiral Moriyama thinks it a great hindrance to the cause of America-Japanese friendship that the American people should lend their ears, as they apparently did, to such unfounded reports in spite of their being too absurdly foolish to deceive any intelligent person. The Japanese people, says the admiral would never be led to lend their ears to such foolish fakes if German agents could find opportunity in Japan to launch any intrigue aiming at estranging the relations between Japan and America.

TROUBLE IN RUSSIA FORETOLD BY WRITER

A correspondent of the "Nichinichi" in Petrograd under date of March 28, sends the following despatch to his paper:—

Under the present state of affairs in Russia it seems as if there were three independent central Governments in Russia, namely the Duma, the Provisional Government established by the Duma, and the Committee of the labourers and the military men, who were, in fact, prime movers of the revolution. The situation may be said to be chaotic and menacing.

Though it may appear that the Provisional Government has the controlling power by virtue of its having been acknowledged by such countries as England, America, France, Italy, etc., and is worthy of trust because the Cabinet holds the men of the greatest talent and capacity the case is not so. On the contrary, the executive committee of the Duma is still existing and exerting its influence more and more in political affairs. The last named executive committee of the Duma has no wish to dissolve itself but instead is very careful in maintaining its power by causing any vacant position in the committee to be filled by an eligible member of the Duma. It is thus making commissioners of its own appointment transact the administrative affairs in the new Government.

It is plain therefore that there is a Government over another Government. But as the two institutions stand in the relation, one to the other, of the one who appoints and the one appointed in regard to the circumstances which brought about the formation of the new Government there has not yet arisen any collision between them. Last but not least, one must take into considerat.on yet another mighty power in the labourers and military men.

These labourers and military men look upon themselves to all appearance as the chief originators and prosecutors of the late revolution. They have a committee and all the labourers and soldiers in Petrograd are indeed under the sway of this committee.

They forced the Duma to stand at the head of the recent revolutionary movement only for the purpose of inciting the revolutionary spirit more easily. As a matter of fact, the labourers and the soldiers took the chief part in carrying out the ideals of the recent revolution, so that though poor in outward show and form, the real executive power lodges in them. Their committee is, therefore, needless to say, a powerful organization and is now declaring itself the corrector of the new Provisional Government.

When M. Gutchikoff, Minister of War and Minister of the Navy, in the new Cabinet and M. Shurigen, a member of the executive committee of the Duma obtained the decree from the Tsar Nicholas II. bequeathing his throne to his successor at the time of the revolution the labourers and the soldiers became greatly offended at their independent action on which they had not been previously consulted and protested against the action on the ground that it contravened the republican principles they advocated. The result of this was that the Provisional Government entreated Archduke Michaelovitch to abandon his pretensions to the Throne.

The Provisional Government and the Duma, on one side, and the labourers and the soldiers on the other, are completely divided in their opinions, beyond the hope of reconciliation, as to whether the war should be continued or peace concluded. The soldiers being weary of the war and the labourers imbued to excess with socialistic ideas are mostly inclined in favour of concluding peace. Such being the case, peace propaganda is now being freely and forcefully carried out in Russia as a result of the liberty of public speeches having been granted by the new Government. The ultimate effect produced by this kind of peace movement can not be easily foretold.

It is reported that all the Ministers of the Cabinet, except M. Kerensky, Minister of Justice, are powerfully supporting the idea of continuing the present war till final victory on the Allies side. Under these circumstances the most difficult problem before the nation of Russia at present is the problem relating to the advisability or inadvisability of continuing the war or concluding a peace and it is safe to presume that the two factions above mentioned, with entirely opposite ideas, are liable to clash at any moment.

REGULATIONS TO STOP TRADING WITH ENEMY

The regulation to prevent trading with the enemy, was finally passed by the Privy Council on Wednesday morning, and it will soon be made public by the cabinet

Besides all members of the Privy Council, Count Terauchi, the Premier, Viscount Motono, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, Mr. Shoda, Minister of Finance, Mr. Nakamura, Chief of Bureau of Commerce, Department of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Oka, Chief of Bureau of Industry and Commerce, of Department of Agriculture and Commerce, and other government officials were present.

H.I.M. the Emperor attended the meeting which was formally opened by Viscount Kiyoura, Vice-Chairman of the Council. The regulation to prevent trading with enemy has been thoroughly investigated and discussed by the special committee of the Council for some time, and Viscount Ito, Chairman of the special committee, submitted the reports of the discussions which took place at the previous meetings of the Committee.

When the discussion on the subject was opened, Count Terauchi and Viscount Motono, and Mr. Nakashoji gave full explanation of the regulations. Finally the original bill was unanimously passed.

The result of the meeting was reported to the Cabinet which will soon obtain the official sanction of H.I.M. the Emperor and make the Regulations public. Another item discussed at the meeting of the Council was the question of the exchange of licensed physicians between Japan and Mexico. The measure was also passed by the Council.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 11.—The decisiveness of the British superiority in heavy artillery has been strikingly illustrated at Vimy Ridge, where aerial photographs, taken prior to the hammering, revealed a system of defenses which might well-nigh have been deemed impregnable. There was row after row of wire in each line, which was many yards deep; a perfect honey-comb of trench-work and countless dominating machine-gun positions. Yet, when the assaulting parties went forward, they found in many places the trenches and wire alike had been absolutely obliterated. A few charred stumps and an occasional rusty tangle of barbed stuff alone marked the spot where had once been formidable barriers.

Bitter cold continues, with high winds and frequent snow-squalls.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 11.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig telegraphs: "The situation developing favourably, in accordance with the general plan. Early on Wednesday morning, we captured the village and heights of Monchy-le-Preux. We are making satisfactory progress elsewhere on the battle-front."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, April 11.—It is officially announced that the British troops, in the direction of Arras, have pushed their line forward to Moncy-le-Preux and made further gains on Vimy Ridge. On Tuesday evening, the total number of prisoners was 11,000. Among them are 235 officers. In addition, over 100 guns, including some 8-inchers, 60 trench-mortars and 163 machine-guns have been taken.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 11.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Tuesday evening communiqué, says: "Operations energetically continue, despite the heavy snowstorms. We have reached the outskirts of Moncy-le-Preux, 5 miles to the west of Arras, and cleared Farbus and Farbus Wood of the enemy. There has been hard fighting, this afternoon, on the northern end of Vimy Ridge, where we have taken more prisoners and gained further important positions. We have advanced our line northward of Louverval. The enemy's counter-attacks at different points were unsuccessful. The number of prisoners since yesterday morning exceeds 11,000, including 235 officers. We have also captured over 100 guns, including a number of "heavies" up to 8-inch calibre, 60 trench-mortars and 163 machine-guns."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 12.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Wednesday communiqué, says: "Snow, which has fallen all day long, has rendered observation impossible and impeded operations. On Wednesday morning, we beat off two counter-attacks near Monchy-le-Preux. Further north, we penetrated the neighbourhood of Dullescourt. Large enemy forces made a counter-attack, and forced us back to our own lines, but our artillery, then, inflicted heavy losses on the enemy's attacking troops."

London, Apr. 12.—It was officially announced to-day that the British have captured two positions north of Vimy Ridge and are now astride the River Souchez.

Paris, Apr. 12.—The French have captured several important positions below St. Quentin. They have also ejected the Germans from their trenches east of Sapigneul and in the Champagne.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 13.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his communiqué of Thursday, says: "We stormed the villages of Heninel and Wancourt with the adjoining defenses and crossed the Cojeul River, occupying a height on the east bank. We have made further progress to the north of Scarpe and to the eastward of Vimy Ridge.

"In wet and stormy weather this morning, we captured two important positions to the north of Vimy Ridge and are now astride the Souchez River. We drove off two night attacks at the northern end of Vimy Ridge and made progress south of Scarpe River.

"The French attacked the German positions, south of the Oise and east of the line Coucy-la-Ville and Quierce-Basse and pushed the enemy back as far as the southwestern edge of the upper forest of Coucy. Several points d'appui were captured."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 13.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Friday morning communiqué, says: "We attacked last night between St. Quentin and Cambrai. After a sharp fight, we captured the enemy's positions on a wide front northward of Hargicourt to Metzencourt. We now hold Sart Farm, Gauche Wood, Gouzeaucourt village and Ouzeaucourt Wood.

"With the necessity of bringing up our heavy guns, which the shocking weather is delaying, there is a lull in the battle of Arras."

"The Times" correspondent sums up the results of the first phase as storming the German's strongest positions on a front of twelve miles and turning the northern end of the Hindenburg line. The British hold 5,000 yards of this line besides piercing it at other points as at Bullecourt.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 13.—The Times of April 10, writing of the first day of the Battle of Arras, says:

"The measure of yesterday's success may be gauged by the fact that in his night despatch of July 1, 1916, the first day of the Battle of the Somme, Sir Douglas Haig reported that 'up to date over 2,000 German prisoners have passed through our collecting station' and on July 4 only stated that 'the total of prisoners now exceeds 5,000.'

"The distance from Henin-sur-Cojeul, southeast of Arras, to the southern outskirts of Givenchy-en-Gobelle, south-west of Lens, north of Arras, is about 12 miles. Demicourt is south of the Bapaume-Cambrai road, two miles north of Havrincourt wood. Rontru, southeast of Leverguier, is five miles from the outskirts of St. Quentin in a northwesterly direction."

New York, Apr. 14.—The Associated Press correspondent with British Headquarters in France telegraphs: "Last night the British broke the German line on a front of four miles. The Germans are in retreat."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 14.—The latest British successes have sealed the doom of Lens, which the troops under General Allenby are approaching along both banks of the Souchez River, while General Horne's forces in the Loos salient have gained a footing in the trenches north-east of the town. These successes have been won on a front of 40 miles from Hargicourt to south of Loos and Lapazes.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 14.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig announces: "On Friday night, after a sharp fight we captured the village of Fayet, one mile north-westward of St. Quentin. We have also captured important positions at Ascension Farm and at Grand Priel Farm, to the eastward of Leverguier and also made progress to the north of the Bapaume-Cambrai road in the direction of Queant. The British troops have seized Vimy Station and Lachaure and the enemy's positions between Gievenchy en-Gobelle and Angres and linked up with the positions gained in the battle of Loos."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 14.—Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters in France telegraphing on Saturday afternoon said there were indications that the German retreat was extending to the region immediately south of Loos, where fires and explosions were frequent beyond the enemy lines. A conflagration was observed in Loos itself. The weather has improved.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 14.—The British offensive on the western front is being pushed forward relentlessly, and extremely violent fighting rages along most of the front. On April 13 the British advance covered a front of nine miles and an average depth of a mile. The British also gained considerable advantage in the neighbourhood of the Vimy Ridge.

The British have now fought their way to 3,000 yards of the Hindenburg Line and have penetrated beyond the old German line to a depth of 8,000 yards in the neighbourhood of Arras.

Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig's communiqué, of yesterday evening stated that the British had extended their operations northward during the day. They pressed the enemy back east and north of the Vimy Ridge and along their entire front from the north bank of the River Scarpe to south of Loos. The villages of Bailleul-Sire Berthoult, Willerval, Vimy le Petit, Vimy, Givenchy-en-Gobelle and Angres were captured, and the British also gained a footing in some trenches northeast of Lens, capturing many prisoners and guns in this area.

South of the Arras Cambrai road the British captured the Wancourt Tower and advanced astride the Hindenburg Line to a point seven miles southeast of Arras. They also made progress on the high ground east of Laverguier and in the Havrincourt Wood, eight miles southeast of Cambrai.

Since April 9 the British have captured 3,000 prisoners, including 285 officers; 166 guns, including eight 8-inch guns and 158 field guns and howitzers; 54 trench mortars, and 250 machine-guns. In addition to these many guns have been demolished or buried.

London, April 14.—The French have captured several lines of the German trenches north of St. Quentin, states the Paris official report.

The British communiqué to-day states that the British have captured the German positions on a front of nine miles, running north from Hargicourt to Metz-en-Couture, southeast of Cambrai.

London, Apr. 14.—As the details of the Arras battle are unfolded, two significant facts emerge. Firstly the supreme spirit and behaviour of the men, secondly the superb generalship of the leaders. First the infantry talk with the utmost admiration of the artillery; the gunners speak almost adoringly of the airmen and these tell, in glowing terms, of the splendour of the infantry advance and the magnificent audacity of the tanks. There is no complaint and no criticism among the fighting troops only universal admiration and satisfaction.

There has been no battle of this scale fought by the British army hitherto in this war in which every unit triumphantly obtained its immediate objective. All this speaks of hard work and tireless self-improvement on the part of all ranks of the army.

Monday's victory, indeed, is the result of perfected tactical methods as practised by the French at Verdun and the British on the Ancre and Arras. Namely the method of enabling the strongest field fortresses to be captured with less to the attackers than the defenders. It discredits the theory, once favoured, that Generalship nowadays is less important in war and that there are no great British generals.

The tactical achievement of General Haig and his able staff, seconded by a remarkable group of army commanders, is now thoroughly appreciated and confidence is universal that their deeper strategical conceptions will be no less decisively vindicated before long. It is now seen that it is the Germans who are being strategically outplayed on the western front.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 15.—The British troops have entered Lens.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 15.—The correspondent of Lloyd's News at British Headquarters in France, in a message sent off to-day, says: "The British patrols have entered Lens, although at the time the enemy were still in the machine-gun redoubts in some places. The hostile parties, however, were only the rearguards, for the main body had already retreated."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 15.—A despatch from Sir Douglas Haig reads: "Early this (Sunday) morning, the enemy made strong attacks on a six-mile front astride the Bapaume-Cambrai road, under cover of a heavy bombardment on our new positions from Hermies to Noreuel. The attack failed everywhere, except at Lagnicourt where the enemy gained a foothold after heavy fighting. A counter-attack by our troops regained the village, the artillery inflicting very heavy losses on the enemy's troops as they retired.

"We took over 200 prisoners. We advanced our line eastward of Heninel and made progress northward of the Souchez River. We have captured the enemy defenses to the east of Lievin from Raiaumont Wood to the east corner of Cites-St. Pierre. Our troops are pushing on towards Lens. Heavy rain has fallen since early morning."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 15.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "On Saturday morning, we captured Lievin, south-eastward of and adjoining Lens. We took considerable quantities of war material. In the afternoon, we seized Cite-St. Pierre, north-eastward of Lens. We pressed on upon the front on the Scarpe River and to the south of Loos and reached points two or three miles to the east of Vimy Ridge.

"There was heavy fighting throughout the day, southward of the Scarpe. We everywhere maintained our positions previously captured and inflicted serious losses on the enemy. We made progress on a wide front north and south of the Bapaume to Cambrai road. There were fierce encounters, resulting in our favour, to the south and eastward of Fayet to within a few hundred yards of St. Quentin. We carried Gricourt village at the point of the bayonet and took 400 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 15.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Sunday communiqué, says: "As the result of the fighting north-westward of St. Quentin we gained ground eastward and northward of Glicourt and also made progress in the neighbourhood of Havincourt Wood and eastward of Lievin, approaching the outskirts of Lens. The Germans, in an attack on the Bapaume-Cambrai road, lost 300 prisoners and left 1,500 dead behind."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—Reuter's correspondent at French Headquarters in a telegram to-day announces: "The great French offensive has begun."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—The French have continued to make progress eastward and southward of the Oise on the Plateau between Barisis and Quincy-en-Basse. The artillery duel was most violent during the night along the whole front including that of Soissons and Rheims. After a violent artillery preparation, the French detachments penetrated the enemy lines at several points in Lorraine and Alsace and reached the enemy's second line at six points on the plain of Alsace, inflicting serious losses.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "We have captured the village of Villeret, south-eastward of Hargecourt and made progress to the north-west of Lens. The booty captured by us at Lievin and along the Souchez River was very great."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—A German official communiqué issued Monday evening reads: "There has been little fighting on the Arras front. The great French attempt, with the far distant object of breaking through on the Aisne, has commenced after ten days' massed artillery fire. A bitter fight is proceeding around our foremost positions, where a frontal attack, 40 kilometres wide, is being made.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—The French, on Monday morning between Soissons and Rheims, attacked the German lines on a front of about 40 kilometres. A desperate battle ensued along the whole front where the enemy had collected his largest forces and numerous guns. Everywhere the French overcame the vigorous defense. They carried the first German positions between Soissons and Craonne and east of Craonne; they captured the second enemy lines south of Javincourt, and further south carried the line as far as the western outskirts of Bermericourt and as far as the Aisne Canal, between Ouvre and Courcy. The prisoners so far counted exceed 10,000.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 17.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in his Monday evening communiqué, says: "We have taken upwards of 14,000 prisoners and 194 guns since the morning of April 9. There has been heavy rain all this afternoon and nothing of especial interest to report."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 17.—The French have organised the positions won between Soissons and Rheims. A strong German counter-attack was broken, with heavy losses to the enemy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, April 17.—It is semi-officially announced that the Germans had massed at least twenty divisions and all available batteries on the front from Soissons to Rheims. Our advance reached to a depth of between three and four kilometres at certain points. Altogether the Allies have placed 100,000 Germans hors-de-combat in eight days.

Paris, April 17.—The French troops began a general attack, on Monday, after several days' artillery action between Soissons and Rheims. Several German lines of trenches were taken and over 10,000 German prisoners captured. An official communiqué describes the fighting as being of the utmost violence.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTS

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 11.—The Russian troops have repulsed the Turks from their positions near Nirvan, and are continuing their advance south-west. Forty kilometres south-west of Khanikin the Russians have captured Kizil-Barat and are now within 90 miles of Samara.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 12.—During the night of April 9, a strong party of the enemy on the western front dislodged a detachment of Russian Van-guards, north of Rojistche, and succeeded in entering the advanced trenches. The Russian artillery fire, however soon dispersed the hostile party. After destroying the Russian wire-entanglements at several places, near Tereshkovec, the enemy reached the Russian advanced trenches. They were soon driven out, but not before they had bayonetted all the Russian wounded.

On the Caucasus front, near Aniat, south of Ushnue, the Russian forces are daily engaged in stubborn fighting with the Turks.

INTERNET ARCHIVE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 12.—Near Ozorki, in Galicia, the enemy, after an artillery preparation, attacked the Russian positions and succeeded in seizing them. However, the Russians, by a counter-attack, repulsed the enemy and re-established the front.

Near Bogorodjany the enemy performed a gas-attack, which, however, caused no damage to the Russians. During the gun-fire which followed this attack confusion was noticeable in the Austrian trenches. Part of the Austrians moved to the rear, while another detachment, with white flags, tried to approach the Russian trenches, but coming under the fire of their own artillery this body took to flight.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 18.—Western front. Twenty-kilometres north of Brody a bridge over the Styr was blown up by the Russian scouts. In Galicia, small enemy detachments, carrying flags, tried to approach the Russian positions, but coming under the Russian fire these parties escaped quickly into their trenches.

According to the statement of a deserter, who happened to be an Austrian officer, the German Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg has despatched a certain number of German socialists to Stockholm in order to meet there representatives of the Russian socialists and to exchange with them views as to the conclusion of a separate peace. It seems that in accordance with this measure, the seizure of the place d'armes on the Stokhod has not been as pompously proclaimed by the Germans as usual and no manifestations have taken place on this occasion. The German social democrats are, according to this statement, acting in perfect solidarity with their Government, considering themselves above all as Germans.

One other Austrian deserter told that there was less peace talk in the Austrian army than before. All are hoping, that the present frame of mind in Russia will cause her destruction. These statements prove, that Germany will spare no effort and use all expedients in order to attain dissension among her opponents.

Rumanian front. After an artillery preparation the enemy attacked the Russian positions near Botoku, but was repulsed by artillery and rifle fire.

On the Black Sea, near the Bosphorus, a Turkish motor boat and two loaded schooners were annihilated by a Russian submarine.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONTS

London, April 9.—The Italian communiqué reads: "There has been desultory artillery action all along the front, although the prevailing bad weather has greatly interfered with operations. On the afternoon of April 5, the enemy exploded a large mine in the vicinity of one of our advanced positions on the second summit of Mount Colbricon. We, however, suffered no serious casualties or damage. On the Carso front, last night, a small detachment of our troops surprised and occupied one of the enemy's advanced posts, north of Boscamole, capturing the entire garrison."

Rome, Apr. 10.—The Italian batteries have bombarded the buildings near Mori, in the Lagarina Valley, and our aeroplanes dropped a ton of explosives on the hutments and depots near Rifemberga and Mesari in the Brnizza-valley. The machines returned in safety.

A squadron of enemy seaplanes raided the Monfalcone area. One was hit by our artillery and fell in the vicinity of Cassegliano. Both the aviators were killed.

Desultory artillery activity has taken place on the whole front, and patrol encounters in the Zaxarina valley and Mount Sief. East of Gorizia the artillery stopped an enemy attempt to recapture our advanced posts north of Boscomala before it had time to develop.

Yesterday our artillery was hampered by the bad weather along almost the whole line. It was, however, active in the Giudicaries and Adige valleys, where our guns set fire to and damaged military works. In the Carso reconnoitering parties disturbed the enemy engaged on defensive works.

GENERAL SARRAIL PAYS TRIBUTE TO ITALIANS

Rome, April 14.—Our troops operating in Macedonia have merited high recognition from General Sarrail for the bold spirit displayed during the attack against the summit of Hill 1050 on the 27th of February and for the stubborn resistance when our position was kept under heavy bombardment with gas-shells during the last days of March.

In fact the regimental commander Colonel Basso Raffaele and the battalion commander Major Negri Ciovanni, leaders of the above mentioned attack on the 27th of February, and battalion commander Major Petrini Bartolomso, who displayed remarkable bravery in holding the positions on a hill 1050 during the enemy attack with gas, were awarded the Croix de Guerre Motu Proprio (of his own accord) by the Commander-inChief of L'Armée d'Orient.

CANADA'S FINE SHOWING

Seattle, April 17.—The total number of Canadians enlisted in the army since the outbreak of war has reached upwards of 407,300 up to the present.

An Ottawa dispatch says that the Canadian Government has cancelled the former notification designating wheat and wheat flour exported to the United States from Canada as contraband of war.—"Asahi."

ALLIED SUBJECTS IN U.S. MAY JOIN UP

San Francisco, April 17.—The American government will permit the allies' governments to recruit among their subjects residing in America. The new measure will come as a blow to any allied subjects, who may have crossed to the U.S. to avoid conscription.—"Nichinichi."

MR. JOHN BUCHAN'S WEEKLY REVIEW OF WAR

[H.B.M.'S DESPATCH THROUGH KOKUSAI]

London, April 14. All interest during the last week has been concentrated on the western front, where the most important feature was the successful British advance on the Lens-Arras front. The Lens-Arras battle was accompanied by the capture of over 11,000 prisoners, including 235 officers, 100 guns, 60 trench mortars and 163 machine-guns. These operations, though successful must be regarded merely as the first stage of the great summer offensive and therefore no great advance is to be expected in the immediate future.

The German retirement on the Somme, advertised by the German press as a proof of Hindenburg's military genius, and a manœuvre calculated to enable the Germans to choose better terrain for giving battle, has, in fact, left the initiative with the British who successfully gained all the objectives indicated by Lieutenant-General Allenby on February 20. April 8 was also settled as the date for the attack, which was postponed twenty-four hours owing to bad weather.

Great aerial activity has been one of the most important features during the past week, and the British aviators have performed the most valuable work despite heavy gales and frequent snowstorms rendering their tasks particularly difficult and arduous.

During April 5 and 6 over 1,700 photographs were taken of large tracts in rear of the enemy's lines. Seventeen successful bombing raids were made. During the aerial fighting fifteen machines crashed to earth and thirty one were driven down and damaged. Considering the valuable results the British losses in machines were not great.

The success of the operations in the past week is attributed to the improved training of the troops, the experience gained in the last summer on the Somme and the enormous output of guns and munitions. The Somme bombardment lasted for eight days and the bombardment in the recent operations only three days, when it reached the greatest intensity ever experienced.

The Germans had reinforced Vimy Ridge and considered it impregnable. They were determined to resist its capture at all costs. The result of the reinforcement was the capture of the largest number of prisoners ever taken in twenty-four hours on the western front.

Heavy fighting is to be expected in the immediate future, the success of the past week being only the initial stage of operations.

NAVAL LEADERS CONFER

Washington, April 15.—Vice-Admiral M. E. Browning C. B. and Rear-Admiral De Grasse, representing respectively the British and French Navies, conferred with Mr. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of U. S. Navy and Admiral William S. Benson U.S.N., Chief of Naval Operations to-day. They discussed the co-operation of the American Navy with the Navies of the Allies. It is understood that plans were discussed for the American Navy to relieve the Entente of patrol duty in north and south American waters.

AUSTRIAN LOPES FOR PEACE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, April 13.—In connection with the reports of Bulgarian peace efforts in Switzerland, it is known here that not only Bulgaria but Austria is taking such action. It is not known whether they are acting conjointly.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, April 14.—It is learned here that the Austrian Government has semi-officially announced that it considers the manifesto issued by the Provisional Russian Government in Petrograd, on April 10, forms a basis for peace negotiations.

"The Government, assisted by the entire population, will now do its utmost to better conditions. The first and foremost aim is to deliver the invaded country from the enemy and leave to the decision of the people, who are closely bound to the Allies, the questions relating to the war and its end.

"The Government emphatically declares that free Russia does not intend to dominate other nations or seize their national patrimony, but to establish a solid peace based on the right of all peoples to dispose of their destiny. The Russian people does not aspire to gain at the expense of other peoples nor to subjugate them or humiliate them. At the same time, it will not permit the Fatherland to finish the war with the vital forces shattered."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—A message from Amsterdam says that the Austrian Government has authorized a statement which practically amounts to a peace offer to Russia. The statement says the Monarchy learns from the Russian Government manifesto of April 10 that Russia like Austria-Hungary desires an honourable peace. The Austrian statement reciprocates the sentiments in the manifesto regarding Russia not desiring to dominate over other peoples.

"It may, therefore, be stated," says the statement, "that Austria-Hungary and Russia are similarly striving for a peace guaranteeing the existence of honour and the possibility of the development of the now belligerent states.

"The Austro-Hungarian Monarchy is convinced that its claims do not conflict with those of Russia. The latter has stated she is only fighting in the defense of the freedom of her people. Russia no longer is compelled to fight for that object: therefore, it should not be difficult to establish an understanding between the Central Powers and Russia, especially as the Austrian Emperor, in agreement with his allied monarchs, desires to live for the future in peace and friendship with the Russian people."

London, April 17.—A Vienna dispatch says that the Viennese papers publish comments on the Austrian peace proposal to Russia and declare that the motives of Russia and Austria for proposing separate peace are in perfect accord in principle, but the terms of the peace proposal are still kept in secret.—"Nichinichi."

London, April 17.—Another dispatch from Vienna states that all churches in the city of Vienna offered special prayers for the conclusion of peace. At the service held in one church were present Emperor Karl and all ministers of state. The Emperor in his prayer offered to erect a new church in commemoration of peace.—"Nichinichi."

San Francisco, April 17.—It is persistently reported in the diplomatic circles in Christiania that the German Government is preparing to submit new peace terms to the neutral states shortly.—"Nichinichi."

TURKS SUFFER REVERSE

London, April 15.—It is announced that the Turks have been driven out by General Maude's forces of their new positions near Ghaliyeh in Mesopotamia and are retreating towards Bely Abbas.

London, April 2.—The natives of Bagdad residing in Marseilles have sent £200 sterling to the British Red Cross Society in grateful recognition of the liberation of Bagdad from the Turkish yoke.—Reuter.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 13.—Lord Derby, the Secretary for War, has telegraphed to General Murray, commanding the British forces on the Egyptian front, as follows:

"The Imperial War Cabinet at which the representatives of the United Kingdom, the Dominions and India were assembled charge me to convey to you and all ranks concerned their cordial congratulations on the striking and important success achieved near Gaza. They have heard with special gratification your commendation of the gallantry of the troops."

General Murray replied, saying "It is earnest determination of all ranks in the Egypt an field force to pull with their full weight."

KARL AND THE COUNT

Paris, April 16.—A Geneva dispatch to "Le Débat" says that great importance is attached in the political circles in Vienna to the interview between Emperor Karl and Count Cherin the Austrian Foreign Minister because it is believed that at the interview the Emperor and the Foreign Minister had arrived at an agreement to use every effort to avail of the prevailing situation in Russia and make the followers of the Extreme Left carry out their political views. The "Débat" editorially commenting on the subject points out that the attempt of Austria will surely fall through and states that although it is difficult to imagine what attitude Germany will take against the move of Austria it is apparent that the pan-German party, which represent the true Germany, will not endorse the attempt of Austria judging from their strenuous efforts to achieve their ambition in spite of Germany's military failures.—"Asahi."

HUN SEAMEN TO ANGEL ISLAND

Seattle, April 17.—The sixteen German mariners who had been detained at Seattle since the outbreak of the European war were sent to Angel Island to-day.—"Asahi."

GERMAN BESTIALITY SURPASSES ALL RECORDS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 17.—It has been known for months that the Germans have been burning the dead. It has now transpired that the burning has developed into a regular industry for extracting oil from the corpses, which are afterwards crushed and used as pig-food and manure.

The factory is established at Rhineland. The corpses arrive in bundles. One hundred bodies are dropped into a cauldron at a time and boiled for eight hours slowly, being spitted by machinery. The resultant oil is of a yellowish brown colour, and is sent out in small casks. The employes in the factory are all soldiers. They are clothed in oil-skins and wear masks.

London, April 11.—Appalling revelations of the systematic brutality of German women Red Cross workers towards British wounded have been made to the Berne correspondent of the "Times" by scores of British soldiers of all ranks who have been released from the German prison camps.

On the long journey of British wounded through Germany it was a common amusement with these women to tempt our men, who were at the last extremity of hunger and thirst, by holding out food and drink to try and make them snatch at it and then withdrawing it. Many wounded men begging for drink had coffee, water or soup tendered to them and then at the last moment the "gentle" nurse would spit in the cup or glass. Frequently wounded men had to drink the defiled stuff while the women looked on and laughed.

An equally common entertainment with these women was to offer a wounded man a glass of water and then to pour it slowly on the ground.

Cases of physical maltreatment of British wounded by German nurses were just as common and systematic as the refusal to give them nourishment. Nurses not only refused to attend the British wounded but regularly insulted and spat at them and frequently even struck or kicked a bandaged limb in order to give pain.

The truth is the German Red Cross is merely a branch of German militarism and it has prostituted the sacred sign, shamed its name and forfeited all right to be regarded as an organization of humanity.—Reuter.

PRESIDENT WILSON ISSUES STIRRING APPEAL TO ALL

Washington, April 15.—President Wilson in a personal appeal addressed to his fellow-countrymen, calls upon every American citizen—man woman and child—to join together to make the nation a unit for the preservation of its ideals and for the triumph of democracy in the world war. "The supreme test of the nation has now come, and we must all speak, act and serve together," he says.

The putting of the Navy on a war footing and the creation of a great army is the simplest part of the great task before the country, adds the President. "We must supply abundant food for ourselves and for a large part of the nations with which we have made common cause, and in whose support, and by whose sides we shall be fighting. We must supply ships by the hundreds to carry to the other side submarines or no submarines, what is needed there."

The President calls upon the farmers, coal miners, manufacturers and all branches of trade to speed up development. He also urges national economy and the stoppage of waste.

New York, Apr. 16.—President Wilson in his appeal addressed to his countrymen of all vocations says that the industries of America should be more systematized as the nation must supply abundant food and munitions to the Allies in order to attain the objects for which America has joined the war, and he calls upon his countrymen to make the utmost effort for this cause with the same resolution as that of men at the front. On the agricultural population in the southern districts, President Wilson urges devotion to the production of foodstuffs and victuals at the present juncture, which, he points out, is a more patriotic work towards the country than the cultivation of raw cotton. He advises them to modify the cotton cultivation for the time being despite the soaring tendency in the raw cotton market.

To commission-merchants dealing in provisions and other raw materials, the President in his appeal gives a warning not to make exorbitant profits out of transactions, and next he warns housewives in the country to practice perfect thrift in their domestic economy under the present circumstances, adding that the present offers a unique opportunity for the American nation to do away with bad habits of luxury and extravagance to which the nation at large is so greatly addicted.

He also expresses his hope that journalists will try to make the whole nation comprehend what he says in the appeal and leaves it to the pastorate to amplify the spirit of his appeal in their sermons. He again states the motive of the American declaration of war against Germany.—"Asahi."

FOUR OUT OF 1742!

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 13.—The French Admiralty announces that for the week ending April 8, the number of merchantmen entering French ports was 886, while 856 vessels sailed. Only four vessels were sunk by submarines, one being under 1,600 tons and three over.

JOIN HANDS ACROSS THE PACIFIC OCEAN

On April 8, His Imperial Majesty The Emperor of Japan sent the following telegram to President Woodrow Wilson:

I desire to assure you of my feelings of profound satisfaction inspired by the active and powerful intervention of the United States on the side of the Allied Nations with a view to upholding in common the sacred cause of the rights of mankind. May this step, taken by the United States at your solemn instance, serve, at the same time, to cement and consecrate the lasting friendship between our two countries.

On April 15, President Wilson despatched the following reply from Washington:

I thank Your Majesty's earnest words of greeting and thank You in the name of my fellow countrymen ever jealous of our civil rights and devoted to the maintenance of the sacred structure of our free commonwealth. We of the western world find ourselves to-day among the defenders of the eternal principles of freedom and justice cherished by all mankind and are proud to be associated in the brotherhood of self-respecting independent nations in a common cause against the attempted domination of ruthless power. The spirit of unity for the accomplishment of a high purpose of paramount benefit to the human race animates our two countries and is a happy augury of their enduring fellowship.

GERMANY MAKING FOES ON AMERICAN CONTINENT

London, April 12.—Reuter's agent at Rio de Janeiro telegraphs that the Brazilian Government handed the German Minister his passports on Tuesday last.

San Francisco, April 12.—The Naval Commander here has dispatched wireless messages to ships at sea, warning them that it is believed that German submarines are now operating in the Pacific.

Washington, Apr. 12.—The Ways and Means Committee in the House of Representatives has decided to report favourably on the Bill authorizing the issue of bonds to five billion dollars, and notes to two million for war expenses, with authorization to the President to extend a credit of three billion dollars to the Allies.

H. E. Mr. Romulo S. Naon, Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Washington from the Argentine Republic, called upon Mr. Lansing to-day. He handed the U. S. Secretary of State a communication to the effect that Argentina would maintain neutrality, but understands the attitude of the United States in entering the war.

The communication is interpreted as expressing "benevolent neutrality."

SENATE COMMITTEE APPROVE WAR BILL

Washington, April 15.—The House of Representatives has unanimously passed the war revenue measures introduced by the Democratic leaders on April 12. The measure comprised a seven billion dollar Bill, voting 3 billion dollars for the Allies, and the remainder for war expenses for the United States.

In addition, it is expected that legislation to facilitate the export of food and munitions to the Entente will be hastened.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, April 15.—The House of Representatives, yesterday, unanimously voted a seven billion dollar war loan, of which three billion dollars will be available for the Entente.

Washington, Apr. 16.—The seven billion dollars War Revenue Bill has been approved by the Senate Finance Committee. The measure will be taken up in the Senate to-morrow.

U-BOAT AND U.S.N. DESTROYER

Washington, April 18.—A German submarine has fired on an American destroyer 100 miles south of New York. This is taken to indicate the beginning of a submarine blockade of American ports.

A United Press message to the "Nichi-nichi" gives the name of the U.S.N. destroyer as Smith. From a garbled story one gathers from the translation that the destroyer fired one shot in reply before the U-boat disappeared beneath the waves.

BRITISH RED CROSS VESSEL TORPEDOED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 14.—The Admiralty states that the British hospital ship Gloucester Castle, 7,999 tons, was sunk in the middle of the English Channel the night of March 30. The vessel was sunk by a torpedo and was given no warning. All the wounded aboard were saved.

An official statement issued in Berlin Wednesday proclaims that this vessel was sunk, thus removing all doubt as to whether it was a mine or a submarine that caused the destruction of the hospital ship.

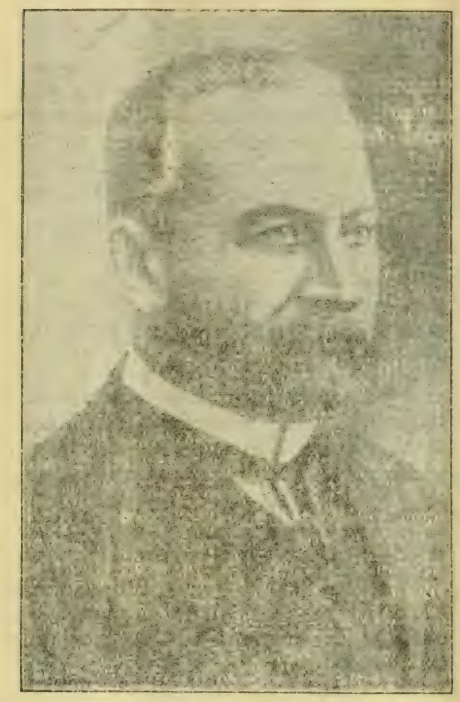
Buenos Aires, April 14.—The Argentine Foreign Office announces that the Argentine sailing ship Monte Protegido has been sunk off the European coast.



Great excitement prevails in Argentine. The newspapers say that the vessel was sunk by a German submarine.

Key West, Florida, April 14.—A German submarine is operating off the coast of Cuba, according to reports brought here to-day by a sailing vessel arriving from Cuba. The Captain states that a German submarine, using bombs, sank the British ship Treveal, 4,160 tons, off Cienfuegos, a large port on the southern coast of the island. The crew reached a Cuban port.

NEW RUSSIA WILL HAVE HARD TASK IN FUTURE

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, Apr. 10.—The Provisional Government has published a declaration regarding the military situation in Russia, which unfolds to the nation the whole truth. It reads as follows:

"The fallen régime left the defense of the country, its finances and the supplies for its armies in a deplorable condition owing to its criminal inertness and incapacity.

"The Government, assisted by the entire population, will now do its utmost to better conditions. The first and foremost aim is to deliver the invaded country from the enemy and leave to the decision of the people, who are closely bound to the Allies, the questions relating to the war and its end.

"The Government emphatically declares that free Russia does not intend to dominate other nations or seize their national patrimony, but to establish a solid peace based on the right of all peoples to dispose of their destiny. The Russian people does not aspire to gain at the expense of other peoples nor to subjugate them or humiliate them. At the same time, it will not permit the Fatherland to finish the war with its vital forces shattered.

"These principles will form the basis of the foreign policy of the Government which intends to defend the rights of the country, while at the same time fulfilling the obligations to Russia's Allies. The Provisional Government cannot hide the fact that the country is in peril, and its forces must be exerted to save it. The country should respond, not by despondency, but by unanimous impulse to create an unique national will which will stimulate us with new energy to fight. In this hour of trial may the country find strength to consolidate its conquered freedom. The Government is convinced that with the support of all the population, it will be enabled to carry out its duty to the end."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, Apr. 10.—The Russian Provisional Government has issued a proclamation, declaring that free Russia does not aim at the domination of other nations by depriving them of their national patrimony or by occupying forcibly foreign territory.

Russia's object in the war, asserts the proclamation, is to establish a durable peace on a basis of the right of nations to decide their destiny. Russia does not desire to subjugate or humiliate anyone, but Russia herself must not emerge from the struggle humiliated or weakened, concludes the proclamation.

The Foreign Office, up to the 12th, was in receipt of no information confirming the press dispatch from Petrograd intimating that the Russian Provisional Government had announced its decision to relinquish Russia's previous claims to Constantinople. The dispatch was a topic of much discussion among official circles yesterday and grave concern was shown as to its authenticity.

"If the telegram tells the truth," said one official, "it calls for grave anxiety as to the future prospect of the war. The Russian Government could not have made such an announcement without entertaining the idea of desiring to secure an early peace. As made public time and again by preceding governments of Russia, the understanding was concluded among the Allied Powers soon after the opening of the war that they agreed to satisfy Russia's time-honoured desire to take possession of the Dardanelles. The Russian contention for the occupation of the ice-free port of Constantinople was again asserted in the Allies' reply to President Wilson's proposals early this year to the belligerent countries to make definite statements of the terms upon which they would be ready to agree to discuss peace.

"The Russian Government's announcement of giving up such a vital prize of war is at this present time susceptible to an interpretation that the Government may be rapidly yielding under pressure of the peace advocates to withdraw from the war. Should that be the case the announcement might mark a historic incident in turning the general situation of Europe. Though the press dispatch lacks confirmation the news is of grave concern to the Allies' cause and cannot be dismissed lightly."

It is held that should Russia ever want to relinquish her claims to the Dardanelles she is under obligation to take up the matter with the Allied Governments before making it public, for it was Russia who urged the Allies to agree to her aspirations to take the Turkish Capital. It would be a breach of the pledge in which she assured the Allies of her unabated loyalty to the treaties and understandings covenanted by her former government.

However, the dispatch remains to be confirmed and officials seemed to be anxiously awaiting information from the Russian Capital. In view of another telegram from Petrograd that the Russian Government would shortly issue a declaration to the effect that Russia renounces all claims to territorial expansion but would defend the liberty already won, officials are hardly able to solve the puzzle.

CHINESE MINISTERS CHARGED WITH BRIBERY

Two Finance Heads Said To Have Accepted Two Hundred Thousand Dollars

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, April 17.—A serious accusation has been brought against Mr. Chen Chin-tao and Mr. Yin Ju-lien, the Minister and Vice-Minister of Finance, for accepting bribes amounting to two hundred thousand dollars from the syndicate which put forward a scheme, last January, for buying and melting brass cash, but which subsequently was discovered owing to Parliament's refusal to pass the agreement. It is stated that Mr. Chen Chin-tao in the effort to clear himself from the charge, forcibly detained a member of the syndicate in his private residence till the latter signed a statement that the Minister had not received any bribe.

The President was most indignant when he was made acquainted with the case and immediately summoned Mr. Chen Chin-tao, who it is alleged tried to shift the whole responsibility to the Vice-Minister. Subsequently, the latter was summoned before the President and admitted that the bribe was accepted but returned. It is understood that the President at first decided immediately to dismiss Mr. Chen Chin-tao and Mr. Yin Ju-lien, but subsequently he ordered an investigation by two trusted officials whose report will be submitted to the administrative court which will try the case.

Peking, April 13.—Since news of the decision of the United States to declare war on Germany was conveyed to the Government, a new atmosphere has filled Peking. The Chinese press, which was practically silent on the subject a week ago, is now discussing the "Third Step" with the same enthusiasm that characterized it during the time of the Revolution in 1911, and most of the papers are advocating China's immediate participation in the war. The Minister of the Entente Powers, no less than the people, are anxiously waiting for the Government to make the decision. So far as the Cabinet Ministers are concerned, the Minister of Communications is the only one not in favour of war. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Wu Ting-fang, it is stated, no longer holds the opinions he held a few weeks ago. Yesterday he asked the Vice-Minister, Mr. Kao Erh-chien to explain to the special meeting of the International Affairs Commission, his new attitude, whilst the Vice-Minister himself is heart and soul in sympathy with the Allied cause.

Mr. Kao Erh-chien declared to a representative of "The Peking Daily News" three weeks ago when he was not yet appointed Vice-Minister that China should enter the war, and enter it unconditionally. It is his belief that this is not the time for China to talk about interests, but to decide upon a policy that will bring future welfare. As regards the Prime Minister, he is the moving spirit in the Cabinet, and is supported by the Minister of the Interior, and the Ministers of Finance and of Justice, in his advocacy of war with Germany.

At yesterday's meeting of the International Affairs Commission, several points of importance were discussed and the impression of one who is in a position to know what passed at the meeting is that war will probably be declared on Germany in about a week's time, when it is expected that the formal declaration will be made.

In the meantime the Government will call a military conference to ascertain the real attitude of the commanders and Military Governors of the various provinces as well as to discuss measures relating to internal defence and equipment of the troops. Of those that are expected to be present at the Conference, General Ni Shih-chun, Civil Governor of Anwhei, is already in the Capital and General Chang Hsun will probably arrive to-day. The Tuchun of Hupeh, General Wang Chan-yuan, has telegraphed to the Government that he will leave for Peking immediately, whilst the Tuchuan of Shansi, General Yen Shi-shan, is due to arrive here either to-day or to-morrow. As the Vice-President has already pledged his support to the Government he will not be required to come, but most of the Military Governors of the provinces have signified their readiness to come in person or have promised to send responsible delegates. This Conference will not hold a very long session and war will be formally declared on Germany as soon as it is concluded.

To overcome the opposition of a small portion of the people, the Government has sent Wen Chung, the Vice-Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, to Shanghai and Hankow, to explain to the people and the Chambers of Commerce the exact situation in which the Government is now placed and to convince them of the advisability of taking the final step. With regard to men like Dr. Sun Yat-sen and Company, the Government is of opinion that whatever be their views on the present question it would be unjustified to send special officials to bring them to their senses, as they are at present only private citizens.

There were several reasons that led the International Affairs Commission to come to the conclusion that war must be declared on Germany. Apart from the news reporting the latest step taken by the United States telegrams had been received from Chinese Ministers from abroad which practically all advised immediate action. Chang Chung-hsiang, the Minister to Tokyo, asks whether any decision has been arrived at since the return of Wang Tahsieh, who, it seems, had brought to the Government certain verbal messages from the country to which he was sent to convey the President's highest decoration to the Mikado.

Dr. Wellington Koo, the Minister to Washington, asks for instructions how to reply to the Government of the United States now that it has declared war on Germany. The Minister to Vienna sent a long telegram the contents of which are said to be of a highly confidential nature, but the gist of which is that Austria is desirous of concluding a separate peace with the Entente Powers. And lastly, Liu ...ien-jen, the Minister to Petrograd, reports that the Russian people seem to be determined to have a republican form of government and that in his opinion they are in earnest in their desire to fight the war to a victorious issue.

A report, which is as yet unconfirmed, appeared in the Chinese press recently stating that the United States Minister, Dr. Reinsch, has intimated to the Government his Government's intention of helping China with an adequate loan in addition to asking the Entente Powers to relieve China of the obligation of paying further instalments on the Boxer Indemnity. This way of looking at things is of course altogether too optimistic. But if such a step as is suggested is taken by the United States, it will be conducive in no small measure to China's interest and it will certainly lead to a speedy declaration of war with Germany. It is not that China is mercenary, but that she really must be assured of financial assistance in one form or another before she can feel at liberty to do what she has virtually pledged herself to do. If the Entente Powers understand China's difficulty, and lend her help accordingly a new factor will be brought into play in the war which is bound to hasten the end of this terrible struggle, since Chinese labour and Chinese food supplies must count a great deal, even if Chinese arms cannot achieve much for the cause of humanity and the sanctity of International Law.

As regards Austria, China is still friendly with her. And it is stated that the policy of the Government is to maintain this friendly connexion with Austria so long as no fresh developments take place between the two countries.

CHINESE MAHOMEDANS WANT WAR ON GERMANY

Peking, Apr. 12.—In view of the rumours of the doubtful attitude of the Chinese Mahomedans in the event of war with Germany, interest attaches to a telegram from General Maan Liang, the well-known Mahomedan leader in Kansu.

General Maan urges the Peking Government to declare war on Germany. He says prudence and minute consideration should be shown before the rupture, but once the step is taken, there should be no hesitation. The only course left is to join the Entente. He offers to lead the Kansu forces to "defeat and destroy those, who disregard the rights of humanity and international law. Thus will virtue and justice be maintained."

GENERAL KOROPATKIN AND FOUR OTHERS ARRESTED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 17.—General Koropatkin, the Governor-General of Russian Turkestan, and four other Generals have been arrested at Tashkand, the capital. They are charged with "provocatively distributing" arms to the Russians for defense in the event of attack by natives.

Tashkand, or Tashkent, the capital of Russian Turkestan, is situated 300 miles north-east of Samarcand. It consists of an ancient walled city and a new European quarter, with the Russian citadel a little to the south. It is connected with the European system of telegraphs, and the railway from Samarcand was opened in 1904. The manufactures include silk, leather, felt goods, and coarse porcelain. The population was 202,000 at last census, comprising 150,000 Sarts and 35,000 Russians. Once the capital of a separate Khanate, Tashkand was in 1810 conquered by Khokand, and since 1868 has been Russian.

RUSSIA FIXING PRICES

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, April 12.—The Provisional Government has published an official order, placing at the disposal of the State, the whole supplies of stock, grain and forage from the 1916 crops, and the entire harvest for 1917, except the grain and forage necessary for feeding the peasant families and their stock, and for sowing. Turkestan and the Trans-Caucasus districts are exempt from this order. At the same time as taking over the grain and forage for equitable distribution at a firm price, the Government considers it urgent to establish firm prices on articles of first necessity viz.:—iron, textiles, petrol and leather. It will supply the population with these at rates reduced as much as possible.

AMERICAN SHIPS WILL BE INTERNED IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, April 13.—The American officer in command of the U.S. Far Eastern Fleet has received orders to intern all American ships in Chinese waters. The gunboats Samar, Monocacy, Quiros and Villalobos are now bound for Shanghai and will be interned on arrival. The gun-boat Wilmington is undergoing extensive repairs, but it is hoped will be able to be made sea-worthy in a very short time.

The presumption is that China does not intend to follow the lead of the United States at present.

OUTLAWS OF HUMANITY DETAIN YEN HUI-CHENG

Peking, April 16.—Chinese circles generally are exasperated at the news of the detention of Dr. Yen Hui-cheng, the Chinese Minister to Berlin. The Minister of the Netherlands, in charge of German interests in China, has made a communication to the Waichiapu indicating that Dr. Yen and his staff will not be allowed to leave Germany pending assurances being given of the safe return of Admiral von Hintze and his Staff, including an extension of the period covered by his safe-conduct and the passports issued by some of the members of the Entente, which, at present, are for two months.

The forthcoming military conference at Peking is attracting much attention and all the Tutuhs are invited to attend or send representatives. A number have already arrived. Owing to the criticism of military interference in administrative affairs, an attempt is being made to make clear the real object of the conference, which undoubtedly is to obtain the support of the provincial Tutuhs for the Government's diplomatic policy.

Shanghai, April 16.—The statement by the officials that they lack instructions to intern American vessels has brought up the question of the latters' status. The result is, it is believed that the Japanese [naval heads] are considering whether the failure on China's part to intern the American ships does not justify the other belligerent war vessels in again entering Chinese waters.

[BY OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, April 11.—The question of China's entry into the war on the Allies side was again discussed in the Cabinet meeting this morning; but still there was no definite result. A special meeting will be held in the Presidential Office to-morrow. It seems there are too many meetings and too few results. The spreading of the news about a severe Russian defeat along the Riga-Dwinsk front has again startled some Chinese politicians who are of the opinion that Germany may take Petrograd before long; but according to telegraphic advice from Mr. Liu Chingjen, Chinese Minister to Russia, received by the Cabinet, it is true the Russians suffered a reverse on the Riga front, and lost about thirty thousand men. In view of the magnitude of this World war, the loss of 30,000 men and some guns cannot be regarded as a great defeat especially in view of the recent revolution in Russia. In addition to this, the International News Service through the German paper "Peking Post" circulated free to the vernacular papers the news that by this time the Germans probably have taken the Russian Capital with her Army and Navy.

In the Cabinet meeting to-day, the despatch of Chinese labourers to England, France and Russia was discussed on the ground that special regulations should be drafted by the Government, governing the enlistment of Chinese for foreign countries, and providing that labourers should be enlisted and transported to their destinations accompanied by reliable Chinese officials, who are to be appointed by the Government for looking after the interests of the labourers. The Diplomatic-discussion Committee will draw up the necessary regulations for approval before the next party leaves.

Regarding the Chinese political situation, the only interesting news is that both Dr. Chen Chin-tao, Minister of Finance and Mr. Hsu Shih-yin, Minister of Communications, have been charged by many vernacular papers as receiving heavy bribes in connection with the renting of Japanese railway cars of thirty tons each at the rate of four dollars per day instead of buying them for the Tientsin-Pukow Railway, and the dissolution of the "Pao-li" brass cash melting company and the formation of a new company by the Ministry of Finance. Mr. Hsu has defended his action but Dr. Chen has said nothing about the charges against him.

175 DEATHS IN EDDYSTONE EXPLOSION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Chester, Pennsylvannia, April 14.—In the two explosions at the Eddystone Ammunition Factory it is estimated that 175 were killed and several hundreds injured. The force of the explosion scattered shells in every direction.

The first explosion occurred in a room in the shrapnel building, where 100 girls were putting the finishing touches to the shells. There were approximately 30,000 shells stored in the adjoining building which the second explosion demolished.

FINNISH PARLIAMENT OPENS

Petrograd, April 12.—Yesterday at the solemn opening of the Finnish Parliament, the Speaker, in expressing unanimous greeting to liberated Russia, said:

"Finland, like Russia, has ceased to be a monarchy. We shall both need a more democratic régime and the establishment of our mutual relations on a new basis. The Finns, free like the Russians, must henceforth have their place in the brotherly alliances of the peoples."

RUSSIA IS UNLIKELY TO CONCLUDE PEACE NOW

"All talks and rumours of peace at the present time are impertinent and Austria-Hungary's reported hope for peace is a grotesque illusion," declared an authority on the European situation whose words weigh highly, when discussing yesterday the Amsterdam dispatch which had it that the Austria-Hungarian Government semi-officially announced that it was building its hopes for peace on the recent manifesto issued by the Provisional Government of Russia.

"The Dual Monarchy," continued this authority, "seems to have interpreted the Russian declaration not to dominate other nations or to seize their territory, as Russia's stripping herself of her objects for which she has cast in her lot in the great war. No one but Austria-Hungary would be able to read such meaning in the Russian manifesto. Austria-Hungary may interpret it as she sees fit, but to take it as forming a basis for discussion of peace is too far-fetched to accept."

Informations reaching here of late from Europe indicates that the Socialistic elements in the belligerent countries are endeavouring to bring about peace by a united movement. In Paris the Socialists of France and Italy are to hold a convention in the middle of May, probably to discuss the peace question. The Socialists of Germany, no doubt inspired by their Government, are utilizing their comrades in Stockholm, Sweden, for the purpose of instigating the Socialists of Russia to start a movement in favour of stopping the war. A conference for discussing the peace terms between the Socialists of Russia and of Germany is now in session in Stockholm and its proceedings are being watched with considerable interest.

In Russia where the Socialists have attained a great influence since the recent successful revolution, their strenuous efforts towards the cessation of the war are reported to be causing grave anxiety to be felt by the Government as to its capability to cope successfully with this strong tidal wave for peace. This unsettled and wavering condition of the people's joint will, the above quoted authority holds responsible for the frequent rumours that Russia, compelled by exhaustion, may conclude a separate peace with the Central Powers.

At the same time, the conditions in Germany are gradually, but irresistably, forcing the Government to do something extraordinary to focus the attention of the people on other points than the problem of internal political reforms. Hence there come the frequent talks of Germany's second proposal for peace.

"Germany," said the authority, "may at any time propose a peace conference for a second time to the Allies, or to Russia alone. Should the proposal be addressed to the Allied Powers I can state on good authority that it will be rejected by the Allied Governments with no less firmness than the first one. If Germany seeks to conclude a separate peace with Russia the Allies,—especially Great Britain, France and Japan—will lose no time in putting a stop to such negotiations.

"The possibility of an uprising in Russia in such case against the war party is not being ignored and the Allies are ready to go even to the length of intervening to help suppress the pacifists of Russia. However, the press dispatches relating to the peace movement in Russia do not seem to be free from exaggeration."

At the Foreign Office little could be learned yesterday with regard to the actual state of affairs in Russia. The date for the meeting of the National Assembly which is to decide the form of government and to adopt a new constitution is still far from being fixed. One opinion concerning this indefinite postponement of the convention was that the Conservatives' contention had prevailed over the radicals to cool the heat of passion by reserving this momentous decision to some later day when calm consideration and calculation should have been restored among the people.

AZUMA UNDER ORDER TO SAIL FOR AMERICA

Mrs. Guthrie, the widow of the late American Ambassador, it is reported, has decided to leave for the United States by the Pacific Mail steamer Columbia, which leaves Yokohama on May 4. The cruiser Azuma, which has been ordered to convey the body of the late Mr. Guthrie to the United States, will leave Yokohama a few days before the departure of Mrs. Guthrie to San Francisco or Seattle, the destination of the warship to be decided upon according to the landing point of Mrs. Guthrie. At any rate the cruiser will sail on her mission on or about the 25th of this month from Yokohama, though the exact date of her departure is to be designated later by the order of the Minister of the Navy. The warship will take about 25 days to cover the distance and will reach her destination two or three days after the arrival of the steamer Columbia carrying Mrs. Guthrie.

According to Captain Niiro, of the cruiser, the Azuma will arrive in Yokohama a few days before her departure for the States, and the mortal remains of the late Ambassador will be removed from the American Naval Hospital at the Bluff to the Nishi hatoba on the morning of the day appointed for departure for America. From the Nishi hatoba the coffin will be taken on a pinnace to the cruiser. The coffin will be taken to the cadets' room amidships where it will remain during the voyage. Two members of the American Embassy will travel on the warship and the commander's room and the staff officers' room will be placed at their disposal.

The mission on which the Azuma is going to America is almost unprecedented, and is of very important significance, said Captain Niiro, because, in addition to the duty of fulfilling the sad task of conveying the remains of the late ambassador, it includes the weighty task of contributing to the closer friendship between the two countries, Japan and America. Captain Niiro considers it a great honour to be trusted with such an important mission.

RUSSIA DURING AND AFTER THE TITANIC STRUGGLE

In view of the curious impression that has been caused here by the Russian declaration regarding the disposal of Constantinople as telegraphed here last week, in which readers were led to believe that Russia had practically signified her intention to abandon her previous claim to the Turkish stronghold, the following Petrograd message of April 10, sent to the "N.-C. Daily News" by its special service, is far clearer on the situation:

The Russian Provisional Government has published to-day a declaration regarding the aims of the war.

After having explained the difficult position in which the country finds itself as regards finance and the transport of food supplies owing to the bad administration of the former Government, the Provisional Government declare that they cannot now decide definitively questions of war and peace, which it will be the duty of the Constituent Government to settle in accord with the Allies. Their immediate aim is to defend Russia at all costs against the invader.

Freed Russia does not wish to dominate foreign countries or to invade their territory, but wishes a durable peace based on mutual respect and freedom of nations.

The policy of the Government will be guided by this idea and by their engagements with their Allies and the Government firmly believes that the whole Russian people will gather all their strength in a supreme effort which their duty towards their country demands of them.

The Crown estates will be nationalized as well as the special estates of the ex-Emperor. According to the nature of these estates their administration will be entrusted to the Ministers of Agriculture, Commerce and Finance, no decision has yet been taken regarding the private estates of the ex-Emperor. His private money will not be confiscated and, moreover, a special grant will be allowed to provide for the Imperial Family.

Amongst the many free gifts sent from all parts of Russia at the disposal of the Provisional Government for the needs of the new Government, there are many sums of money subscribed by Austrian prisoners.

Yesterday the Special Committee composed of members of the Executive Committee of the Duma, representatives of the unions, the Zemstvos, the towns, Central Committee of military industry, Committee of technical assistance for the needs of national defence, unions of engineers and manufacturers, deputations of workmen, soldiers and officers, began its activities. The aim of this Committee will be to re-establish and maintain normal conditions of work in all industrial enterprises.

Yesterday the Minister of War received delegations of the workmen of the Sormovo Works, which are one of the most important works engaged on work for national defence. These delegations expressed the unanimous decision of all the workmen to continue working not only as formerly, but if possible with greater results.

PEACE PATRIOTISM LACKING

The "Yorozu" says that the Japanese have a strong patriotic spirit, which makes them sacrifice their lives at the time of war or other emergencies, but the Japanese lack the patriotic sentiment during peaceful periods. The lack of the spirit to work for the benefit of the country in time of peace, is, the paper says, due to the peculiar history of the country, and the educationists, should endeavour more earnestly to develop this spirit among the Japanese.

The Japanese having lived so long peacefully in the small islands, without knowing the outside, and without meeting the necessity of competing with others, became used to the oppression of the feudal system. It is difficult to educate the Japanese people to see the value of service in the time of peace.

In other countries, the public welfare is the first consideration of everybody, and for the sake of the public welfare, people are willing to sacrifice everything, and it is the duty of politicians and officers to consider the welfare of the public above all other interests. Foreigners wish to consider the welfare of one village, rather than one man, and the welfare of one nation, rather than one city. But in Japan the politicians and others consider the interest of themselves or a group of a small number of people instead of the interest of the city or the nation.

The coming election is not a question of local importance, nor is it the problem of political parties, but it is an affair that concerns the welfare of the whole nation. It should be decided whether it was right that Count Terauchi dissolved the Diet, without considering the will of the people, or not. If the voters believe that the Government should respect the wish and rights of the public ,they should all vote against the present cabinet, and the pro-government candidates should not be able to obtain even one vote.

But the "Yorozu" says that the indications are that the pro-government candidates will also obtain a large number of votes at the coming election. This shows that the Japanese public does not yet realize the value of citizenship or know that the welfare of the country should be considered first of all.

The constitution of Japan protects the interest and wishes of the public, but the Terauchi Cabinet intends to oppress the people so that they will do just as they are told. There are many who, fearing the oppression of the Terauchi Cabinet, vote for the pro-Government candidates, even against their own wish. But the "Yorozu" declares that the benefit obtained by such people for obeying the instruction from the Cabinet, will be only a temporary one.

Those who desire the future development of the country, and the future prosperity of the people, should not be blinded by temporary promise or oppression, and should regard the welfare of the whole nation and vote for the candidates they believe would actually represent the voters in the House of Representatives.

U. S. DECLARATION HELP ALLIES

It is not necessary to state that the declaration of war by the United States against Germany, has already caused a favourable impression upon the Entente which will largely benefit by the joining of the United States in the war against Germany, says the "Tokyo Asahi."

The United States remained neutral for almost three years since the beginning of the war, and during that period she gained an enormous profit from her increased foreign trade, and war industries. The wealth of the nation has been so largely increased in the past three years, that the "Asahi" does not believe, the country will suffer financially by going into the war. Moreover, she is able to give assistance to the Entente powers, and a recent report says that the United States Government will shortly float bonds to the extent of 14,000,000,000 yen, of which amount 6,000,000,000 yen will be loaned to the Entente.

Since the outbreak of war, the belligerent powers of Europe have purchased a large amount of products from the United States, from the necessity of continuing the war and feeding the people. Consequently all European nations have become debtors to the United States. In the past, the United States subscribed to the bonds of the Entente powers to the extent of 3,084,000,000 yen. When the United States makes the present loan of 6,000,000,000 yen it will mean the conversion of the 3,000,000,000 yen European bonds, and an additional loan of 3,000,000,000 yen to the Entente nations.

In the past when the European bonds were floated in the United States, valuable securities were required, and it became impossible for the warring nations to offer any more security for further bonds or loans. Seeing this difficulty, J.P. Morgan & Co. sent a declaration to the bankers and capitalists of the United States, last autumn, saying that the European bonds should be floated without security, if the United States desires the export of the war orders to Europe. However, the bankers and capitalists did not listen to the pleading of J.P. Morgan & Co. Even the Federal Reserve Board stopped loans to the European nations beyond a certain limit.

The "Asahi" declares that if such a condition had continued much longer, the Entente nations would have suffered from terrible financial difficulties. But the United States has declared war against Germany, and also has announced that she will give the best possible financial aid to the Entente nations. However long the war may continue, England, for instance, will never suffer from financial difficulties, as long as the United States is willing to aid her.

OPPOSITION TO CHINESE TARIFF

The traders interested in China met at Osaka on April 15th, and resolved to oppose the revision of the Chinese tariff, and the "Chugai Shogyo" says that the demonstration by the Spinners Association at Tokyo and the mass meeting of spinners, exporters, cotton dealers, match manufacturers, sugar merchants, silk merchants and others recently held in Osaka, prove that the revision of the Chinese tariff will be detrimental to the progress of the Japanese trade with China.

China has an abundant supply of raw materials, but her industries have not made any noticable progress, and it is natural that China will import manufactured articles from Japan, the nearest of her neighbours, and therefore it is unnatural that China tries to protect her own industries and prevent the import of Japanese goods by increasing the tariff.

It is said that the Government authorities are now endeavouring to solve the question of the revision of the Chinese tariff satisfactorily. The "Chugai", however, regrets that the traders and others interested in the Chinese trade are treating the question as a political problem, while it is absolutely an economical affair. The paper sympathizes with the traders and recognizes their ground for opposing the revision of the tariff, but it is purely an economical question, and should not be used as a political topic. Trying to prevent the increase of the tariff, they oppose the present Government, and are making a political demonstration.

In Japan there are many politicians who are looking for some thing to be used as a political tool in making themselves prominent. Such politicians will gladly take up the question of the Chinese tariff if the traders themselves treat the matter politically. If the question becomes a political subject, while the politicians may gain by using it, the traders will find themselves unable to solve it satisfactorily. The paper hopes that the traders will not treat it as a political affair, but solve it as an economic problem from the beginning.

THE CULTIVATION OF HERBS

The Medical Investigation Association, has recently appealed to the Department of Home Affairs, for the encouragement of the cultivation of medicinal herbs, says the "Hochi". Since the outbreak of the European war, the price of medicines has so advanced that it has become necessary for the Government to prevent the export of medicines, and encourage the manufacture of medicines in Japan. Under such an encouragement the medicinal industries are making rapid progress, but the paper regrets that Japan still has to import medicinal herbs to manufacture medicines.

Many varieties of medicinal herbs are cultivated in Japan, and some of them are even exported to foreign countries, but the Government is not giving proper encouragement for the cultivation of such necessary herbs. While all foreign governments are establishing experimental stations and encouraging the cultivation of medicinal herbs, the Japanese Government has been taking a contrary step. In 1883, the Japanese Governmen established a medicinal herbs experimental station in Tokyo and planted many herbs imported from Germany, but the station was abandoned in 1889, and no attention was given to further cultivation.

The paper declares that the Government should carefully consider the necessity of the encouragement for the cultivation of such herbs, and to become able to supply the demand in the country, medicinal herbs should be imported from foreign countries and planted in Japan.

FARMERS AND POLITICS

In electing members of the House of Representatives, it is necessary to select suitable men to represent the interests of the people, says the "Yorozu".

Among the Japanese, those engaged in the agricultural works claim the largest number of the population. In looking over the history of parliament, a large number of bills concerning the interests of the farmers have been brought up in the past sessions, however, it is strange to note that these numerous bills brought little benefit to the farmers in general. The "Yorozu" says that that was because of the wrong selection of the representatives in the House of Representatives. What they had considered in the past was only the interest of the large farmers, and the welfare of the common farmers and farm labourers was not considered.

Among the Members of the House of Representatives, there are many who forget that they were elected by the farmers, and regard themselves as Government officials. Even in the present campaign there are many who declare that they will look after the interests of farmers, but if the farmers elect such candidates who have no sound ideas about the conditions of farmers, and who have no definite plan for bettering the conditions of the farmers, their interests will never be looked after by such representatives.

The important question for the agricultural districts at present is the development of Agricultural Associations. While there are an innumerable number of such associations throughout the country, they are all under the command of the local Government, and while they are heavily taxed, they are not able to plan the true development of farmers without orders from the Government officials. The Agricultural Associations, are, however, organizations for the benefit of farmers, and farmers should improve the organization of such associations. Under the present condition, the associations are not only unable to aid the improvement of farms and conditions of farmers, but they are preventing the valuable study of agricultural problems.

Among the candidates who announce that they represent the farmers there are none, who have any opinion regarding the improvement of such associations. The "Yorozu" sincerely advises the farmers and those who are interested in the development of the agricultural districts, to select suitable candidates who will actually consider the welfare of farmers and elect them to the House of Representatives. The candidates who are nominally representing farmers, and who are nothing but followers of the bureaucracy will never improve the condition of farmers, however brilliant the speeches they may make at the campaign meetings.

INTERESTING PATENT SUIT BEFORE COURTS

While the suit brought by the General Electric Company of New York against the Dai Nippon Electric Bulb Manufacturing Company for the infringement of the patent right to manufacture the Tungsten filament, is still pending, a suit has been brought by Mr. Tatsunosuke Oshima, Director of the Oshima Electric Industrial Works, Yuraku-cho, Kojimachi, to nullify the patent obtained by the General Electric Company for the manufacture of the Tungsten filament in Japan.

The General Electric Company, patentee of the process of manufacturing Tungsten filament, applied to the Japanese Government to patent the process in August, 1910, and patent (No. 18961) was given to the Tokyo Electric Company, agents of the General Electric Company in December of the same year.

Mr. Oshima declares the thorough investigation of the application for patents cannot be made within two or three months, and it usually takes six months or even over one year to give judgment upon such an important patent. He says that the Japanese Government granted the patent to the General Electric Company without making proper investigation, and also that the patent was given so favourably to the General Electric Company that the other inventors are unjustly oppressed. On these grounds, Mr. Oshima has applied to the Government to cancel the patent given to the General Electric Company.

The outcome of the case will affect the electrical industries of the country, as the General Electric Company is at present obtaining a profit of over six million yen a year from the sale of Tungsten lamps in Japan.

The suit brought by the General Electric Company against the Dai Nippon Electric Bulb Manufacturing Company has attracted wide attention in Japan as well as other nations, but the recent suit brought by Mr. Oshima will make the former controversy insignificant if he wins the case.

The representatives of the General Electric Company has already submitted explanations to the Government against the contention of Mr. Oshima, and the future outcome of the case will be watched with interest.

ALLEGED BREACH OF ELECTION LAW

Mr. Ryohei Okada, Minister of Education, has been sued by Mr. Shigeru Ito, attorney of Hamamatsu, for breach of the election law. The case has been brought to the Hamamatsu District Court. Mr. Ito says that Mr. Okada broke the election law in campaigning for Mr. Hajime Kitai, a candidate for the membership in the House of Representatives.

On March 22nd, Mr. Okada went to Mitsuke-machi, Shozuoka to support Mr. Kitai, and while staying at Mitsuke-machi, Mr. S. Tokura, the representative of the local association for prevention of damages from flood, requested Mr. Okada to obtain fifty thousand yen from the national treasury to enable the building of an embankment to prevent floods along the Ota river. On the following day, Mr. Okada returned to Tokyo, and on the twenty-fifth, sent a signed telegram to Mr. Tokura stating that the consent of the authorities has been obtained for the monetary aid for the prevention of flood and that he would leave for Mitsuke-machi on the 31st.

Mr. Ito declares that Mr. Okada intended to secure the agreement from the voters along the river Ota to vote for Mr. Kitai as soon as an agreement is reached between himself and Mr. Kitai and Mr. Tokura, representatives of the association for the prevention of flood damages.

A suit for the breach of election law has been also brought against Mr. Kitai, the candidate and Mr. Tokura.

Regarding this suit for the breach of the election law, Mr. Okada, Minister of Education is reported to have stated that what has been made public is contrary to the facts. He says that when he stopped at the district on his way back to Tokyo from Kyushu after the Grand Military manœuvres held last fall, the request was made to him to have the amount the Imperial Railways intends to spend on raising the railway bed along the Ota river, transferred to the construction of the embankment along the river, so that the people in the neighbourhood will be prevented from the damages by flood and also the railway will be safe-guarded. The railway authorities promised the people of the district to agree to their plan, but did not undertake the plan immediately, and when Mr. Okada visited the district recently the people requested him to make a further appeal to the Imperial railways. On the receipt of the answer from the Imperial Railways that the work would soon be undertaken he informed the people of the district that the arrangement for preventing the flood had been made.

HEAD AND FACE DRY AND SCURVY

Used to Itch. Formed Dry Crust. Hair Fell Out.

HEALED BY CUTICURA

"My head and face became very dry and scurvy and used to itch. I began to scratch which made it worse and the top of my head formed a dry crust. My hair began to fall out which made my head look bare and my face was sore and discolored.

IMPERIAL GARDEN PARTY AT SHINJUKU

Most fortunately, the weather cleared up Tuesday morning, and the bright and warm Spring sun favoured the success of the Imperial Cherry Garden Party held Tuesday afternoon at the Imperial Garden, Shinjuku. Formerly the Imperial Cherry Party was held at the Hama Imperial Palace, but this year it was held for the first time in the Shinjuku Garden, as the Hama Palace was considered too small to accommodate the large number of guests invited. The Shinjuku Garden is of large area, and studded with old cherry trees which stand along the shore of the large pond, amidst the ever-greens, and upon the hills covered with shrubbery. The guests yesterday were given the freedom of the entire garden, which was gay with Spring flowers.

The garden contains 1,300 cherry trees which are all old and magnificent trees, and in addition over eight hundred cherry trees of the double-petalled variety have been recently planted. Yesterday the single-petalled flowers were past full bloom, but the double-petalled ones were just at the height of beauty.

T.I.M. the Emperor and Empress left the Imperial Palace at 2.30 in the afternoon for the Shinjuku Garden, accompanied by Prince Takatsukasa, Lord Chamberlain, General Uchiyama, and other Court officials. Arriving at the Garden, Their Majesties were welcomed by T.I.H. Prince Fushimi, Prince and Princess Kan-in, Prince and Princess Higashifushimi, Prince and Princess Fushimi, Jr., Prince and Princess Kuni, Prince and Princess Nashimoto, Prince and Princess Asaka, Prince and Princess Higashikuni, and Prince and Princess Kitashirakawa.

T.I.M. the Emperor and Empress granted audience to the guests invited and shook hands with the representatives of foreign governments. At three o'clock, T.I.M. the Emperor and Empress proceeded to the temporary structure especially erected for the occasion, and there, with T.I.H. Princes and Princesses, the invited guests drank to the welfare of their Imperial hosts, and the cherry blossoms, the symbol of the nation.

After the toast T.I.M. the Emperor and Empress walked through the Garden, admiring the double-petalled blossom now in full bloom. At 4.30 Their Majesties left the Garden for the Imperial Palace.

Among the three thousand guests invited yesterday were, the representatives of foreign governments with their ladies; foreign residents and their families; visitors to these shores; Prince Marshal Yamagata, Admiral Count Togo, Count Terauchi, Marshal Oku, Baron and Baroness Goto, Admiral and Mrs. Kato, General Oshima, Viscount and Viscountess Motono, Mr. and Mrs. Okada, Baron and Baroness Okada, Mr. and Mrs. Nakashoji, Mr. and Mrs. Shoda, Viscount Kato, Marquis Hijikata, Baron Hirata, Viscount Kiyoura, members of the Privy Council, Admiral Ijuin, Admiral Dewa, General Iguchi, Peers, and Government officials.

During the afternoon, the Toyama Military Band, and the Court musicians played selections.

MR. ART SMITH TO HERE FLY AT END OF MONTH

By way of returning the kindness and hospitality shown him by citizens of Tokyo during his last visit here, especially when he was unfortunately injured by accident in Sapporo, Mr. Art Smith, the plucky American aviator who arrived at Yokohama eary Friday morning, has signified his intention to Mr. Kushibiki, his manager in the Far East, to make a free flight for the entertainment of citizens upon his arrival in Tokyo, and with the consent of Mr. Kushibiki the Imperial Aviation Association under the presidency of Marquis Okuma has decided to assume the entire management for the occasion. This was announced Wednesday afternoon by Lieutenant Takagi, standing director of the Association, before the representatives of the Tokyo press, and the idea has been hailed as a very befitting lead to a series of performances which the Association, we understand, has now in contemplation with a view to awakening the interest of the nation in aviation in which Japan falls so far behind other countries.

It is said that the flight will be made probably at the parade ground at Aoyama on the 28th or the 29th inst. and the Association has applied to the authorities for permission to use the ground. Mr. Art Smith will fly in Tokyo only for one day for which there will be no charge. The Association is now making preparations so as to make his free flight a big success and to accommodate as many people as possible at the parade ground on that day; about 5,000 seats will be prepared along the track for the convenience of members of the Association and others, it is said.

The arrival of Mr. Art Smith is awaited by many Japanese people with keen interest and it is expected that he and his mother will be accorded a warm welcome and reception throughout Japan. No American aviator or aviatrice is indeed more popular among the Japanese, for it was he and his display of wonderful performances that brough into strong relief in the eyes of the Japanese public the lamentably backward state of our aviation last year, and the accident at Sapporo which undoubtedly cost him dear, has made Mr. Smith a more popular figure in Japan than ever. It is stated that this visit to Japan was opposed by Mr. William Bastar, his manager in America, who is said to fear the recurrence of a similar accident in this country, but despite his repeated advice the young aviator has not given up the hope of coming to the land of the rising sun and cherry flowers thinking it his duty to reciprocate the hospitality of the Japanese by giving them a show for nothing.

A HINDU CEREMONY

On Monday afternoon, writes a correspondent, a very interesting ceremony took place in the big hall at the residence of Marquis Okuma (Waseda) when the Buddha was worshipped after the Hindu manner by a number of priests of the Nichiren sect and more than a dozen young men of Waseda University dressed in Hindu garb with four young Japanese girls in the dress of Hindu ladies.

The ceremony was led by Pundit H. P. Shastri of India and Prof. Takeda of the Waseda University. Prof. Shastri sang beautiful Sanskrita songs from the vedas in a melodious voice. The girls made offerings of flowers and all sang Sanskrita verses in a chorus. Marquis Okuma took considerable interest in the affair and congratulated Messrs. Shastri and Takeda.

A group photograph was taken in front of the house of His Excellency with Pundit H. P. Shastri and Mr. Takeda on either side of Marquis Okuma.

The Nippon Kerosene Oil Company, will celebrate the Thirtieth anniversary of its establishment on May 5th at the Kokugi-kan Ryogoku.

The Patriotic Ladies Society of Japan will hold its 14th general meeting of members at Hibiya park on May 4. The Imperial Government Railways will issue reduced return tickets for the benefit of provincial members wishing to attend the meeting .

The total receipts at Tokyo station for twelve months ended in March amounted to 3,021,300 yen, of which the receipts from the sale of tickets amounted to 2,641,734 yen.

This shows an increase of 371,316 yen compared with the fiscal year 1915 and also an increase of 407,312 yen over the estimated figure.

The Chinese General Chamber of Commerce has petitioned the Waichiaopu to protest against the prohibition of the import of Chinese tea into Great Britain. The Chamber's great argument is that as China is consuming large quantities of British goods of all kinds, it is unfair that there should be any embargo on her produce. The argument, as it stands, is not without reason, remarks the "N.-C. Daily News."

According to a Peking telegram, to Chinese newspapers, the Inspector-General of Customs, has telegraphed instructions to all German Commissioners recommending them to apply for a year's leave of absence during which they will draw full salary. No definite arrangement, it is said, has yet been arrived at regarding Deputy Commissioners and other indoor and outdoor members of the Customs of German nationality.

It is learned that the educational authorities are considering means to give satisfactory education to orphans. Under protection at orphanages in the country, they are excepted from the compulsory education now-a-days for various reasons, while the ordinary elementary school course extending over six years is compulsory for other children. It is expected that the Educational Department in consultation with the Home Department will devise some proper measures for their education in the near future.

The Procurator concerned in the Thayer Trespass Case has filed an appeal against the judgment of the Yokohama Chiho Saibansho. As may be remembered, Mr. R. H. Thayer, a teacher of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, was on April 20 sentenced at the Yokohama Chiho Saibansho to a fine of 20 yen for having entered the naval wireless station in Yokosuka in January last.

It is reported that the American Government has decided to send a military aviation company to Hawaii. The company will be sent from the army aviation corps at San Diego, Cal. and consists of 145 men. The company, it is stated, will have 16 tractor biplanes of a bigger type than usual which, equipped with 400 h.p. engines, will make 75 miles an hour, being capable of a 400-mile continued flight.

Mr. Jenjuro Horikoshi, head of the Horikoshi Shokai at Tsukiji, Kyobashi, has been decorated with a Blue Ribbon Medal by the Bureau of Decorations in recognition of his long-continued services for the encouragement of industries and the promotion of foreign trade. Mr. Horikoshi visited America some years ago and paved the way for the exportation of Japanese handkerchiefs and silk crêpe to the United States. After his return from the States he encouraged the improvement of figured mats, habutae and cotton crepes so as to secure a larger market for them in America and elsewhere. He started the Horikoshi Shokai in 1893, which now enjoys an excellent reputation.

Sentence was pronounced at the Yokohama District Court, on the 20th, on Mr. Ralph Hoyt Thayer, a teacher of St. Paul's College, Tsukiji, who was arrested and sent for trial at the Yokohama Court on a charge of having violated the law for the protection of military secrets by entry on January 17 of the compound of the naval wireless station at Kusunokiyama, Yokosuka, which belongs to the fortified zone of the Yokosuka naval station. Chief Judge Jimbo, who presided, in delivering judgment, said that the finding of the Court was that accused had committed trespass on the date and at the place named, but that there was no evidence to show that he had done so with felonous intent. He was mulcted in a fine of twenty yen.

EXTRA SESSION OF DIET

At the cabinet meeting held yesterday, it was decided that the extra session of the Diet will be opened in Tokyo from June 21st, and within a few days, the Imperial order summoning the members of the both Houses will be issued.

It is still unknown how the extra session will fare. It is generally believed that the session will smoothly pass the budget, and will not be in session long. However, the defeated Kenseikai and the Kokuminto might try to prevent the smooth proceedings at the extra session.

WARNING TO MARINERS

Rear-Admiral Nunome, Chief of the Hydrographical Department, issued a notification on the 20th to the effect that the light of the lighthouses in the ports of British North Borneo will be occasionally extinguished without any previous notification and that commanders of steamers and other vessels entering those ports must take care to make port during daytime only. The following notifications were simultaneously issued by the Chief of the Hydrographical Department:

Notice is given hereby that the American governor-general of the Philippines under date of April 7, issued a notification prohibiting the entry and navigation of vessels in the Bay of Manila; also that the Commander-in-Chief of the American Asiatic Squadron issued, under date of April 9, a notification prohibiting the entry of vessels to Subick Gulf from the necessity of the defense of the place. The American Customs notification issued under date of April 7 relating to the prohibition of the entry of vessels to Cebu Port during night hours states that no vessels can enter or pass through the north channel of the port of Cebu between the hours from sunset to sunrise. The prohibited zone of the channel is between the Opon lighthouse (blue light) and the San Pedro lighthouse.

TERAUCHI MINISTRY GAIN EASY VICTORY

The sweeping victory of the Terauchi Ministry in the Parliamentary general election for the members of the House of Representatives which was already foreshadowed on the 21st by the returns from the majority of the electoral districts was completely confirmed late Monday night. The returns from the country were fully known Monday night at last, according to which the Kensei-kai the leading opposition party led by Viscount Kato, which lost in the urban campaigns has been again defeated irrevocably, despite the rather optimistic view held by the party leaders that the returns from the country were likely to be larger than those for the Seiyu-kai, and the victory of the pro-Government candidates in the country was conspicuous in its decisiveness. The classification of the elected M.P.'s is as follows:

Pro-Government:
Seiyu-kai	164
Independent	49
Total	213
Anti-Government:
Kensei-kai	120
Kokuminto	36

The above table shows that the Government supporters lead by a majority of 45, to the surprise of both the government and the Opposition, for the latter asserted that their supporters would have a majority of 40 at best, while the latter insisted that the margin of their defeat if it might come would be very small, and the Kensei-kai leaders predicted that despite the party's defeat in the urban districts it alone was sure to win at least 140 seats.

It must be noted that when the House of Representatives was dissolved a few months ago for the general election, the classification for the members was as follows, the Kensei-kai having the absolute majority.

Kensei-kai	198
Seiyu-kai	111
Independent	44

Of these 44 Independent members, however, 15 were against the Terauchi Government, so that the anti-Government members had a lead over the Government supporters by a majority of 101. The scale has been turned now in the opposite direction by the issue of the election. The Terauchi Cabinet dissolved the House of Representatives and that was not without avail to the ministry.

The distribution of the pro and anti-government members of the new House of Representatives is made as follows:

Looking over the result of the recent election compared with the parties before the dissolution in January, it shows that the Kenseikai gained one member in Tottori, but in Shiga, Okayama, Wakayama, Miyazaki and Kagoshima prefectures, the Kenseikai did not have any member elected. In Aichi the Kenseika lost five members, in Gumma, Hiroshima and Yamaguchi, four members each, and in Kanagawa, Chiba, Ebaraki, Miye, Nagano, Miyagi, Yehime and Fukuoka prefectures, three members each. In many other Prefectures the Kenseikai failed to elect the same number of members as the party had before the dissolution.

On the contrary, the Seiyukai met success all over the country. It lost entirely in Osaka and Okinawa, but succeeded to have two members from Yamaguchi, three from Shimane and one each from Miye and Okayama, despite the fact that in all these Prefectures the party did not have any member at the last election. In Yebaragi, the party gained four members, and three members each in Aichi, Miyagi, Yamagata and Akita. It only lost one member in Tottori. On the whole the Seiyukai gained one member per each prefecture.

The Kokuminto had an unexpected success, and the total number of the members was increased from twenty-nine to thirty-six.

Of the Independent members, those against the Government have not changed, but the pro-Government independents have greatly increased, and it is reported that the increase of the pro-Government independent members was due to the influence of the Government in the politics.

The Seiyukai and the Government scored the expected success, but as the Seiyukai now has more members than the Kenseikai and the Kokuminto combined, the relation between the Government and the Seiyukai, and also between the Seiyukai and the Kokuminto, are regarded to be interesting in future.

According to the opinions of the politicians well versed in the political situation, the result of the election will not bring peace to the political circle, and on the contrary it will be the cause of the future disturbance.

JAPAN AND MANILA DRAWING CLOSER ALSO

The Philippines Government is taking deep interest in the coming Oriental Olympic Games to be held at Tokyo in May, and the government has appropriated 15,000 yen towards the expense for the participation of the Philippines athletes.

Furthermore a recent report from Manila states that a large number of Filipinos intend to visit Japan during the Games, and the government will despatch the steamer Pa'na, 3,000 tons for the purpose of conveying the participating athletes and other Filipinos to Japan. The party will be headed by Mr. Manuel L. Queson, President of the Senate and the leading statesman of the Philippines, and Mr. H. L. Hershy, Private Secretary to the Governor-General of the Philippines will also join the party.

It is believed that the party of leading Filipinos who will come to Japan during the Olympic Games, intends not only to go sight-seeing through Japan, but also to investigate the political, and economical conditions in Japan in order to obtain any possible information to aid the development of the Islands.

Mr. Manuel L. Queson, the head of the coming party, is well known as the leading statesman of the Philippines and he was instrumental in passing the Jones Bill last fall. With the enactment of the constitution, the entire members of the Senate and House of Representatives are now Filipinos, and also natives are appointed for the position of the head of various departments of the Government. Thus under the guidance of the United States Government, the Philippine Islands are now beginning to have perfect self governmest.

Recently the trade between Japan and the Philippines Islands has greatly increased, and the visit of Mr. Queson and other leading citizens of the islands at this moment will further stimulate the development of the better commercial relations between Japan and the Philippines. Not only has the amount of trade increased, but the number of Japanese settling in the Philippines has also increased rapidly.

Before the war, the export of Japanese products to the Philippines was only six million yen a year, but last year it increased to ten millions, and the import of sugar and hemp from the Philippines has also increased to ten million yen a year. On Mindanao Island, over two thousand Japanese are now engaged in the cultivation of hemp.

Recently almost one thousand Japanese are yearly entering the Philippine islands, and as the land is rich, there is a good future there for Japanese labourers and capitalists.

In view of these commercial and other relations between Japan and the Philippines, the Japanese authorities and businessmen welcome the coming of Mr. Queson and other citizens, confident that their visit will strengthen the friendly tie between the two islands and develop better commercial relations.

SINO-JAPANESE AMITY IS FAST IMPROVING

The Peking "Daily News" of April 19 had to say in its editorial much about Japan's attitude of late towards China. The substance of the editorial as it was received here on the 20th is as follows:—

Chinese-Japanese relations have improved lately and the sincere mode of welcome extended to our Special Envoy and Minister of Communications testifies to the good will cherished by the Government and people of Japan towards China. We attribute this phenomenon to the Japanese statesmen's having come to see the necessity of co-operation between China and Japan. The national aspirations, the geographical and racial relations, and the common interests of the two peoples ought to foster friendship, not discord, between China and Japan. China's resources of wealth are unlimited, and, if properly developed, the future is full of promise and numerous industries and enterprises are bound to prosper. We hope that Japan, seeing the futility of the policy of aggrandizement and military conquest, will utilize the industrial materials and mineral products of China through a co-operation with this country.

The times has outlived the age of military conquest. The manifesto of the Russian Provisional Government makes clear the tendency, the world over, which has assumed a fundamentally different aspect from that of ten years ago. To the nation founded on the people's will, what is the value of the control over other nations? The conquered people, at the bottom of their hearts, never submit to the conqueror. We notice, in the light of Japan's attitude of late, that the fair and foresighted statesmen of Japan have awakened to the fact that the principle of military conquest is an anachronism. To win the favour of China will be far more significant to Japan, we advise, rather than to occupy the territory of China. No occupation permanently lasts, but the development of commercial relations will bestow a mutual welfare on the two countries. If Japan aspires to become a great nation, it will do well for her to pursue that end through peaceful not military, means.

The miserable situation of Germany is a living lesson to progressive nations. We heartily welcome the friendly feeling the people and statesmen of Japan are manifesting towards China.

VISCOUNT AKIMOTO DEAD

Viscount Okitomo Akimoto, former feudal lord of the clan of Tatebayashi, who has been suffering from catarrh for some time past, died Monday morning at the age of sixty-one. The deceased Viscount was secretary in the Japanese Legation in Paris in 1883, which post he resigned in 1884 and went to Germany to study politics. Created Viscount in 1885 he re-entered the diplomatic service and in 1892 was appointed Minister Resident under the late Count Mutsu, the then Foreign Minister, from which post he was afterward promoted to Minister Plenipotentiary and stationed in London. In recent years he took an active part in politics as a member of the Seiyukai at the time the party was under the leadership of the late Prince Ito.

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 16.—The French communiqué reads: "On Tuesday, in an extended action east of Rheims, we attacked the German lines between Prunay and the St. Hilaire to St. Soupplet Road. On a front of 15 kilometers, we carried the whole of the first German position, pushing beyond it south of Movouvillers. Here, in a brilliant assault, we conquered the enemy line for an extent of 11 kilometers, including the solidly organized heights from Mount Comillet to east of Vandivincourt.

"Further east, a spirited action resulted in the capture of Anberive and the powerfully fortified salient formed by the German line around the village, extending over a front of 3 kilometres.

"We took over 2,500 prisoners in this region. Between Soissons and Rheims our artillery has resumed its destructive fire on the German organizations. The number of unwounded prisoners taken between Soissons and Rheims has now reached 11,000."

London, April 18.—It is officially announced that the British are making progress north of St. Quentin and have captured Villers Gaislain.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Paris, April 18.—It is officially announced that the French have made important progress east of Soissons, where they have taken Chavonna-Chivy. Desperate German counter-attacks have been repulsed in Champagne.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr: 18.—The extension of the French attack illustrates afresh the new tactical method of constant enlargement of the front as the attack progresses, with great strength provided on the wings so that, when the objective is reached, there is no danger of a salient inviting an outflanking movement.

The initial French successes in the greatest battle hitherto fought, in which it is estimated 2,000,000 men are engaged, has cheered Paris more than anything since the beginning of the war. It has correspondingly depressed the Germans. The enormous weight of guns and the numbers of men collected by Marshal von Hindenburg added to the desperation of the German resistance show that the enemy was thoroughly prepared for the great French offensive. The French gains so early in the battle are most wonderful. Not only have the Crown Prince's forces been heavily defeated, but the advance of the French eastward promises to release Rheims from martyrdom.

Between Soissons and Auberive, the French, at night-time, carried out operasions of detail, which secured considerable advantages. "To the west, a brilliant action gave us the village of Chavonne and the complete possession of Chivy. Northeast of these places we carried the whole ground as far as the approaches of Brayeen-la-Onnais, taking 250 prisoners.

"In the sector of Ville-aux-Bois, which we captured, we took several fortified works and also the woods to the east, capturing 400 prisoners. The enemy has withdrawn his heavy and field artillery to the rear. Nevertheless we captured 12 guns and a considerable quantity of machine-guns and numerous trench engines. We have taken 14,000 prisoners since April 16."

The British forces have seized 227 guns since April 9. The weather continues most "poisonous." Nevertheless on April 17, the British advanced between Gouzeancourt and Villeret and also pushed on south of Lagnicourt. Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig also reports progress south-eastward and eastward of Epehy. The capture of Villers Gaillain improved the British position in the neighbourhood of Lagnicourt. Rain is still falling.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, April 18.—The battle of Champagne widened yesterday in spite of violent rain and snowstorms. The assault against the position behind which the German attacks were under preparation between Prunay and Auberive was made easier by the artillery posted on very strong positions.

The action of the infantry began about five in the morning and two hours afterwards General Petain learned of the capture of the first enemy positions. The French had reached Cornille third line and all the dominating heights overlooking Moronvillers, and at Maurey on the right wing towards Auberive, there was an equally successful action.

Eyewitnesses state there has been no such slaughter of Germans since the Trouee-de-Charmes battle at the beginning of the war. An average advance was made of four kilometres depth and at certain points it reached six kilometres, despite the difficulties. This country is almost flat but there are numerous narrow long woody strips where the Germans hold a line of isolated heights. Immediately east of Vailly on the spot where the Germans border the Aisne, the French carried, along a several kilometres front, the first enemy position from Chavonne as far as Chivy ever pushing forward as far as the second line at Brayen-en Laonnais.

By its extent of battle line engaged by the French in connection with the British, the pressure may be considered as the most formidable since the German retreat on the Marne.

The armies which have moved forward are adding their effort to that of the troops who have been fighting fiercely of late from Soissons to Saint Quentin and that of the British in the Arras district. Thus the Germans at present have got to fight desperately on an immense front which from north of Lens to Rheims is of more than 200 kilometres exten .

At no time of the war have they had to face such a great attack.

The front of the first offensive this week may be divided up into three natural secors: From Soissons to the Craonne region, composed of agricultural plateaux. Then from Craonne to the Aisne rolling plains and woody land. Lastly from Berryabac to Rheims sector of the vineyards country.

The opening of the battle developed with great fierceness all along the line. The enemy evidently expected the French offensive and all his reserves had been accumulated, having been brought up by all routes leading to Laon. An immense amount of material, ready to replace the batteries that might be destroyed by the French guns was on the spot.

When the assault began the French carried the whole of the enemy first line on the left between Soissons and Croanne. In the centre they not only took the first position between Craonne and Velleauxbois, but also pushed on to the second line. On the right the result was equally brilliant and further still to the right of Loivre and Coucy the two positions covering Brimontfort were carried and pushed forward as far as the Aisne Canal.

The number of prisoners and the enormous quantity of material captured show the importance of the success won within a few hours despite the unfavourable weather, battering rain hampering aviation and the artillery.

It is noteworthy also that while the French engaged only the first brigades of their army corps the Germans were compelled to use a notable part of their reserves. Thus the Germans lost the initiative which the so-called Hindenburg's plan was supposed to give them, and their line was now being assailed by the most formidable mass of troops and artillery ever assembled in history.

One of the greatest points of the German resistance has been in the region of the Saint Cobain forest about midway between the limits of the present extended battle front. The new French offensive threatens to endanger this spot in the German line.

London, April 19.—The French vigorously continued the offensive between Soissons and Auberive. North of Chavonne we captured the village of Ostel and drove the enemy back a kilometre.

Northwards we captured Braye-en-Launnois and all the ground eastward to the vicinity of Courtecon. The enemy fled in disorder, abandoning much materials.

We captured 19 guns and a trench south of Laffaux, broke up the enemy, and captured Nauteuil-en-fosse.

Finally, south of the Aisne, a spirited attack captured the bridgehead between Condé Valley and the whole valley.

An important unit in the forest of Villeaux-Bois laid down its arms, we thereby taking a total of 13,000 prisoners and 180 mitrailleuses.

East of Courcy, the Russians captured fortified works and prisoners.

The French reduced several centres of resistance and captured strong points in Champagne, where 20 guns and 500 new prisoners were captured.

The number of prisoners taken since the opening of the battle exceeds 17,000 and 75 guns have been captured.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, April 19.—A telegram from Berlin published in Denmark says the military correspondent of the "Vossische Zeitung" characterises the battles now raging on the western front as a competitive struggle in the strength of war material. The so-called railway guns of the British and French, says the paper, are a typical product of the new system and as long as the Allies have the superiority of these and other munitions Hindenburg's strategy is the only remedy, namely a speedy evacuation of any of the front lines.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 20.—The latest French communiqué shows that the French have extinguished the salient south-west of Laon and the plateau from Joux to Aizy. They thus have a commanding observation over Chemin-des-Dames and the great road running from Laffaux to Craonne. The country from this road slopes downward to Laon. As there has been no receipt of reports of fighting at Courcy or other points in front of St. Gobain, it would appear that the French are engaged in a movement between Laffaux and Craonne designed to turn St. Gobain.

The German Press explains to readers that Marshal von Hindenburg's policy of evacuation from the front positions is the only remedy against the enormous superiority of the Anglo-French forces in men and materials.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 20.—The French Thursday evening communiqué reads: "The enemy, north of the Aisne under vigorous pressure, continued to retreat towards Chemin-des-Dames. The French have occupied Aizy, Joux and Laffaux. They have also captured Fort-de-Conde and seized a strong point north of Hurtebise, taking 500 more prisoners. Great progress has been made west of Bermericourt, where a brilliant action carried the enemy's strongly fortified trench system on a front of two kilometres, connecting Auberive woods and Moronvillers. We also drove back the enemy towards Vandesincourt, taking 150 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, April 20.—The successes scored by the French northeast of Soissons Wednesday were of great importance. West of the Craonne plateau after having carried the first line of trenches, the troops, on the left consolidated themselves on the following front. From Vauxaillon northeast of Margwal and east of Tregny and Chivres, north of Cahssesny, south of Chavonne and Chivy in the Ailles region, south of Craonne.

North of the line between Chivres and Chivy the enemy was still in possession of the heights. Two simultaneous attacks were then decided upon and were followed by a complete success. Driven from Nanteiul and Brave, the Germans however still held intermediary positions, but soon the Conde Vailly bridgehead was blown up. North of Vailly the storming troops, after climbing plateau's slopes, carried the Maison Rouge position.

On the other side, to the east of Nantieul, similar progress was made, and in the afternoon the Germans had only a narrow passage left for evacuating the troops jeopardized in the Sancy Celles region and especially in Condefort, which, it seems, is menaced by the French action. This place dominates the valley of the Aisne overlooking Asterly, thereby constituting a serious hindrance to further progress.

From Craonne as far north as Rheims the battle continued to be very lively, especially in the Ville-aux-bois region, where, for the first time, a strong German effective laid down their arms, almost without fighting, thereby evincing exhaustion.

East of Rheims, from Prunay to Auberive, the largest part of the formidable positions of Moronvillers was carried Tuesday. Wednesday other crests were captured in the same massif, which is almost entirely in French possession.

It is there that numerous heavy guns have been captured, part of Hindenburg's plans thus being upset. The German marshal has now been obliged to withdraw troops from the Russian front and the Bavarians and Prussians, massed behind, have been transferred to positions between Arras and the sea. By their offensive the allies anticipated Hindenburg and wrested the initiative from his hands. The Germans have been compelled to fight on the ground selected by their adversaries and have already engaged part of their reserves. They must now go on to the end of the battle and put up with all its consequences.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, April 21.—The Handelsblad reports that six hundred German fusiliers, sailors, and Landsturmers deserted and tried to cross the Belgo-Dutch frontier. Two hundred Uhlans sent in pursuit attacked the deserters with machine-guns. The fight lasted half an hour. Thirty were wounded. Eight slightly wounded succeeded in reaching Dutch soil.

Copenhagen, April 21.—According to the Berlin Vorwaerts the strike continues everywhere in Berlin. The Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg has declined to assume the task of arbitration at the suggestion of the workingmen interested.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 21.—The submarine campaign against hospital ships deliberately instituted by Germany has rendered it essential to establish many hospitals in the various theatres of war. The War Cabinet has therefore decided to call up every doctor of military age.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London Apr. 21.—Lord Curzon, speaking at Derby, said that without doubt the operations in France during the last fortnight constituted a considerable military victory. It had shown, he said, "the wonderful superiority of our artillery, which fired four million rounds of ammunition against the enemy."

London, Apr. 22.—It is officially announced that the British have captured the village of Gonnelieu.

A message from Paris announces that the French gained in grenade fighting south of Juvincourt and last of Couray. Violent artillery fire is raging east of Rheims.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 21.—The French report on Friday reads: "Between St. Quentin and the Oise, there has been great artillery activity, which has been reciprocal, particularly north of Grugies. The French, north of the Aisne, are harassing the enemy and have made continued progress. Sancy has been occupied. The Germans, at eventide, attacked with huge effectives in the region of Alleshurtabise. The French gunfire completely shattered the attack. In the Champaigne region, the French repulsed the foe and captured several important strong points in the Moron-Villers and Massif area. Since April 16, the French have taken 19,000 prisoners and over 100 guns between Soissons and Auberive."

Altogether 33,000 prisoners, and 330 guns have been captured by the British and French forces between April 9 and April 20.

Reuter's correspondent with British Headquarters reports that a heavy deliberate bombardment is proceeding with overwhelming artillery. It is engaged in cutting the wire and smashing up the trenches, wrecking the strong points. There has been a lull in big news, but no lull or pause in the preparations for creating big news.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, April 21.—It is now five days since the French started their offensive on the western front and despite the sodden ground, treacherous swamps and muddy valleys lying between the strongly fortified hills and ridges, the French advance continues in Champagne and north of the Aisne.

Everywhere the French have asserted their superiority over the enemy, compelling him to retire and abandon positions of great strategical value.

Laffaux, one of the villages north of the Aisne, was captured on Tuesday after a long and desperate struggle. Violent German counter-attacks have been repelled.

The taking of Laffaux, with a quantity of important material which the enemy had not time to remove, is doubly interesting because of its situation dominating the plain of Anisy and the fact that the Laffaux mill close by is the centre of several railway junctions.

One of the most significant results of yesterday's fighting was the junction of the two columns operating north and southeast of Fort Conde to the east of Soissons.

The successive capture of Nanteuilla Fosse, Laffaux, Aizy, Jony and Vailly, which constituted the most formidable positions of the whole German line in front of Belfort to the sea, enabled the French to encircle Fort Conde and the Germans were obliged to beat a precipitate retreat evacuating the fort just before the French columns joined hands. The enemy took to flight by a narrow passage in the direction of Sancy which was commanded by the French batteries so that the seventy-five calibre guns played dreadful havoc with the retreating enemy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 23.—Reuter's correspondent at Headquarters, under even date, says: "After a steady and deliberate bombardment of many hours, culminating in the heaviest whirling of shells yet experienced on this front, the British, at dawn, made a series of co-ordinating attacks at various points on the front from St. Quentin to Lens. Generally, I hear things are going well and the prisoners already run into four figures."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 23.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "We attacked on Monday morning, on a wider front along both banks of the River Scarpe. Fighting is still in progress and our troops are making satisfactory head-way. During the night, we captured the remainder of the village of Trescault, to the south of the Bapaume-Cambrai road. We have gained possession of the greater part of Havrincourt Wood."

New York, Apr. 23.—A London official message states that the British have opened an attack on a wide front on the Scarpe River. Fighting is proceeding satisfactorily and the British troops have gained the greater part of Havrincourt Wood.

London, Apr. 24.—It is officially announced that the British troops have gained on a wide front south of the Bapaume to Cambrai road. The villages of Beaucamp and Villers-Plonich have been taken and over 1500 prisoners captured.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 24.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Monday evening communiqué says: "There has been heavy, continuous fighting all day long on both banks of the Scarpe and important positions have been gained.

"A marked feature of the operations has been the frequency and violence of the German counter-attacks in which the enemy has lost very heavily.

"We have captured the village of Gavrelle and the defenses stretching for 2½ miles to the south of the village as far as the Cemetery at Reux. We fought our way forward on the right bank of the Scarpe, on a wide front, the southward and eastward of Monchy and Le Preux. We have captured Guemappe and taken considerably over 1,000 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 24.—The French communiqué on Monday evening announced: "In Belgium, we have completely repulsed the enemy attacks at various points. Between the Aisne and Chemin-des-Dames we have made progress north of Sancy. The artillery duels have been particularly severe in the sector around Hurtebise Farm.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 24.—Reuter's correspondent at British Head-quarters in France states, under date of Monday evening: "Furious fighting is still in progress and the situation can be summed up thus—we have taken 1,500 prisoners. Our guns have inflicted the very heaviest casualties. We have done well in some places, and not so well in others. We are now confronted with innumerable, disconnected, defensive patches in the shape of small redoubts, traverses and saps. Hence, at present, it is our business to clear out the widely-burrowed enemy by pounding every acre of honey-combed ground. The Germans are bound to offer a desperate resistance here, but the more they resist, the heavier will be their losses."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 24.—The second phase of the battle of Arras is described by correspondents as the most difficult of the war. It is a struggle to the death. The Germans have brought up many more guns and new field Howitzer batteries are thickly grouped between Lens and the Cambrai to Arras road. Wherever the German infantry has withstood the British assaults, it was wholly due to the supporting artillery and machine-guns. Wherever the British got within striking distance of the enemy positions the occupants ran to meet them with their "hands up" or bolted. A Pomeranian Regiment, south of Cambrai, was so demoralized at the appalling shell-fire that it surrendered in batches of five hundred.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 24.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his latest communiqué, says: "Fighting continued throughout Monday evening and night along the whole front from Croiselles to northward of Gabrelle. The enemy constantly and repeatedly launched counter-attacks with great determination and regardless of their losses. We maintained the positions gained on Monday and made further progress east of Monchy-le-Preux and also in the neighbourhood of Roeux. We successfully beat off a violent counter-attack on Gabrelles. The number of prisoners exceeds 1,500 and many more are coming in. We gained ground, during the night, on a wide front eastward of Epehy and reached St. Quentin Canal in the neighbourhood of Venhuilles. We have captured the villages of Villers-Plouich and Beaucamp, further to the north."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 25.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in giving further details of Monday's battle says: "It has been shown that fighting was exceptionally fierce. Seven German divisions were engaged on the Croiselles to Gabrelle front. Several points of tactical importance changed hands more than once, but in the end all remained in our possession, except a few buildings northward of Boeux. We advanced along the whole front. There has been considerable fighting to-day, though it was less fierce. At a number of points on the battle-front, our progress continued."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 25.—The Scarpe River remains the centre of the fierce fighting, which continues along the whole length of our advance between Lens and St. Quentin. It is generally believed that the enemy has suffered more heavily in this battle in proportion to the number of troops employed than in any on the western front. For example, in a counter-attack on Gabrelle four battalions were seen advancing. Our field-batteries waited, and then opened fire at short range. Shrapnel was poured into the advancing waves as fiercely as the gunners could serve their weapons. It was like the mowing of wheat, the battalions seemed to melt into a "fumish haze." When this cleared on the "cease fire" being sounded, the ground was very thickly strewn with grey figures.

The Scarpe area was chosen by Sir Douglas Haig as the point for the principal attack as being the weakest point in the German lines. Its valley leads direct to Douai the centre of the German defenses. It does not require great progress here to cause the evacuation of Lens; then the main German position between Grocourt and Queant which is an extension of the Hindenburg line, and which there is reason to believe is unfinished, will be threatened and the way open to the broad plain, towards Belgium. Thus Sir Douglas Haig is striking a blow at the invader's heart.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 25.—The Germans, it is clearly realized, are desperately trying to counter the menace to their whole system of communications, which is signified by the new Franco-British offensive.

During the past 36 hours, they have been throwing into the fray their strategic reserves with wholesale recklessness: rushing up guns and ammunition and repeatedly launching counter-attacks en masse, regardless of the appalling cost. Despite the furious resistance of the enemy, we are steadily gaining ground at various important points forming the main objective. Fighting is most severe in the Scarpe Valley. The steadfastness of the British infantry was never more splendidly demonstrated than by the homeric fighting proceeding now at Gabrelles and Croiselles. We have made progress well to the south of the Cambrai road, and established patrols at St. Quentin, along the Cambrai Canal and at Venhuille.

One of the most striking features has been the sudden emphatic re-assertion of our dominance in the air. On Monday, we brought down forty enemy aeroplanes, of which fifteen crashed to the ground. Only two of ours are missing.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 18.—Western front. In Galicia, north of Zborov, the Russian artillery fired successfully against an enemy artillery column. Firing and lively scout activity continues on the rest of the front.

Rumanian front. The attempts to advance by about 3 enemy companies, east of Kotu Mihalo (on the Danube), have been repulsed.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Minsk, April 23.—Speaking before the Congress of the Army delegates, who have been to the western front, a member of the former Duma, the Socialist Tseretelli, said that a separate peace would cause a catastrophe to Russia.

M. Tscheidze, President of the Council of soldiers and workmen delegates to Petrograd, has protested at the rumours of action by the Council of the Provisional Government leading to duality of power. He declared that its existence was only for political control, which was always important and necessary.

A message from Kieff says that during the Conference, M. Ukraina, a socialist, decided to suggest that the government should begin peace negotiations through the delegates of the international proletariats.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 23.—Western front. In the Vladimir-Volynsk direction an enemy patrol assumed the offensive, but was repulsed into the trenches by the Russian rifle-fire and bombthrowing. South of Brzezany, a subterranean gallery, located between the Russian and the enemy's wire entanglements, was blown up by the enemy.

Rumania. In the Kozdy-Vazargelsk direction the enemy's troops attacked the Russian vanguards pressing upon them, but the front was reestablished by a counterattack. North-west of Braila the Russian heavy artillery fired successfully on an enemy battalion.

Persia. Telegraph and telephone lines have been destroyed by the Kurds and Persians in the rear of the Russian troops.

Petrograd, April 24.—Western front. The Germans used glass bullets against the Russian positions. Strong snowstorms are raging in the Carpathians.

Rumanian front. The rivers are in spate and have overflowed the banks on account of the heavy rain.

Persia. The aggressive actions of the Kurds against the Russian troops are increasing. The Arabs south-east of Kizilrabat attacked a Russian detachment, which was escorting the English military agent. This detachment succeeded in forcing its way through to Bakub.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONTS

[Delayed in Transmission]

Rome, April 16.—An official despatch of April 13 says: "The artillery units were active yesterday on the Trentino front between the Adige and Pellegrino valleys. Our medium calibre batteries carried out effective bursts of activity against the railway stations at Calliano, where an unusual movement of troops was observed. There has been mining towards our advanced positions on the Colbricon. We exploded a counter mine destroying the enemy gallery. We occupied the edge of the crater and established our position. Artillery duels are reported, and we have repulsed minor hostile attacks, in the vicinity of Tolmino and against the positions we captured on the 7th on the Carso.

Rome, April 16.—On the Trentino front the snow and bad weather again hindered operations. On the Carso on the night of the 13th and 14th, the enemy attempted a surprise attack on Hill 154, but was driven off and dispersed by our rifle and machine gun fire. Afterwards the enemy started a violent bombardment which was promptly silenced by the fire of our batteries.

The artillery is active in the Legarina Valley (Adige), the railway station at Calliano and moving trains in neighbourhood being repeatedly hit. An ammunition depôt was blown up and a fortified position destroyed in the Zugna area. On Colbricon Massif (Upper Bismon) enemy detachments attempted an attack against the position we captured the previous night. After the successful explosion of a mine they were repulsed with loss. On the Julian front artillery duels are reported in the Corizia basin.

Aerial reconnoissances have been carried out by both sides and resulted in several air fights. Two hostile aeroplanes were brought down, one of our machines is missing.

Despite a strong headwind one of our air squadrons succeeded in dropping bombs on the railway stations at Prebacina and Volciadrage in the Frigido valley (Vippacco). Our aviators came under a heavy artillery and machine-gun fire, but returned safely.

Rome, Apr. 17.—Owing to persistent snowstorms on the Trentino front operations were limited yesterday. Patrol encounters resulted in our favour. This morning at dawn a detachment of our troops who had tunnelled through the snow entered the enemy entrenchments north of Mount Freikafel, inflicted some casualties on the garrison and captured arms and munitions. In the area of Tolmino on the night of the 14th the enemy raided our trenches near Cigine, but was immediately driven out.

Yesterday our artillery directed an effective concentrated fire on the lines of communications east of Gorizia and the Frigido valley.

Rome, April 18.—Our artillery, reads the Italian communiqué, renewed the bombardment of Collano station on the 17th and damaged the buildings, scattered the trains, and dispersed the troops. We repulsed the enemy on the slopes of Punta Alliolo Montecima and captured rifles, munitions and prisoners. The enemy penetrated our outposts west of Lake Bocete, but promptly retired. A similar attempt at Pasosondogna was repulsed with serious enemy losses. The artillery duels are more intense at Conguegorizia.

Rome, April 19.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"Our heavy guns caused great fires on the station of Galliano in the Lagarian valley. There has been increased artillery activity in the region of Gorizia.

"An Italian detachment in the Carso occupied a position at Castagnavizza capturing the defenders with arms and ammunition.

"The Italian air squadron has bombarded various enemy camps.

Rome, April 22.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads: "Italian artillery fire is reported along the whole front. Our batteries shelled the hutments at Secco in the Lagarina Valley and dispersed enemy detachments on the northern slopes of Mount Pasubio and at various points on the Cainia front. We checked the hostile fire on the Gorizia area and Carso. Yesterday our aeroplanes carried out another raid on Chiapovano and all returned safely, despite a heavy anti-aircraft gunfire and several attacks by enemy machines."

Rome, April 21.—To-day the official Italian communiqué says: "The artillery is active in the Camonica, Grudicaria and Lagarina Valleys. Lively artillerying is going on in the northern Carso. Our aeroplanes to-day bombarded the railway station and lines at Opeina and returned safely."

CAMPAIGN IN MESOPOTAMIA

London, Apr. 21.—An official report states that General Maude has forced the passage of the Shatteldhain, attacked the enemy's main positions, routed the Turks, and captured 1,244 prisoners.

The Commander of the British forces in Egypt reports that on the 17th the troops advanced north of Wadighuzze and captured the Turkish positions on a front of six and a half miles.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 21.—The British advanced on Tuesday northward from Wadighuzze in Palestine and captured the Turkish advanced positions on a six and a half mile front. The positions gained were consolidated. The warships assisted these operations. Fighting is proceeding.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 21.—An official communique from General Maude regarding the operations in Mesopotamia reports that on the night of Apr. 17 the British forced the passage of the Shatteldhain and on Wednesday morning attacked the main positions held by the 18th Turkish Army Corps covering the Issabulat station, 12 miles southeastward of Samarra. The British forces completely routed the enemy, taking prisoner 27 officers and 1,217 men. Our casualties were 73.

RUSSIA WILL NOT MAKE ANY SEPARATE PEACE

New York, April 19.—The Associated Press correspondent at Washington says that assurances have reached there that, under no conceivable circumstances, will the Provisional Government of Russia yield to the overtures of the German and Austrian Socialistic representatives to negotiate a separate peace.

Petrograd, April 19.—Yesterday the members of the Government received the representatives of the English and French Socialists. The representative of the former Mr. Sanders, greeted the Government in the name of the English workmen of democracy, who, he said, rejoiced to unite with the Russian democracy ,whose recent victory eliminates the possibility of future war.

The French representative, M. Moutet, said that the Franco-Russian alliance was never sincere while despotism ruled in Russia, but now the mutual democracies can join hands and fight to defeat militarism, for the freedom of nations and the abolition of war.

The Foreign Minister, M. Milyukov, in welcoming the guests and thanking them for their expressions of confidence, asked them to transmit to France and England the information that Free Russia had become doubly strong since the democratisation of its institutions, and will pursue the objects imposed by the war viz.: the destruction of German militarism, thus rendering war in future impossible.

The Minister of Justice, M. Kerenski, welcomed the guests in the name of Russian democracy and of the Russian Socialists. He said that heretofore the voice of the Russian people had been unheard, to speak truthfully about the war being forbidden. Henceforth, he said, democracy rules Russia. "We will forever suppress all attempts at Imperialism and usurpation and will serve the ideas of liberty, equality and fraternity of all peoples. Russian democracy, animated with the idea of universal brotherhood, now becomes a reality and will remain so. We will maintain, until the end, the aims proclaimed by the Government jointly with the delegates of the workmen and soldiers. I beg you to transmit the true feelings of the Russian democracy to your respective Governments and workmen."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, Apr. 18.—The Government is only awaiting definite word from Russia regarding her needs. Upon receiving information it will give every needed assistance, financial and otherwise.

Petrograd, April 14.—The Congress of military delegates closed to-day. The members discussed the subject of their attitude toward the Provisional Government and adopted the following resolutions:—

(1) During the revolution, a Government was constituted, whose democratic programme coinciding with the views of this Congress has, until now, been faithfully carried out.

(2) This Congress summons the Russian revolutionary democracy to rally to the Council of labour and military leaders, which alone is capable of consolidating the victories of the revolution and combat any attempt at a counter-revolution.

(3) This Congress recognizes the necessity to control and influence the politics of the Provisional Government and assist it to democratize the life in Russia, and prepare the ground for peace without annexations or contributions, based on the free development of all peoples.

(4) This Congress summons the democracy to support the Government only so far as it seeks the developments of the conquest of the revolution, and does not base its foreign politics on territorial expansion.

(5) This Congress invites the Russian revolutionary democracy together with the Council of labour and military leaders to prevent the Government renouncing its obligations.

LATEST NEWS FROM FHE RUSSIAN CAPITAL

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, April 20.—Count Kokovtzoff has accepted the post of President of the Council of the Russian Bank of Foreign Trade, offered him by the Board.

In the middle of May, it is expected that the representatives of the press, who intend to visit Petrograd, Moscow, Nijinovgorod and south Russia will arrive.

The Army delegates were received at the Marie Palace by the Provisional Government, and declared their readiness to defend the freedom of the country. They expressed full confidence that the Government will vigorously lead Russia to victory and a constituent assembly.

The Premier replied: "I fully share the expressed hopes that the change in the country has accomplished. We must now tend our efforts to drive out the foreign foe. This is the task of the army which we are fully confident will help to its utmost ability."

In a speech at Kieff, M. Guckoff, the Minister of War, said to the executive committee: "I am convinced that the renovated Russia will effectively prove its ability to achieve what the old régime failed to do, and on the ruins of the realm which threatened universal ideals, Russia will erect an edifice of freedom, right and justice."

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, April 21.—Speaking at the Teachers congress, Minister of Justice Kerenski said that the Provisional Government at present has full power, but wants every step approved by the country. Therefore, all steps taken by the Provisional Government are taken in contact with the council of soldiers and workmen's delegates. The subscription to the freedom loan was very successful, large sums being subscribed and many reaching a million roubles. The Congress of the North Russia towns delegates carried a resolution and itself called on the North towns to use their utmost efforts to help the country and army to assist the Provisional Government towards the democratisation of the Russian life and the defence of the rights of small nations discarding Imperialistical aims. It has no doubt that Government will struggle with the powers against the revolution. The national congress at Kieff unanimously carried a resolution recognising that the only possible form of state organisation was a federative democratical republic. A message from Minsk says that a congress of military workmen and over 1,200 delegates was held. They elected as President, the Social Democrat Aeozern, and as assistant the soldier Sorokelietoff of the party of Revolutionary Socialists.

THE RUSSO-AMERICAN SOCIETY

Petrograd, April 24.—At a meeting of the Russo-American Society, the United States Ambassador, Mr. Francis, said that he never doubted the victory would be with the Allies, which success, he added, the Russian Revolution had clarified.

"America had entered the war, as President Wilson had stated, not for conquest, dominion, revenge or indemnity, but as the champion of the rights of mankind and of the freedom of the nations. The fear that Russia will conclude a separate peace is unfounded. A separate peace implies a catastrophe for civilization. America will always pursue her policy of the independence of nations capable of self-Government."

The Foreign Minister, M. Milyukov, commenting on the Message of President Wilson said that the principles expressed therein, informed the world of the only possible basis for a durable peace.

At a meeting of the Anglo-Russian Society, Sir George Buchanan, the British Ambassador, said that "the final triumph of the revolution will be a victorious end to the war. The Allies do not strive for conquest, but for the freedom of mankind, the rights of nations and a lasting peace, which is only securable by the partial reconstruction of the map of Europe according to the rights of small nations."

M. KERENSKI TO NEW RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, April 24.—The French Deputy Socialist, M. Cachin, returned here from Revel to-day in the company of M. Kerenski, the Minister of Justice. Before a meeting of 100,000 people, M. Kerenski said that the bloodshed of civil war would be criminal. It was the duty of the liberated citizens to sacrifice their lives for the country and drive out the enemy.

M. Cachin in an address at the end of the meeting said "The French people send greetings to the Russian democracy and common cause."

VISCOUNT CHINDA REPLIES TO SPEECH OF WELCOME

London, April 17.—The Japanese delegation to the Rome Parliamentary Congress, whose members at present are the guests of the British Government, leave London in a few days for Paris in order to confer with the permanent committee before proceeding to Rome. Before their departure they will be entertained at luncheon at the House of Commons by the commercial committee and at an official dejeuner at the Japanese Embassy when Lord Robert Cecil, Viscount Bryce and Sir John Jordan, Minister to Peking, will be among the guests.

London, April 18.—Sir John S. Randles M.P. presided at the lunch at the House of Commons to the Japanese Ambassador and Japanese delegates to the Rome Parliamentary conference. The toasts of the King and the Emperor of Japan were drunk with enthusiasm. Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of Blockade, proposed the health of the ambassador and the Japanese delegates. Welcoming the guests he said their visit was very welcome just now as the alliance he said had stood the test of peace and, even more successfully, that of war. He deeply appreciated the Japanese help in the war. None of the allies, he said, appreciated it more than Great Britain. Sir Robert believed this is only the beginning of a long period of alliance wherein the two nations would stand and work together for the ideals of the present war. The alliance therefore would be for the great benefit of the world.

Lord Robert Cecil dwelt on the characteristic national sympathies which England and Japan possess in common. Reverting to the visit of the delegates, he said, commerce is unifying the influence of the arts of peace, no less noble and far more beneficent than the arts of war. Commercial competition he said should never develop hostility, unless commerce as in the case of Germany was made a part of the armed forces of the country. This was one aspect of the heresy underlying the whole action of our enemy. It is the task of the alliance into which most of the best of the world's nations have now entered to uproot this heresy and to restart the world on a career of sanity. That is the task, he said, on which Japan and Great Britain are engaged.

Viscount Chinda, the Japanese Ambassador, received an ovation on rising to respond. In an eloquent extempore speech he said the advantages of the Rome conference are manifest and will demonstrate to the enemy that the world at large is completely at unity as to the war. It will, he said, be most useful in unifying the future legislation of the allied nations in commerce after the war.

"The present war," said Viscount Chinda, "may be followed by a commercial war and it is possible the Central Powers may remain as ruthless and unscrupulous as hitherto. It is high time to guard ourselves against such an eventuality." (Cheers.)

He was convinced that "in the whole history of the two nations their interests and the ties of their friendship were never stronger or the intercourse of our peoples never in greater consonance with the spirit of the great alliance." (Loud cheers.)

Viscount Chinda said he was firmly convinced that this condition will grow. He would spare no efforts to that end. He described, step by step, how Japan was drawn into the war, but lost no time in following the path of duty. The determining factor, he said, was to act up both to the letter and the spirit of the alliance. That was the only honourable course. Another factor was the necessity of maintaining the peace of the Far East and to subdue the German stronghold wrested from China by their robbery. Germany had spent much money and effort to convert this fortress into a base for the mailed fist in the Far East.

Since then continued Viscount Chinda, Japan has co-operated in naval and in other ways which must remain a secret. She is doing all she can in the common cause. The might and power of Germany has now been wiped out in the Far East and on the Pacific. The day is not far distant when Germany will meet the same fate everywhere. Viscount Chinda congratulated Great Britain on the series of magnificent victories of her brillant army. He said he was confident these heralded greater victories and a final realisation of the lofty aims of the war on a common cause.

Delegate Kato briefly replied. He said he was deeply touched by the reception at this home of the mother of parliaments and would telegraph direct to the President of the Parliament in Tokyo.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 19.—Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador to the Court of St. James, and the Japanese delegates en route to the Allied Commercial Conference at Rome, were guests at a luncheon in the House of Commons.

Viscount Chinda in a speech dwelt on the possibility of a war of commerce after the war and said it was high time for the Allies to take steps to protect themselves against such an eventuality.

He said the Angle-Japanese Alliance was stronger than ever. It was Japan's mission to maintain peace and prescribe order in the Far East.

He congratulated Great Britain on her victories on the western front, which he declared, heralded greater things to come.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, April 19.—The "Pall Mall Gazette" in an article headed "A Loyal Ally" says "The sentiment of the admirable speech of Viscount Chinda and of Lord Robert Cecil yesterday lies close to the heart of the British people. Nothing in recent times has been more inspiring than the quick spontaneity with which our Far Eastern ally redeemed her pledge—her scrap of paper—when the time came." Viscount Chinda's beautifully delivered speech shows with pellucid clearness the contrast between the conceptions of international honour in Germany and Japan respectively."

BRITISH AND FRENCH JOURNALS SING THE PRAISES OF JAPAN

London, April 19.—The "Pall Mall Gazette" in the course of its editorial says: "Humanity owes much to Japan. Our own debt should not and will not be forgotten. She has sought no reclame in taking over the responsibilities of the Far East nor has she limited herself in her work against the common foe when the needs have presented themselves.

"Japan has proved a faithful and loyal ally in execution of her partnership. The cultivation of still closer bonds with the great country of the Rising Sun will be one of our most cherished duties in the era of peace dawning on the horizon."

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, April 24.—"Le Temps" devotes its leader of April the 24th to Japan and says:—

"The Terauchi and Motono Government has succeeded in putting an end to the distrust which the United States had entertained for Japan and their attitude towards China was instrumental in deciding the latter to take a stand against Germany and thereby contributed to increase the power of those fighting for justice.

Though, remaining far from the battlefields, yet Japan has not played an unimportant part. From the very outset of the war, she took the necessary steps to destroy the base of German operations in China. Within three months Tsingtao capitulated. The Japanese marine forces chased the German squadrons from the Pacific and wrested from the Kaiser's hands his Oriental Colonies. The Japanese fleet ensures the safe transportation of the Australian troops and ensures the safety of the Far East and the Indian seas.

"The Japanese arsenals and industrial plants ship to Russia guns and ammunition they actively work in her behalf.

"Japan's maritime workshops contribute in the fullest measure of their producing capacity to replace the ships destroyed by the German pirates.

COWARDLY GERMAN OFFICERS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 23.—Members of the crew of the Red Cross Ship Lan France have been interviewed. They state that the first warning was the explosion of the torpedo at 8 p.m. when the vessel was in mid-channel. The Germans broke into a panic, their officers for the most part behaved disgracefully, breaking out of the saloon and leading the panic. They were the first to jump into the boats, shoving everybody aside. They had to be restrained and some were knocked down. When one small rescuing boat came alongside, these German officers started cheering and yelling for rescue in German, but realising their mistake, shouted out in English: "We English sailors no Deutsche." There were also cries of "Kamerad mercy" and they fell on their knees pleading to be saved. The British Tommies were very calm, joking and obeying orders in the calmest way.

PRESIDENT OF CHINA TAKES STRONG ACTION

Peking, April 19.—The dismissal from office and arrest of Mr. Chen Chin-tao, the Minister of Finance; the dismissal of Mr. Yin Ju-li and the suspension from office of Mr. Yu Hsi-cheng, Councillor to the Ministry of Finance, and of Mr. Wu Nai-chen, Chief of the Department of Currency, all for participation in the bribery and connection with the establishment of a cash melting company as outlined by the Kokusai correspondent on the 18th inst., have created a tremendous sensation in political circles here. Mr. Yin Ju-li has disappeared, but is believed to be still in Peking.

The strong position taken by the President in the face of the great influence Mr. Chen Chin-tao is known to exercise among members of the Kuomintang, of which President Li himself is nominally the head, is extremely significant; indeed, those in touch with the political situation are inclined to find in this scandal, which also involves Mr. Hsu Shi-ying, the Minister of Communications, an indication of the coming of a complete Cabinet reorganization.

The mandate announcing Chen Chin-tao's dismissal says:

"Mr. Chen Chin-tao reports verbally that the Vice-Minister, Mr. Yin Ju-li, is guilty of making overtures on behalf of other persons in connection with the establishment of a cash melting company.

"Mr. Tsai Ju-chow and other merchants, in a petition, state that the Minister of Finance, sometime ago ordered them to advance him a sum of money in order that he might pay for his shares, and that he used coercion in an effort to obtain a written statement, testifying to his innocence.

"Mr. Hsia Shou-kang and Mr. Chang Chih-tau were appointed to investigate. Their report, now received, shows that the case involves financial dishonesty on the part of Mr. Chen Chin-tao and Mr. Yin Ju-li who are hereby removed from their posts and are handed over to a judicial court to be dealt with in accordance with the law. Mr. Yuh Si-cheng, Councillor for the Ministry of Finance, and Mr. Wu Nai-chen, Councillor for the Ministry and Departmental Chief, respectively are hereby suspended from office and are ordered to be available in connection with this case."

A further mandate appoints the second Vice-Minister of Finance, Mr. Li Shih-toa, to be Acting Minister of Finance.

Numerous accusations of corruption in office have been brought against Mr. Hsu Shih-ying, Minister of Communications, and he is said to have been considerably alarmed by the strong line adopted by the President. In any case, he has submitted a memorandum to the President, blaming himself for lack of judgment in the appointment of officials, who have misused their authority. He recommends the dismissal and punishment of a number of officials. It is pointed out, however, that Hsu Shih-ying would have been in better position had he taken this step a week ago when the investigators of the railway car hire case submitted a report, which was shelved by the Minister, who apparently was unwilling to punish the officials involved in the report. As a result of the Minister's action, the two officials who carried out the investigation, tendered their resignations. A number of members of Parliament have lodged interpellations, requesting an explanation of Mr. Hsu Shih-ying's failure to act on the report.

The President is congratulated on all sides for the strong line he has adopted.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, April 20.—The preliminary trial of the bribery case was conducted at the local procuratorate to-day. The case was heard in camera, Chen Chin-tao, Yuh Si-Chen and Wu Nai-chen were retained in custody. Up to the present all attempts at bail have failed. In their report, the evidence of the investigators of the case appointed by the President, shows great disparity between Chen Chin-tao's and the merchants' statements. The former stated that the Vice-Minister acted as an intermediary and offered him a bribe on behalf of the merchants which he rejected.

Councillor Yuh's statement agrees with Chen Chin-tao's, while the merchants assert that Chen Chin-tao demanded money from them and do not mention the Vice-Minister whose version merely says the merchants asked him to approach Chen Chin-tao with an offer of money which he refused to do. In summing up the investigators conclude that the merchants intend a direct attack against Chen Chin-tao. Nevertheless all concerned are under suspicion.

CORRUPTION CHARGES AND IMPEACHMENTS

Peking, April 24.—Mr. Wang Fu-wei, the delegate from the Government Railways Board to the Conference and Celebration in Tokyo, was impeached for corruption by the Parliament during his recent absence in Japan. Immediately upon his return to Peking yesterday morning he had a lengthy interview with Mr. Hsu Shih-ying.

Mr. Hsu Shih-ying's resignation has not been accepted by the President, pending an investigation of the charges of corruption against him.

Mr. Tung Yi-lin has been arrested at Tientsin and will be transferred to Peking for trial.

The Government has appointed Mr. Wang Jen-wen and the ex-Viceroy of Szechuan Mr. Chang Hi-hsih as commissioners to investigate the troubles in Szechuan. They will leave here as soon as possible for Chengtu. In the meanwhile the Government threatens severe punishment to those responsible for any further disturbance. Mr. Tai Kan, the Governor of Szechuan, has been appointed concurrently Tuchun, replacing Lu Pei-chin.

PRESENT POLITICAL SITUATION IN CHINA

[BY OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, April 17.—The most interesting news concerning the Cabinet is the charge against Dr. Chen Chin-tao, Minister of Finance, for receiving two hundred thousand dollars from the "Pao-li brass cash melting company" and that this sum of money has been divided by Dr. Chen Chin-tao and his Vice-Minister, Mr. Yin Ju-li. Dr. Chen reported this to both the President and the Premier in person the other day and asked for the appointment of reliable officials to investigate the case. Hence Mr. Weng Hu, who was renowned for his straightforwardness and obstinacy as a censor under the late Taching Court, has been appointed by the President as investigator and the case will be made public after investigation. It was reported among official circles that Mr. Yin would sacrifice himself so as to save his superior by shouldering the blame; but he personally informed President Li this morning that he knows nothing about it and that he shall be exceedingly glad if the Government will make a thorough investigation of same.

When the case was brought to the notice of the President, H. E. Li was so angry that he ordered the Premier to take action at once. Thus three Mandates were drawn up by the Cabinet, one dismissing Dr. Chen, the second dismissing Mr. Yin from duty and placing him under the Administrative Court for trial and the third appointing Mr. Li Shih-hou, one of the two Vice-Ministers of Finance, as Acting Minister of Finance; but when these draft Mandates were presented to the Presidential Office for seal and promulgation, they were shelved on the ground that investigation should be made beforehand. Dr. Chen is attending to his duties as usual in the Ministry while Mr. Yin has not attended his office for three days. It is believed in order to save Dr. Chen, the Kuomintang will sacrifice Mr. Yin, both of whom are members of this party. Anyhow, there will be no change of Finance Minister until the Sino-German crisis is over and the Parliament has passed the Budget for 1916. The other Minister who will probably lose his position is Mr. Hsu Shih-yin, Minister of Communications, as this man is disliked by the Pei-yang Party on account of his intrigues with the Kuomintang leaders. Both Dr. Chen and Mr. Hsu urged Premier Tuan to take immediate action against Germany at the commencement of the Sino-German crisis; but it is very curious to say that they are in favour of delaying action for an alleged terrible Russian defeat and other Allied weakness at the various theatres of war in Europe. The other interesting news is that although the two Houses of Parliament have twice urged the Government to introduce the name of the Minister of the Interior instead of allowing Mr. Fan Yuan-lien, Minister of Education, to act as Nei-wu Tsung-chang indefinitely; but none of those high officials whose names the Premier wishes to nominate to this important post are willing to pass the two Houses for their approval in view of the rejection of Mr. Lu Tseng-hsiang and Mr. Chang Kuo-kan as Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Minister of the Interior respectively.

As the opinions of high Chinese Government authorities are changing all the time, so both Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang and Gen. Chang Hsun who recently cautioned the Premier to be careful about Germany, are now favouring the Cabinet's foreign policy and they have wired circular telegrams to the Provinces dwelling upon the necessity of declaring war on Germany and severing relations with Austria-Hungary without further wavering and hesitation. Hence it is believed Premier Tuan will secure an overwhelming majority from the special military conference and it is expected that as the Kuomintang opponents have no real power in China at the present moment, the Cabinet will also secure majorities in the two Houses of the Parliament to declare war against Germany early next month as it will be very foolish for China to stand aside any longer. Dr. Wu Ting-fang, Minister of Foreign Affairs, is now one of the supporters of the Premier as he believes that China should follow the lead of the United States in this World War. The new Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs, Mr. Kao Erh-chien is not very well-known among Chinese official circles and nothing can be said about his policy or career; he is also one of the supporters of Premier Tuan as he has urged the Marshal-Premier to go in unconditionally and leave China's "desires" to the goodwill of the Entente Powers.

Premier Tuan recently informed some of the members of the Parliament that both Japan and Great Britain desire very careful consideration about the revision of the Maritime Customs Tariff before agreeing to China's request while Russia and France are hesitating about the postponenment of the Boxer indemnity.

SZECHUAN AND YUNNAN TROOPS COME TO BLOWS

Shanghai, April 23.—A special from Chengtu to the Kokusai News Agency says that street fighting occurred on Wednesday night last between the Szechuan and Yunnan troops.

A violent battle took place on Thursday night for possession of the Imperial city. Many houses were set on fire. The Yunnanese held out against the attacks. The streets were barricaded and trenches dug by both parties.

The highest praise is due to the British, French and Japanese consuls and the Postal commissioner for negotiating an armistice at much personal risk. The armistice was arranged pending orders from Peking.

The situation is still critical but foreigners are safe.

The trouble is due to the military governor Lu Pei-chin who is a Yunnanese and is disbanding the Szechuan troops while he is strengthening the Yunnanese troops in Szechuan.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, April 23.—The recent reports of the mutiny at Chengtu are confirmed. The Government yesterday received a telegram from Tuchun Lu Pei-chin accusing the commander of the second Szechuan division Liu Chuan-hao of commencing the conflict. He reports that through the mediation of the Governor Taikan and the British and French consuls, Liu Chuan-hao agreed to cease hostilities but subsequently recommenced the attack on the Yamen besides looting the city.

Private houses around the Yamen were burned down.

Large reinforcements have been summoned.

The Tuchun then proceeds to make a number of charges against Liu Chuan-hao and asks permission to take drastic measures to suppress "these troublous elements."

The outbreak is due to the many and longstanding grievances of the Szechuan troops against Lu Pei-chin who it is alleged treats his Yunnanese troops better than the Szechuanese which naturally in their own province caused dissatisfaction among the latter.

MILITARY CONFERENCE AT PEKING

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, April 25.—The much discussed military conference was formally opened by General Tuan Chi-Jui the Premier, at ten o'clock on Wednesday morning. Thirty-two generals including the representatives of General Feng Kuo-chang and Chang Hsun were present. After a short address by the Premier, the conference was adjourned. Nothing was brought up for discussion.

BRAZILIANS RETALIATE WHEN GERMANS FIRE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rio de Janeiro, Apr. 18.—The crowds at Porto Alegre the capital of the Brazilian State of Rio Grande do Sul, at the north-west end of the Lagoa dos Patos, which has a population of 100,000 including many Germans, attacked and damaged 270 German houses, set fire to the German Club, a German hotel and large store today. The police were powerless. The fire spread to the houses of Brazilian residents, unfortunately.

The riot was provoked by residents in the German Hotel fusillading a passing tramcar, whose occupants were cheering the Allies. The mob entered the house of a German and found a coining plant. The occupier of the house was arrested. The whole garrison of the State has been called out to prevent the spread of disorders.

SOCIALISTS AND KAISERISM

The attitude of the socialists of the allied nations is exceedingly firm, and in their determination to destroy the dangerous Prussian militarism to insure permanent peace on the earth, and in their patriotic spirit to sacrifice everything for the sake of attaining their end, the socialists are not behind any other class of people, says the "Jiji".

This attitude seems to be contradictory to their peaceful principles, but as the peace of the world has been disturbed by Germany, and the interests and properties of the people as well as the national existence have been endangered, their intention to continue the war until the final defeat of Germany, is not contrary to their principles. There are a few socialists in the Entente countries who are applying their principles advocating peace direct to the present situation. and opposing the continuation of the war, but the number of such socialists is so small that they are not attracting any attention.

The attempt to conclude peace by such socialists will not cause any change of the situation. The rumour says that the Russian socialists are negotiating with the socialists of Germany and Sweden to make peace with Germany, but there is no doubt that the majority of the socialists are not anxious for peace negotiations at this moment.

It is true that the Russian socialists opposed an aggressive war, but as it is their hope to destroy the dangerous Prussian military and protect the peace of the world, until they regain the territories occupied by the German forces, and destroy Prussian militarism, they will not consider any peace negotiation. It will be impossible for them to agree to the peace conclusion with Germany, and thus make Prussian militarism more dangerous.

Even though there may be a certain number of socialists in Russia who desire the conclusion of an independent peace, they will not be able to influence other socialists and labourers, not to mention the entire public of Russia. Consequently there is no danger of the conclusion of an independent peace between Russia and Germany, even though a few socialists may attempt it.

Contrary to the socialists of the Allied powers, the socialists of Germany are now the main peace advocators in Central Europe. At the beginning of the conflict, the German socialists did not oppose the war, except such socialists who were absolutely opposed to any war. But as the war progressed, the socialists began to learn the inhuman acts of the German forces, and they began to feel the effect of the scarcity of food, and recently their attitude towards the war has gradually changed. Disagreements and conflicts were caused among the socialists and the peace movement started by such socialists are now supported by the public who are suffering from lack of food.

The "Jiji" does not know how true the report is that the Kaiser is urging the socialists to negotiate peace with the Russian socialists, but if the report is true and the Kaiser is endeavouring to conclude independent peace with Russia through the influence of the socialists, it is nothing but the official endorsement of the fact that Germany is now in a pitiful condition.

GERMANY ON HER LAST LEGS

Since the beginning of March, the German forces on the western front have been retreating, and such continued retreats mean the exhaustion of Germany, but on the other hand it can be understood as the German plan of concentrating her forces and shortening the fighting lines, says the "Tokyo Nichinichi". The whole world is keenly watching where and how Germany will use the forces withdrawn from the western front.

At first it was believed that Germany intended an attack on the Italian front and press her to conclude an independent peace, but it seems recently that Germany still intends to try a decisive battle on the western front, and both the Entente and German forces are now planning for the fray.

Germany in the past, did not hesitate to take up any opportunity to attack the Entente forces, but the German energy has been exhausted, and she is now able to take the aggressive measures only on the western front. If the Russian revolut on had taken place one year earlier, Germany would have made an attack on Russia taking the advantage of the disturbance. But now, she has merely watched the revolution in Russia, and through the Socialists, is trying to negotiate the conclusion of peace. Austria and Bulgaria are also making peace negotiations, and Germany is aiding them. The United States declared war against Germany, but Germany is still hoping for re-establishment of the friendly relations with the United States. In every direction, Germany is trying to open peace negotiations.

On the western front, the British and French forces are desiring a final and decisive battle, but Germany is trying to postpone the great battle there. To prevent the possible crash in the Spring, the German forces made several retreats, and it seems that Germany intends to retreat to her final stand. It is the intention of Germany to make England suffer by the activity of her submarines, and to take advantage of the Russian revolution to cause friction among the Entente powers, and she is hoping for any lucky change of the situation while she will depend upon her durability.

However how long can Germany bear the present condition? The supply of men and food have been almost exhausted, and, besides, the anti-war movement of socialists and labourers is becoming stronger every day. Germany knows the limitation of her own powers, and now she is endeavouring to postpone the decisive crash on the western front, by making retreats, and on the other hand, she is doing everything to conclude an independent peace. When one knows the true state of affairs in these directions, he may be able to predict the end of the present war.

TAKING LEAF FROM WILSON'S BOOK

The declaration which President Wilson of the United States made to the citizens of the country is so forceful and just, that the "Hochi" believes that the instructions and advices given in the presidential announcement can be well applied to the Japanese.

In declaring war against Germany President Wilson requested the people of the United States to abandon all selfish desires and exert their efforts for the sake of the nation, to endeavour to increase the industrial products of the country in order to supply the Entente with sufficient war supplies, to be determined to effect the final victory of the Entente, believing that every one is actually fighting at the battle front, not to expect unjust profit in their trades, to stop luxurious and unnecessary expenditure, and to prevent the waste of material and labour. Mr. Wilson also added that to bring out the best efforts of the American public for the sake of the Entente it is necessary to ask the guidance and assistance of newspapers and religious workers.

The "Hochi" says that the Japanese have been proud of their patriotism and loyalty and they believed that they were above other people in their patriotism, but since the outbreak of the war, the people of other nations have proved themselves equally or more patriotic than the Japanese. The industrial and economic organisations of the United States are in larger scale and better equipped than those of Japan, but still President Wilson urges the people to perfect their organizations and endeavour to give more aid to the Entente.

The paper is strongly impressed by the instruction of President Wilson to stop luxurious and unnecessary expenditure, and says that while Japan is one of the Entente powers, the Japanese are indulging in luxurious extravagances, without noticing that many people of other Entente nations are suffering from lack of food and clothes. If the luxurious extravagances of the Japanese public are witnessed by the people of other Entente powers, they will surely be angry with the Japanese. The women of other nations are now taking the places of men who have gone to the battle fronts, and are engaged in various labours. The American women have been always active, but still President Wilson urges them to be more active and prevent the waste of food, other materials and labour. The paper is ashamed to look at the inactivity of the Japanese women.

In the end, President Wilson requested the aid of the newspapers and religious workers to give more and substantial assistance to the Entente nations. The American press has a strong influence over the people, and when the Japanese press is compared with their activity, the "Hochi" feels as if President Wilson aimed his instruction at Japan.

The paper concludes by saying, that the Japanese people, as a whole, should realize the fact that Japan is now fighting against Germany, and should try to give more aid and assistance to the Allied nations, even sacrificing the luxurious comfort's the Japanese enjoy at present.

FRIENDLY TALKS AT ENGLISH CLUB

"The attitude of the American press to Japan and the Japanese" was the subject of instructive discussion by Mr. W. R. F. Stier, Associate Honourary Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at the big annual rally of the English Club of the Tokyo Y.M.C.A. which was held in the new auditorium of the association in Kanda Sunday last. About 500 students of English were present. The other speakers of the meeting were Mr. Art Smith, American aviator, on "The recent aeronautical improvement in America;" Mr. M. Honda, editor of the "Herald of Asia," on "British and American eloquence;" Mr. W. R. McWilliams on "The faith of Jesus;" Prof. Y. Negishi of St. Paul's College on "Japan and her ideal;" and Prof. V. Sasaki on "What can a teacher of English do?" Upon appearance on the platform and at the close of his address Mr. Smith received a long and thunderous applause from the audience, showing the enthusiasm with which they welcome back this popular American flyer. A large wreath and a bouquet were presented to Mr. Smith and his mother.

In attacking the misrepresentation by Western people that Japan has in the past fought a war in every ten years and will therefore fight some nation ten years from now, Prof. Negishi defended the cause of Japan in the wars with China, Russia, and Germany as inspired by the principles of national existence and justice. The sagacious Emperor of Meiji and the wise statesmen of Japan have always distinctly separated the military and civil elements, putting the best interest of the nation in the foremost, Mr. Negishi argued. He declared that "Deutschland uber alles" had come to be the dire disillusionment and doom for Germany. The domination of the world is a pleasant dream, but no dream can be realized. Japan does not want to imitate Germany and is wise enough to see the folly. Japan must, in the pursuit of her ideal, Prof. Negishi said in conclusion, stand fast for the cause of humanity and justice all the time, at all places, and under all circumstances.

Mr. Stier's discussion of the attitude of the American press to Japan and the Japanese was the most instructive as well as interesting one of all the addresses. It must be regretted that the time assigned to him did not allow him to go on more fully as he was prepared to on this greatly important subject. Mr. Stier, using several illustrative and statistical charts, showed how the American newspapers and magazines recently came to take active interest in matters relating to Japan and the Japanese and announced finally that the attitude of the American press to Japan and the Japanese was very favourable.

"The recent revelation," said Mr. Stier, "of the Zimmermann plots to instigate Japan and Mexico against the United States might have changed the general sentiment of the American people toward Japan. I suppose it has greatly improved the attitude of the American press to this country.

"In carrying on my investigation last year," Mr. Stier continued, "on my subject, I was greatly handicapped by the fact that noboby really knew what the attitude of the press of my country to Japan and the Japanese was. I wrote to all prominent Americans who were known to be familiar with Japan and the Japanese asking them what they thought about the question, but very few of them gave a satisfactory answer. For example, Mr. Melvin Stone, general manager of the Associate Press, replied he did not know what the real attitude of the American press was. The Japanese Ambassador at Washington and the Japanese Consul General in New York did not know; and neither did the majority of the newspaper editors to whom I wrote. I had, therefore, to formulate my thesis largely by reading hundreds of newspapers and magazine articles and by conversations with the authorities on Japan and the Japanese.

"As far as I have ascertained I may say that the American newspapers and magazines are beginning to realize that Japan is a great nation in the Far East, and that we must accord equally fair treatment to the Japanese in America. But as to the talk that the American press continually harping upon the fear of Japanese invasion into the United States, I would say we entertain no such fear. I am greatly surprised to find here some papers representing America as having suddenly turned Imperialistic and, what is more, terming her declaration of war on Germany as having an ulterior motive to prepare against Japan, not Germany! In my country I never saw any such thing as Imperialism.

"I picked out some thirty leading American dailies of influence and my investigation of them revealed the following result:

New York Times.....Quite favourable
Chicago Tribune.....Anti-Japanese
New York World.....Pro-Japanese
Phil. Public Ledger....Neutral favourably Boston Transcript .....Neutral favourably
New York Sun .....Uncertain at present
San Francisco Chronicle Neutral favourably Los Angeles Times.....Unfavourable
New York Evening Post Neutral favourably Springfield. Republican....
Unfavourable, but fair
Chicago Daily News..Unfavourably neutral
Chicago Herald .....Neutral favourably
New York Herald..Pro-Japanese at present
Brooklyn Eagle.....Neutral
Detroit Free Press.....Favourable
Washington Star.....Neutral unfavourably
Cleaveland Plain Dealer.....Unfavourable
Kansas City Star and Times.....Neutral
New York Tribune....Favourable recently
Washington Post.....Neutral unfavourably
Los Angeles Express.....Unfavourable
San Francisco Call....Favourable recently
Pittsburg Dispatch.....Neutral
Portland Oregonian.....Pro-Japanese
Seattle Post Intelligencer....Unfavourable
Hartford Courant.....Unfavourable
Milwaukee Sentinel.....Neutral
Minneapolis Tribune.....Unfavourable

"I want to call attention to the fact that the American press now gives hundreds of times more space for things relating to Japanese than it used to but the discussion of the international question between Japan and the United States is far down the scale in comparison with the amount of active interest taken in the travel and commerce and arts of Japan. As to the international complications of my country, Japan ranks fifth, Mexico, Germany, Great Britain and even China giving us more trouble.

"I admit that the New York Journal, the typical Hearst paper, with its largest circulation in the country, is decidedly anti-Japanese. But one paper cannot be picked out as representing the tone of the press of the whole country. It is a great mistake to presume the Hearst papers to be the American press, just as it is a great mistake to call Los Angeles the Capital of America. Recently in the 'New York Times,' the 'Springfield Republican,' and other papers considered fair appeared a great deal censorious against Japan's policy towards China. One of the reasons for the American paper's attack of Japan's Chinese policy is that they do not know what that policy is. Their conclusions are drawn on the basis of ignorance. But I am happy to be able to say that they are beginning to learn that Japan knows the Orient more than we and to see the wisdom of letting the Orientals work out the problems of the Orient.

"At the bottom of the whole trouble between Japan and the United States there lies want of understanding between each other. If such as Prof. Negishi has told be the ideal of Japan, let the American people know it. Remember they have each different minds and there can be nothing so important as to bring them to a better and correct understanding. In conclusion, it is my conviction that the American press as a whole is very favourably disposed to Japan and the Japanese, contrary to what many think."

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

The draft of the law prohibiting the trading with enemy countries and enemy subjects, which was adopted by the recent meeting of the Privy Council on the 18th and sanctioned by H.I.M. the Emperor the same day, is now in the hands of the Government. At Saturday's meeting of the Cabinet Council, Premier Count Terauchi reported on the proceeding of the deliberations on the law by the Privy Council and the Imperial sanction, and as the result of the conference of the Ministers present, it was decided that the law be promulgated in the Official Gazette next Monday, the 23rd, the law coming into force on the date of promulgation. A few regulations pertaining to the control of steamers and other vessels, and various other matters, including commercial, communications and other measures, that bear concern with the new act, and have close bearing with the operation of the law, will be promulgated at the same time, through the various departments concerned.

According to report the law consists of four principal articles, which purport is stated to be as follows:

(1) Trading with enemy subjects is strictly prohibited during the present war: (2) A violation of the above prohibition shall be punished with imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months or a fine not exceeding 200 yen; (3) Exceptional treatment shall be given permitting trading with the enemy subjects, which will be designated by regulations specially provided for; (4) The present law shall come into force on the date of promulgation.

MR. LINDSAY RUSSELL GUEST OF JAPANESE

Taking advantage of the visit of Mr. Lindsay Russell, the president of the Japan Society of New York, who does so much for the promotion of America-Japanese friendship a welcome meeting and dinner was given on the night of the 19th at the Imperial Hotel by the Support Association of the Society in Tokyo, headed by Baron Shibusawa. The meeting was attended by a large number of prominent men, American as well as Japanese, both in official and private circles, there being present among the guests, Mr. Lindsay Russell and Mr. Bibb, travelling in company with Mr. Russell, Mr. Post Wheeler, American Chargé d'Affaires, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, Mr. Shidehara, Vice-Foreign Minister, Mr. Obata, Director of the Political Bureau, Mr. Nakamura, Director of the Commercial Affairs Bureau, and Mr. Kumasaki, Secretary, of the Foreign Office, Dr. Clay MacCauley, Mr. Swift, Mr. J. E. Sharkey, Mr. J. Gary, Mr. Fleisher, Dr. Teusler, Dr. U. Hattori, Baron Kanda, Admiral Baron Uryu, Admiral Baron Dewa, Dr. Baron Sakatani, Baron Megata, Baron Viscount Mishima, Messrs. S. Hoshino, Z. Yasuda, R. Fujiyama, T. Miyaoka, M. Suyenobu, T. Sakai, T. Shidachi, H. Hibiya, Y. Fukuwara, and others. The hosts were Baron Shibusawa, Baron K. Takahashi, Baron R. Kondo, Dr. Soyeda, Messrs. K. Ikeda, E. Ono, J. Inouye, H. Ohashi, B. Nakano, T. Dan, S. Asano and K. Fukui. The dinner was served at half-past six, and during dessert Baron Shibusawa, on behalf of the Support Association, made a short speech welcoming Mr. Lindsay Russell. The speaker dwelt on the importance of the promotion of the friendly relationship between Japan and America, expressing thanks for the sincere and strenuous efforts made by Mr. Lindsay Russell in the cause of Americo-Japanese friendship. The Baron's speech was translated into English by Mr. Henry Satoh. Mr. Russell then rose and spoke as follows:

Baron Shibusawa, Your Excellency Viscount Motono, Mr. Wheeler and Gentlemen:

I cannot allow myself to accept as personal all of your tributes and kindly expressions, but shall assume that they are intended for me in a sense as the humble medium through which you are conveying to my co-workers and colleagues in New York, your appreciation and approval of their earnest endeavours for a cordial, close and continuous relationship between Japan and the United States.

I come again to Japan to learn from you, to increase my knowledge of Japan and to renew old friendships. If I could count as friends only the former ambassadors to Washington and the former consuls-general to New York, it would be no small number. Your officials to New York come and go in too rapid succession. Over here I find many of them. I recall with a feeling of personal loss one whose untimely death deprived your diplomatic service of a valued member. I refer to the late Mr. Kokichi Midzuno.

The high standard which your Foreign Office has maintained in its appointments to the United States is a source of congratulation. Viscount Chinda was much esteemed and remained in Washington long enough to become thoroughly identified with the life there. We thought that he could not be replaced. In his brother-in-law Ambassador Sato, however, we find a worthy successor. I picture him at the historic conference table at Portsmouth N.H. nearly twelve years ago. As Secretary of the Japanese Delegation, his special duty was to make such communications to the American journalists as the Japanese delegates deemed advisable. There were many newspaper reporters at Portsmouth, but it is needless to say that they got but little information until everything was settled. Secretary Sato handled the situation with exceptional skill and the popularity he there gained has not been forgotten in Washington.

I presume I should say something this evening about the constructive work of the Japan Society. Its membership, when I was here five years ago, was about five hundred. It is now more than 1100. Of these over a thousand are Americans, scattered throughout the United States and including every profession and vocation. Its income last year was 52,000 yen. We have a very influential Board of Directors representative of business and finance. There are three Japanese on the Board well known to you, Mr. Arai, Dr. Takamine and Mr. Ichinomiya.

It has been the privilege of the Society to welcome and entertain almost every distinguished Japanese who has visited the United States during the past ten years. It has conducted a nation-wide educational campaign to make our countries better acquainted and has published many books. It circulates a monthly news bulletin and also a trade bulletin. The Society encourages travel to Japan, and Americans who come here generally return as friends of Japan and help to create a better understanding. We have recently had the passenger agents of all the great trans-continental railways and Pacific steamship companies in conference in New York, with the view of working out a plan of co-operation in encouraging travel to the Orient. One idea is to adopt a phrase or slogan such as "the Orient calls you. Visit Japan, China and Hawaii." All of the companies are to print this slogan in all their travel literature, so that millions of persons will read it over and over again. The idea will thus become nationalized and popularized.

We welcome the organization in Tokyo of the America-Japan Society, which you have formed recently under the presidency of Viscount Kaneko. If this organization and the Japan Society of New York are kept in energetic co-operation through frequent exchange visits of officers and ideas, efficient and important work can be accomplished. We will at once form in New York a committee of three on co-operation composed of forward thinking men, of constructive minds and I hope that a similar committee will be formed here. Such a committee in time will become very efficient and may influence the Far Eastern policy of financiers, business men and even our respective governments. It could at least speak with authority and thus public opinion would be shaped by practical men rather than by international theorists or muckrakers, the sale of whose articles and whose living depends upon the number of startling and sensational conjectures they can devise. We can no longer depend entirely on conventional methods in strengthening international ties. We should have master minds in both Societies. The problem is how to get them to give the time and attention to organizing methods of international co-operation.

During the past three years we have had in view the development of a Japan-America Chamber of Commerce with the object of encouraging trade, travel and the investment of American capital in the Orient. Let me urge upon my friends here the importance of their co-operation. In this connection allow me to express the hope that China will see the importance of improving her status in the United States and I see no more effective way it can be done than in co-operation with Japan. This is the age of co-operation and conciliation. China would do well to follow the advice of that master in the American business world, Judge Gary. To quote his words he said, "I believe in and have advocated co-operation, between individuals, corporations and nations as distinguished from hostility and bitterness; an earnest effort to live and let live; to act as business friends rather than as business enemies; to compete but openly, fairly, considerately." China would do well to cultivate the friendship of Japan. It would serve to encourage a freer flow of American capital into her territory.

Every traveller to Japan usually visits China, every merchant doing business with Japan is likely also to deal with China, the very ships that carry merchandise between the United States and Japan also serve China. Japanese activities and enterprise are taking millions of yen to China. In fact from no matter what angle the situation be viewed the keynote is co-operation. But instead of this, would-be friends of China are endeavouring to disturb the good relations between the United States and Japan in the supposed interest of China and by an ill-advised propaganda are weakening China's credit in our financial world.

Broadly speaking, Americans who have any interest in the Far East at all are equally interested in China and Japan. It would be to the interest of Japan and China, as well as the United States, if a Japan-China Bureau were established in New York, managed for the joint interest of these countries. However divergent the interests of Japan and China in the Orient may be, they are almost identical as respects the benefits to be derived from contact with the United States. Let me mention the community of interests upon which China's progress and to some extent Japan's material prosperity depends—capital for investment, increase of trade and travel, improved transportation, lower cable tolls, funds for medical research, hospital and educational work.

Each country is striving to express and interpret itself to the outside world in its own way. We have in New York for instance the Japan Society and the China Society, the American-Asiatic Association, the Asiatic Institute, the East and West News Bureau, The Far East Bureau and many others, operating with varying degrees of success. Magazines and newspapers devoted to the Far East come and go in rapid succession. It would seem to be far wiser and more practical if all of these activities were co-ordinated and working in co-operation.

If I could bring but one message to you if I could render Japan but one service, it would be to impress on your bankers and business men in this, the hour of your greatest prosperity, that you look to the future and prepare now for the economic struggle that is to come. I do not presume to offer advice regarding your internal affairs, but as respects your statue in the United States, concerning which I have given thought for many years I may perhaps speak. Let me suggest that you make prompt endeavour to impress on the American mind your economic development and financial strength, your dominant position in the Far East, your policy toward China, that you do not adopt dry and tedious statistical methods, but that you consult advertising experts such as are employed by the New York banks and railways.

I would especially call your attention to the advertising policy of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the Union Pacific Raiway, each of which is spending fabulous sums, not with the idea of selling anything, but for the purpose of nationalizing an idea. Beware of false press agents and fake advertising agents. They are the parasites of the business world. Some time ago the sugar plantations in Hawaii were being damaged by rats. Under expert advice the mongoose was brought to Hawaii. After the mongoose exterminated the rats, he set in to destroy the sugar cane and now they are importing a special tick which it is said will destroy the mongoose. I wonder if Dr Noguchi and Dr. Takamine, your great discoverers in medicine and chemistry, cannot discover something that will destroy the vermin that infest international intercourse.

In conclusion let me thank you for all that you are doing toward a better understanding between the United States and Japan. Baron Shibusawa is a great leader in this field, as he has been for years in that of industry. His visits to the United States have created a lasting impression. The passing of your Red Cross contingent through the United States on its mission of mercy to England was one of those characteristic manifestations of the Japanese heart that awakened our imagination and touched the well springs of our kindlier emotion. And now you come to us with your usual thoughtful kindness in an hour when we mourn the loss of our late Ambassador and offer a warship to transport the remains to the United States. I do not speak for my country, but I am sure that I voice the sentiment of my people when I say that your kindly national sympathy as you thus express it to a bereaved family and friends and also to their government and nation is the "one touch of nature which makes the whole world kin."

TO PRESERVE CHERRY TREES

Under the auspices of the Sakura-no-kai or Cherry Society which has recently been organized by Mr. Takematsu Okuda, of the Shirokiya Department Store, Mr. Aisaku Hayashi, of the Imperial Hotel and several lovers of the favourite flower of Japan, an exhibition of various kinds of cherry blossoms was held at the Imperial Hotel Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock. About 40 kinds of cherry flowers which have been brought from Arakawa, Koganei, Asukayama and many other floral resorts in the country were on exhibition there and in a lecture meeting held in connection with the exhibition that afternoon Dr. Miyoshi, a noted student of flowers, Mr. Iwaya, a prominent man of letters and others spoke.

It is stated that the Sakura-no-kai has been formed to preserve the cherry trees which are decaying year after year partly due to the lack of proper care and with its office at the Imperial Hotel hopes to plant many cherry trees, give assistance to the preservation of historical cherry resorts in the country and others.

RED CROSS SOCIETY HAS CAPITAL PLAN

The Japan Red Cross Society is planning to construct hospital trains to be used at any railway accidents and in other emergencies, and the society some time ago requested Mr. Shintaro Kasamatsu to make a study of the problem and submit reports on the scheme of construction.

Mr. Kasamatsu has now finished his investigation and submitted plans and reports to the Red Cross Society. The Imperial Government Railways of Japan conducts railway hospitals at Tokyo, Kobe and Moji, but when a big disaster such as happened last fall in O-u, the railway hospitals and physicians are unable to handle the cases.

The hospital trains planned by the Red Cross Society will consist of physician's car, a car for medicines and instruments and an operating car. Such a train will be constructed at the cost of 15,000 yen, and it is the plan of the Red Cross Society to order twenty trains at the cost of 300,000 yen.

The Imperial Railways have break-down trains loaded with repair materials and other necessary supplies for accidents, ready for emergencies, and the hospital trains when constructed will be attached to these trains, and kept at the twenty principal stations in the country. Not only at the time of railway accidents, but at any time when the service of the hospital trains is required, they will be immediately despatched.

In Germany, the hospital trains of the Red Cross Society which were placed under the supervision of the railway authorities, have proved to be of a great value and service during the war, and the hospital trains planned by the Japan Red Cross Society will also be of great service to the Army should any emergency happen.

The American authorities have forbidden the naturalization of Germans during the war, even in case of applications made before the declaration of hostilities by the U.S.

As the profits last year amounted to 1,453,580 yen, the Yokohama Electric Co. remits to the local Municipal Office 8,570 yen, i.e., 5 per cent. of the profits as a royalty.

The Russian Embassy has been informed that the date for the return to Russia of Russian subjects having lapsed the military service has been postponed to the 15/28 of May.

The rice crop in Korea last year amounted to 12,500,000 koku, says a report from Seoul. This is reported to be an increase of 1,130,000 koku compared with the preceding year and also an increase of 100,000 koku over the estimated figure.

A dispatch from Nagoya states that a scheme has been launched by some merchants there to start a big toy manufacturing company in the suburbs of Nagoya with a capital of one million yen. It is stated that the contemplated company will manufacture toys for foreign buyers.

The members of the Seiyukai party will meet on the 18th of this month and will hold the election of the leaders, directors, chief director, and councillors of the party. On the next day they will again meet and will vote for the leaders and directors of the party who will direct the party in the House of Representatives. A committee for investigating general political affairs will be, it is reported, instituted anew in the party.

The scheme launched by Mr. French Champion, an American aviator and mechanic to Miss Stinson, and Sub.-Lieutenant Kumamoto to establish an aviation school at Yokkaichi, Shiga prefecture, is reported to be making fair progress. The promoters have applied to the mayor of Yokkaichi for permission for the establishment of five aeroplane sheds, which will cost some 3,000 yen. It is stated that the city of Yokkaichi will give monetary assistance to the scheme to some extent, but the promoters and their supporters will open a subscription list to raise funds necessary for the materialization of the project.

The chemical industrial exhibition at Uyeno Park will open on the 20th of September and will last for two months. It is expected to be a great success from the support it has received from those interested.

The plan to cover the eves of houses with either zinc or iron plates for preventing them catching fire and to check thereby the spread of it, has been formed by the Tokyo Metropolitan Police Board and the authorities of the Board intended to make this plan incumbent upon householder in the city from the fifteenth of this month. But owing to the expensiveness of the materials in question at present the plan, it is learned, will not be compulsorily put into practice for another year to come.

Over one hundred houses were destroyed by fire at the city of Nawa, the capital of Okinawa prefecture, Tuesday morning. The blaze occurred at an important commercial centre of the city at 4.30 in the morning and after consuming many large mercantile houses, mostly sugar stores, the flames were subdued about 6.30 a.m. The warehouse of the Okinawa Sugar Manufacturing Company, where were stored about 30,000 yen worth of sugar, was threatened at one time, but escaped thanks to the change of wind.

The Japan Esperanto Association, of which Dr. Kuroita, of the Imperial University of Tokyo, is President, will hold its Congress at the hall of the Wakyogakudo, Kanda, on May 10. It will be followed by a lecture meeting and Miss A. Alexander, an American propagandist of Bahaism now in Japan, Drs. Kuroita and Nakamura and some other Esperantists are expected to speak.

The Okura Museum, which Baron Okura, its founder, contributed to the State by way of commemorating his promotion to the rank of Baron in connection with the Emperor's Coronation, will be managed as a foundational juridical person in future. The Baron has been in consultation with the authorities concerned as to the future management of the museum, and on Sunday Viscount Suematsu, Barons Shibusawa and Sakatani and other members of the council of the museum met at the Imperial Hotel, when they approved the organization of a foundational juridical person in the future management of the museum. Baron Okura will apply to the authorities for permission to put this decision into effect.

PREMIER TUAN OF CHINA DETERMINED ON WAR

It has been regarded strange that China which severed diplomatic relations with Germany is still hesitating to declare war against her. The Chinese parliament which voted for the breach of diplomatic relations with Germany almost unanimously, is reported to be opposing the policy of declaring war.

Dr. Sakuzo Yoshino, discusses the recent diplomatic movement in China, in the May issue of the "Toho Jiron" (the Eastern Review), and outlines the causes that changed the attitude of the Chinese parliament. It is the opinion of Dr. Yoshino that it is natural for the Chinese parliament to oppose the declaration of war against Germany.

The majority of the members of the both Houses of China belong to the Kuomin party which favours absolute peace. However the bureaucrats are now trying to oppress the people, and it is reported that the government is planning to restrict the activity of the people by adopting a war policy after declaring war against Germany. While it may not be true that the government intends to arrest the leaders of the Kuomin by proclaiming martial law upon the declaration of war, Dr. Yoshino thinks that the present government of China intends to borrow money from foreign countries and strengthen its positions as soon as she declares war against Germany, and consequently the Kuomin which represents the people, is against the declaration of war against Germany.

The Kuomintung has now no opportunity to regain its power, and it is merely hoping to remain peacefully and wait for the natural development of the public intelligence. The party is hoping that with the progress of time, the people will be developed and will support it. Consequently the Kuomin which started the past revolutions, has now turned pacifist, and what the party desires is peace, and it does not agree to the declaration of war even against Germany. Among the members of the party there are a few who support the declaration of war on the ground that by joining the war, China will obtain a voice in the coming peace conference, but at the same time they are unwilling to sacrifice peace in the country for a voice at the peace conference.

If the Kuomin desires peace so much, why did it support the breach of diplomatic relations with Germany? That is a problem. But Dr. Yoshino says that although the party was against any change and any participation in the war, among the members there were many who are pro-American and desire to follow the steps of the United States. These pro-American members were headed by Dr. Wu Ting-fang, and besides the pro-American Chinese, there appeared pro-French Chinese who desired to give support to France and England.

Mr. Wang Chao-ming, who is noted for his progressive ideas, was suddenly called back from France, and upon his arrival at Peking, he started an active campaign and influenced many of the Kuomin to support England and France. Thus besides those who wished to follow the step of the United States, there appeared another group of people who desired to assist England and France. These two factions might have disagreed on the question of declaration of war, but on the problem of severing diplomatic relations, they joined hands.

Then Premier Tuan and other bureaucrats supported the plan of severing diplomatic relations with Germany from reasons of their own. Both powers of bureaucrats and public agreed to actuate the severance of diplomatic relations, and the majority of the members of both houses were influenced by the general tendency and voted for the breach of diplomatic relations. Even at that time, there were many who declared that although they agreed to the plan of severing diplomatic relations, they would not consent to the declaration of war.

The Tuan Cabinet which effected the severance of diplomatic relations, is now confronting the difficulty of obtaining support to its intention of declaring war.

Dr. Yoshino believes that the Tuan Cabinet knew that the public would oppose China's participation in the war, but brought up the question, believing that the opposition of the public would not be so strong. Premier Tuan had too much confidence in the financial assistance to be given by the Entente powers in the event of China's entering the war. Reports say that the Entente powers promised several conditions to China for her participation in the war, while it was also rumoured that China made the proposal to the Entente powers. At any rate, the Tuan Cabinet counted upon financial and other aid from the Entente powers for the participation of China in the war, and declared to parliament the benefit of entering the war.

But as things progressed, it was found that those favourable terms announced by Premier Tuan were not to be counted upon, and the fact that the Entente powers promised to consider those terms favourably, but had no intention of accepting the proposals as made by the Chinese Government, was revealed. When these facts became known, the members of parliament opposed the plan of Premier Tuan to join the war. Even among the Cabinet Ministers, there are many who openly oppose Premier Tuan, and the Tuan Cabinet is now struggling between two difficulties, the opposition of the people and the request by the Entente powers to join the war.

The term of the President expires on October 10th, 1918, and the possible candidates for the position are the Premier Tuan and Vice-President Feng. Consequently, Tuan and Feng do not agree, and it is natural for Feng to oppose the plans of Premier Tuan. The Kuomin which is not satisfied with the administration of Premier Tuan, is supporting Feng, and the conflict between Tuan and the Kuomin, will be fierce in future, considering the coming presidential election.

The plan of the Premier Tuan to join the war, is thus being opposed by various factions, stimulated by the anti-Tuan cabinet sentiment, but the stronger the opposition, the more firmly Premier Tuan is determined to declare war against Germany, in order to save the Cabinet from the present crisis. For that purpose, Premier Tuan has made others announce the advisability of joining the war even without any condition. Tuan is also planning a change in the Cabinet, as among the ministers there are some who are opposing the declaration of war against Germany. The parliament scheduled to meet on April 16th was postponed, and it is not known when the session will be held, because Premier Tuan wishes to have a thorough understanding with the commanders of Army before the opening of the Diet.

Dr. Yoshino concludes, saying that Premier Tuan is now planning to force the declaration of war against Germany with the aid of the Army Commanders, hoping that with the declaration of war, he can hold the Kuomin and other opposition factions down until the coming Presidential election.

DETAILED ELECTION FIGURES

Detailed statistics of the recent general election have been just compiled, and the figures show the influence and power of each party, giving the explanation of the outcome of the election.

The votes obtained by the elected members of the House of Representatives of each party are as follows:

Party.	Total vote.	No. member elected.	Votes per member.
Seiyukai	441,313	162	2,724
Kokuminto ...	117,726	36	3,270
Others	111,765	61	1,832
Total	989,995	381	2,598

In the average per member vote, the Kenseikai is below the Seiyukai but it is interesting to note that the Kokuminto which elected only thirty-six members in the election obtained the largest votes per member. But this is explained by the exceedingly larger number of votes obtained by several of the Kokuminto candidates.

The total votes cast for the candidates of all parties are as follows:

Party.	Total votes.	No. candidates.	Votes per candidate.
Seiyukai	487,258	203	2,400
Kokuminto ..	129,238	46	2,810
Total	1,277,681	620	2,061

The above figures show that the votes obtained by the Seiyukai and Kenseikai do not differ much in the total number, but the Seiyukai managed to elect forty members more than the Kenseikai. The Kenseikai had too large a number of candidates, and divided the votes among a larger number of candidates than the Seiyu-kai, and finally failed to elect as many as the Seiyukai did.

From the above statistics, the influence of the Kokuminto, can be judged as being much stronger than is shown by the number of the candidates elected, while it is also to be noted that the neutral candidates who had less votes than the Kokuminto candidates, managed to win and elected so large a number as sixty-one members.

JAPANESE DOCTORS ABROAD

The Foreign Office has for the first time investigated the number of the Japanese physicians abroad, according to which 978 Japanese doctors are now engaged in the medical profession in foreign countries at present, while the number of Japanese residents abroad reaches 590,159. The classification is as follows:

	Physician	Dentist	The number of Japanese residents
Manchuria	187	43	309,981
China	176	32	27,770
Southern China and Oceania	137	81	26,733
North America ...	218	31	213,662
South America ...	7	3	6,767
Europe and Siberia	47	15	5,246

FUTURE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA, IS THEME

The "Future Relations between Japan and Russia" is the subject of an article published in the "Osaka Asahi" from the pen of Dr. Suyehiro. Dr. Suyehiro, beginning with a surmise about the practicability of a republican form of government in Russia proceeds to survey the prevailing situation in the European theatre of war, finally ending with the happy prediction as to the future of Russo-Japanese relationship. His arguments are substantially as follows:

"If the granting of universal suffrage, which is one of the points in view of the new Russian Government were really acknowledged and ensured by the new Constitution which is now being compiled, the Russian people of all ranks, denominations, and races above a certain limited age will be given the privilege to share in the politics of the country in future. But as to whether the Russian people as they are now are well qualified to receive a republican form of government, I fear the answer is in the negative, a republican form of government being more delicate and difficult in its process than any other form of government. In my opinion the Russian people in general, especially the peasant class, which makes up 80 per cent. of the whole nation, lack qualifications as a republican nation and have no knowledge about that specific form of government at all. During the reign of the Tsar Nicholas II. great attention was paid to the promotion of education, especially of elementary education. But all the result of this effort was far worse than that of any other first-rate power in the world. A certain scholar acknowledged that for all the necessity of 300,000 elementary schools to accommodate the children above the school age in 1911 there were only more or less 100,000 such schools. There is an enormous number of illiterate persons in Russia. The figures of the illiterate per hundred are shown as follows:

Place	No. of illiterate
Petrograd	47
Kovno	58
Warsaw	61

"The average number of the illiterate per a hundred persons is 79 throughout all Russia. And worse still than this, the whole peasant class are labouring under burdens of taxation which claim half of their income and they are therefore quite poverty-stricken. In view of all these facts it is easy enough to see the impossibility of introducing a republican form of government in Russia for the present with any hope of its being ever adopted with the best results.

"We must turn our attention to the present situation of the war in Europe. The war can be said to be progressing not very favourably to the Allies at present. It is very annoying to see that the Russian and Italian armies are on the defensive at present, instead of taking concerted actions with the British and French armies which are now making active warfare against their enemies.

"On the other hand, there is the gratifying news that riots are occurring in succession in Germany as a result of shortage of food stuffs, and her allies, namely, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey are suffering more keenly from the distress arising from the same cause. So suppose the present war were to end in a drawn battle what would be the result? It can be expected in such an event that Germany, with the object of alienating Russia from her other allies such as France and England will make some tempting offer at the peace conference to Russia as regards the disposal of the Bosphorus and Dardanelles straits.

"Russia, on the contrary, though satisfied with such an offer only for the time will not be long content with it and may start a war with Germany again.

"But Russia having apparently found herself no match for Germany in the present struggle will not in all probability try to make any issue on her own initiative on the Mediterranean. But getting access to the open sea on the part of Russia is a necessity not to be gainsaid founded on the principle of Russia maintaining her own existence. So this vital necessity for Russia has been most keenly felt during the present war. Though the Socialists of that country are now advocating a non-aggressive policy for the future this state of things can not be thought to continue long from the above reasons.

"And next as regards the future relations of Japan and Russia after the war it is safe to observe that as long as Russia makes no descent upon the Eastern shores with territorial ambition faithful to the new Russo-Japanese convention but instead directs her attention to the other quarters of the world, allowing for the fact that Russia has such an intention for argument's sake, the relations of Russia and Japan will remain as cordial and friendly as ever for the future."

GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY OF JAPAN

The thirty-eighth annual general meeting of the Imperial Geographical Society of Japan, of which H.I.H. Prince Kan-in is the President, was held on April 28 at the Society's Building at Nishikonya-cho. The meeting was attended by a large number of prominent members of the Society, both in official and private circles. At 2.30 p.m., H.I.H. Prince Kan-in, graced the occasion with his presence, attended by a military attaché.

The Prince addressed the meeting to the effect that it was a great pleasure to find the Society so devoted to the cause of promoting geographical and geological studies in this country, and that, although the war has not yet come to an end, the Society is expected to go on endeavouring to contribute to the furtherance of national learning.

Thereupon Viscount Hanabusa, Vice-President, on behalf of the members of the Society, replied that the Prince's patronage and encouragement were the chief factors of its success, and that, though the great conflict of the world tended to cause people to neglect sciences, the members would apply themselves diligently to the advancement of culture.

Commander Misobe spoke afterwards about the actual war from the naval point of view.

A large banquet was afterwards served, attended by Prince Kan-in, there being present among the guests, Viscount Hanabusa, Baron Kikuchi, Viscount Tanaka, Count Tokugawa, Mr. Hioki, former Minister to Peking, Lieut.-Gen. Tanaka, the seismologist, Prof. Omori, and Mr. Niko. P. Miliaressy, Greek Consul, as the only foreign member of the Imperial Geographical Society of Japan.

KENSEIKAI SCHEMES TO BECOME STRONGER

After the defeat in the last general election campaign the Kenseikai is determined, says the "Nichinichi" to strengthen the bonds of its members and will very likely use more discretion in promoting its party influence in future.

The journal says that here are of course many members of the party who are not well contented with the measures taken by the leaders of the party in the recent election campaign, but there are on the other hand as many who seem to take a rather optimistic view of the future of the political situation in connection with their party. The latter class of politicians belonging to the party would seem to be trying to believe that inasmuch as the political situation in this country is always changeable and the party can still boast a large number of its members, that is to say, about 120 members the party is blessed with a happy future and is hopeful of regaining its once vaunted influence so long as the party makes discrete endeavours in that direction.

Therefore the Kenseikai will stick to the constitutional principles in politics it makes so much of, and will try to make the nation believe that the party stands by justice and righteousness in all political dealings and practice, in the hopes of thus regaining the confidence of the nation which the party has apparently forfeited now. The "Nichinichi" recalls the past, enumerating many instances to show the nature of the political situation in general which may be fitly described as sudden and beyond expectation. First of these instances is the downfall of the late Saionji cabinet which was inevitable owing to the failure of the bill of increasing the army divisions introduced by the Government to the House of Representatives. Next is the dissolution of the Katsura cabinet which occurred three months after it came into power. More recently is the breakdown of the Yamamoto cabinet which was also inevitable due to the Siemen's affair. The unexpected advent of the Okuma cabinet was a sequence in the fast-changing scenes of the political drama in Japan.

Such is the changeful nature of the political situation, the "Nichinichi" says, and attempts to make a not very auspicious prophesy as to the future power of the Terauchi Cabinet, saying that though the Government has now succeeded in winning a majority of members in the Diet on the Government's side and seems safe from attacks by the Opposition in future as a result of the recent general election, it can not yet be said that the Government has been placed on a solid foundation, judging from all the circumstances attending the result of the recent general election. So most of the members of the Kenseikai are full of confidence and hope to restore the prosperous influence they have till lately enjoyed if they are not in too much of a hurry to realize their ambition at this time but wait till a favourable opportunity, in the meanwhile making careful investigations into the political and administrative affairs essential to the welfare of the nation and trying to do all in their power to suit the wishes of the people.

CHINA IS AS FAR FROM A DECISION AS EVER

Press dispatches from Peking report that at the meeting of the Cabinet Council on April 28 the question of China's entry into the war was brought up for discussion, but no decision was arrived at. The date for the question being submitted to the consideration of parliament has not been fixed as yet, the ministers having arrived at the conclusion that negotiations should be made with the Entente powers on some important matters relative to China's taking the "third step," previous to submitting the question to parliament. The committee on international affairs also met the same day and held conferences about the proposal to declare war against Austria simultaneously with the declaration of war against Germany, and as to the proceedings concerning the disposal of the German vessels detained in China and the nullification of treaties and agreements with Germany and Austria, consequent upon the declaration of war.

Mr. Wu Chao-shi, councillor of the Foreign Department, replying to an interpellation of the members at the meeting of the whole house committee of the Senate on Friday, stated that the rumour of separate peace negotiations alleged to be going on between Russia and Germany was incredible. He added that although the former Government of Russia consisted of pro-German elements, as was clear as the result of recent revelations and accounted for by the revolution, the new Russian Government was quite free from such pro-German colour. The Government delegate further stated that the Chinese Government had been led to believe the possibility of a separate peace between Russia and Germany through a misinterpretation of an official report from the Chinese Minister to Washington. The delegate refused to clearly explain the diplomatic policy of the Government which was still lacking in final decision.

According to Shanghai dispatches the Chinese Minister to Washington sent a dispatch to his home Government advising the Government to speedily take a decisive step towards Germany and take joint action with the United States which had passed the decision on giving financial support to the Entente powers. The foreign advisers to the Chinese Government have jointly presented a memorandum to the Government expressing views about China's participation in the war. They urge that on the declaration of war against Germany and Austria, China should nullify all treaties and agreements concluded with the two countries, which matter should be formally declared in the proclamation of war, together with the cancellation of that part relating to Germany and Austria in the clauses of the protocol of the treaty signed after the settlement of the Boxer trouble. The raison d'être for China's declaration of war against Germany is said to include Germany's refusal to cancel her declaration of unrestricted submarine warfare and the detention of the Chinese Minister to Berlin. At the meeting of the Cabinet Council, held in Peking on Saturday, Premier Tuan Chi-jui strongly insisted on the declaration of war against Germany and Austria, but some moderate members voiced an opposition to the Premier's opinion. No decision was reached on the subject.

A Peking dispatch says that the "Peking Gazette" of Sunday has it that the declaration of war against Germany may be unavoidable, but the question will not be easily solved while the Tuan Ministry is in power, because the present Ministry lacks the confidence of the nation. The Kuomin party knows too well the fact that the Tuan Ministry has no sympathy or support among the military class, and lays stress on the failure of the Ministry in its efforts to maintain peace in Szechuen, Hunan and Kwangtung, as well as the recent scandal involving the high officials of the Departments of Finance and Communications in connection with the opium question. Moreover the Tuan Ministry has committed a blunder in its attempts to secure the agreement of the Entente powers to China's counter proposals for her entry into the war. In these circumstances, says the paper, the Kuomin party will decidedly oppose the declaration of war to be introduced in the parliament on Saturday next week. The paper concludes by saying that if Premier Tuan is aware of the grave significance and consequences of China's participation in the war he should speedily quit office.

TOKYO A.F.C. END SEASON

The Tokyo Association Football Club have had a fairly successful season, having played 17 matches, won 7, drawn 6 and lost 4, scoring 39 goals against 31 by their opponents.

In the games for the Association League Challenge Cup they tied with the Y.C. & A.C. for first place, and had to play a deciding match with them, which the Y.C. & A.C. won.

The playing membership has been larger than in previous seasons.

The thanks of all the members are due to Mr. W. Haigh for his untiring efforts in the dual capacity of Honorary Secretary and Captain, in arranging so many fixtures, and for his splendid leadership in the field.

The following is a summary of all matches played:—

WHAT ATTITUDE WILL THE PARTIES ADOPT

What attitude will the three parties in the House of Representatives, namely the Kenseikai, the Seiyukai, and the Kokuminto take in the coming special session of the Diet? According to the "Nichinichi," the Kenseikai which has been since opposed to the present Terauchi Cabinet remaining in power on the ground that the latter being a non-party Cabinet is an unconstitutional one may be expected to introduce a bill of want of confidence in the Cabinet again when the Diet opens its next session. Then as regards the probable attitude of the Kokuminto the same paper says that the party's movements being often characterized by suddenness and unexpectedness it is very difficult to forecast the attitude of the party in the coming session of the Diet or to fore-see what relations it will keep with the other parties.

But, says the paper, there are now two different opinions current as to the problem, one of which makes it probable that the Kokuminto will join in the move to put forward a bill of want of confidence again at the instance of the Kenseikai, being necessitated to do so by the circumstances under which the two parties worked at the time of the last session of the Diet. The other opinion is quite to the contrary and makes one disbelieve that such will be the case after all. The "Nichinichi" is rather inclined to believe in the truth of the latter prediction, and predicts that the Kokuminto will join hands with the Seiyukai which will no doubt refrain from showing a direct front against the Terauchi Cabinet at all events because of the fact that the Seiyukai now owes to the Government a great deal for the recent success in the general election which it gained in securing an absolute majority of members in the Diet. The Government, says the paper, interfered to a great extent in the late election campaign in the interest of the party. And thus the Seiyukai may have a free hand in settling all matters in the Diet as well as in general politics hereafter.

The recovered influence of the Seiyukai is looked upon by the "Nichnichi" as foreboding the possibility that such statesmen belonging to that party as Marquis Saionji and others may take advantage of this opportunity in obtaining the chairs in the new Cabinet which will eventually succeed the present Terauchi Cabinet.

HONOUR FOR PROFESSOR ANDO

In appreciation of meritorious services rendered by him for long years in the instruction of the French language, the Republic of France in the name of M. Viviani, the Minister of Education, has decorated Professor Tadayoshi Ando, of Waseda University with the title "Officier de l'instruction Republique." Prof. Ando was first an instructor at the Military college for some 10 years and has taught French for the past 25 years. The decoration, it is stated, will be presented to him by M. Regnault, the French Ambassador, on the occasion of the celebration of the 60th anniversary of his birth which will be held early this month.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 26.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "We have made further progress and secured the ground gained. We have taken 3029 prisoners since April 24. On Wednesday we made a slight advance south of the Scarpe River, where we took two German field-guns on Tuesday. The ground we now occupy is strewn with many thousands of German dead.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 28.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "On Saturday morning, we attacked on a front of several miles to the north of the river Scarpe. Our troops met with considerable opposition, but made good progress. Fighting still continues."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 28.—In his Friday evening communiqué Sir Douglas Haig says there is nothing of especial interest to report along the battle front.

The French communiqué, of Friday evening, reported "marked reciprocal artillery activity north-west of Rheims and in Champagne. There was no infantry attacking."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 29.—The British, attacking with magnificent ardour, have occupied Vileux and forced their way through half the village of Oppy.

The French, since April 16, have captured 175 heavy and field-guns, 412 machine-guns and 119 trench-mortars besides taking 20,780 prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 29.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Saturday evening communiqué, says: "There has been some severe fighting, in which we have had the advantage all day long, from the Scarpe River to the Acheville and Vimy road. We have captured Arleux-en-Gohelle and the enemy's positions on over a 2-mile front north and south of the village. We have also made progress north-eastward of Gavrelle, and on the western slopes of Greenland Hill between Gavrelle and Roeux, to the south of the river. We gained ground northward of Monchy-le-Preux and took several hundred prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, April 29.—The Saturday evening communiqué says: "There has been an intermittent artillery duel on most of the front, and at times it was violent in the Aisne region. We have made progress in the region of Ostel and on the Chemin-des-Dames, taking a number of prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 29.—Reuter's Agency learns from an authoritative Italian source, that the Anglo-French offensive has destroyed the Austro-German hopes of invading Italy. The enemy is now anxiously awaiting the Italian offensive which may decide the issue of the war in the Near East.

Reuter's correspondent with French Headquarters, under date of April 27, writes: "Since the battle began, reinforcements, equalling almost the whole of the original defending force, have been poured into the German positions. Marshal von Hindenburg is throwing in reserves and accepting appalling sacrifices in the vain effort to recapture the lost ground. The French have maintained their positions despite the assaults of enormous masses of German infantry."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 29.—With Oppy as the goal, both the first and third British armies engaged in Saturday's battle, marking the renewal of the Allied offensive. A "switch line," otherwise the Drocourt Queant line, was hastily constructed as a northerly extension of the Hindenburg line.

Fighting was fiercest between Oppy and Roeux. There was nothing on the Somme to compare with the number and fury of the present counter-attacks launched by the Germans. For instance the counter-attack at Gavrelle on Saturday was the fifteenth since the Germans lost the place. Once, near Oppy, five waves of Germans advanced blindly, facing an appalling fire. An explosive torrent of heavy shells gashed the ranks. Then the survivors met the field gun fire and continuous sprays of Maxim rifle bullets until the counter-attack utterly collapsed.

British rifles often decided the rout, but frequently there were deadly personal grapples, in which bayonets, but more often rifle butts, were used.

Sir Douglas Haig announces that a trench system south of Oppy was captured Sunday morning on a mile front. Heavy fighting, with the Germans offering stubborn resistance, is going on there. The enemy has made several unsuccessful counter-attacks. Since Saturday morning the British have captured 976 prisoners.

The French communique issued this afternoon reports isolated operations in the region north and south of Courcy. North-west of Rheims 150 prisoners were taken and the French appreciably enlarged their positions. A strong night counter-attack against Field-Marshal Haig's new positions north of Arleuz-en-Gohelle was broken up. Fighting continues north of Scarpe.

[OFFICIAL TO THE FRENCH EMBASSY]

Tokyo, April 30.—After a bombardment of many days, directed on the German lines from St. Quentin to the east of Rheims, on the morning of April 16, the French troops attacked the enemy's positions between Soupir and the region to the south of Courcy.

The German commander, fearing our offensive action, had taken strong measures to re-enforce these positions as they were protected by a large number of mitrailleuses. He had organised a powerful defense in depth, but nevertheless given the formal order to his troops to hold at all costs the first positions. In spite of the firm purpose of the adversary, in spite of the difficulties of terrain and the persistent bad weather our soldiers succeeded in throwing the enemy into disorder everywhere, and in hunting him from his first lines. In various sectors our troops went beyond even the second line. The enemy reacted violently and multiplied in vain his counter-attacks. To the evening of April 16, the total number of prisoners taken by us exceeded 10,000. On the 17th, our action was extended.

To the east of Rheims, on a front of 15 kilometres between Prunay and Auberive, our troops, during gales of rain and snow carried many lines of German trenches, penetrated into the second position and seized from the enemy the mound situated to the south of Moronvilliers, which dominates all this region. To the extreme right, the powerfully fortified salient of Auberive also fell into our hands in a similar manner. Elsewhere actions of detail carried out on the front from Soissons to Rheims reduced the nucleus of resistance still united in our lines. During the night, then during the day of the 18th the battle continued with blind fury; our troops followed up their progress and took possession of Nanteuil-Lafosse, Chivy, Chavoune, Ostel and Bray-en-Laonnais.

On the banks of the Aisne we now occupy Vailly and the bridge-head of Condé; further east, our lines have been carried to the approaches of Courtecon; our infantry had set foot on the entire length of the plateau and reached, in the region of Ailles, the opposite side of which dominates the valley of the Ailette. The enemy recognising our superiority gave up the ground and withdrew onto the Chemin-des-Dames, abandoning to us fresh prisoners and important material.

Between Craonne and the Aisne, the battle was not less violent: a powerful effort by the Germans to dislodge us from the positions we had won the day before to the south of Juvincourt miscarried under our fire, two divisions thrown into the attack exhausted themselves in fruitless assaults and fell back, after having suffered heavy losses. At the same time an easy manœuvre enabled us to encircle to the east of Ville-aux-Bois, a point d'appui called the "wood of the Boches," formidably organised and which yielded us 1,300 prisoners and 180 mitrailleuses.

Towards Courcy the Russian brigade, which the day before had carried the village, increased its gains and brought back some prisoners as well. The enemy, whose losses during these two days proved themselves greater and greater, saw himself constrained to call in haste for re-enforcement and threw a dozen fresh divisions into the struggle. He left 17,000 prisoners in our hands, besides 100 heavy cannon and field-guns, an enormous quantity of mitrailleuses, trench-mortars, munitions, also hutments and war-material of all sorts.

The following days served to give us fresh successes, to procure us another 300 prisoners and to assure us the possession of important positions favourable for the further development of action. The villages of Laffaux, Sancy, Jouy and Aizy fell into our hands. Mont-Haut, Hill 227 and other heights of the wood at Moronvilliers were carried after desperate combats, in the course of which the Germans withdrew to the outskirts of Vaudesincourt. Finally the enemy was disappointed in all his efforts to gain the upper hand of us in the region of Ailles and Hurtebise and on the plateau of Chemin-des-Dames.

Later telegrams to the French Embassy announce that up to April 26, the total booty taken by the Franco-British armies exceeded 35,000 men and 350 cannons. The apparent lull which has followed, is due to the necessary preparations for taking up the offensive against the new German line.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 30.—The tactical value of Roeux is due to the fact that it is a complement to Monchy, on the northern bank of the River Scarpe. Correspondents describe the fighting at Roeux as of the worst possible kind. The British troops had to advance on an irregular line, exposing their flanks. The infantry, however, was undaunted and performed prodigies.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 1.—An attack on Monday by the enemy on the new British position between Monchy-le-Preux and the Scarpe River was completely repulsed. There was great aerial activity on Sunday. Ten German aeroplanes were brought down, and ten others driven down out of control. Fifteen British machines are missing.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 1.—After a violent artillery preparation in Champagne, the French infantry, on Monday afternoon, attacked the enemy lines on both sides of Mount Cornillet. They carried several lines of fortified trenches between Cornillet and the south of Beine, the depth ranging from 500 to 1,000 metres. They also pushed forward their lines on the north and north-eastern slopes of High Mount as far as the Nauroy to Moronvillers road.

Except for the new French thrust east of Rheims, there is a comparative lull on the Western battle-fields. This, however, is merely breathing space necessary for the shifting of forces for fresh onslaughts.

According to French estimates, Marshal von Hindenburg has already thrown into the fray 33 of his 43 reserve divisions. All the former are now practically useless.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, Apr. 26.—The usual firing and reconnaissances continue on the western and the Rumanian fronts. On the Caucasus front, the Turks showed in the Erzindjan direction a lively activity and succeeded southeast of Erzindjan on the front of Agir Baba to Masra in dislodging one Russian vanpost and in seizing one height. Being supported by Kurds the Turks attacked east of Van the Russian positions and seized a part of the heights, which were occupied by the Russian vanguards, but the front was re-established by a counter attack.

OFFICIAL TO RUSSIAN EMBASSY

Petrograd, April 26.—North-west of Kazri-shirin on the Caucasus front, the Kurds made a night attack on a Russian detachment, but were repulsed.

In the Black Sea, a Russian cruiser shelled the Turkish port of Kerasun and destroyed the harbour works. In addition, a Turkish torpedo-boat and three Turkish schooners were sunk.

Near the Bosphorus, two more Turkish schooners were sunk by a Russian submarine.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, April 27.—The Congress of the Army delegates who met at Minsk has announced the following declaration, which has been signed by the officers and soldiers who participated in the battle of the Stokhod:

"The Army including the commanders of regiments and divisions clearly expressed the impossibility to remain on the left bank of the Stokhod until the Spring. They recognized that the only sensible action would be to attack the enemy in order to gain ground, or retreat to the right bank of the Stokhod without sacrificing life in return for gaining enemy ground, which, on the other hand, the army would be obliged to yield with great loss at the Spring floods. The supreme commanders, however, would not listen to the voice of their subordinates.

"Strict discipline and steadfastness was displayed in the battle, but the soldiers could not oppose the over-whelming numbers of the enemy."

Generals Lesch and Yanuscieevsky were found solely responsible for the tragical issue of the battle and were relieved of their command.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 30.—Western front. Firing has become more lively in the Kovel and Rogatin directions. Increased scout activity continues on the whole front.

Caucasus front. North-west of Kalkit, a Russian scout detachment attacked and scattered a Turkish vanpost at the point of the bayonet.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONTS

Rome, April 23.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"On the Trentino front there were lively actions to-day. Our batteries fired stores at Torbol, in the Sarca valley, and damaged the railway station at Narter, in the valley of Sugana, at the head of the Rienza. During the night of April 21 and 22 after violent artillery preparation an enemy detachment succeeded in entering one of our advanced positions north of Treame hut. We launched a counter-attack at dawn driving out the enemy with severe losses and capturing thirty prisoners including one officer. The artillery activity is normal on the rest of the front.

Rome, Apr. 23.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

The bridge at Sacco was hit by our artillery to-day and partly demolished. Detachments of our troops raided the advanced enemy position at Jamiano valley, capturing arms and ammunition.

One of our air squadrons bombed the railway centre between Prebacina and Dorimberga.

Rome, April 24.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"The artillery duel is continued in the Lagarina valley where the enemy suffered appreciably in an attack on the Italian lines northwest of Tolmina. The Italian detachments surprised an advanced position at Castanevizza, capturing the garrison."

Rome, April 26.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads: "On the Trentino front the enemy aeroplanes attempted raids on our territory and nearly everywhere were beaten back. Yesterday afternoon the enemy artillery opened an intense bombardment on Hill 208. Prompt action by our batteries stopped the bombardment and caused fires in the neighbourhood of Uschizza.

"Our aeroplanes successfully bombed the railway works at Rifemberga, and all returned.

"Yesterday night our airship dropped 600 kilos of high explosive on stores and sheds in the neighbourhood of Nabresina. Returning it was discovered by a squadron of enemy aeroplanes, but rose rapidly into the clouds and escaped."

PIRATES SINK AMERICAN TANKER VACUUM

London, Apr. 30.—The American oil-tanker Vacuum was sunk on Thursday by a German submarine. The captain, part of the crew, a U.S. naval lieutenant and nine American naval gunners are missing.

Washington, Apr. 30.—Marshal Joffre, in a statement to the American people said that the American Army was needed in France. He urged the sending of an American unit as speedily as possible and added: "It is of the greatest possible importance that the American Flag shall soon fly in France."

RUSSIAN TORPEDO BOAT SCORES

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, April 28.—Bombthrowing and firing is in progress in the Vladimir-Volynsk direction.

The enemy's heavy artillery fired at Galatz.

On the Black Sea in the region of Bofra Samsun, a Russian torpedo boat destroyed by gun fire several gendarme posts, setting on fire provision stores, annihilating over 10 felluks and seizing a large schooner laden with corn.

GERMAN DESTROYERS WASTE POWDER

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 27.—On Thursday night, several enemy destroyers opened fire in the direction of Ramsgate. The fire was immediately returned, and the enemy was driven off, after firing a large number of rounds. One man and one woman were killed and two women injured. Twenty-one dwellings were damaged. A number of the projectiles fell into open country.

PRIZE MONEY FOR H.M.S. TRIUMPH

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 28.—The Admiralty Prize Court has reserved judgment on the claim of the Commander of H.M.S. Triumph, who asks £6,000 bounty in connection with sinking seven enemy warships at Tsingtau. The Crown contended that the co-operation of the military and naval forces destroyed the Navy's title to a bounty.

TRANSPORT TORPEDOED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 27.—The incoming Australian troopship Ballarat, 11,120 tons, has been torpedoed with troops on board. All were saved. There was splendid discipline shown, the men singing as they lined up on deck. The vessel remained afloat for 14 hours.

H.M.S. SWIFT AND BROLE WIN GALLANT ACTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 26.—Details of the action in which German naval destroyers in an attempted raid off Dover (as reported on April 21) were defeated, have now been made public. The number of German destroyers was six and not five as previously reported. The British destroyer leaders Broke (1,850 tons) and Swift (1,800 tons) were on night patrol in the Channel, on a westerly course, when the enemy was sighted proceeding at full speed in the opposite direction. The night was calm, but intensely dark. The enemy was within 600 yards' range when first sighted. Simultaneously, the Germans opened fire; the blaze flashed and the Swift instantly replied. Commander Peck (of the Swift) without hesitation, decided to ram the leading enemy destroyer. The wheel was wrenched round and the Swift, with every occupant of the bridge blinded by the flashes from the German guns, drove straight for the enemy. The Swift missed its object, but traversed the line unscathed, turned hawk-like upon its quarry, and while turning neatly torpedoed another boat.

Again the Swift dashed at the leading boat, which again eluded her, and without firing another shot went off at full-speed in the darkness with the Swift in pursuit.

When sighting the enemy the Broke, under Commander Evans, the Antartic hero, was steaming astern of the Swift. On the latter altering her course to ram the leader, the Broke torpedoed the second in line of the enemy, and gathering speed for the blow, swung to port and rammed the third boat at full speed, hitting her fair and square abreast aft the funnel. Thus locked, the boats fought desperately a hand-to-hand conflict. The Broke swept the enemy's deck at point blank range with every gun, rifle and pistol available.

The two remaining destroyers of the German line poured in a devastating fire. The foremost gun-crews of the Broke were reduced from eighteen to six. Meanwhile a number of frenzied Germans swarmed up the Broke's forecastle and rushed aft, but were driven over-board. The Broke, within two minutes of ramming her foe was wrenched free from her sinking adversary. She attempted to ram the last boat in the line; failed, but hit the latter's consort on the stem with a torpedo. The Broke was hotly engaged with these two fleeing destroyers, but a shell disabling her main engines, the enemy vanished in the darkness. The Broke then approached an enemy destroyer heavily afire. The latter unexpectedly opened fire and the Broke torpedoed her amidships.

The Swift, with slight damage to her engine-room had to abandon the chase, but rescued the survivors from another sunken destroyer.

AEROPLANE BOMBS DUTCH TOWN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

The Hague, May 1.—The town of Zierikzee, Zeeland, was bombed last night by an aeroplane. Three persons were killed and much damage was done. All the houses on one street were destroyed. The roofs were blown off of others.

RUSSIANS FAVOUR FIGHTING

Petrograd, May 1.—To-day, a most imposing manifestation in favour of the continuation of the war took place. It was organized by over 50,000 wounded and crippled officers and soldiers from local hospitals, who were brought to the Duma in every description of vehicle.

Deputy Skoboleff spoke of summoning together a union to support the Provisional Government, which until now had fulfilled its undertakings. He elaborated on conjunction with the Council of workmen, soldiers and delegates.

Several of the wounded warmly protested against the propaganda of the notorious pacifist Lenine, and demanded that coercive measures should be employed to suppress him.

M. Rodzianko, the President of the Duma, greeted the wounded and said that the country must recognize the services they had rendered to Russia. He expressed his assurance that the war would be brought to a glorious end. The great Russian nation, he said, must conquer. After lengthy debates, the following resolution was adopted: "That a vote of confidence be passed in the Government and Council of workmen, soldiers and delegates; that a vote of censure is passed on Lenine; that greetings be sent to the Allies, assuring them that the Russian army and people intend to jointly and victoriously terminate the war in order to strengthen their conquered liberty."

STREET RIOTING TAKES PLACE IN PETROGRAD

Petrograd, May 2.—An official report states that street disorders occurred on Monday, in which bombs were thrown and shots fired upon political demonstrations.

A young man killed General Pashlalinbai.

M. GUCHKOFF ISSUES NEW ARMY ORDERS

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, Apr. 30.—M. Guchkoff, the Russian Minister of War, has issued an Army Order to the troops, announcing that each army, regiment, and company is to elect an individual committee, charged with the duty of maintaining discipline. It will also control the supply of food and take legitimate measures against the abuse of power by the chiefs and solve conflicts between officers and soldiers. Finally it is to prepare for the elections to return members to the Constituent Assembly.

ANXIETY IN GERMAN PRESS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 27.—The German papers show deep anxiety about the possibility of further internal troubles after May 1. The "Lokal Anzeiger" states that incitements to munition makers to show sedition steadily continue.

The "Berliner Tag blatt" remarks that a most dangerous game with fire is being played in Berlin.

FIRST TASK OF RUSSIA'S PROVISIONAL LEADERS

Petrograd, April 26.—In reply to the Army delegates who visited M. Kerenski, Minister of Justice, to-day, he said that the first task of the Provisional Government is to secure the union of the nation, which nothing threatens now from right or left.

"Full agreement exists between the Government and the Council of soldiers' and workmen's delegates," he continued.

"The Provisional Government is invested with full power to defend the freedom of the new democratic country and lead it. The constituent assembly will not allow the enemy to break its front or destroy the army fighting for the freedom of Russia.

"The present time of war requires the tension of all forces. Workmen have agreed to work over-time to supply the army with its requirements. We shall achieve all, but must fight only the real danger—the foreign enemy. The Provisional Government has declared that it has no Imperialistic aims, but must defend the country as the centre of democratical freedom for all the world."

The army delegates expressed their full satisfaction at the reply of M. Kerenski, on behalf of the Government, and assured him of the entire assistance of the armies.

The Petrograd Exchange is expected to open again to-morrow.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, Apr. 25.—The Russian Government has deliberated on the question of inaugurating a monopoly of coal, in order to bring under the control of the Government all the fuel supply and assure a regular distribution.

The Emir of Bokhara, the Russian Government learns, has decided to grant a constitution to his people.

The conference of representatives of the armies in the field, now in session at Minsk, has passed a resolution urging the absolute necessity that the Russian forces undertake an offensive.

Representatives of the Petrograd press have been received by the delegation from the Socialists of England and France. Noting the unanimity of the Allied countries in their determination to secure a permanent peace, the English Socialist, Sanders, said that England wants no contribution and no annexations and insists that all usurped territory shall be returned with compensations.

The French representative, M. Mouted, said that the formula of peace without contribution or annexations was quite correct, but that contribution does not mean compensation. France he said, will never accept peace without compensation for the countries destroyed by the invader. Annexation, moreover, must be taken in the sense of the rights of all nations. The French people, he declared, will never renounce the idea of the liberation of Alsace Lorraine, which depends on the final victory of the Allies, in which all believe.

An agreement has been arranged between the Socialists and the council of labour and military representatives in regard to annexation, but on the new question of contributions no agreement is yet forthcoming.

UNCLE SAM AND JOHN BULL COME TO AGREEMENT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, April 27.—The Washington correspondent of the "Morning Post" telegraphs that President Wilson has assured Mr. A. J. Balfour, Britain's Minister for Foreign Affairs, that the United States will not conclude a separate peace with Germany.

New York, April 26.—A Washington dispatch says that Mr. Root, ex-Secretary of State, had an interview with President Wilson to-day. He formally accepted the appointment as special envoy to Petrograd. President Wilson, in the interview, minutely expressed his wishes to Mr. Root. It is understood that the support to be given to Russia by America will be very extensive and cover political, financial, commercial, industrial and various other fields of administration. Mr. Root is to be accompanied by a few specialists of different departments, secretaries and other members of suite, about fifteen in all. The party will leave Washington in a few days and will proceed to Petrograd via Japan.—"Asahi."

San Francisco, April 27.—The chief mission of Mr. Root, who is going to Petrograd as a special envoy of the Washington government, is observed to be for the purpose of checking the possibility of a separate peace between Russia and Germany.—"Jiji."

FRENCH DELEGATES IN U.S. SENATE

Washington, May 1.—M. Viviani and Marshal Joffre addressed the Senate today. There was enormous enthusiasm and rounds of cheers until after the speakers had left the Chamber.

The British commissioners informed the newspapermen that the United States had already placed a considerable tonnage at the disposal of the Entente. It became known that the Hamburg-American liners Portonia and Clara and Allemania were amongst the ships so disposed of.

UNCLE SAM OPENS HIS PURSE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 28.—It is officially intimated from Washington that the American Government will finance the Entente to the extent of at least 80 and possibly 100 millions sterling monthly.

GUARDSHIPS AT GOLDEN GATE

San Francisco, May 1.—The commander of the naval garrison here announces that the Golden Gate will be guarded by warships both day and night since yesterday noon. The guardships will be marked by a naval flag in the daytime and by electric lights of red, white and yellow at night.—"Asahi."

EXPECT ADMIRALTY CHANGES

New York, May 1.—It is reported from London that many changes are expected to be effected in the British Admiralty.—"Nichinichi."

ALLIES PLANNING TO COPE WITH SHIPPING SHORTAGE

New York, May 2.—In view of the limited shipbuilding capacity in Britain and America, which though combined, is not equal to the task of sufficiently repleting the deficiency in shipping caused by the raid of the German submarines, the allies' conference now sitting at Washington is considering the question of commandeering the shipbuilding capacity in Britain, America and Japan for keeping peace with the destructive power of the German submarines, there being no alternative but to resort to the measures suggested for meeting the situation.

For that purpose the three shall according to the plan drafted, fix a uniform standard for shipbuilding in order to expedite the construction of ships. At the same time America, which has started a programme for the construction of wooden vessels, will change her plans, as the result of the recent investigation, and adopt the construction of semi-steel and semi-wooden vessels. Parts made of steel and iron of the vessels to be built shall be also manufactured in Britain and Japan, while America is to mainly undertake the manufacture of the wooden parts, the work of construction of the vessels to be thus carried on under joint operation. Should this plan be settled, Japan will come to undertake an important part in connection with the German submarine warfare.—"Asahi."

CHICAGO WHEAT PIT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Chicago, May 2.—Wheat tumbled 15 points during the last hour's operations on Tuesday on the announcement that the Swiss Minister was conferring with President Wilson; on the reports of the immense strikes in progress in Germany and also that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg would make a peace offer on Thursday. The market closed demoralized.

FRISCO GERMANS WARNED

San Francisco, May 2.—Public Procurator Bretton notified on April 30 all Germans residing within a radius of half a mile from the Army barracks and the Union Iron Works in San Francisco to remove elsewhere by June 1.—"Asahi."

Honolulu, May 2.—It has been decided that all the crew of the German merchant ships detained in this port shall be sent to America by transports.—"Asahi."

STRONG CENSORSHIP IN U.S.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, May 2.—President Wilson has authorized the censorship of all cables from the United States, besides messages over the telegraph and telephone lines to Mexico. The object is to prevent the transmission of information to the enemy.

AMERICAN TROOPS FOR FRANCE

Washington, May 2.—After the Cabinet meeting to-day, it became known that the prevailing view amongst Government officials was that American troops should be despatched to the front in France as soon as possible.

New York, May 1.—The question pertaining to the dispatch of American troops to the European front formed the nucleus of the discussions at the Allies' conference at Washington yesterday. The American army authorities from the start opposed the idea of sending to Europe troops lacking in proper military training or sending reserve troops there, in which case there will result a deficit in the number of thoroughly trained troops who can hardly be substituted by new recruits. In these circumstances it was hardly expected that the talk of sending American troops to the European battlefield would become a practical question, but the French delegation had apparently beyond all else come with the mission of negotiating with America for the dispatch of troops to the French front and in the interview with President Wilson yesterday M. Viviani expressed this wish to the President, as it is believed. At the same time General Joffre declared to a body of American press men that France would most heartly welcome the dispatch of American troops to Europe. The Roosevelt volunteer division bill, which had been rejected in the House of Representatives, has been adopted by the Senate and is expected to be sent to the conference of the two houses for discussion together with the conscription bill in a few days. Judging from the situation that obtains there is a possibility of America deciding on sending her troops to Europe in some form at no distant date.

The reason why France wishes the dispatch of American troops is not only from the motive of the friendly relations between France and America, but also it is felt that the presence of American troops on the European front will be productive of many good results such as minimising the menace to the transportation of provisions and war supplies, and, besides, the American troops, who are not trained to actual battle, may be used with highly effective results as sharpshooters and for various special service in the trenches and for other purposes. As regards the opinion that the American troops must undergo a thorough military training before being dispatched to Europe, which is especially voiced in America, the French authorities think otherwise, and according to their opinion even after receiving one year's training they will be of no special use for immediate participation in battle and it is by far better to send them to the vicinity of the battleline and make them receive practical training at the front, which will go a long way towards equipping them with practical military knowledge, than giving them comparatively useless preliminary training at home. Soon after the interview with M. Viviani, the chief of the French delegation, President Wilson has held an interview with Mr. Baker, Secretary of War, and exchanged views on the subject. It is generally observed that public opinion in America will surely endorse the dispatch of American troops to Europe.—"Asahi."

LLOYD-GEORGE SPEAKS ON WAR SITUATION

London, April 27 (delayed in transmission).—Mr. Lloyd George made an optimistic speech at the Guildhall to-day. After he was presented with the freedom of the city of London, the Premier stated that the victory had been becoming assured by degrees since 1915, during which time the British army had lost not a single gun, whereas they had taken more than 400 guns from the enemy and captured 10 German prisoners against 1 British prisoner. Though it cannot be definitely declared that the war would continue throughout the present and next year, the British Government was making full preparations for the continuation of the war till the end of next year.

Measures were also being taken to encourage the farming classes for amplifying production of farm products and enabling the United Kingdom to become independent of imported provisions. Regulations have been enacted and enforced for limiting the imported goods to the maximum standard of 11,000,000 tons and economising the carrying capacity of merchant ships. Although the loss through the raid of the German submarines may last and continue for some time yet, Britain will obtain a large quantity of food in July than what was obtained in March last, and this increase in the food supply may be attained without causing any menace to important productive industry.—"Jiji."

MUNITION WORKERS STRIKE IN RHINELAND

London, May 1.—A despatch from The Hague states that more than half the munition workers in the Rhine provinces decided to go on strike to-day.

Essen is shut off from the rest of Germany. Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial German Chancellor, promises to put forward another peace offer in the Reichstag on Thursday.

San Francisco, May 1.—A dispatch from The Hague reports that about a half of the operatives employed in all munitions factories in the Rhine provinces went on strike to-day. The report of the strike has almost paralyzed all iron foundries and works in Germany. Owing to the extremely strict censorship exercised by the Berlin Government nothing definite has been learnt in London so far about the strike situation in Germany.—"Asahi."

THE BESTIAL HUNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 28.—The "Times" continues to publish letters from various sources in respect to the cadaver statement in connection with the Germans extracting oil from the bodies of dead soldiers and feeding the refuse to pigs, which statement it first published on April 17 and which Reuter's agent cabled abroad. The letters quote dictionaries and official documents (German) showing that the word 'cadaver' is used for human body.

UNITED STATES ALREADY DECIDES ON CONSCRIPTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, April 29.—The House of Representatives has passed the Conscription Bill by a majority of 397 to 24. The Senate, followed suit, by adopting the measure by 81 votes to 8.

New York, April 29.—The British and French delegates are respectively holding conferences with the American Government on the questions of provision transportation, financial support and the joint action of the American army and navy with the Entente powers, but the formal meeting of the conference has not opened as yet. Mr. Balfour, the British delegate, wired his first report to the London Government Friday night, the report to be published through the proper channel. Regarding financial support, the American Government has drawn up an estimate providing an accommodation to the Entente powers amounting to $400,000,000 or 500,000,000 every month, the figure being divided into $200,000,000 for Britain, $100,000,000 for France, $100,000,000 for Russia and $5,000 for Italy. According to the above calculation, the total amount fixed at $3,000,000,000 will have to be expended in the course of six or seven months and accordingly the above estimate may be cut down by deducting such expenditures as are thought comparatively less important, so that the figure may cover twelve months. The money to be accommodated in this way is to be appropriated for the payment of the price of provisions, ordnance, railway stocks and other war supplies to be purchased in America. On the political side, the Irish Home Rule question is also included in the subjects of the conference. Italy has proper representatives in America to attend the conference, still the Italian Government is going to dispatch a special delegation with Prince Abruzzi, the cousin of King Emmanuel, as the chief of the mission, which will also include Mr. Marconi, of wireless fame.—"Asahi."

San Francisco, April 28.—A Washington dispatch says that the House of Representatives has rejected by 279 to 98 votes part of the conscription bill, providing for a volunteer corps. The conscription bill, is expected to pass both houses to-night. The amendment bill relating to the organization of the Roosevelt Division was also rejected yesterday.—"Asahi."

BRITISH CAPTURES IN APRIL

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 2.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports that the prisoners taken in April numbered 19,543, including 393 officers. Howitzers to the number of 257, of which 98 were heavies, fell into British hands, as did 227 trench mortars and 470 machine-guns.

NO NEWS FROM GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich, May 1.—There has been no news from Germany except Wolff Bureau telegrams since April 25.

AMERICAN AMBASSADOR EXPLAINS TO RUSSIANS

Petrograd, Apr. 30.—The Conference of the Central Committee of mobilized industry took place here yesterday. The Conference warmly greeted the American Ambassador, who said: "America hesitated to declare war on Germany because American democracy would not join an absolute democracy."

Now, after the change of the régime, America had gladly joined the Allies, and the Ambassador expressed confidence that the Constituent Assembly will establish a democratic republic.

M. Milyukov, the Foreign Minister, declared that America had definitely offered to supply Russia with railway material and also with gold. He pointed out: "our loan of liberty is the first test of a free country."

The French Minister of Munitions, M. Thomas, said that joint efforts must be taken to assure the success of the loan, which provides a double aim. Firstly to provide war needs, and secondly to prove to all the world the confidence of the Russian people in the Provisional Government.

M. Nobel stated that representatives of oil and mechanical industries had subscribed 40 million roubles.

The Government has decided to consider the first day of the fifth month (new calendar) a Bank Holiday and all official institutions will be closed in future on that day.

SHELL EXPENDITURE ON WESTERN FRONT

London, Apr. 27.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Kellaway, secretary to the Ministry of Munitions, introducing into the House of Commons a bill extending to private factories the system of diluting labour already enforced in the controlled munition factories, gave striking figures regarding the recent shell expenditure on the front. He said that during the first week of the recent British offensive our expenditure of shells of fifteen centimetres upwards was nearly twice that of the first week at the Somme offensive while the expenditure of the second week was 6½ times that of the second week of the Somme offensive.

The expenditure of gun ammunition by the British army in the second week of the recent offensive was 28 per cent. heavier than during the first week. This was in marked contrast with the conditions on the Somme where the expenditure of the first week was never reached again.

HERR DERNBURG MAKES SIGNIFICANT SPEECH

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam Apr. 30.—Herr Dernburg, formerly German Colonial Minister has made a significant speech at Breslau. He warned the Government not to delay the reforms, because the popular movement is so deep-rooted it cannot be stifled. He also urged the German Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, to publish the war aims of Germany.

CHINA'S MILITARY MEN WANT WAR WITH KAISER

Peking, Apr. 26.—The conference of the military governors of China voted unanimously for war against Germany here today. After hearing General Tuan Chi-jui, the Premier, explain the Government's policy the Tu-tuhs and their representatives passed without a dissenting vote a resolution favouring China's entry into the war.

Twenty-five men attended the gathering, representing the provinces of China. Of these eleven were the Tutuhs themselves, while fourteen were representatives of military governors who did not attend.

[FROM OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, April 21.—The Cabinet has passed to the Ministry of Finance an official communication from the Austrian Minister requesting the Chinese Government to pay the Boxer indemnity to Austria-Hungary for the month of March, 1917 etc. As this matter concerns China's attitude towards Germany, the money will probably not be paid until the termination of the coming military conference.

The Government has received many telegrams from both General Lo Pei-chin, Acting Tuchun of Szechuan and General Liu Chang-hou, commander of the first division of Szechuan troops at Chengtu each charging the other for opening hostilities. After an urgent conference between the President and the Premier, both Lo and Liu have been removed from their posts and ordered to come up to the Capital for further employment. But according to telegrams received from General Hsiung Ko-wu of Chungking, this morning the Yunnan and Szechuan troops are still fighting against each other inside the Chengtu city and it is still unknown whether the Kuomintang men in Szechuan will accept Mr. Tai Kan, civil governor, as Acting military governor, especially as he is a member of the Chinputang.

With the degradation of General Lo and the downfall of Dr. Chen Chin-tao, late Minister of Finance, the Kuomintang loses great influence in Chinese politics. There is only one Kuomintang Tuchun, Mr. Tan Yen-kai, of Hunan now. General Lo is one of the few military governors who do not favour the entry of China on the side of the Entente Powers and he favours this country maintaining so-called "armed neutrality" instead of declaring war on Germany. The appointment of Mr. Tai Kan to the military governorship of Szechuan means the securing of one more vote by Premier Tuan in supporting his foreign policy in the coming military conference.

Both General Feng Kuo-chang and Chang Hsun have wired to the Government giving the reasons of their inability to come up to attend the military conference and saying that as they are now convinced of the necessity of China's entry into the war against Germany, they have instructed their representatives to this effect. The attitude of these two Generals is most important at this moment, with their support, the conference will surely be successful. It is believed the conference will be held on first May next.

Peking, May 2.—The question of a declaration of war with Germany by China will come before the Lower House of Parliament on Friday. The recommendation will come from the Premier and Cabinet with the support, it is now understood, of the President.

The military party up to the present, has won the day.

While the Cabinet was discussing the anti-German question, four delegates from the military conference namely the Governor of Anhui, the Tuchun of Shantung, the Tuchun of Kirin and the Tuchun of Fukien arrived and requested an interview with the Premier which the latter granted. Ni Shih-chung, the Governor of Anhui was the first to speak. He said "We must declare war on Germany without further delay. We must go thus far without asking conditions from the entente powers. I am voicing the sentiments of the military leaders of the country." He urged the Government to abandon the colourless policy of negotiation with the entente for a revision of treaties and other things.

The other governors supported Ni Shih-chung.

After the retirement of the Governors, the Premier reported their demands to his colleagues who, after a short discussion, declared themselves unanimously in favour of war with Germany.

The Premier and members of the Cabinet then went to the President's office and reported their decision to the President who expressed himself in favour of an immediate declaration of war. He said he would sign the mandate as soon as the question is approved by Parliament.

CHINA DECIDES TO INTERN AMERICAN WARSHIPS NOW

Shanghai, Apr. 26.—Admiral Sah Hchen-ping, with the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, called on Consul-General Sammons, this afternoon, and informed him that they were instructed to intern the American warships. The American Consular officials and naval authorities here, up to the present, have no instructions.

The Kokusai News Agency understands that the warships will be interned on Friday and Saturday, except the Wilmington which will complete repairs.

CHINA'S NEW FINANCE MINISTER

Peking, April 28.—The Lower House of Parliament has passed the nomination of Mr. Li Chung-hsi for the portfolio of Finance by a vote of 260 to 172 after a heated debate. The Premier personally announced the nomination, which will be submitted to the Senate, probably on Tuesday.

FIRE IN HANKOW

Hankow, Apr. 30.—During a disastrous fire here, last night, two large go-downs belonging to Messrs. Jardine Matheson and Co. were destroyed.

DEPOSE VICE-MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS

Peking, April 29.—Mr. Wang Fu-wei has been relieved of his post as Vice-Minister of Communications. Mr. Wang Fu-wei is one of the officials accused of being concerned in the Tientsin-Pukow railway scandals.

The Chinese aviator Mr. Pey Ung-kwei was killed at the Nan-yuan aerodrome yesterday while flying in a high-wind. His machine capsized and fell seven hundred feet.

(By Our Chinese Correspondent)

Peking, April 24.—A Japanese press telegram from Tokyo says that the Japanese United Agency reports from Peking that the former Chinese Secretary of the German Legation is still in Peking and is busily working with Mr. Cordes of the German Bank against the entry of China into the war by all means and intrigues. As the Chinese ex-Secretary of the German Legation left at the same time with von Hintze, this Japanese telegram has aroused much interest among Chinese circles.

The news of the conclusion of an armistice by Russia with Germany and Austria has been circulated to some of the vernacular papers in the Capital through the "International News Service"; but in commenting upon this information, the "Kuominpao" and "Hsin-pao" strongly advise the Chinese Government and people not to pay too much attention to or credit it because the "International News Service" is the substitute of the "Oest-Asiatiche Lloyd" and that the news was purposely circulated to influence the Chinese Cabinet from declaring war on Germany. There is no reason to believe that in the face of its recent announcement, the new Russian Government will conclude separate peace with the Central Powers by making the London Pact a "scrap of paper."

Another interesting and absurd piece of news has been circulated among the Chinese vernacular papers to the effect that the British people are now in favour of the establishment of a Republic in England so that the King of England will, in the same way as the late Russian Tsar, lose his Throne.

The Chinese police has instructed the "Peking Post" Editor to supply copies every day for perusal as it is a German organ devoted to the interests of the Central Powers of Europe and that as no papers can be started in Peking without the sanction of the Metropolitan Police, the German proprietors have been ordered to register the paper though it is now edited by an American. The Chinese police officers do not believe that the paper is owned by its American editor because the paper is losing heavily every month.

The Chinese police officers say that they have received orders to censor German telegrams and letters; but as the telegrams from the International News Agency of New York are passing through American and Allied hands, they cannot do anything to check them. They say that the matter rests in the hands of the foreign telegraph companies.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS ARE AROUSED AT LAST

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Berlin, Apr. 28.—The independent Socialist Party has passed a resolution inviting the work-people on May 1, to demand an eight-hour day, world-peace and international fraternisation.

The "Tageblatt" regards this resolution as an invitation to celebrate the day by a strike.

General Groener, director of National Service, speaking in the Reichstag, said he would have considered means to lighten the hardship of munition-workers and labourers, but for the impudent telegram from the Leipzig Labour Conference to Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor, making political demands, including the establishment of a labour council on the Russian model. "This was madness," he concluded, in announcing his intention to placard the whole of Germany with a proclamation demanding the cessation of strikes; intimating that political traitors would be ruthlessly punished.

The Socialist member, Herr Davidsohn, promised General Groener that the forcible repression of the workers' demands would not succeed.

General Groener's Proclamation calls upon all patriotic war workers to act ruthlessly towards agitators. It says. "Who dares deny Hindenburg's call? He is a scoundrel, who strikes."

New York, Apr. 29.—It is reported from Amsterdam that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, the German Chancellor, dispatching letters to the state governments in the country, requested them to deal rigorously with those joining the strikes which, he states, are greatly hampering the progress of the work at certain factories in Germany now. —"Nichinichi."

GUATEMALA BREAKS WITH GERMANY

New York, Apr. 30.—The Associated Press correspondent at Washington telegraphs that the Guatemalan Government has broken off relations with Germany. The German Minister has been handed his pass-ports and the exequaturs of all German Consuls have been cancelled.

The President of the Republic of Guatemala is Don Manuel Estrada Cabrera, who has been re-elected for a second term. The area of the country is 48,290 square miles. The estimated population on December 31, 1914, was 2,003,579. The military forces, as reorganized, number 85,535 officers and men when mobilized. The reserve army consists of 81 battalions, totalling 40,575 officers and men.

MEXICAN GOVERNMENT WARNS THE GERMANS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, April 27.—The State Department learns officially that the Mexican Government has warned the Germans in Mexico, that any concentration by them near the border will result in their arrest.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA

Harbin, May 1.—The "Novosti Dizni," a Jewish organ of this place which is edited by M. Kriolin and very often indulges in extreme anti-Japanese articles and statements, has published another article highly savouring of anti-Japanese sentiment at the expense of the Japanese press community. The article, which is signed by the chief editor M. Kriolin, begins by stating that a true alliance is not mere diplomatic phraseology but must be based on the sincere spiritual alliance between the two nations combined by the alliance treaty, and points out the unscrupulousness of the Japanese press, which is publishing many erroneous reports about the aspect of the recent revolution in Russia. Citing a few instances by way of proving its assertion, the paper attacks the insincerity indulged in by the Japanese press, which is indiscriminately publishing in its columns irreputable and fabulous cables wired from London and New York, which are not trusted even by the British or Americans themselves. It further states that the Japanese papers are welcoming the news circulated by a certain newsagency which is maintained by the Germans as is well known to the Japanese public, and accuses the Japanese press for its base and vile attitude, going to the length of saying that all this is due to a lack of sympathy in the Japanese press for the revolution in Russia and Japan's apathy towards Russia's liberation from the yoke of despotic monarchy and her future greatness, which is greatly disadvantageous to Japan's interests.

Turning its attack to M. Krupensky, the Russian Ambassador to Tokyo, the paper asks what he is doing in Tokyo and urges him to give up his former principles and protest against the Japanese public opinion and the misstatements of the Japanese press. "In the name of the Russian press in the Far East, we ask our Japanese contemporaries," says the paper, "that they refrain from criticising Russia and the Russians. The Russians of 'Free Russia' do not like an enemy disguised as a friendly nation. We, the Russians, who are eager for the defense of the new form of government, while never forgetting the sympathy shown us by Japan, can never forget and forgive the fact that Japan obstructed Russia's freedom. All questions concerning internal affairs of Russia shall be decided and solved by the Russians themselves and Russia can not allow any other country to meddle with such matters, so Japan had better stop her useless interference with Russia's affairs."

The paper concludes by stating that the Russians are anxious to have and maintain friendly relations with Japan in future and they are always ready to stand as sincere friends of Japan and the Japanese. M. Kriolin, the editor of the journal, is a member of the executive committee of the new Russian government and the leader of the radical elements.—"Asahi."

BRAZIL AT WAR WITH KAISER

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rio de Janeiro, Apr. 28.—The Brazilian Congress opens on May 3, and will decree a state of war against Germany. It will further announce the confiscation of German ships interned in Brazilian ports, and throw open the country's harbours to the Allies.

MR. KATO INTERVIEWED FOR PARIS JOURNAL

London, April 27.—A message from Paris quotes Mr. Kato, one of Japan's delegates to the Inter-Parliamentary Conference as stating in an interview: "We are going to participate in the conference regarding which my Government has not issued any precise instructions. All I knew is that we have to act in concert in order to defeat Germany and to collaborate as much as possible in this sacred duty."

M. Gerrard, the former French Ambassador to Tokyo, who was accompanying Mr. Kato said: "The Japanese rôle in the war has been considerable. Japan will become for the Allies, and especially for Russia, an inexhaustible reserve for war material. I regret it is impossible, owing to distance, to see the splendid Japanese army fighting side by side with the Allies."

CANTONESE OPPOSE BOOK INSPECTION

Canton, May 1.—The third session of the Provisional Assembly opened here today. The opposition from the Cantonese to the Stamp Duty officers inspecting the firms' account books still persists. The members of the Chamber of Commerce called upon the Governor to-day and demanded the repeal of the regulations.

DELICATE SITUATION IN GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, May 2.—The Vorwärts in a May Day article reminds the governing classes of Germany that with the overthrow of Tsardom, the possibility of the continuance of absolutism in any European country has collapsed.

"Whether the remnants of European feudal sovereignty hold on a few months or a few years, anyhow its hours are numbered. If it does not yield now, the suddener will be its downfall."

The fact that such sentiments are permitted to be expressed, lends colour to the rumours, previously cabled, of the delicate situation in high political quarters in Germany.

GERMANY'S PEACE PLANS

New York, May 1.—It is surmised that the speech to be made by the German Chancellor on the peace question at the meeting of the Reichstag on the 3rd, as reported by The Hague dispatch, will perhaps be one mainly concerning the United States and Russia. It is also supposed that if possible, Germany will make efforts to conclude a separate peace with Russia or at least to conclude an armistice, and try at all costs to mitigate America's warlike measures towards Germany, and thus enable Germany to face Britain and France with concerted efforts. But it is impossible to move America now that things have come to the present straits.—"Asahi."

New York, May 1.—A London dispatch reports the occurrence of a great labour strike in Germany, with Rhine district as centre, on May Day, but owing to the interruption of all means of communications from Germany no details are obtainable.—"Asahi."

San Francisco, May 2.—The British delegates have declared that the Entente powers would refuse the fresh peace proposal to be made by the German Chancellor on whatever terms.—"Nichinichi."

GENERAL PETAIN'S APPOINTMENT

BRITISH EMPIRE'S TRADE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, Apr. 27.—Mr. A. Bonar Law, speaking in the House of Commons last night, stated that the Imperial War Cabinet had unanimously accepted the principle that each part of the Empire, having due regard to the interest of the Allies, should give specially favourable terms and facilities to the produce and manufactures of other parts of the Empire.

BRITISH TRADE RETURNS

London, Apr. 28.—The Board of Trade Returns show exports have increased £6,513,012 and imports decreased £5,001,824 for March 1917 as compared with March 1916.

On Tuesday next, the opening day of the Olympiad, an address will be given by Marquis Okuma followed by Mr. J. Kano, President of the Japan branch of the Far Eastern Athletic Association and the delegates from the competing countries. A parade of the athletes will follow headed by a military band. The games scheduled for the first day will be the track and field events, tennis and baseball. The feature of the first day on the track is the modified marathon (10 miles) to start on the field and finish on the field. The volley ball contests will start every day at 2 p.m. and basket ball daily at 3.30 or 4 p.m.

The track events will begin at 2 p.m. every day and the baseball at 4 or 4.15 p.m. in order to allow of all spectators being able to witness them.

The tennis games, with the exception of the first day, will be a round robin tournament starting from about 9.30 a.m. in the morning and, after a short recess, being resumed in the afternoon.

No football game will be played on the first day. There will however, be a game each day on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. After the baseball on Saturday afternoon, the winning team of the contests between Chinese, Filipino and Japanese, will play an eleven of foreigners.

The swimming events will only be held for two days, on Friday and Saturday, starting at 1.30 p.m.

Some of the most interesting events are the full marathon, twenty-six miles and three hundred and eighty five yards, which is open to all comers, strictly amateurs, and is not one of the events in the Far Eastern Athletic Championship Games; on Friday afternoon, there will be held the 20 miles bicycle race on the track; an open 2 miles bicycle race will be held on Saturday. On Saturday, many foreigners will be seen in the open track events especially in the sprinting and short distances.

The penthalon will be held on Thursday afternoon. Last year a Chinese won and this year although the Chinese is to be the winner yet the Japanese have great faith in one of their men. The decathalon will be decided partly on Friday and partly on Saturday. The winner of this event last year was a Filipino, Saavadra, and he is expected to carry away the laurels again although Kato, representing Japan, is expected to make a strong bid.

The baseball team representing Japan has not yet been decided upon but it will be either Waseda University, the Yokohama Nine, or a club composed of ex-Keio and Waseda graduates. Probably the last-named will represent Nippon.

Due to the limited seating capacity and different location of each field the ticket system has turned out to be rather complicated. The Season ticket costing 5 yen will be available for all baseball and football games and all events pulled off on the track and field. As aforesaid, owing to the lack of accommodation, this ticket will not be available for the tennis and swimming matches. Each season ticket will be numbered and seats will be reserved on both fields. For single admission, a first class ticket will be issued for each of the above four fields as decribed in the first part of the article with a separate yen ticket for the football games to be played on the baseball field.

Tickets may be obtained at the Imperial and Grand Hotels, The Mitsukoshi Department Store, The "Japan Times" and The "Advertiser" offices and the Toyoken Restaurant which has branches in the different parts of the city. Details of the meet may be obtained from Mr. Brown, physical director of the Y.M.C.A. or Mr. T. Kimishima at the "Japan Times."

All games will take place in the Shibaura reclaimed grounds. The field No. 1 is for running, jumping and other field events and bicycle races, volley ball, basket ball. No. 2 is reserved for baseball and football, No. 3 for swimming races, and No. 4, for Tennis.

GOVERNMENT AND MONEY MARKET

The money market of Japan recently has been favourable, and the Bank of Japan lowered the rate of interest on March 16th, and times became exceedingly favourable for the flotation of Government bonds, says the "Nichinichi". Bankers and others urged the Government to take advantage of this opportunity and float bonds, but the Government was too busily engaged with the election campaign, and did not pay any attention to the issue of bonds. The City of Tokyo realized the good opportunity and has already announced the issue of city bands to the extent of ten million yen.

The Government officials held a conference with the leading bankers on April 26th, and finally decided to issue Railway Bonds for the amount of forty million yen. Of the total amount twenty million yen will be used for the repair and construction of the railway lines, and the other twenty million yen will be used for the payment of the debt incurred by the Imperial Railways in the past.

The conditions attached to the Railway bonds are favourable for subscribers, and the rate of interest is five per cent. the price at which the bonds are to be issued is ninety five yen; the bankers which handle the issue of the bonds will have a commission of fifty sen for each one hundred yen of the bond handled. Consequently, the actual interest on the bonds will be 5.5 per cent. to the general subscribers, and to the bankers 5.7 per cent. The Special Five Percent Bond formerly issued by the Government is at present sold at 97.90 yen, and bankers will gain ninety sen by exchanging the old Five Percent Bond with the Railway bond to be issued.

The "Nichinichi" declares that the condition of the issue of the Railway bond, is most disadvantageous to the Government, of all the bonds issued in the past. Further it is reported that the Government first intended to float Railway bonds only for twenty million yen, but the bankers who were consulted by the Government insisted that twenty million yen was too small an amount to benefit the money market of Japan, and that the amount should be at least increased to forty million yen.

The Japanese capitalists prepared money for investment in China and for the third Russian bonds, but those were postponed, and they had a large amount of money on their hands. Under such a circumstance, even the issue of forty million yen is too small in the opinion of the "Nichinichi", and the paper cannot understand why the Government intended the issue of only twenty million yen.

The paper is led to believe that the Government has been too cautious and it did not understand the situation of the money market. While the public is eagerly waiting for the issue of such Government bonds, to give such disadvantageous conditions, is beyond any understanding. The "Nichinichi" declares that the Government is totally ignorant of the economic and market conditions of the country.

THE U.S. ARMY EXPANSION BILL

The Senate and House of Representatives of the United States passed the Army expansion bill, and empowered the President to increase the war strength of the American Army to 2,000,000 if necessity demands, and the "Jiji" calls this determination of the United States, to enlarge the army and enforce the conscription law in case of necessity, as one of the most remarkable achievements of the country.

Since the declaration of war against Germany, the United States, has been endeavouring not only to give financial aid to the Entente powers, but also to give assistance in military operations. The first step of the United States in this direction is expected to be the sweeping of the Atlantic ocean for German submarines, and the "Jiji" expects that before long the American Navy will begin the clearing of the ocean.

The subjects Mr. Balfour and M. Viviani are conferring upon with President Wilson and other American officials are not clearly known, but the paper believes that they refer to the joint movement of the American Army and Navy with the Entente forces. As geographically the United States is situated so far from the scene of war, too much cannot be expected of the United States forces, but considering the army expansion bill just passed by the both Houses of the United States, it is likely that the United States intends to give assistance to the Army forces of the Entente.

It is unnecessary to state the benefit the Entente will gain by the financial aid from the United States. Already the United States has lent two billion dollars to the Entente powers, and further the American Government has decided to place three billion dollars at the disposal of the Allies. Also in giving the supply of provisions and other necessary articles to the belligerent nations fighting against Germany, the United States will make the Entente powers free from anxiety over the food and munition supplies.

The "Jiji" rejoices at the firm determination of the United States to give every possible aid and backing to the Entente and assist them in defeating the German forces, both by sea and on land.

POLICY VIS-A-VIS CHINA

The "Yorozu" regrets that the Terauchi Cabinet has no definite policy towards China. In the past seven months, since the establishment of the Terauchi Cabinet, the political situation in China has been daily changing, but the Cabinet has not yet decided on any definite plan to deal with China. Recently Japan made herself hated and disliked by Southern China, as she supported the Tuan Cabinet.

Viscount Motono, the Foreign Minister declared that he would be impartial to the north and South parties of China, but actually he joined hands with the northern party and disregarded southern China. Northern China controls the military power, but the South is actively progressing. The paper says that the Japanese Cabinet believes that the party with the military power is the real controller of the country at present and even in future and willingly has disregarded southern China.

It is proper for Japan to take a policy that does not side with either the south or the north party of China, but without any plan, the Japanese Government is always siding with northern China. The friendly relations between the Japanese Cabinet and the Tuan Government, do not prove the friendly relations between the people of the two nations. Trying to win the favour of Northern China, the Terauchi Cabinet separated the public of the two nations farther apart. If the Terauchi Cabinet does not change its policy towards China, the diplomatic relations between China and Japan will be in great danger.

RUSSIA'S REVOLUTION

The recent revolution in Russia was caused by the determination of the people to keep on fighting against Germany, and the "Jiji" says that with the success of the revolution, it seems likely that Russia will double her efforts to defeat Germany, and the attempt of Germany to conclude a separate peace with Russia will be fruitless. But a revolution which has caused the complete change of the Government and conditions of the nation, effects the nation widely, and the country is not yet settled down after the revolution, and Germany is taking advantage of this unsettled condition of Russia to propose a separate peace with Russia.

While it is not likely that Russia will listen to the separate peace proposition from Germany, if the Russians are tempted by the favourable propositions made by Germany and decide to conclude a separate peace, it will be disastrous to Russia, says the "Jiji".

If Russia makes a separate peace with Germany and if Germany wins the final victory of the war, Russia will be oppressed under German despotism, and the national existence of Russia will become dangerous. It will be, therefore, far more advantageous for Russia to conclude peace with Germany together with the other Entente powers, whatever might be the outcome of the war.

When Russia considers the welfare of the nation, and the right and protection of the people, she cannot listen to the proposal of a separate peace. Germany may use various tempting words and tricks to make Russia sign the separate peace, but the paper hopes that the Russians will consider their future welfare and advantage before listening to Germany.

Russia was the proposer of the non-separate peace agreement signed at London, and besides, England and France, Japan joined the treaty, and now it is reported that the United States may join the pact. President Wilson has already declared that he will not consider a separate peace proposal. When all other nations are thus firmly determined to keep the terms of the London agreement, Russia, the originator of the agreement, cannot very well withdraw from the pact and sign a separate peace with Germany.

NAVY DEPARTMENT HAS NEW PLANS READY NOW

The navy department has decided, it is reported, to introduce a claim for appropriations amounting to 260,641,700 yen on account of warship construction in the coming special session of the Imperial Diet. The claim forms part of the completion of the naval repletion programme providing for the organization of the eight battleships and four cruiser unit and the amount covers the disbursement for the ensuing seven consecutive years, the outlay for the present fiscal year being 14,500,000 yen. The warcraft to be newly constructed, according to the said programme, consists of a 32,000 ton battleship, two cruisers, 7,200 and 3,600 tons respectively, two destroyers, 1,200 and 700 tons respectively, two submarines, 700 tons each and a special commission ship of about 10,000 tons.

As to the new battleship included in the repletion programme it had been the intention to build one of the Nagato type with a tonnage of about 32,000 tons, but it is now reported that the naval authorities propose to alter the former plan and increase the estimated tonnage to over 32,000 tons, the change being thought necessary in view of the lessons furnished by the experiences in the present European war, though the final decision has not been arrived at as yet. At the same time some change may take place in the mode of the vessel's armament, as a result of the lessons learnt in the present war, and it is learned that the former plan of ordnance, fixed for twelve 14-inch guns, may be altered to twelve 15-inch guns. This, however, still lacks final decision and the question is now being subjected to the deliberate consideration of the experts of the navy, who are making researches as to the advisability or inadvisability of larger or smaller guns and other similar problems. That the displacement of the new submarines has been fixed at 700 tons would apparently seem to be rather behind the times, in so far as the question of size and type is concerned, but it has been presumably decided upon in view of the difficulty of building submarines of larger type at the domestic dockyards under the circumstances that at present obtains.

The navy appropriations to be introduced in the coming special session of the Imperial Diet are thus limited to the claim for the fulfilment of the already settled repletion programme on the basis of the eight battleship and four cruiser unit. But in view of the recent tendency in the European countries and America, which are steadily increasing or expanding their naval strength the Imperial navy may introduce a new claim, in the next regular session of the Diet to be convened this winter, providing for a speedy completion of the eight battleship and four cruiser squadron, apart from the claim for the increased expenditure resultant on the alteration of the previously settled plan of the repletion programme in order to keep apace with the situation among the naval powers of the world. Opinions of the high officers of the navy are almost unanimous in proposing completion of the eight battleship and four cruiser unit squadron, and among high officers an opinion is advanced urging the necessity of completing the construction of an eight battleship and eight cruiser squadron. As the necessity of the construction of an eight battleship and eight cruiser squadron cannot be denied, but is almost universally recognised in view of the recent tendency of the western powers, which are steadily consolidating the strength of their navies, the opinion may gain influence and be formulated as a practical question at no distant future. The construction of the new warcraft included in the programme to be introduced in the coming special session of the Diet is expected to be started soon after the passage of the claim, perhaps beginning in the latter part of July next or in the early part of August. The battleship and the larger cruiser will be built at the Yokosuka navy yard, the light cruiser at the Sasebo navy yard, the destroyers at the Maizuru navy yard and the submarines at the Kure navy yard and the Kawasaki dockyard. The special commission ship will be constructed at the Kure navy yard.

U.S. ARMY BILL

America's army expansion bill which had been under consideration for some time past by Congress was passed by both the upper and lower Houses on April 28, reads the official report reaching the Foreign Office Tuesday.

According to this bill, the report further states, the Regular Army and the National Guards are to be fully expanded by means of conscription in accordance with the plan adopted last year. Besides, an extra army of half a million soldiers will be raised, the President being empowered to increase this by calling another half a million to the colours if necessity demands, thus bringing up the war strength of the American army to 2,000,000 in all.

The bill passed by the House is reported to be a little different in details from that of the Senate and the two bills are soon to be taken up by the joint conference of the two houses to smooth out the conflicting point.

PRESIDENT OF LOWER HOUSE

Forecasts are being made now as to the probable candidates for the Presidency of the House of Representatives, but it goes without saying that the new Speaker will be a member belonging to the Seiyukai party, which has successfully gained the majority in the House as the result of the general election. It is reported that no concrete decisions are as yet reached by the Seiyukai over this question, though there are two or three self-appointed candidates for the vacancy. Mr. Hara, the President, and the leaders, of the Seiyukai it is reported, are unanimous in their intentions to recommend Mr. Ikuzo O-oka to the post, so that Mr. O-oka will in all probability be elected President of the House of Representatives when the House meets for an extra session in summer, unless the unlooked-for happens. It is observed that no one in the Seiyukai is better qualified than Mr. O-oka to fill the post in view of the fact that he was very popular in this post some years ago not only among his own party members but also even among his opponents.

CHINA'S PROPOSALS TO ENTENTE ALLIES

The Chinese Premier, Tuan Chi-jui, intimated to Baron G. Hayashi, Japanese Minister to Peking, in an interview on April 28, that in view of the difficulty China was facing in an effort to obtain national unity on declaring war against Germany it was her desire to know to what extent Japan was ready to agree with China's requests for a raise of the customs duty to an effective 5 per cent. and with other items already presented to the Entente Government some time ago, it was learned from an authoritative source yesterday. As Minister Hayashi was not armed with any instructions from the Tokyo Government, it is understood that he unofficially explained to the Premier the attitude of his Government in general terms. Besides, before giving China any definite reply to her proposals it would be necessary to hold a conference of the Entente Ministers in Peking to clarify the attitude of the respective Governments and arrive at a united decision.

Peking dispatches state that Premier Tuan's efforts to bring about China's declaration of war on Germany is again being made a football of internecine politics, and this fact is hampering him and his followers in their attempts to materialize the programme against the Kaiser's Government. The Premier also explained to the Japanese Minister about this embarrassing situation and is said to have requested that Japan take the lead in making known how she considered the Chinese proposals in order that Tuan might be able to assure the people that what he announced prior to the diplomatic rupture with Germany in March —i.e., the Entente would give favourable consideration on China's proposals—would be realized.

At the Foreign Office, yesterday, a conference of the heads of the different bureaux and divisions was held. At this conference the question of forming a reply to China's enquiry was discussed, but what decision was reached was not disclosed.

CLASSIFICATION OF M.P.'S

The "Yorodzu" classifies the 381 newly-elected members of the House of Representatives according to their vocations as follows:—

Lawyers—55; journalists—43; those connected with commercial and industrial concerns—85; agriculture—33; landowners—31; mine owners—14; physicians—13; bankers and money-lenders—15; professors and educationists—9; fishery—6; shipping—3; public offices—6; sundries—4; without occupations—64.

One thing noteworthy is the increase of M.P.'s connected with journalistic work and also those engaged in medical profession. It is stated the youngest gentleman of all the new M.P.'s is Mr. S. Matsuda who is 32 years while the oldest member is Mr. Kurauchi who is 71 years of age.

TO ABOLISH "TIPPING"

Opinions are gaining ground among the Railway Authorities favouring the total abolition of the tipping system to boys on the Tokaido line and elsewhere. The matter is expected to be taken up for discussion at a meeting of railway directors to be held shortly. It is added that the tipping system is prohibited on the Kyushu railways.

ALL IN READINESS FOR COMMING OLYMPIAD HERE

The preparations for the coming Olympiad in Tokyo are now complete and with the arrival of the Chinese competitors the Tokyo representatives have been speeded up in their work. Every day at the Shibaura track, the runners, jumpers, hurdlers and other athletes are practicing under the direction of Messrs. Morikubo and Brown, the Committee on the Track and Field events. The Chinese athletes began their training at the track of the Imperial University on Wednesday, and until the day of the games, they will be out daily.

The construction of the grand stands, and the laying out of the grounds have been finished. The field will be divided into four sections, (1) for track and field events, (including Volley ball and Basket ball), (2) for Baseball and Football, (3) swimming races in the canal (4 for Lawn Tennis. The season ticket sold at five yen will entitle one to the reserved seats at the grand stands both at the Nos. 1 and 2 fields. Separate tickets have to be purchased for seats at the No. 3 and 4 fields.

The Japanese Committee of the Association have selected the athletes who will represent Japan in the coming games, 128 men having been chosen from all parts of the country. They are mostly in Tokyo at present and do their training at the Shibaura field.

The Japanese selections are as follows:

One Mile Swimming Race: T. Hirano, D. Noju, H. Ikeda, T. Imamura, T. Nakada, J. Okamura.

The men who will participate in the bicycle races and the baseball team have not yet been chosen.

Of the above named athletes, the majority are students of Universities, Colleges and Middle Schools, but there is one who is a member of the House of Representatives, recently elected from the Aichi Prefecture. Reference is made to Mr. Kan Hibino, who is forty-seven years old, and the oldest entrant who will participate in the coming games. He is a well known athlete and until recently was the director of the Aichi Middle School, from which he resigned to become a candidate of the Kenseikai. For many years he has suprised the people with his long distance running, and Mr. Hibino and Mr. Kanaguri of the Tokyo Higher Normal School are expected to win in the Marathon Race. Mr. Hibino has coached many young athletes of Aichi Prefecture, and several of his students will participate in the coming games. He is the most interesting figure in the list of the Japasese athletes selected by the Committee for the games, and his success will be keenly looked for by the public.

Many of the athletes named above are quite unknown to the athletic circles of Japan. Especially is Mr. J. Hattori, the short distance runner of the Imperial University of Tokyo a new find, of which the Committee is very justly proud. The Committee think that many capable athletes are still hidden somewhere in the country.

It is commonly believed that in the long distance and bicycle races the Japanese athletes will most probably be victorious, but in short distance races, and the Discus, Javelin and Hammer throws, the Japanese athletes are reported to be behind the Chinese and Philippine representatives. In Football and Baseball, the Chinese and Philippine teams are very strong, and exciting games are expected. In Tennis, Japan has Kumagai, and Mikaimi, and under ordinary conditions, they should carry off the spoils.

SOUTHERN CHINESE IN TOKYO READY FOR FRAY

With the arrival of fifty-seven athletes from China Monday morning, the interest of the Japanese public in the international athletic games to be held at Shibaura from May 8th, has been suddenly awakened, and the public of Tokyo, who have had no opportunity to witness international athletic games in the past welcomed the coming of the Chinese athletes with a hearty ovation yesterday.

The party was headed by Mr. Ho, Director of the Athletic department of the Shanghai Y.M.C.A., and the members of the party are all from Southern China. Of the fifty-seven athletes, twenty-nine are from Canton, 19 from Hongkong, and 9 from Shanghai. The majority of the Chinese athletes are students; they are from the Hongkong University, Queen's College, Canton Normal School and other schools.

The contests these athletes will participate in will be volley-ball and football only. They do not take part in the track events. The Southern Chinese athletes have shown considerable ability in the past Far Eastern Athletic games, and they are confident that they will return the victors.

The party on arrival yesterday went to the Chinese Y.M.C.A. at Kanda, and after a rest of two days, will practice at Shibaura.

The championship trophy of the Far Eastern Athletic Association which went to China at the last year's games, was brought by the party.

ECZEMA IN RASH ON BOY'S BACK

Arms and Legs. Irritation Dreadful. Restless at Night. Soothed and Healed by Cuticura.

"When my little boy was six months old he had a serious illness and when he got better we noticed a rash on his back which was worse in the joints of his arms and legs. I was told it was dry eczema. The irritation was dreadful and he would rub himself until the blood ran. He was restless at night and would wake up scratching, and I often used to hold his hands until he had got to sleep again.

I only used one-half a box of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap and he was healed." (Signed) Mrs. E. Browne, The Chestnuts Eye Nr. Peterboro', Northamptonshire, Eng., July 29, '15.

NEW ADDITION TO KEIO IS NOW COMPLETED

With the completion of the Keio Gijuku University's Middle School Department's building, another beautiful edifice has been added to the numbers of other structures on the University campus. The new building, in view of the increasing number of students and the need of adequate equipments in order to be up with the times, was started in what was previously the tennis courts of the university. Special care has been taken to equip the chemical, physical and biological branches so that they may be up to the standards. The new structure cost the university about 90,000 yen and may be said to be the best equipped middle school in the city. The present grammar grade department of the University has already won the name of being the best in the city with its curriculum up to the most improved and developed methods based on the psychological conditions of the child during its growth.

In addition the University in view of the establishment of a medical course with an endowment fund of 2,000,000 yen will start the construction of a large laboratory on the site of the present dormitory. The dormitory will be moved to Tengenji near the present tennis courts where a new and modern dormitory is in the course of building. The new laboratory is an additional gift to the 2,000,000 endowment fund and is the donation of Mr. Kuhara, proprietor of the Kuhara Mining Company The building will be completed by September. The Preparatory course of the medical department has already started. The medical college proper will be built, it is said, near where the bacteriological laboratory of Dr. Kitasato now is. The University is further planning to establish a course in industrial chemistry and a college of engineering to ameliorate the need of the times.

ATTACK KENSEIKAI LEADERS

The defeat at the recent election, has caused a disturbance in the Kenseikai, and among the members of the party there are not a few who are now attacking Viscount Kato, the President and Mr. Adachi, General Manager of the Party for the defeat of the party.

Dissatisfied with the result of the election, some members of the party complained to Mr. Adachi regarding the mistaken campaign management, and many have also brought their complaints to Viscount Kato. Mr. Adachi and his followers attribute the failure of the party at the election to the managers of the local branches, but the attack of the branch managers by Mr. Adachi further angered the discontented members.

The complaint is made that Mr. Adachi over-rated the power and influence of the party and opposed the plan of having more candidates for the party, but Mr. Adachi is reported to have explained that such a matter was handled by the branch managers, and the headquarters at Tokyo had no hand in the affair.

Now the Kenseikai is divided into two factions, one supporting Mr. Adachi, and the other attacking him on the ground that the defeat of the party was due to his lack of foresight and judgment.

BERKELEY BASEBALL TEAM COMING SOON

At the invitation of the Keio University, the baseball team of the University of California, Berkeley, Cal. will arrive in Tokyo on May 26th. The Berkeley team is the strongest base-ball team of the Pacific Coast and the matches with the Japanese teams are sure to be exciting.

The visiting team will stay in Japan thirty days, and will play at Tokyo and Osaka. Their stay being limited, the Berkeley team will be asked to play against the Keio team on the day after their arrival at Yokohama, and will play seven games in Tokyo. In twenty days, they will play three games against Keio, two games against Waseda and two games against the Meiji. All games in Tokyo will be played at the Keio field.

The Berkeley team that will visit Japan will consist of three pitchers, four catchers, six infield players, five outfield players and one utility player. The members of the team are as follows;

AZALEAS NOW IN FLOWER

The azaleas in Hibiya park have begun to bloom. Beginning Tuesday night the municipal authorities have started illumining the flower grove with electric lamps. The famous azalea groves at the Tsutsujigaoka park in Tatebayashi on the Tobu railway line have also begun to bloom and are attracting many people. The flowers will be at their best about this Sunday. For two weeks commencing to-day the Tobu railway company will run special excursion trains between the Asakusa station and Tatebayashi, where a temporary station has been opened for the flower season.

AWAZU MARU RETURNS FROM CHIYO WRECK

The steamer Awazu Maru of the Toyo Marine Insurance Company which went to Hongkong to salvage the T.K.K. steamer Chiyo Maru, which sank twenty miles off Hongkong last Spring, returned to Kobe recently. According to the captain of the salvage boat, the Chiyo Maru is beyond all hopes of salvage.

The water where the T.K.K. steamer sank is about twenty fathoms deep, and the vessel went aground on rocks which have edges sharp as teeth. The Chiyo Maru was broken into three pieces, and as the three parts of the boat remain between the teeth of the rocks, it appears as if the huge vessel has been literally chewed up by the rocks.

The salvage boat attempted to save the steel plates off the Chiyo, but it was found out that the expense of taking them off the boat and bringing them out of the water is so large that such an attempt is not feasible. The valuable machinery of the steamer will also be abandoned, as it will incur too large an expense to salve.

The only things that can be saved off the vessel are the funnels. One funnel of the steamer is worth about 35,000 yen at present and since April 1, work has been started to save the funnels. Fifty workmen are now working at one funnel which will be taken out of the water within a few weeks.

The captain of the Awazu Maru reported that the only difficulty the salvage workers experienced was the scarcity of water, and by saving the rain water, they were alone able to obtain sufficient fresh water. All the funnels of the steamer will be taken out within the year, it is expected.

The Imperial Life Saving Association will hold its general meeting at the Kokugikan, Ryogoku on May 24th.

It is now announced by the Home Department that a gubernatorial conference, will be held for five days in Tokyo beginning on the fifteenth.

On the thirteenth of this month the telephone exchange which has been newly established at Yanagi-cho, Koishikawa-ku, city will be formally opened for service.

The Japan Sick Nurse Society has established a nurse training school in Kanda, city, in view of the keen scarcity of sick-nurses being felt in Tokyo.

The new large type of a sea-plane invented by Mr. Otojiro Ito, a civilian aviator, has been nearly completed and it is expected that on the fifteenth a trial flight will be made.

Dr. Wm. Imbrie, of the Meiji Gakuin, Tokyo, left Yokohama yesterday afternoon with his wife on the Colombia on vacation at home. He expects to return to this country in December next.

The recreation grounds of the Yokohama Park, recently closed for repairs, are now again opened. The second baseball match between the Waseda University and Yokohama Nine Club takes place there this afternoon.

According to the latest returns, there are 6,306 foreigners residing in Yokohama and other parts of Kanagawa Prefecture, comprising 3,913 males and 2,393 females. They include 3,066 Chinese, 1,088 British, 397 Americans, 255 Germans and 122 French.

Popular subscriptions towards the fund of the Scientific Laboratory are continuing satisfactorily, and it is reported that the total amount of money donated so far for the establishment of the laboratory has reached 2,240,500 yen. The donations received yesterday amounted to 75,000 yen, of which 25,000 yen was given by Mr. Shimura and 10,000 yen by Mr. Yamashita.

In connection with the reconstruction of the Yokohama Silk Conditioning House, it is learned that it will be temporarily removed to No. 212, Yamashita-cho, on May 15th. The present wooden buildings have been sold by auction for over 5,000 yen and are to be made into a three-storied house on an extensive scale.

The Natural Colour Cinematograph Co., Tokyo, has obtained permission from the Olympiad committee to take moving pictures of the scenes of various games at Shibaura. The pictures taken will be shown at the Kinema Club, the Kinkikwan, and several other cinema halls belonging to the company in Tokyo from tonight.

Under the auspices of students of the five private universities in Tokyo, Waseda, Keio, Meiji, Hosei and Nippon, a reception will be held at the Seiyoken, Uyeno, on Sunday in honour of the athletes from China and the Philippines to the Olympiad. The Japanese athletes in the Olympiad will also be invited.

Steamers expected to be launched in this month are: a 5,756 tonner at the Mitsubishi Dock yards, Kobe, on the 15th; two 1,200 tonners at the Osaka Iron Works on the 10th and the 15th respectively. It is said that during the 4 months ending April 17 steamers exceeding the tonnage of 1,000 tons have been launched in Japan, the aggregate tonnage being 66,827 tons.

The latest census shows that in the density of population the city of Osaka stands third in the world. Paris heads the list with 362.6 inhabitants per square cho and next comes Berlin with 326.85 inhabitants per square cho, though these figures are based on the investigations made in 1911. As for Osaka 120.4 persons inhabited every square cho at the end of 1916.

In connection with the remonstrances presented by the tea merchants regarding the scarcity of bottoms for shipments from Shimidzu, the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, Toyo Kisen and Osaka Shosen Kaisha were ordered yesterday by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce to submit statistics of tea shipments last year. After the presentation of these statistics to the authorities concerned, representatives of the steamship companies and tea merchants will meet again to discuss the pending question.

OLYMPIAD OPENS WITH VERY FINE WEATHER

Twenty thousand enthusiasts greeted the opening of the Third Far Eastern Championship Games Tuesday afternoon at the Shibaura reclaimed grounds. The grand stands erected on both sides of the track were filled to the limit, and every available space in the enclosure was packed.

Loud cheers welcomed the parade of the competing athletes, headed by the Toyama Military Band. The Philippine delegates lead the march, flying the Stars and Stripes, the Chinese came next, and the Japanese brought up the rear. After marching round the track, the cavalcade assembled in the centre of the field.

Marquis Okuma, as Honorary President of the Eastern Athletic Association gave an opening address. Welcoming the foreign delegates, Marquis Okuma spoke of athletics as a character building recreation, and praised the true sportmanship of the competing delegates. Marquis Okuma was followed by Prof. Jigoro Kano, the President, who also delivered an address and hoped that the games to be held in Japan would be successful. The representatives of the Philippine and Chinese delegates responded to the addresses of Marquis Okuma and Prof. Kano.

The opening ceremony over, the contest started. The events scheduled for Tuesday were 100 Yard Run, 120 yard High Hurdles, 220 Yard Run, One Mile Run, Running Broad Jump and 440 Yard Run.

In the events held Tuesday, the Japanese and Philippine delegates scored six points each, but the Chinese athletes failed to secure any point. The Japanese won the first, second and third places in the one mile race, and the Philippine team won every thing in the running broad jump.

The greatest event of the day, was the winning of the 100 yard trial heats by G. Saavedra, the Filipino, in ten seconds flat. Mr. Saavedra was the winner of the 100 yard Run, Running High Jump, and Decathlon at the last Far Eastern Championship Games held at Shanghai in 1915, but his past record for 100 yards was 10 3/5. With the advantage of having the wind at his back, Tuesday afternoon he ran the distance in record time for the Far East. The track was a little soft; if the track had been harder, he might have made even better time. The world's record for 100 yards is 9 3/5 seconds held by D. J. Kelly. Even with the favourable wind, his record of ten seconds flat is a remarkable exhibition.

Three heats of 100 yard Run were held Tuesday, and seventeen competed. The first heat was run by I. Chang, Y. E. Liu, Alager, Llaneta, I. Inouye and S. Madono. Llaneta, the Filipino, started off well and held his lead all through. His time was 10 2/5 seconds, the second place was won by S. Madono in 10 3/5 seconds. The second heat was run by C. T. Kwok, H. Sun, Catalon, Guerrero, S. Higashiguchi and T. Saito. This heat was won by the Filipino Catalon in 10 1/5 second, and the second place was won by S. Higashiguchi in 10 3/5 seconds. The third last heat was run by H. F. Hsiung, J. C. Hu, G. Saavedra, J. Hattori and R. Okumura. In this heat Saavedra, the Filipino record holder, made the fast time of ten second flat, J. Hattori finished second in 10 2/5. In the three heats of 100 yard Run, the first places were all won by the Filipinos, and the second places went to the Japanese.

However in the three heats of 120 yard High Hurdle race, the honour was divided between the Filipino and the Chinese, and only one Japanese managed to qualify for the final in the 120 yard High Hurdle race. The times of the three heats were far below the former records of the Far Eastern Games.

In the first heat, Rabaya, the Filipino won the first place in 17 1/5 second and the second place went to Falgui, another Filipino. H. F. Chang, the Chinese runner, secured the first place in the second heat in 18 4/5 seconds and the second place was won by K. Fukui, his time being 19 2/5 seconds. The last heat was won by Lozada, the Filipino in 19 2/5 seconds, and S. Kuang, the Chinese took the second place. In the second heat of the High Hurdles, Castillones, the Filipino broke the tape ahead of other competitors, but as he turned over three hurdles he was disqualified, and the first place went to Chang. The Japanese took only one second place in the High Hurdles.

In the 220 Yards run, the Japanese did much better than in the 100 yards. In the first heat, I. Saeki, the Japanese took the first place in 25 seconds, with Ablan, the Filipino only a few inches behind. In the second heat, Catalon, the winner of the second heat of the 100 yard run, took the first place, and J. Hattori, the Japanese boy, won the second place. The time of Catalon was 24 3/5 seconds. The third heat was won by S. Madono in 24 3/5 seconds and Llaneta the Filipino was second.

The one mile race was the next event. It was the most important event held yesterday, and thirteen athletes lined up. At the start W. C. Li, the Chinese, lead others, and for three laps (the track is about 420 yards), he managed to lead the field. But as the fourth lap began, three Japanese runners passed the Chinese leader, and breasted the tape before all. The winner of the first place was G. Taku, teacher of the Nagoya Middle School, his time being 4 minutes 56 4/5 seconds. The second place was won by K. Inouye and the third by T. Suzuki.

The Running Broad Jump was monopolized by the Filipinos. Six competitors from each race competed, but only one Chinese and three Filipinos qualified for the final, and the three Filipinos carried off the spoils. Cardenas jumped 21 feet 9 inches, Saavedra 21 feet 6 inches and Santos 21 feet and three inches.

The last event Tuesday was the preliminary heats of 440 yard run. In this event, the Japanese won the first place three times, and the Filipinos monopolized the second places, and the Chinese made no showing whatever. In the first heat, D. Yamanouchi covered the distance in 56 2/5 seconds, and the second place was won by Clemente in 57 4/5 seconds. In the second heat, M. Sugiyama won the first place in 58 2/5 seconds, and the second place went to Raval who covered the distance in one minute. In the third heat, Oishi won the first place in 57 seconds, and Ablan took the second place in 57 4/5 seconds.

The results of Tuesday's events proved that the Japanese are behind the Chinese and Filipino athletes in the short distance races and field events, but in the long distance races they are speedier than the foreign delegates. It is thought that the honours of the championship will be divided between the Filipino and the Japanese athletes and the Chinese will be out of it unless they surprise others in baseball, football, volley ball, tennis and swimming.

Second Day of the Olympiad

Heavy rain, and tearing gale threatened the Olympiad on Wednesday, but the weather cleared in time to allow the afternoon programme to be held without any difficulty. In the field and track events, the honour was again divided between the Japanese and Philippine teams, each having 24 points, adding 18 points each to six points secured on the first day. The Chinese team had only nine points.

Ten Mile modified Marathon race, one of the most important events of the games was carried by the Japanese runners, and three places all went to the Japanese. By this success in Ten Mile run, the Japanese team was able to add nine points to the score. The Chinese team succeeded in obtaining six points in Running High Jump, carrying the three places.

The score of points obtained by the Chinese, Philippine and Japanese teams in the events held on the first day and Wednesday is as follows:

—	China	Philippine	Japan
100 yard	—	5	1
440 yard	—	1	5
One Mile	—	—	6
120 yard high hurdle	2	4	—
Running high jump	6	—	—
Running Broad jump	—	6	—
Discus throw	1	5	—
Modified marathon (10 miles)	—	—	9
Total	9	24	24

The championship of the meet is now believed to be fought between the Philippine and Japanese teams, and the score being a tie between the two teams, the further programmes of games will be watched with a keener interest.

A larger crowd than on the opening day, watched the games, and in the morning the football and tennis games attracted an immense crowd, and in the afternoon, the base ball game between the Japanese and Philippine teams drew almost entire crowd from the track and field events.

T.I.H. Princes Atsu, Takamatsu and Tamashina, Jr., honoured the athletes by their presence, and every winner was brought before the presence of the Princes and introduced to Their Highnesses. The three Princes eagerly watched the games all through, and when the base ball game began on the next field, they proceeded to the field, and watched the Waseda team win the game from the Philippine team.

The programme of the track and field events began at 2 p.m. with the Volley Ball game between the Chinese and Japanese teams. But just at the moment, the Volley Ball players were getting ready for the game, a strong gale hit the ground, and tents were ripped off, and the fence boards were blown up in the air. The tent erected for the Military Band was lifted up entirely and broken. The game was suspended for a few minutes until the gale subsided. But when the gale abated, heavy rain fall came and the entire crowd packing the enclosure were drenched with rain. However they did not leave the field, and covered themselves with anything they could lay their hands on. Mats, "Futon" newspapers, were gathered to shelter them. Fortunately the rain did not continue long to prevent the holding of the events.

In the Volley Ball, the Chinese team was stronger in every point, and from the very start to the finish, the Japanese were always on the defensive. The first game was won by the Chinese by the score of 21 against 4, and in the second game, the Japanese lost with the score of 21 against 2. In this game, the Japanese team did not have any showing at all, and the Chinese had the game in their hand from the very start.

The Final of the 100 yard run was run by Llaneta, Catalon, Saavedra, Madono, Higashiguchi, and Hattori and the Chinese had no representative in the final. Saavedra who made the distance in ten seconds on the first day, was expected to win the race, but Catalon, Filipino, won the race in ten seconds flat, and he had no wind to back him as Saavedra did on the first day. The second was Llaneta, and the third was Hattori. In the final the Philippine team won five points, and the Japanese one.

In the final of 220 yard. Catalon again won the race, in 23 4/5 seconds, and Madono and Hattori, two Japanese runners were the second and third. Consequently in this race, the honour was equally divided between the Japanese and the Philippine with three points each.

However in the final of 440 yard, the Japanese won five points and the Philippine had one point. Yamaguchi, the young Japanese runner won the race in 55 seconds, and he was followed by Saeki, and Ablan, Filipino, took the third place.

The Ten Mile modified Marathon race was started at 3.15 with eleven starters, six Japanese, two Filipinos and three Chinese. Circling the track once, they left the ground and proceeded towards Hamakawa, five miles away All along the course of the race, a large crowd gathered to watch the international marathon race. The rain that fell early in the afternoon made some parts of the course muddy, and before they went far, all runners were covered with mud. However despite the bad condition of the course, Hashimoto, Japanese, made the fast time of 55 minutes, 57½ seconds, and when he returned to the track again six minutes after four, he was greeted with cheers. It was followed soon by T. Kato, another Japanese who covered ten miles in 56 minutes, 44 seconds. Sasaki, Japanese, came in third, almost four minutes after Kato. Thus winning three places in the Marathon race the Japanese team won nine points. The rest of the runners arrived in the following order: Akiba, Watanabe, Bautista, Chen, Li and de Juses.

The failure of the Japanese athletes to win first places in 100 and 220 yards, and their success in the Ten Mile Marathon, further proved the fact that the Japanese are more adapted for the long distance races.

In the final of 120 yard High Hurdle, the Japanese had no chance of securing any point, and the Philippine carried the first and the third places and the second place went to the Chinese. Rabaya, Filipino, broke the past record of the Far East by finishing the race in seventeen seconds flat. H.F. Chang, the Chinese runner, took the second position, and Lozada, another Filipino, took the third.

In the Running High Jump, the Chinese have shown their ability, and they have eliminated all other athletes and won three places. C.H. Yuan, the Chinese jumper, jumped 5 feet six inches and took the first place. S.Y. Kuo, took the second by jumping 5 feet 5 inches, and W.Y. Chen took the third with 5 feet 4 inches. By winning three places in High Jump, the Chinese team secured six points.

The honour of the Discus throw went to the Philippine. Montes broke the past record of the Far East by throwing the Discus for 109 feet 53/5 inches. The past record of the Far East was 104 feet 4 inches held by Samson of Philippine. Alvarez, another Filipino, threw the Discus for 102 feet and took the second, and Y.E. Liu, the Chinese, took the third by throwing the distance of 96 feet 11 inches Miyamoto, Japanese managed to throw the Discus for 90 feet 8½ inches, but he was unable to throw it any farther. The Philippino team took five points and the Chinese one in the Discus throw.

Three heats of 220 yard Low Hurdle were held Wednesday and the results were as follows:

First heat; Lozada, first, time 28 4/5 seconds; G. Astraquillo, second. Second Heat: I. Astraquillo, first, time 28 seconds; Bello, second. Third heat: Sapnu, first, time 28 seconds; Chang, second.

The Basket Ball Game was held Wednesday afternoon between the Chinese and Philippine teams, but in the first half, the Chinese did not show their good form, and were defeated with the score of 28 against 5, but in the second half, the Chinese began to pick up, but the margin of defeat in the first half was so big that they were unable to win victory from the Filipinos. The final score was 38 against 17 in favour of the Philippine.

The Tennis games were held Wednesday morning and afternoon, and all games were watched by a large and interested crowd.

In the morning, Single games were held between the Chinese and Philippine players. In the game between Pang and Fargo, the game was won by Fargo by the score of 6-4, 2-6, 1-6, 3-6. Ho, the Chinese player lost another game to Bolanas, Filipino by the score of 1-6, 2-6, 2-6. In the afternoon, the Double Game between Kumagai and Mikami, vs. Chou and Pang was held, and the game was won by the Japanese team by the score of 6-0, 6-1, 6-1. Mikami played single game against Bolanas, but he lost the game with the score of 3-6, 2-6, 3-6.

Owing to the heavy rain Tuesday night, it was impossible to start the football until 10.35 Wednesday morning, by which time most of the wet patches had been drained. The tie was between the Chinese and the Higher Normal School. The visitors were by far the better team and won by 5 goals to nil, four of which were obtained in the first half.

The Chinese Team showed better team work and superiority all around. The game proved that China stands a good chance of winning the laurels in this line. The Japanese Team stands a poor chance since they show a great deal of infancy in this sport. The Chinese throughout the game had their own way. This morning, the Japanese meet the Philippines on the baseball field.

The baseball event of the Far Eastern Championship Games began as scheduled 4 p.m. sharp. The first ball was thrown by Dr. Kano. The Princes of the Blood also attended the baseball games.

Perhaps of all the events yet staged on the programme nothing was more exciting that put the sea of humanity on their feet. The regulation of the Association is that the Japanese should not roost for their teams or do anything that may put their guests into the air. Notwithstanding the game developed to a pitch that made the Japanese spectators, at least the Waseda supporters, forget themselves so that wholesale cheering began from the fifth.

The Waseda players, the representatives of Japan, had a hard time working their way from behind for the Philippine representatives scored in the first three games. It was only in the fifth that the Japanese found the Filipino twirler and started to knock him, tieing and leading from the eighth.

It is too difficult to choose between the two although Waseda led by seven hits to three of the Philippines. The chilly temperature towards nightfall must be said to have been one cause, if not patent, to the failings of our friends from the torrid in the latter part of the contest. Kishi, the Waseda southpaw, was there with quite a sort of goods and delivered them fine. The umpiring by Messrs. Fukuda, ex-Keio player and Ebizuka of Meiji at the plate and base respectively was impartial, if not perfect, but the slight errors which seemed to have been made to the losing parties from the decisions, were not those which would have turned the tide of victory.

The runs and hits by innings:

Waseda

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Runs	0	0	0	0	1	1	0	2	0	—4

THE TROUBLE IN RUSSIA

The Petrograd correspondent of the Tokyo "Asahi" sends a lengthy dispatch under date of May 5, giving in detail the aspect of the recent crisis. On April 9, begins the dispatch, the provisional government, pressed by the public opinion clamouring for the disclosure of its principle, published a solemn declaration stating that the object of Russia for entering upon the present war was for securing a lasting peace and not for any territorial aggrandizement or securing war indemnity or compensation. Upon the issue of the said declaration, the representative committees of the labourers and soldiers pressed the government to send a circular note of the declaration to the governments of the Entente powers, threatening to oppose the flotation of the war loan in case the government did not entertain their request. Thereon the provisional government sent on May 1 a circular note of the declaration to the Entente governments, but in doing so the government attached a provisory note stating that Russia would remain faithful and loyal in the observance of all treaties and agreements with the Entente powers. The public opinion, seeing the pledge that Russia would fight till the last and until a consummate victory is gained being mentioned in the said circular sent to the Entente powers, concluded that it was absolutely inconsistent to the previous declaration of the provisional government and the principle of non-territorial acquisition professed in the declaration. The pledge that Russia would fight till a final and complete victory is gained was frequently used by the ex-Emperor in his official documents, while M. Guchkoff, War Minister, and M. Milyukoff, Foreign Minister, both plebeian ministers of the provisional government, had declared that the present administrative body, which consisted of absolutely socialistic elements, had no Imperialistic idea nor was it going to return to the irresponsible policy of the former government. Meanwhile a majority of the Socialist party pressed the government to make public the secret pact concluded among the allied powers immediately, and in the afternoon of May 4 the troops of the Finland, Moscow, Pavlovsky and 180th regiments, accompanied by a number of armed mechanics and citizens, went to the Malinsky palace and demanded the resignation of the two ministers, M. Guchkoff and M. Milyukoff also demanding the publication of the secret pact. The procession carried flags with various inscriptions on them, among them being one inscribed with the letters "Down with Imperialistic government!" On the other hand, however, a section of the citizens of Petrograd manifests an absolute credit and belief in M. Milyukoff, Foreign Minister, and even a demonstration defending the cause of the provisional government was held in Novsky street. Both opposing parties held meetings with occasional collisions and clashes between the opponents throughout the day and evening. M. Milyukoff attended the meeting between the representatives of the provisional government and those of the soldiers and labourers' committee and explained that he had taken the one and same step with all the ministers of the cabinet. The committee of the representatives of soldiers and labourers has so far taken no definite step. The demonstration meetings and processions of the contending parties have since come to an end, but it cannot be said that the crisis of the provisionary government has passed away.

Another message wired by the "Asahi" correspondent reports in connection with the diplomatic policy of the provisional government and the note describing Russia's object in the war which was sent to the Entente governments by the provisional government on May 1 a gigantic demonstration against the government was held in Petrograd. Part of the public opinion and the opinion of the Radical party and Socialistic organs unanimously attack the policy of M. Milyukoff pointing to the pro-Imperialistic tendency of his principles and measures. M. Milyukoff had before this time expressed some opinions which were contradictory to those of his cabinet colleagues, on which account the troops of the regiments belonging to the revolutionary group had intended to arrest the foreign minister, and M. Guchkoff, Minister of War, who are both very unpopular among the Socialist members. The situation is very serious at present. The fact that there exists a strong feud between the provisional government and the committee of the labourers and soldiers representatives is well known despite the denials of the government. The feud has gradually increased and finally culminated in a collision between the two parties, which now threatens to lead to a civil strife eventually. So far, however, no serious collision has taken place thanks to the good efforts made by the popular leaders of the Socialist party, still there is an indication that the government may take recourse to a gambler's chance soon.

PRESENT POPULATION OF JAPAN PROPER

The Department of Home Affairs made public Monday the results of its investigation of the actual population of Japan at the end of 1915. The report states that the total population of Japan proper at the end of 1915 was 57,442,177. The distribution of the Japanese population is as follows:

PROPOSED REFORM IN RULING COLONIES

To co-ordinate the different administrations of the various colonial territories of Japan the Government is studying the practicability of creating a new colonial Department to be an independent department in the Cabinet executive organization, or a Bureau of Colonies to be attached to the Premier's Office, with a view to putting the colonial administrations under the control of one executive authority seated in Tokyo. On the initiative of Premier Count Terauchi and Home Minister Baron Goto, the Cabinet has at its meetings already discussed the various phases of the proposal and ordered a competent officer to take up an investigation of the matter. In view of Premier Terauchi's copious practical experiences of colonial administration while Governor-General of Chosen, and Baron Goto's intimate knowledge of colonial affairs while Civil Governor of Formosa, it is believed that the plan to be mapped out under their supervision will be a most complete one.

For the past few years the Government has been facing an increasing difficulty in properly carrying on the administration of the colonies as the colonial territories of the Empire gradually expanded. The difficulty in administering these new territories in the main arises from the division of administrative authority of the different colonies. Formosa and Karafuto are governed by the Department of Home Affairs and the leased territory of Kwang-tung by the Department of Foreign Affairs, while the governance of Chosen directly belongs to the Emperor. In each of these colonies, a Governor-General appointed by the respective authorities is stationed vested with an administrative power of his dominion. To cite one instance of the many difficulties caused by this complicated system of colonial administration a consul in South Manchuria is often obliged to submit to conflicting orders from both the Government-General of Kwangtung and the Department of Home Affairs.

The Government holds it is high time now to bring all these different administrative authorities under one systematic executive department in order to be able to govern the colonial territories with more efficiency by eradicating useless defects and flaws that are unavoidable under the present method. There was once established by the Government a Department of Colonial Affairs shortly after the war with China which soon went out of existence. But since that time the colonial territories have so expanded in number and area that the need of creating a central executive office empowered with administering all the colonies is now thought to be imperative.

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

London, May 3.—It is officially announced that the British have begun an attack on a wide front on the Hindenburg line. A number of strong positions have been captured.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Thursday morning communiqué says: "Heavy fighting is taking place along the whole front from the Hindenburg line, southward of the Sensee River, to the road from Acheville to Vimy. We are making progress and have already captured a number of strong positions."

The French, east of Mont Haut have captured an isolated post and made prisoners the entire garrison of 9 officers and 210 men.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 4.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports:—"There was fierce fighting all day long on Thursday, westward of Queant and to the north of Fresnoy and eastward of the village of Vimy. The enemy has again been employing large reserves of men and guns. He delivered repeated counter-attacks practically along the whole battle front. Our troops, despite the obstinate resistance of the morning, penetrated a sector of the Hindenburg line westward of Queant, maintaining themselves there all day long. Further progress was made in the neighbourhood of Cherisy astride the Arras-Cambrai road and on the right bank of the Scarpe.

"On the left battle front, we captured Fresnoy and positions southward and northward on a two-mile front. We also gained a footing in the enemy's trench system northward of Oppy and made progress at other points. Besides the enemy's severe losses in killed and wounded, several hundred were made prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 4.—The British have made important gains in the direction of Cherisy and Bullecourt, where the Australians were engaged in desperate street fighting. The Prussian Guards, garrisoning Fresnoy, were especially reinforced with a view to attacking Arleux, but the Canadians anticipated them and, surrounding Fresnoy, trapped part of the garrison, the remaining 208 surrendering. Though there were not many prisoners taken, it is estimated the Germans suffered heavier casualties than in any previous day's battle. The Canadians' success at Fresnoy breaks the Oppy-Mericourt line. The English troops below the Canadians took the whole of the main trenches to Oppy, where they fought most fiercely with two of the Prussian Guards reserve divisions. Machine-guns and trees were never used on such a scale as at Oppy Wood, which was a perfect rookery. Gunners hid behind trees on ladders nailed to the trunks when the British shrapnel came buzzing through. The battle for Bullecourt, where the Hindenburg line was broken, was a most amazing one. The British pushed to the far edge of the village and faced the German counter-attack. Simultaneously the Germans strongly established themselves inside the village. Hence four lines were engaged for two miles facing both ways. One soldier described the position as a "double sandwich" tangle being unravelled by the hardest hand to hand fighting. The intensity of the artillery fire may be imagined from the fact that every battery on the British and German whole front was firing continuously for 12 hours at high speed.

London, May 4.—The British have crossed the Hindenburg line toward Roincourt and are reported to have taken Bullecourt.

Fresnoy has been captured by the British troops.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 4.—Reuter's representative at British Headquarters in France, under date of May 3, telegraphs: "The new British thrust was made just before dawn. It is not permissible to discuss the scheme of attack. Suffice it to say that the objectives were several points of importance, the capture of which would improve our lines.

"As usual the infantry assault was preceded by a tornado of fire from weapons of all calibres between the 15-inch Howitzer and Stokes' trench-mortar. The creeping barrage worked with the precision of a chronometer.

"As the order 'now' was snapped forth simultaneously down miles of trenches the crouching figures arose and formed regular waves behind the 'crawling wall of palpitating crimson thunder.'"

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 5.—The French communiqué this afternoon reads: "The Germans have made a violent attack on the positions at Craonne which we captured on Friday. The assailants were unable to reach our lines at any point. We also repulsed a strong attack southeast of Berry-au-Bac. The enemy northwest of Rheims attempted to make violent infantry reactions after our attack on Friday. The struggle was particularly stubborn and our troops several times repulsed counter-attacks carried out with big effectives.

"During the evening, important German reserves were thrown into the battle, but our batteries smashed up the assault.

"In Champagne a violent fight began in the region of Mount Cornellet. We advanced east of the mountain. The enemy attacked here with two fresh divisions ,which we repulsed. We took a total of over 1,000 prisoners yesterday."

Evidence of the desperate fighting by the British on the Scarpe is furnished by the fact of the struggle for a windmill north of Gavrelle, which has changed hands eight times in two days. At present it is in possession of the British. Nine counter-attacks have been made on Bullecourt, but all have been repulsed. The ground at Roeux and Gavrelle is so churned up by explosives that it is most difficult to move infantry.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 5.—In a brilliantly conducted operation on Friday, the French captured the village of Craonne and several strong points east and north of that town. One hundred and fifty prisoners were taken.

North-west of Rheims the French launched an attack, carrying the first German lines on a front of four kilometres. Prisoners numbered 600.

Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig's Friday evening communiqué reports that upwards of 900 prisoners were captured on Thursday, including twenty-eight officers. To-day the British strengthened their position in the captured sector of the Hindenburg line and progressed eastward along the enemy's trench, killing many.

A dispatch from Reuter's headquarters says that the most intensive centre of the British fighting continues to be in the neighbourhood of Bullecourt; where the battle continues surging in and around the ruined village. Southeast of there, the British appear to not only have maintained their positions in the Hindenburg switch, but at night time the British bombers worked their way along an appreciable stretch.

It is doubtless owing to the great tactical significance of the British gains in this section that the Germans are driving such violent counter-attacks, in which they suffer prodigious losses.

London, May 5.—It is officially announced that the British have repulsed counter-attacks everywhere and have maintained their positions won yesterday on the Arras front.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 5.—After a powerful artillery preparation, two separate infantry operations were carried out by the French yesterday. The first took place in the morning northwest of Rheims. In this sector the French front approximately followed the railway and the Aisne Canal.

As there is no village on this line, the advance accomplished by the French troops cannot be definitely located and the communique contents itself with stating that the German first lines were captured along a front of about two and a quarter miles. The second attack was in the afternoon in the neighbourhood of Craonne village situated at the front and slopes of the spur to which it has given its name. It is of very great strategic importance; one of the most serious obstacles that the French troops have encountered. Even in 1814 when there were no machine-guns and artillery was nothing like it is now, Napoleon had the greatest difficulty in capturing this spur. On April 16th the French reached the outskirts of Craonne and even got into the first houses in the village. They were, however turned out and despite a series of fierce encounters were unable to retake the place, but yesterday the village was stormed in a magnificent attack by the French in spite of the great strength of the defences organised there by the Germans.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 6.—The Saturday evening Communiqué says:—

Our operations continue to develop in conjunction with the British.

We have been brilliantly successful northeast of Soissons and on the Chemin des Dames Plateau.

Digitized by INTERNET ARCHIVE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

We attacked a salient of the Hindenburg line south-east of Vauxaillon, and carried the German positions on a front of six kilometres, inflicting exceptional losses on the enemy.

We have captured all the plateau in the region of Chemin des Dames from east of Carmyen, Laon and Noix to east of Craonne, and reached the rocky region and ridges dominating the valley of Arbelta and the forest of Vaucler. Up to now the prisoners are 4,300 counted in addition to 1,000 yesterday.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 6.—A French communiqué, says "Le Matin," describes the French operations as proceeding in union with those of the British army. The actions now in progress on the banks of the Scarpe on the Aisne and in Champagne cannot be regarded independently. They are in close connection and directed and guided by one idea, that is to say the collapse of the German lines is to be brought about by the combined efforts of the French and British. Considered from this standpoint the latest events in the various sectors held by the allies appear in their true light.

The Hindenburg defences on Thursday yielded under the formidable pressure of the British and yesterday began to break before the victorious French troops north-east of Soissons and the so-called impregnable Hindenburg line fell into French hands along about six kilometres of front, southeast of Vauxaillon.

Further east the French were in the presence of formidable organized counter-slopes dominating the Ailette valley.

This part of the Craonne plateau was still to be conquered being one of the principal obstacles to a drive forward towards the plain.

Now these positions are carried and the whole Craonne plateau is held by the French.

As a result of this gain Ailette valley is under French fire everywhere, thus constituting a very precarious way of communication behind the German lines.

A mere glance at the map shows the menace which such successes in close touch with one another are bringing to bear on the whole of the lines where the Germans intended to hold the French for many long weeks if not for months.

Paris, May 7.—During a brilliant advance along the Soissons to Naon road, the French troops have captured 4,000 more prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 7.—North of Soissons the Germans, at night time, delivered a large number of heavy counter-attacks against the positions the French had captured on Saturday. Everywhere the enemy's efforts were smashed up. The French entirely maintained their gains. The recent operations rendered the French masters of the crest on which Chemin-des-Dames runs over a front of 30 kilometres. Up to the present 5,800 prisoners have been taken and seven guns captured.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 7.—The French communiqué on Sunday night says: "The night was marked by fresh German reactions in the region north-east of Soissons and on Chemin-des-Dames, where we have repulsed four new divisions. Very violent counter-attacks, preceded by an intense bombardment, were launched against our positions. The desperate fighting ended in favour of our troops. We increased the number of our prisoners to over 8,200, making a total of 29,000 since April 16."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 7.—The French communiqué on Sunday evening reads: "North-west of Soissons we completed yesterday's successes and extended the conquered ground, capturing by local operations several important strong points north of Laffaux and north of Brayen-en-Laoyounais. There has been a furious artillery duel in the whole region of Chemin-des-Dames, where the Germans again launched strong counter-attacks. Everywhere, we maintained our gains and repulsed the enemy with heavy losses. Hitherto, 6,100. prisoners have been counted. One Army Corps took 1,800 prisoners and on a front of four kilometres captured almost the whole of the Siegfried line."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 8.—There is considerable artillery activity between the Somme and Oise. The enemy has counterattacked east of Vauxaillon and on Chemin-des-Dames Our fire has smashed all German attempts on Courdemain and carried the enemy's centre of resistance north of Vauxclere plateau, taking ninety prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 8.—A French Monday evening communiqué says: During the day the enemy has not renewed the attempts north of Lafaux-mill and against Chemin-des-Damen. Artillery duel continued furiously in the direction of Burtebise and Craonne sector, where the troops consolidated their positions. We appreciably extended our positions south of Sapigneul, taking one hundred prisoners.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT

Petrograd, May 3.—On the night of April 17, the enemy infantry, on the Rumanian front, under support of artillery fire, attacked a height 15 kilometres south-west of Okna in the possession of the Russian troops. The attack was repulsed and the enemy thrown back into his trenches.

The Turks have made weak attempts to assume the offensive west of Giumish-han but were easily repulsed by our fire. In the Hanikyn disection, we seized an island on the Diala River. Several Turkish attacks south-west of Giumish-han and north-west of Ognat were repulsed.

South-west of Van, near Armird a numerous party of Kurds pressed upon one of our advanced positions. Cavalry, however, arrived in time to save the situation and the front was re-established. The attacks of the Kurds and other natives have become more frequent of late to the rear of our positions.

On the western front, a German aeroplane was brought to earth by our guns east of Gokiez. The machine caught fire and had to descend, the crew being taken prisoner.

In the Rogatin direction the enemy's artillery opened a strong fire against our positions.

Near the Bosphorus, a sailing vessel of about 1,000 tons and a steam-tug were sunk by a Russian submarine. The crews of these two vessels took refuge on shore. The submarine came under the fire of a coast battery, but some well-directed shells silenced it.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 5.—Western Front. Near Kovel, in the region of Kuhazy, the enemy opened an intense fire against the Russian trenches. In the region of Kabarevey the enemy blew up a subterranean gallery between the Russian and German wire entanglements causing no damage to the Russian trenches. Northwest of Slabentin the Russian fire destroyed the German mining-works.

Roumanian Front. In the region of Volokshany, 20 miles northwest of Focsani, Russian partisans, having cut the German wired entanglements entered the enemy's trenches, and dislodged the Germans from their trenches, driving them back as far as Kaliman. German reserves tried then to surround the Russians, but by a skilful bayonet charge the latter forced their way back and safely returned to their positions.

Caucasus Front. East of Turkum the Russian fire caused the fall of an enemy's aeroplane which burst in the enemy positions. Near Zaturcy the Russians brought down another aeroplane which fell between the Russian and German wired entanglements.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, . May 6.—Western Front Firing and reconnoissances continue. The Russian heavy artillery shelled the station Povursk east of Kovel, causing a series of strong explosions probably of munition stores. At several sections of the front the enemy was exclusively using explosive bullets.

Rumanian Front. The enemy assumed the offensive in the Kozdy Vasrgolsk direction, but his columns were driven back to their trenches by the fire of the Russian artillery.

Caucasus Front. The Russian troops crossed to the right bank of the Diala near Meidan attacking the Turks unawares. Taking prisoners 23 askers they returned without losses. Owing to strategical considerations, the Russian troops in the Ognat and the Mush regions have been transferred to new positions. Mush has been seized by the Turks.

ON THE ITARIAN FRONT

Rome, May 1.—The Italian communiqué to-day announces:—

"During the day of the 30th of April, the artillery activity was intermittent on the whole front. It was heavy in the valley of Eigidio and the northern edge of the Carso. Reconnaissances on both sides resulted in patrol encounters. Enemy seaplane raids did some damage on the lower Isonzo."

Rome, May 1.—The Italian communiqué to-day says:

"In Astico basin on April 30th lively artillery actions were reported. Our fire caused a big explosion on the slopes of Mount Seluggio while the enemy hit a medical post, notwithstanding the fact that it bore the Geneva Cross visibly displayed. On the Carnid front artillery duels took place from the upper Dagano to the head of the Chiarso Torrent. In the Gorizia area the hostile artillery which has lately been active was much less aggressive yesterday. On the Carso after a violent bombardment enemy detachments attacked our advanced lines, but were repulsed with considerable loss. During the night four hostile aeroplanes bombed Gorizia without causing casualties or doing any damage."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE.

Rome, May 2.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:—The artillery was particularly active yesterday on the Asiago plateau and the Carso. The enemy attempt to penetrate our lines on the slopes of the Ledro valley and northwest of Toloino, in the neighbourhood of Zagora and in the middle Isonzo, was promptly repulsed.

There has been considerable aerial activity on both sides.

Last night two of our aeroplanes bombed the railway station at Oplima and returned safely to the base.

Rome, May 3.—The Italian communique says: "The usual artillery actions have occurred on the whole front and somewhat greater activity on the part of our patrols. Last night the enemy aviators bombed establishments and dwellings at Condigaro. Some damage was done but there was no loss of life. One of our air squadrons rebombarded the military works at Opcina and Prosecco and returned safely."

Rome, May 4.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"On the Trentino front our artillery has been particularly active on Mount Pasubio and in the Astico and Travignolo valleys. In some places the enemy used gas shells. Yesterday night the Italian aeroplane squadron bombed the railway centre near Sesena. The hostile aircraft bombed Fogliano and Sagrado causing damage.

"In the valley of Comonica an enemy detachment broke into one of our advanced posts at Tonable pass. Notwithstanding violent barrage fire on the part of the enemy our reinforcements at once completely reoccupied the position. The reconnaissance patrols were active along the front and sharp encounters took place east of Tierny on the north-west slopes of Mount Maio, in the Posina valley. At West Samone, in the Del Lago valley on Mount Romoon, on the upper Isonzo, and especially on the heights east of Gorizia and on the Carso the enemy suffered considerable loss and we took prisoners. During the night the enemy aeroplanes dropped bombs on the hamlets on the lower Isonzo causing slight damage. In reply two of our seaplanes bombed the enemy's aeroplane base near Trieste, both returned safely."

HOLLWEG TO SPEAK PLAINER

Copenhagen, May 6.—The Vice-Chancellor Helfferich, has announced that Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg will make plainer the declaration of Germany's peace terms within a fortnight.

MR. JOHN BUCHAN'S WEEKLY REPORT

London, May 6.—During the last week the main interest was still confined to the Western Front, but except for the operations to the north of the Scarpe the fighting has been chiefly of the nature of important local operations.

The superiority of the Allies continues to be maintained, as the enemy learns to his cost by the ceaseless and methodical bombardment to which he is subjected night and day.

The important heights captured in the recent fighting completely dominate the present German positions which lie in an open plain exposed to the British artillery fire, and certainly in the opening four weeks of the spring offensive the fighting initiative was definitely wrested from the German armies.

The German wireless recently quoted approvingly the statement of a neutral military critic who wrote: "Hindenburg is a man of surprises." It would be interesting to know, could the truth be published in Germany, how the German public has been deluded by its press into believing that the German retirement on the Somme was a brilliant exhibition of military genius and an operation baffling to the Allies' plans for a spring offensive. The German public would receive with "surprise" the news that during April, besides suffering some of the heaviest casualties of the whole war and yielding many square miles of French territory, the Germans lost to the Allied armies in the west over forty thousand prisoners, four hundred and thirty-seven guns, over twelve hundred machine-guns, and trench mortars; likewise a large number of guns, howitzers, mortars and machine-guns destroyed by the artillery.

That Hindenburg still remains the military idol of the German people is due either to the skill of the German censorship in keeping from the people all news likely to acquaint them with the severe reverses of the German armies during April or possibly to the inherent German quality of infinite stupidity. Only "infinite stupidity" could account for the persistence, regardless of stubborn facts and figures, with which the German Imperial staff continues to issue Communiques hoping to deceiving neutrals and comforting the German people with the illusion of successful strategy.

Similarly, after the Marne, the German Communiques published elaborate details of attacks by the French and British troops without mentioning the heavy unsuccessful counter attacks of the German infantry or the serious losses they suffered.

It is significant that even the German Communiques now claim no advantage beyond a purely negative on which makes it difficult for readers of ordinary intelligence to understand how the German higher command can reconcile a purely passive defensive with the extravagant claims of having retained the fighting initiative.

No policy could best suit the Allies than the German plan of exhausting their reserve Divisions on the West in persistent and costly counter-attacks. During the last three weeks of April employed by the Germans to stem the Franco-British offensive sixteen Divisions have already been compelled to withdraw from the line for reorganization owing to losses. The reckless use of them and the punishment inflicted on the German strategic reserve in April has been, in the Allies' view, one of the most satisfactory features of the fighting since the opening of the Spring offensive.

TURKS TAKEN BY SURPRISE BY GENERAL MAUDE'S TROOPS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—Lieutenant-General Sir Stanley Maude reports: "On Monday we attacked the thirteenth Turkish Army Corps, which was strongly entrenched on both banks of the Shatt-el-Adhaim River. We took the enemy by surprise, and rapidly and irresistibly stormed the position. We drove the enemy back into the Jebel-Hamrim hills, taking 359 prisoners."

PIRATES WEEKLY TOLL

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—The Admiralty has issued the following statement: "The arrivals during the week were 2716 and the sailings 2690. Thirty-eight vessels over 1600 tons were sunk, and 13 under that tonnage. Twenty-four vessels were unsuccessfully attacked. Eight fishing vessels were sunk."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, May 3.—The Italian Naval communiqué reads: "For the week ending April 29, ships to the number of 627 arrived at Italian ports, while the sailings were 521. Three Italian steamers and seven sailing vessels were sunk. One steamer was unsuccessfully attacked."

S.S. GENA SUNK BY SEA-PLANE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—The British steamer Gena, 2784 tons built in 1893 and owned by Thos. Turnbull and Son Shipping Co., was sunk on Tuesday by a torpedo discharged from a German seaplane off Aldeburg, a small sea-port of Suffolk. The Admiralty announces that no lives were lost. The Gena's gun-fire brought down another sea-plane associated in the attack, and the occupants were made prisoners.

BRITISH TRANSPORT SUNK

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—The Admiralty has announced that the British transport Arcadian a 8,939 ton vessel built in 1899, was torpedoed April 15 while carrying troops in the Mediterranean. The vessel sank in five minutes. Two hundred and seventy-nine are missing. It is presumed they have been drowned.

FRENCH WAR MINISTRY HAS NEW CHIEF OF STAFF

Paris, May 3.—Since the 31st of July, 1915, the functions of the General Staff have been limited to questions relating more especially to the organizaton and use of the national resources outside the armies' zone. General Petain's appointment as Chief of Staff of the War Ministry was unanimously decided by the Government in complete agreement with General Nivelle. It will ensure more efficaciously than ever the direction of the war through the co-operation of this staff whose scope is extended in the widest way to investigating all problems connected with the French operations and their coordination with those of the Allies. The Generalissimo still retains the conception, direction and realization of the military operations.

The establishment of the post of Chief of the General Staff will have as an effect the reinforcing of the authority of the Generalissimo's decisions. The General Staff work is entrusted to an able technical council whose well-based opinion will enable the Government to decide after exhaustive examination on timely initiatives taking into account the military, economical, financial and political situation in all countries. A permanent link is thus established between the Cabinet to whom the general direction of the war belongs and the command entrusted with the conduct of a battle.

General Petain, the new Chief of the Staff, at the War Ministry is sixty one years of age. He reached the rank of Colonel in 1910 and at the beginning of the war was placed in command of an infantry brigade. He was promoted to Major-General on April 20th, 1915 and in the next month his army corps very nearly succeeded in breaking through the German front near Arras. He also took part in the Champagne offensive of September 1915. On February 26th, 1916, five days after the beginning of the great German attack, he was placed at the head of the troops defending Verdun.

At this critical period, when the German commanders were ruthlessly sacrificing their men in the attempt to overcome the French defence and take Verdun, General Petain exercised the command with remarkable skill and eventually frustrated the enemy's plan so that his name will always be prominently associated with the heroic defence of Verdun.

Since the 2nd of April, 1916 General Petain has commanded the central group of armies. As a man the General is a very resolute and cool soldier. He has a very independent character and speaks out frankly. He thinks a leader should give his men an example of courage. General Petain might be reproached with taking too many risks. Very modest he wears a uniform which is almost as plain as that of a common soldier.

FRENCH SHIPPING RETURNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 5.—In the week ending April 29, 986 ships above 100 tons arrived in French ports and 995 departed. One vessel over 1,600 tons was sunk and five under that tonnage were submarined or mined. Eight boats were unsuccessfully attacked.

THE AMERICAN ARMY BILL

[OFFICIAL TO AMERICAN EMBASSY]

Tokyo, May 2.—The administration's bill providing for the raising of a great American army on the night of April 29th, passed both House and Senate by overwhelming majorities clearly indicating the determination of the people of the United States as represented by Congress to devote every resource of man power to achieve victory in this great conflict.

The measure just passed provides for increasing the regular army to 287,000 men, the National Guard to 625,000. It further adopts for the United States the theory and system of compulsory service constituting for America a revolutionary change. The act provides a system of selective draft or conscription whereby men of given classifications may be taken by the Government. The President is authorized to take 500,000 at once and 400,000 later in addition to Army and National Guard increases. In all, this legislation provides an army of approximately 2,000,000 men to be raised during the first year following the passage of the law.

All this was accomplished within the brief period intervening since the actual declaration of a state of war against the German Government. The vote in the Senate was 81 to 8, and in the House 397 to 24. The measure was drafted by the War Department, which is prepared immediately to put it into operation.

The British and French Missions now in the United States have been received with the utmost enthusiasm and are engaged with the Government in consultations concerning the most advantageous use of America's resources, military, financial and economic.

The Congress of the United States has already authorized the expenditure of seven billions of dollars and a bond issue is about to be made. Concerning this the Secretary of the Treasury has issued the following statement:

> Secretary McAdoo decided that the great bond issued which he will soon begin offering to the public will be known as "Liberty Loan of 1917." The money to be raised by this loan is for the purpose of waging war against autocracy. It is to supply the sinews of battle in the interest of free government. It is peculiarly appropriate that as the negotiation of this loan will constitute the first great step of the United States in the prosecution of the war, it should be issued in the name of freedom.

BALFOUR AND WILSON SPEAK

Washington, May 6.—Mr. Arthur Balfour, to-day addressed Congress and was received with tremendous applause. He predicted the defeat of Germany's selfish designs for the moral and material mastery of the world. President Wilson was present and personally congratulated the speaker.

BRITAIN'S BUDGET UP IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—It is estimated that the expenditure for the current year, according to Mr. Bonar Law, who introduced the Budget into the House of Commons yesterday, will amount to £2,290,381,000. The estimated revenue is £638,600,000, leaving a sum of £1,651,781,000 to be covered by loan.

In concluding his speech, Mr. Bonar Law declared that "the want of money will not prevent us from winning victory, for we can hold out longer than the enemy."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 3.—A preliminary statement, explanatory of the Budget, shows that the receipts were $573,428,000, exceeding the estimate by £71,153,000. The principal increase over the estimates was in the income tax, showing £10,000,000 Excess profits Duty; £5,292,000 from Estate Duties; £1,232,000 from Stamps; £878,000 Telegraphs; £100,000 Crown Lands; £100,000 miscellaneous. The £13,000,000 decrease comprises Postal Revenue £1,650,000; Telephones £450,000; Customs £439,000; Excise £8,620,000. The expenditure amounted to £2,198,113,000.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 2.—Speaking on the budget in the House of Commons to-day, Mr. A. Bonar Law stated that the estimate on England's advances to her allies and the dominions had been exceeded by 100,000,000 pounds sterling. The loans to the Allies last year, he said, amounted to 540 millions and to the dominions 54 millions. Since the beginning of the war, the advances to Britain's allies and her dominions have been 828 and 142 millions respectively.

Mr. Bonar Law said the national debt was now 3,854 millions of pounds, less those loans. He declared that a large amount of the expenditures had been met from revenue and added that no other belligerent could show such satisfactory figures.

He said that the last war loan including treasury bills, had amounted to £966,048,000. He proposed no new taxes; only an addition to the entertainment tax, which yielded £3,000,000 last year. The additional duty will yield a further million and a half.

The tobacco tax will be increased again by one shilling, ten pence a pound, producing £6,000,000. This will make the excess profits on the duty eighty instead of sixty per cent. An additional yield of £20,000,000 is estimated for this year.

BRITISH PREMIER'S SPEECH AT GUILDHALL

London, May 2.—Mr. Lloyd George made a speech at the Guildhall on April 27 before an enthusiastic audience. The British Premier first dwelling on the German submarine warfare stated: "Germany herself little expected at first such effectiveness of the submarine as this weapon is showing now, and upon her recognition of its usefulness she came to declare her diabolical U-boat campaign. It, however, exhausted America's patience and has brought about her declaration of war, so that the result is not a loss to us. The gravity of the situation due to the German submarine warfare is not to be overlooked by our nation at large, but the best brains in our empire are zealously trying to solve these difficulties and it is evident that Germany's efforts are destined to be neutralized in the long run."

Mr. Lloyd George then touched upon the food supply question, stating: "I do not think the war will continue throughout 1918, but the government are making full preparations for its continuation in order to provide against eventualities. Plans have been formed and the authorities are striving to increase the food supply. Land covering one million acres has been newly cultivated by our efforts for the past few months and it can supply the nation with foodstuffs amounting to 2 million tons. We reflect with regret that had the government taken up this task one year and a half ago the nation would not have been confronted with any food troubles at the present juncture. The government, economising 1,500,000 tons of ships' space by means of the veto on unnecessary imports last year, have formed a plan to economise the carrying capacity of merchantships by 6 million tons since January this year, and we are confident of the feasibility of economising 10 million tons of space a year without causing any menace to important industries. Ten millon tons of bottoms, it must be noted, are really equal to the total quantity of wheat imported into our kingdom a year.

"The shipbuilding capacity in Great Britain has been trebled, nay quadrupled since January this year. Moreover the new ministry has created the Board of Shipping under which control our shipping is systematically placed now; lines have been re-adjusted also, with the consequent remarkable development of our marine transportation capacity if the loss of steamers through German submarines does not decrease ostentatiously. It is therefore anticipated that July will witness more tons of imports than that in March last, the record month for our imports."

The Premier referring to party politics emphatically stated that the formation of the new coalition cabinet in Great Britain representing five different political lines and which is decidedly against the old traditions was one of the greatest revolution of the war, and denounced anachronistic policies and politics, declaring that the administration after the war should be free from them. The future of Great Britain was the next theme to be touched upon. "In the past," stated the Premier, "our Empire was in a sort of a world of phantasms, but now emerging therefrom she is actively working in actuality. How those one million troops from our Dominions have altered the phase of the war! The relations between the United Kingdom and the Dominions are not allowed to be ambiguous now; either separation or unity must be chosen. Our Empire is gifted with abundant natural resources still undeveloped and the war has taught us the necessity of developing natural resources. If our statesmen and politicians had realized this importance 50 years ago, the population in our Dominions would have been as big as twice its present size. The statesmen and politicians in Great Britain to-day, therefore, should endeavour to bring the Kingdom and her Dominions overseas into a closer bond of union, and the basis of proper industries should be born after unreserved consultation between the two. Now is not the time for discussing the new Constitution of our Empire and the convokation of the Imperial war council is intended only to pave the way therefor."

In conclusion Mr. Lloyd George made the following bold statement on the future of India. "India, utterly contrary to the expectation of Germany, has manifested her loyalty and integrity to our King, and for her meritorious services in the war India is entitled to demand the same rights as those the English people enjoy. The solution of these questions of importance waits, however, the bold policies of politicians for whom irresoluteness and hesitation are prohibited things. Our politicians who have showed such courage in solving important problems during the war should manifest their daring courage in the solution of these important questions."—"Nichinichi."

UNCLE SAM'S LIBERTY LOAN MEETING WITH MUCH SUPPORT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, May 7.—In response to the Liberty Loan, there is a regular deluge of gold pouring in. Subscriptions are being received at such a rate that the telegraph lines threaten to be blocked. The Treasury is receiving applications hourly for twenty million dollars worth of shares.

[OFFICIAL TO U.S. EMBASSY]

The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States announced that the first issue of the "Liberty Loan of 1917" would be two billion dollars at 3½%. Yesterday the first subscriptions were received. The Treasury was overwhelmed. Subscriptions came in at the rate of nearly twenty million dollars an hour, totalling nearly one hundred and thirty-nine million for the business day. These subscriptions came in response to twenty-seven thousand telegrams from the Secretary of the Treasury to banks, trust companies, et cetera. Yesterday's replies represented only two per cent. of those addressed. Subscriptions came from every corner of the country. The first day is regarded as a huge success, indicating the determination of the whole people victoriously to finish the conflict.

WASHINGTON WANTS NO MORE SPIES WORKING DESIGNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, May 5.—The House of Representatives has finally passed the espionage bill by a vote of 260 to 105, including a modified censorship clause. The President may prohibit the publication of news whenever the situation demands, but before penalties become effective it is necessary to show that the prohibited information published was of value to the enemy.

HUGE APPROPRIATION FOR AMERICAN NAVY

New York, May 8.—The Associated Press reports from Washington that Congress will be asked to appropriate one billion dollars for building a great American fleet to overcome the German submarine menace. The plan contemplates the cancellation of existing private contracts with steel mills except those with railroads when strictly necessary, and the payment of damages in some cases to parties whose contracts are cancelled.

It is estimated that five million tons of steel and wooden vessels will be constructed by the United States in next two years.

SECRETARY LANE'S WARNING

Washington, May 2.—Secretary of the Interior Lane to-day told a number of state governors conferring here in the National Defence Council that the government had heard that 400,000 tons of shipping had been sunk by submarines last week. He said the United States must build ships as quickly as possible and bend all resources for a war of two or three years at least.

"If we don't want to fight the war on the other side of the Atlantic," he declared, "we shall have to fight it on this side."

APPALLING SICKNESS RIFE IN INDUSTRIAL BELGIUM

London, May 5.—Reuter's News Agency is informed by a Belgian physician who has just reached London that the state of the public health in some industrial centres in Belgium is appalling. He declares the vitality of the half-starved workmen has become so impaired that large numbers are absolutely unable to combat diseases like pneumonia, typhoid or even influenza of average intensity.

This organic weakness is accompanied by all the signs of a state of pre-tuberculosis which must make an indelible impression for life among the workmen in the region inhabited by Reuter's informant. Sickness increased at the following rates: In 1914 162 per 1000; 1915, 179; 1916, 275. This rate suddenly increased during January and February 1917 to 378 per 1000.

In 1916 the death-rate was 0.81 per cent.; but increased to 3.05 per cent. in January and February 1917. Of 640 labourers in the same region 614 weighed below standard. A large number of these people resemble haggard and wornout old men. The amount of illness is out of all proportion to the normal conditions.

PETROGRAD IN THROES OF POLITICAL CRISIS

Petrograd, May 3.—M. Milyukov, the Foreign Minister, has addressed a Note to the Russian representatives abroad, and enclosed a copy of the manifesto issued by the Provisional Government on April 9, containing the views of free Russia on the issues of war.

The Note mentions the efforts of the Central Powers to sow discord between the Allies by the propagation of the rumour that it is the intention of Russia to conclude a separate peace. The text of the manifesto refutes such intention and announces the Government's high principles which thoroughly agree with the lofty ideas proclaimed by eminent allied statesmen, and notably by the "President of our recent ally of the Republic across the Atlantic."

"The Government of the old Russian régime was certainly incapable of understanding or appreciating the liberative character of the war of liberation of an oppressed nation. But, the freed Russia speaks the language understood by modern democracies and hastens to add her voice to the Allies. The declaration of the Provisional Government does not offer the slightest pretext to deduce that the foundering of the old régime entailed the diminishing rôle of Russia in the strife. On the contrary, the popular desire to conduct the war to a decisive victory is more accentuated by the sense of responsibility, universally felt, to expel the enemy who invaded the territory of the Fatherland."

The manifesto lays stress on the fact that the Provisional Government will safe-guard the rights won by Russia, while rigidly respecting all obligations to the Allies, certain that the victorious issue of the war will bring about the creation on a solid basis of a lasting peace; certain that the allied democracies, animated by identical tendencies, will find means to obtain guarantees and sanctions necessary to prevent a future recurrence of such bloody conflicts.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 5.—The executive council of the workmen's and soldiers' delegates, by a vote of 34 to 19, to-day accepted as satisfactory the explanation by the Provisional Government of the Milyukov note. The council of delegates, consisting of 2,500 members, passed a vote of confidence in the Provisional Government by a majority of thirty-five.

The Duma will meet May 5 for the first time since the revolution.

Petrograd, May 5.—The note of the Provisional Government, addressed abroad in connection with the declaration of Russia's war aims aroused hostile manifestations in the capital. The executive committee of soldiers' and workmen's delegates discussed the note at a special meeting and decided to ask the Provisional Government what motives induced it to send such a note.

In the afternoon three regiments came to the Bannir's Mary Palace demanding the resignation of Foreign Minister Milyukov. The members of the executive committee representing the delegates explained to the troops that the note is at present under discussion by the council, which does not intend to demand the resignation of the Provisional Government and urged the soldiers to trust that their delegates would take no steps without orders. In perfect order, the soldiers returned to the barracks.

In the evening numerous manifestations took place in favour of the government. A joint sitting of delegates from the council and the Provisional Government was held. It is expected that a mutual understanding will be reached.

Owing to doubts which arose in connection with the interpretation of Foreign Minister Milyukov's note which accompanied the declaration of Russia's war aims, the Provisional Government has published the following explanatory note:

The first note of the Foreign Minister was subjected to careful and lengthy deliberation by the Provisional Government. The text was accepted unanimously. The text of the second note concerning definite victory has in view the achievement of the aims announced in the government's declaration April 9, as follows:

"Free Russia wants no domination over other people or the usurpation of their national property: not the conquest of foreign territory, but the establishment of a durable peace on the basis of the rights of all nations to determine their own destiny. Russia does not seek to increase its power at the expense of other countries or to subjugate or humiliate other nations.

"In the name of the supreme principles of justice, it broke the chains binding Poland, but the Russian people will never allow their country to emerge from this great struggle humiliated or maimed in her vital forces. The government intends that the terms, sanctions and guarantees of a durable peace be understood as a reduction in armed force and the establishment of international tribunals, etc."

This note was transferred to the representatives of all the Allied countries.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 5.—Foreign Minister Milyukov transmitted to the Allied Governments the recent manifesto to the Russians explaining the objects of the war. He laid stress on the point that these entirely coincide with the principles enunciated by eminent Allied Statesmen, including President Wilson. He stated that the new Russia was determined to end the war victoriously. The note proclaimed Russia's resolve not to conclude a separate peace and her determination to secure decisive victory.

Published in Petrograd Thursday, the note evoked strong manifestations for and against the government. The Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates proposed joining the session of the Provisional Government which opened at 10 o'clock Thursday night.

Foreign Minister Milyukov came to the balcony during the suspension of the sitting and addressed the crowd. He declared that Russia must never consent to a separate peace and that nobody must be entitled to charge Russia with betraying her Allies. Saying that the Provisional Government was unable to move without the confidence of the people, he appealed to the citizens to place their trust in the new régime. His speech was received with prolonged cheers.

Petrograd, May 7.—Yesterday perfect order and calm reigned in the capital. No meeting took place in the streets. In the evening a large meeting was held in memory of a member of the third Duma, Kalauf at the Exchange building. Among the orators were Ministers Nekvasoff, Schingarff and Milyukov, who were warmly greeted by the audience.

Minister Milyukov said that he would accept the greetings as addressed not only to himself but to all the Provisional Government. He must state that this greeting shows the triumph of the ruling state spirit of the people over anarchy and marks the full appreciation of civil duty. It is a victory of clear mind over darkness and ignorance.

According to news received the events in the capital have roused no corresponding movements in the provinces.

TROUBLE IN PETROGRAD WITH LENINIST PACIFISTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 6.—There was another collision on Friday evening between the soldiers and Leninist pacifist workmen. Three thousand of the latter were marching in procession headed by 800 men armed with rifles, revolvers and swords and carrying banners inscribed with the words "Down with the Government;" "Down with the War Party." Soldiers intervened and some of the Leninists fired on them. The executive of the workmen's and soldiers' delegates, in consequence of the disorders, have forbidden meetings and demonstrations.

Petrograd, May 7.—It is announced that the Duma will be convoked immediately in extraordinary session.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 7.—The general assembly of the council of workmen's and soldiers' delegates by an overwhelming majority has decided to assist in raising the Liberty Loan.

LABOUR DAY IN PETROGRAD

Petrograd, May 2.—(dalayed in transmission)—Beginning at 9 o'clock on the morning of May 1, celebrated as a national labour holiday, a long and imposing procession of workmen, soldiers and children carrying thousands of red banners, and the bands playing the Marseillaise, marched from different points in the capital to the principal large squares, where meetings were held all day.

All traffic was suspended. Splendid organization and perfect order were maintained. Innumerable orators spoke from improvised tribunes. The general watchwords welcomed the union of the proletariat of all the world in a revival of international socialism. Similar news was announced in a number of the provincial papers.

Newspapers publish letters addressed to the Provisional Government and the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates by a group of democratic members of the English Parliament, expressing admiration of the Russian revolution.

Minister of War Guchkoff has issued an order establishing for naval officers the same uniform as is worn in the other European navies.

GERMAN MONARCH HAS A NARROW ESCAPE

New York, May 8.—A dispatch from Rome states that Kaiser Wilhelm narrowly escaped an assassin's bullet when motoring in Berlin. A man not yet identified fired three shots, two striking the car and one going wild. The man has been arrested.

WHAT GERMANY WANTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich, May 7.—A pamphlet is circulating through the German army, which has the approval of General Ludendorff. It demands that the Central Powers shall annex Belgium, northern France, Courland, Poland, Serbia Montenegro and Egypt. It also recommends the formation of a Central African Empire in order to exploit the coal, india-rubber and iron resources. The pamphlet asserts that the Entente must be deprived of two-thirds of their natural riches.

The "Arbeit Zeitung" denounces "these criminal projects" because they involve Germany.

CHANGING GERMANY'S CONSTITUTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, May 6.—A message from Berlin says the Constitution Committee of the Reichstag adopted the proposal of the Central National Liberal Progressives altering the Constitution by declaring that the decrees of the Kaiser were invalid unless countersigned by the Chancellor, who was thus responsible to the Reichstag.

BAVARIAN MINISTER PAINTS POOR PICTURE

Zurich, May 6.—Speaking at Munich, the Bavarian Minister Dreteich admitted that the food situation was very serious. He said that the people must be prepared to live on more vegetables. He said that the next few weeks would decide the fate of Germany.

STRIKES RIFE IN GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, May 5.—Persons returning from Germany report that serious riots have recently occurred at several places. A crowd of 1,000 people pillaged the shops at Mainz and smashed the windows. The troops fired on the mob, killing 8 and arresting 500. The workers in the bomb factory at Maunheim went on strike for several days until assured that the bread rations would be increased.

BERLIN DENIES BREAK WITH CHILI

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 4.—Amsterdam learns from a Berlin message that the Chilian Minister has announced the rupture of relations between Chili and Germany. He has demanded his passports.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, May 5.—A Berlin telegram denies that there has been a rupture between Germany and Chile.

CHINESE REPUBLIC AND WAR ON GERMANY

Peking, May 4.—Speaking at a reception yesterday attended by four hundred members of parliament the Premier said some people disapprove of the war policy of the Cabinet because of fear of separate peace between Russia and Germany. It is true the Russian Socialists have been working with the German Socialists for an early conclusion of hostilities but the Russian Socialists insist there can be no separate peace until the German imperial government is overthrown. The Premier pointed out the failure of the German submarine campaign and the impossibility of a German victory. He said more than ten powers are now at war with the Central Powers.

"What," he said, "are they fighting for? The maintenance of international law. The restoration of the rights of humanity. In this noble work we cannot but join them. In doing so we shall be able to win a place among the world powers as an international factor. Those who love their country must endorse the government's war policy. Having ruptured with German we must go on. If we refrain from taking the third step we shall be left outside the peace conference. We have already offended Germany by severing relations. We cannot make her feel more friendly toward us by remaining inactive now; therefore I am in favour of war." In conclusion the Premier appealed to parliament for unqualified support.

Peking, May 4.—The Tuchuns entertained the members of Parliament at a reception this afternoon with the object of obtaining the latter's support for the war policy. So many reports are in circulation concerning the attitude of the various parties, that it is difficult at present to forecast how the war resolution will be received by parliament. It is generally considered in well-informed circles that the resolution will safely pass the House of Representatives but in the Senate where the Kuomintang is strong, it is regarded as doubtful. The submission of the question, therefore, has been postponed until the government feels sure of approval of parliament.

China's war resolution against Germany which has been scheduled to be introduced in Parliament on Monday will not come up for the vote until some days later owing to the sudden revival of a strong opposition in and out of Parliament which was thought to have been smothered, indicate the reports received at official quarters up to yesterday. Probably the opposition at this stage of the Peking Government's war programme may be the last flash of a flickering light; nevertheless it looks like something almost formidable.

The opposition leaders, according to the above source of information, surprised at the easiness and rapidity with which the war measures of the Tuan Government threatened to be realized, began to mobilize their followers not only in the Capital but also in the South to offer a renewed—possibly the last—resistance against allowing the Government to take its bellicose course. The leading newspapers in Shanghai are publishing numerous views and opinions of such leaders of the South as Dr. Sun Yet-sen, Mr. Tang Shao-i, Mr. Sun Hung-yi, and others. These leaders, especially Mr. Ma Chung-wu, M.P., who is reported to be the most conspicuous figure in the present fresh opposition, deplore the Tuan Cabinet's programme of declaring war on Germany as being an attempt under the guise of such ostentation to entrench itself in an indomitable position. They state the Government will, in order to materialize its purpose, proclaim martial law no sooner than it has declared hostilities against Germany, thus converting the whole country into a veritable military camp and facilitating the introduction of militarism into China. Militarism and democracy are incompatible. Democracy for which the people have sacrificed their lives and treasure in the series of revolutions is in danger of being quashed, they contend. This popular argument is said to be gaining ground and to have altered the trend of the situation sufficiently to frustrate the introduction of the war resolution in Parliament on Monday.

Premier Tuan Chi-jui, facing this not altogether unexpected turn of affairs on the eve of realization of his scheme, is reported to be losing no time in coping successfully with the new situation. He quickly dispatched one of the influential officials of the Government, Mr. Wang Ch'ung-hui, to Shanghai, entrusting him with the task of placating the anti-war sentiment in the South. On the other hand, President Li Yuan-hung who has consented to sign the war resolution after its passage by Parliament not so much from his concurrence with the Government's plan, as from his wish merely to appear reasonable before the eye of the Allies, is reported to be secretly welcoming the fresh opposition. At any rate, every describable secret intrigue and scheming and wirepulling will be enacted behind the scene in China for the coming several days before the Government finds a sufficient majority of the members of the both houses of Parliament supporting its decision.

In the face of this newly developed situation in Peking what will be the steps to be taken by the Entente who are endeavouring to induce China to join the war against Germany?

"No other way is there for the Entente," replied an official of the Foreign Office here when the question was put to him, "than to wait and see. The Entente favours China's entry into the war, but cannot coerce her. It will be hard to find reasons which may justify our interference in the present situation, for the war question is being made an object of internal strife by both parties which are struggling for the supremacy in political power."

However, this official expressed himself confidently looking towards the ultimate passage of the war resolution by Parliament without inviting foreign interference.

Pekng, May 9.—The Premier attended the Lower House and asked its approval of the policy of declaring war. A majority voted to refer the question to the standing committee which meets on Thursday.

A Shanghai correspondent wires under date of May 8 that the question of China's entry into the war was discussed at a camera meeting of the National Assembly on Tuesday, Premier Tuan Chi-jui, Dr. Wu Ting-fang, Foreign Minister, and the Ministers of Navy, Agriculture and Commerce, and Justice explaining the war resolution. After interpellations the resolution was referred to the whole House Committee. The resolution will be submitted to the debate of the regular meeting of the House on Thursday and put to vote afterwards.

At the meeting of the Senate Dr. Wu Ting-fang, Foreign Minister, explained the resolution and replied to interpellations. A motion was mooted to refer the resolution to the Whole House Committee, but the session dispersed without arriving at any decision. This shows a victory for the opinion insisting on submitting the resolution to the deliberations of the Committee and the superior strength of the opposition group. In view of the difficulty of the passage of the resolution unconditionally the Peking Government has decided on taking the principle of declaring war independently from the Entente powers, in other words, after the example of the United States. In this connection an agreement has been arrived at between President Li Yung-hung and Premier Tuan Chi-jui.

On the other hand, the opposition group is going to introduce a vote of want of confidence in the Cabinet pointing out the unnecessity of declaring war on Germany and also the disadvantage of acting independently of the Entente Powers. Against the movement of the Shanghai Diplomatic Society, which recently telegraphed to the Central Government its support of the Government proposal of the declaration of war, the National Diplomatic League of Shanghai called a meeting of its members on Tuesday night and discussed the attitude of the association. As the result of the conference the League sent a circular note to the various bodies and associations in Shanghai insisting on its absolute opposition to the declaration of war and its strong determination to advocate absolute neutrality. The league of the citizens of Szechuan sent a representation to the two Houses of Parliament opposing the declaration of war on Germany.

A Peking dispatch to the "Asahi" says that Mr. Tien Shi-tak and other leaders of the opposition party invited the leading Japanese officials in Peking to a dinner at the Yamato Club on Tuesday night and explaining their attitude in connection with the situation expressed their wishes that their attitude would not be misunderstood by the Japanese Government and the nation would not misunderstand their intention and attitude. They declared that they were not absolutely opposed to China's entry into the war in principle but they had to oppose the present resolution because they could not rely upon the present Ministry in deciding a question of such grave significance. Therefore they are strongly determined to oppose to the extreme the war resolution and fight for its rejection in Parliament.

MR. HSU SHIH-YING SET FREE ON BAIL IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 5.—Mr. Hsu Shih-ying was arrested on a charge of corruption on Friday while attending a banquet in Central Park, on a warrant issued to the Public Prosecutor. The ex-minister was first taken before the Public Prosecutor and then transferred to a local jail where Chen Chin-tao is also detained. The greatest secrecy was maintained regarding the issue of warrant for Mr. Hsu Shih-ying who was taken completely by surprise. It is understood he intended leaving for Tientsin on Saturday.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 6.—Mr. Hsu Shih-ying has been allowed bail.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 7.—The release of Mr. Hsu Shih-ying has created a storm in political circles. It appears the High Procurator ordered the arrest on his own authority. The arrest caused a heated Cabinet discussion in which a number of Ministers particularly the Minister of Agriculture contended that the High Procurator exceeded his duty and demanded that he be punished. The Premier pointed out that if the High Procurator possessed substantial evidence, the arrest was justified, but the Premier being in the minority he was eventually persuaded to draw up a mandate suspending the High Procurator from office pending an investigation of his action. This mandate was sent to the President for signature, but subsequently was withdrawn when the Premier realized it would constitute a serious interference with the judiciary.

Nevertheless Mr. Hsu Shih-ying's release was secured through the Procurator General provided the chiefs of the Metropolitan Police and Gendarmerie guaranteed to produce him when wanted.

AMERICAN SHIPS IN CHINA WATERS

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, May 6.—The internment of the American warships mentioned in Kokusai despatch of the 26th of April has been delayed possibly owing to cable delays and the likelihood of China declaring war against Germany; but at eleven o'clock on Saturday morning Admiral Sah Chen-ping and commissioner Chu Chao-sing informed Consul-General Sammons and commander Chadwick that the vessels of the United States navy must leave Chinese waters within forty-eight hours or be interned with reduced crews and dismantled batteries. Accordingly, the Palos, the Guiros, the Monocacy, the Villalobos and the Samar at present in Shanghai will be interned forthwith, the Wilmington and the Abarenda are expected to leave Chinese waters to-day.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, May 6.—The Abarenda with 130 officers and men of the interned American ships sailed at nine o'clock, this morning, leaving 130 officers and men in charge of the interned vessels. The Wilmington left at one this afternoon. The Helena and Pampanga from Canton have gone to Hongkong.

PIRATES SINK JAPAN'S THIRTEENTH STEAMER

Another Japanese steamer has fallen a prey to a German submarine off the coast of Ireland. An official dispatch reaching the Navy Department on May 5 from Rear-Admiral Funakoshi, attaché to the Japanese Embassy in London states that the Japanese steamer Taizan Maru, 3,569 tons, was shelled and sunk by a German U-boat in the sea near Ireland on May 2 and that 9 officers and 34 members of the crew of the steamer were safely landed at Queenstown on May 3.

The ill-fated Japanese steamer was built in England in 1895 and was owned by the Hashimoto Steamship Co. at Dairen, her captain being Mr. Seisuke Kuchiki. At the outset of the war, however, she was chartered to a certain foreign firm. Mr. Wakamiya, the Director of the Mercantile Marine Bureau, stated yesterday that with the sinking of the Taizan Maru Japan has lost 13 merchant ships from the raid of German submarines since the war. The list of the vessel's crew was 41 according to the investigation made last September and Mr. Wakamiya believes that the whole of the crew of the Taizan Maru were safely brought to the Irish port. It is also reported that her crew consists solely of Japanese.

The details of the sinking of the Japanese steamer Taizan Maru off the Irish coast on May second, reach the Navy Department Monday from the Naval Attaché to the Japanese Embassy at London. According to the report, the Captain of the ill-fated steamer made the following statement.

"The steamer Taizan Maru left Marseilles for Scotland with a cargo of iron ore, and at two o'clock on the morning of May second, the vessel was passing the coast of Belfast, Ireland. In the northeastern direction of the South Rock Lighthouse, the steamer sighted a strange steamer about half a mile away. Believing it to be a German submarine, the Taizan Maru headed toward the land at full speed.

But before getting out of the range of the torpedo, the vessel was fired at by the German boat, and the crew lowered boats and escaped. The steamer was finally sunk by the German submarine.

About three hours later, the crew managed to reach Kingstown and receiving the assistance of the Naval authorities of the British government, reached London on the morning of May 4th."

JAPANESE TO BUY CHINA'S COPPER

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, May 3.—Japanese interests here are offering 1,200,000 (one million two hundred thousand) dollars to purchase the Kwangtung Government owned old copper coins and copper that may be extracted from condemned cannon and other sources. At the same time, a Chinese syndicate is also making offers. The Government is despatching military agents to Yamchow, Linchow, Kingchow and elsewhere to ascertain the extent and value of the copper. It is now believed that much copper is already going to Japan.

U.S. CONSCRIPTION BILL

The conscription bill was passed in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, by an overwhelming majority. The Senate passed the bill by 81 votes against 8, and the House of Representatives passed it by 397 votes against 24. The hearty support of the conscription bill in the both Houses, is a military revolution in the United States, says the "Asahi."

The United States had a very small standing army. According to the report of two years ago, there were only 3,441 officers and 77,363 soldiers. There are State Militias, but they are not to be discussed with the regular Army. However, stimulated by the European war, suddenly, the public of the United States realized the necessity of preparedness, and national defence, and several demonstration parades were held all over the country to urge the people and government to be prepared for any emergency.

On February 23, 1917, the War Department announced the plan of conscription which will increase the number of trained soldiers to 3,290,000. The conscription bill just passed was based upon this plan and the scheme of General Scott.

England adopted the conscription measure only two years after the outbreak of war, but the United States speedily decided upon the plan, and the "Asahi" congratulates the United States upon her quick decision in the matter.

Now that the United States has decided upon the expansion of her army, the "Asahi" hopes that the American government will despatch her forces to Europe. Mr. Lloyd-George also desires the sending of the American forces to the European battle fields. However the paper believes that the despatch of the American forces to Europe will not be undertaken within six months.

The Senate and the House of Representatives which almost unanimously passed the conscription bill, rejected the bill for the establishment of volunteer corps. In the United States the soldiers that can be immediately despatched to Europe are the volunteers who have already received military training. The reason the both Houses opposed the establishment of volunteer corps is not known, but according to a report, the proposal of Colonel Roosevelt to organize a volunteer corp, was the cause of their opposition to the establishment of volunteer armies. Colonel Roosevelt was the commander of the Rough Riders during the Spanish American war, and he distinguished himself with repeated victories on the battle fields. If Colonel Roosevelt proceeds to Europe with his troops and succeeds, he will be elected as the next president at the election to be held on 1920.

The "Asahi" believes that such a report is not well founded, and the real reason for the opposition to the establishment of the volunteer corps is unknown. According to the statistics made by the "New York Tribune," the majority of the members of the House of Representatives favoured the declaration of war against Germany, but opposed the despatch of the American Army to Europe.

However, the "Asahi" declares that it will not be impossible for the United States to send her troops to Europe, if she is properly approached by the Entente powers. At any rate, the paper considers that for at least six months, the United States will not be able to send any army to Europe. However seriously the question may be discussed at the conference now being held at Washington, it is an impossibility to despatch the American forces to Europe immediately.

THE TROUBLE IN RUSSIA

Those who do not understand the real conditions in Russia have begun to doubt her attitude against Germany on account of the activity of the anti-war movement, and the peace talk of the socialists and labourers who caused the recent revolution. The rumour that Russia desires separate peace with Germany, caused anxiety and uneasiness among the Entente people, but the "Jiji" states that as the condition of Russia became better known, it was learned that the attitude of the Russian government and general public against Germany has not changed, and although there may be a number of socialists and others who advocate peace, the majority of the public is firmly determined to continue the war until the total destruction of German autocracy. It is to be rejoiced at for the sake of Russia as well as for the Entente powers that the rumour of the separate peace between Germany and Russia has now been entirely swept aside by the Note of the Provisional Government. M. Paul N. Milyukov, the Foreign Minister so strongly advocated the continuation of war against Germany, that he brought an attack of the anti-war agitators upon himself.

Regarding the policy of the new government of Russia, against Germany, there is no ground to doubt, but there has been a little conflict of opinion between the Foreign Minister and M. Kerenski, the Minister of Justice upon the war policy of Russia, and it gave an impression that the Russian Cabinet is not united by the same opinion. Further the note given out by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, has been slightly misunderstood and an opposition movement was started in Petrograd, but the Cabinet later issued a note declaring that the note given by M. Milyukov gave the true interpretation of the Cabinet policy and that it was supported by all members of the Cabinet. This explanation made by the Cabinet settled all disputes regarding the war policy of the new government of Russia, and the "Jiji" says that the explanation was timely and valuable to impress the uneasy populace that the government is firmly determined to continue the war.

The bonds the Russian government issued recently to obtain necessary war funds were heartily subscribed to by the public, showing the confidence of the people in the Cabinet. The "Jiji" declares that judging from every point of view, there is no doubt as to the policy of the Russian government and the attitude of the people against Germany, and it is only hoped that Russia will not disappoint the other Entente powers in following the joint operations with England and France.

HIGHER COST OF LIGHT

The people of Tokyo are about to face the increased rate of electric light supply, and Dr. Okuda, Mayor of Tokyo, is intending to force the increase of the electric light rate to protect the city electric plant. The "Yorozu" says that the increase of the electric light rate, is an important question to the public of Tokyo, and the unjust increase of the rate will raise the cost of living in Tokyo, and the public should oppose such a plan.

Dr. Okuda, in explaining the plan of increasing the electric light rate, said that the purpose of changing the system of charge for the electric light supply is to build the foundation of the city finance, and to give the privilege of enjoying the lower rate to the public of the city. But the "Yorozu" declares what Dr. Okuda states is contrary to what will actually happen after the change of the present system of charge.

The plan of Dr. Okuda is to lower the charge of the larger candle power light service, but he does not intend to lower the charge for the smaller candle power service. It is his opinion that as the civilization of the city advances, the people desires better lights, and they will not be satisfied with the service of the smaller candle power lamps.

The poorer class of the people of Tokyo is complaining of the charge of forty five sen a month for one five candle power light as being too expensive, but the Mayor of Tokyo wishes to have these people receive the supply of the larger candle powers, because of the simple fact that the brighter lights signifies higher civilization. Such a plan, is not an attempt to lower the charge of the electric light service, says the "Yorozu". Further the paper says that the city intends to charge for the installation of electric metres almost as much as for the electric light service. When one desires to dispense with the electric lights, he has to pay an excess sum of money for disconnection. This will tend to increase the cost of living of the middle and lower classes of people, but still the Mayor explains his plan as beneficial to the people of the city.

Besides the city electric plant, there are two other electric light companies in Tokyo that supply lights to the public, and trying to protect the interests of these two companies, the Mayor dares to cause the poorer people to suffer.

The City increased the street tram fare last year, and now it intends to practically increase the rate of electric light service, although the Mayor says that it will be for the benefit of the public. The "Yorozu" urges the people not to slight this important problem which concerns their daily living, but take the proper steps to prevent the actual increase of the electric light rate.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRITAIN

The Imperial Conference of Great Britain, in which were represented all the British dominions except Australia who was unable to send delegates on account of the political strife, and which has been sitting since the latter part of March in London came to a close on May 2, according to the report received at the Foreign Office yesterday. The resolutions adopted by this conference were made public, excepting those parts that necessity demands to be kept secret, in view of their importance and the interest manifested in them by the people.

In the preamble of the publication of these resolutions, the Secretary of Colonial Affairs makes the following statement:

"Unity and sympathy has been the guiding spirit throughout the discussion of these resolutions, and in not a single case was a vote asked for. In connection with the question of the future constitution of the Empire all attending the conference expressed their sincere faithfulness to the maintenance of the Imperial system. The addresses and sympathetic attitude of the representatives from the self-governing overseas territories towards the position of the Indian people in their respective land gave the representatives from India a deep satisfaction.

The important portions of the Resolutions made public are as follows:

It has been entered into record as a view of the conference that in order to give India a complete representation in all the future Imperial conferences, the resoluton of the 1907 Imperial Conference should be so revised that the next conference should be composed of in accordance with the foregoing view. The conference recognizes the principle of mutual treatment as a result of an investigation of the memorandum presented by the representatives from India in which the position of the Indian people is dealt with, and recommends the governments concerned to give a favourable consideration on the memorandum.

The conference requests the Admiralty to submit to the representatives of this conference a naval defence programme to be most complete and effective in its conviction, with a specification of vital points in protecting the security of the Empire. The conference points out the necessity, in the light of the experiences gained in the present war, to develop a proper productive power of ammunitions and other military and naval necessities in every important part of overseas territories (the Pacific and the coast of India included,), and emphasizes the urgent need of a closer co-operation between the autonomic territory of India and the home country. The conference recognizes the need of unifying the munitions, military equipments and war materials, and of maintaining a standard that can be applied throughout the Empire, and for that purpose recommends that a committee of military experts be established to be appointed from both India and the home country.

The conference considers the question of revising the Constitution is too grave and complicated to be taken up for discussion during the war and regards it proper to postpone it until after the close of the war when the extra Imperial Conference will be called. However, the conference considers it to be a duty to have its view on the question recorded. The conference deems that the reorganization of the Empire should be so confined as not to infringe the preservation of the present controlling rights of the respective autonomic governments and that all the territories should stand on the foundation that they are a self-supporting people and India as an important part of the Empire. In diplomatic and international affairs they should have a certain right to be heard and in the important affairs affecting the common interest of the whole Empire they should have the right to participate in deciding the course to be adopted by the government.

The Conference regards it as high time now to give every support and stimulation toward securing the independence of the Empire in the supply of food stuffs, materials, and important industries by developing the natural resources of the Empire. For this need the conference will support the policy of (A) according the different territories of the Empire a special privilege, though properly respecting the interest of the Allied countries, in exchanging the products of their own lands between each other; and (B) of detaining the emigrants from England within the British territories.

It is also reported that Lord Curzon, in his address at a certain place on May 2, stated that at the last meeting of the Cabinet it was decided to convene the Imperial Conference once a year regardless of war or peace at the time. This proposition by the British Government was heartily welcomed by the representatives in the conference and they will recommend this to their respective Governments for concurrence.

JAPANESE AVIATOR BACK FROM FIGHTING IN FRANCE

Mr. Shuntaro Madzumi, a Japanese aviator, who has spent several months with the French aviation corps as a corporal in the western theatre of war where he was wounded some time ago, returned to Kobe on the 1st by a M.M. liner in order to recuperate his health. Being pestered by reporters at Kobe Mr. Madzumi outlined his impressions on the present activity of the French aviators, paying them a high tribute for their bravery and remarkable ability. Mr. Madzumi was one of the first Japanese to study aviation in France. He went to France in 1911 in order to study law, but out of his strong propensity for aviation he entered the French aviation school and finished the three years' course there. With the outbreak of the war he applied to enlist in the French aviation corps, but at that time there were pros and cons as to the enrolment of Japanese in the aviation corps and he was attached to the infantry regiment in Paris. He was, however, allowed later to join the aviation corps and then proceed to the front.

It is no easy task, stated Mr. Madzumi, for aviators to secure certificates in France; they have to go through various hard examinations. First they have to cover a distance of 150 miles six times in one flight maintaining a height of over 2,000 metres; secondly they have to fly for two consecutive hours and at the third examination a volplane from an altitude of 500 metres by stopping the propellor must be accomplished. These three tests must be done successfully, or no aviator is allowed to leave the school as a full-fledged airman in France.

Mr. Madzumi, while in the infantry devoted himself to practising nocturnal flying and manipulation of aircraft guns, the mastery of which two at length qualifies aviators to proceed to the front.

"The battalion," he said, "in which I was enrolled had four Japanese volunteer airmen including Baron Shigeno and Lieut. Commander Isobe. We fought on the Somme and at Verdun and the most exciting aerial battle I have participated in was fought last year in the sky near Verdun, on the attack of which the Germans concentrated their utmost efforts. One day 63 French aeroplanes started in a group to make a raid on the German positions and fortunately I was ordered to go skyward with them. The Germans took up our challenge and also sent above 63 aeroplanes. A lively aerial battle then took place and 18 French aeroplanes were wrecked as a result, but the French brought down far more enemy planes." Mr. Madzumi said that German aeroplanes can hardly attain an altitude of over 4,000 metres owing to their inferior engines, but the French planes can easily go up 6,000 metres, the result being that they can shoot down German aeroplanes or Zeppelins with comparative ease. The superiority of the French aeroplanes is really decisive. A Newport machine on which a French airman chases enemy aeroplanes is equipped with 160 h.p. engine and makes 130 metres per second. There are over 1,000 aeroplanes on the French fronts, he said. The German anti-aircraft guns are effective only within an altitude of 3,500 metres and it is very rare that shells hit the pilot. French aviators generally raid the German positions under cover of night, but reconnaisance and observation of the range of guns are done by them in the daytime.

Mr. Madzumi paid a tribute to Baron Shigeno now fighting in France as a French captain. Baron Shigeno is the pride of Japan in France, he said. He further told how the Baron piloting his favourite Newport plane has brought down a number of German aeroplanes and often experienced thrilling moments closely chased by enemy aviators. The Baron wrecked two Zeppelins last year on the Somme and this brilliant deed has made him more famous. Mr. Madzumi is of the opinion that every one of the 8 Japanese volunteer aviators now in France is as good as Mr. Art Smith and can loop-the-loop with commendable skill.

OSAKA'S BIG EXPLOSION CAUSES LOSS OF LIFE

The explosion and fire originated at the warehouse of the Tokyo Warehouse Company, at Ajikawa, Osaka, on May 5 wrecked 113 buildings, including 31 warehouses, 1 school, and 1 police station and killed forty-four men and wounded several hundred people of the vicinity. The total damage caused by the explosion and fire is now estimated at 12,000,000 yen, and the number of the dead and injured is expected to increase, as it was impossible to clear the wreckages until yesterday evening.

Conflicting reports are made regarding the cause of the explosion, but it is believed that a workman at the warehouse was carrying a case of potassium chloride sent for storage by the Umeda Express Company, and from some unknown reason he dropped the case. Flashes of fire shot out of the case as it struck the floor of the warehouse, and following a loud explosion, the workman who dropped the case, was rendered unconscious. Other workmen hurried to the scene and tried to prevent the spreading of fire, as in the warehouse were stored a large quantity of explosive articles, but before they could prevent it, the fire spread to other cases in the warehouse.

A tremendous explosion, wrecking the houses in the vicinity, tore open the warehouse. The people in the neighbourhood had no time to escape, and before they knew what happened, they were pinned under the collapsed roofs. The force of the explosion was so strong that it shook the houses of the entire city of Osaka, and it was even heard in Nara, Kobe and Sakai.

The explosion was followed by three others, and the last explosion was the strongest of all. By the force of the last explosion, the water mains in the vicinity burst, and policemen and firemen who gathered to fight the fire were hurled to the ground, and many of them were injured. Pieces of iron, stone, concrete and brick were hurled by the explosion, and many houses were wrecked by the flying stones, and iron.

The streets were soon filled with the wreckages and the injured and the dead. The entire force of the Osaka police and firemen endeavoured to prevent the wide-spreading fire, and rescue the injured and others. However the fire had such a grip that it could not be stopped until Sunday morning.

It was the most disastrous explosion that ever happened in Japan, and the business of Osaka has been suspended. Up to yesterday evening forty-four bodies were found, and many of them had to be dug out of the wreckage of buildings, and 39 were seriously injured. As to the number of people slightly injured, it is impossible to count, as among the people of the neighbourhood, there are only a few who did not receive any injury.

Thirty-one warehouses of the Tokyo Warehousing Company were destroyed by the explosion and fire, and the damage is estimated at 3,525,000 yen, not counting the warehouses themselves. Among the articles stored in the warehouses and burnt by the fire, were 2,000 casks of alcohol, 5,000 cases of potassium chloride, 10,000 bales of silk, 10,000 bales of fertilizer, 1,500 barrels of crude sugar, 25,000 bales of soda ash, and 8,000 crates of pulp. The sixteen buildings of the Osaka Electric Bulb Manufacturing Plant were also ruined by the fire, and the damage of the plant is over a quarter million yen. Counting the damage done to the houses wrecked by the explosion and fire, and properties of the public, the total damage caused by the explosion and fire, is expected to exceed twelve million yen.

It is feared that there are many persons who were hurled into the river or who fell into the river in their excitement to escape from the disaster, and the total number of casualties cannot be learned until a full investigation is made.

The officials of the Tokyo Warehousing Company, including Baron Iwasaki, the President, hurried to Osaka to investigate into the cause of the explosion. One report says that Baron Iwasaki offered the sum of one million to the mayor of Osaka to be spent for the relief of the sufferers from the explosion and fire, and towards the expense of re-erecting various building wrecked by the explosion.

The Police authorities in Osaka are busy inquring into the sufferers from the recent explosion and fire originating at the warehouse of the Tokyo Warehouse Company there and also the extent of the damage done to buildings, in order to distribute among them one million yen donated, as reported, by Baron Iwasaki, the President of the Tokyo Warehouse Co., for their relief and as the expense for re-erecting the wrecked buildings. According to investigations made up to yesterday, the number of those seriously wounded totalled 45 and those slightly injured 344, and it is reported that with the announcement of Baron Iwasaki's gift many people have come to the Police to report on their injuries or damage sustained. The ways of expending the gift is under consideration, but the authorities are reported to have decided to confer the sum of 500 yen on every one of the family of the 44 victims. It is reported that Baron H. Fujita has offered 10,000 yen to Mr. Ikegami, the Mayor, to be spent for the relief of the sufferers.

JAPAN AND MEXICO MAKE AGREEMENT

A new agreement has been arranged between the Japanese and Mexican governments recognizing the freedom of the subjects of both contracting states engaging in the medical profession in either country. The agreement was concluded and signed between Mr. T. Ota, acting Japanese Chargé d'Affaires in Mexico, and Mr. Ernest Galsa Peres, acting Foreign Minister of Mexico, on April 26 in Mexico City and was published in Tuesday's Official Gazette. The agreement, which consists of three articles, provides that the subjects of either contracting states may freely carry on the business of medical practitioners, pharmaceutical, dental surgery, midwifery and veterinary surgery practice in the territory of the other contracting state, provided that they possess the qualifications required for the aforementioned professions by virtue of the license issued by, or degrees granted by the Governments of the countries they belong to. The present agreement, which is professed to have been arranged for the special purpose of adopting a uniform system for recognizing the freedom of the subjects of both countries practicing medical and like professions in either countries for the convenience of both nationals, is stipulated to remain in force for ten years hence, it having taken effect on the date of signature. It is also stipulated that after the lapse of the prescribed period, if either of the two contracting parties desires to cancel or to revise the present agreement that contracting party can do so by intimating such intention to the government of the other contracting party, the agreement meanwhile remaining in force for another year in that case pending its cancellation or revision. The agreement was submitted before its formal signature, to the conference of the Privy Council on April 18 and on its approval submitted to H.I.M. the Emperor, who sanctioned it.

MAY PROGRAMME OPENS AT IMPERIAL THEATRE

"Docchiya-danne" ("Which will it be?") a new comedy by Mr. Taro Masuda, is featured at the Imperial Theatre for May. The comedy is a clever combination of the Japanese comic plot and occidental comic songs and dancing, having the good points of both the Japanese and occidental comic drama. The Japanese comedy principally relies upon the plot and catching expression, and the absence of the comic singing which is the life of the occidental comics, is conspicuous in the Japanese pieces, but Mr. Masuda has made a significant improvement of the Japanese comedy by introducing comic singing to the Japanese plot.

The actresses of the Imperial Theatre who take part in the comedy perform their parts exceedingly well and judging from their past performances in various rôles, they are more suited for the comic pieces than tragedy or heavy dramas. The other two pieces billed for May are, "Bukegirimonogatari" and "Yanagi Sakura Kuruwa Banashi." These two pieces are old Japanese dramas, and the contrast between them and the new comedy is so striking in nature and atmosphere that the audience can hardly believe that they are watching them both at one sitting.

In the ancien dramas staged, the actresses are not at their best, and even the best of them are not able to perform the leading female parts satisfactorily, and only Kanya, Sojuro and Tozo, the seasoned actors of the old school, managed to make the pieces fairly successful. But the actresses are able to show their ability and skill in the comedy in a way that delighted the whole audience.

The plot of the comedy is woven around a daughter of an up-start millionaire of Osaka, who received his modern education at Tokyo, and her father, an ignorant and old fashioned business man of Osaka who made thirty million yen speculating in dyestuffs. The millionaire merchant holds a banquet in honour of a young son of a Baron with whom the daughter is in love. At the banquet appear a number of Geisha girls to entertain the guests. The daughter of the host criticises the Geisha girls as people of low and uneducated class. The Geisha Girls become angry at the criticism, and finally one of them wins the heart of the son of the Baron, to the great disappointment of the millionaire and his daughter.

The plot is simple, but the clever acting of Tozo who impersonifies the up-start millionaire, shows well the sensation of an ignorant man who found himself wealthy in one day. Kikuye acts the daughter to perfection. Miss Ritsuko Mori takes the part of Yoiko, the Geisha girl who was attacked by the daughter, and who finally wins the hand of the heir to the Baron. Miss Mori, is the leading actress of the piece, and carries herself well, both in expression and acting.

At the entertainment at the banquet, the Geisha girls sing several comic songs, to the tunes played by the orchestra. In theme and wording, the songs are occidental. It may be the first experiment to have songs sung in the Japanese plays to the music of orchestra. All through the piece, the girls sing many songs, as in the musical comedy of Europe and America, giving a lively touch to the piece. Even the dances they dance in the piece, are a combination of Japanese and occidental dances. Sojuro, the old school actor, plays exceedingly well the part of the clown and to those who have been used to see him gravely performing parts in the historical dramas, his playing the comic part, was a revelation.

The new comedy by Mr. Taro Masuda, is a happy innovation, and proves the possibility of blending the Japanese plays with the occidental singing and dancing. The Japanese plays are full of Japanese dances, but the absence of singing is conspicuously felt, especially chorus singing. Mr. Masuda proved that with a proper arrangement, the occidental music and other features can be cleverly brought into Japanese plays.

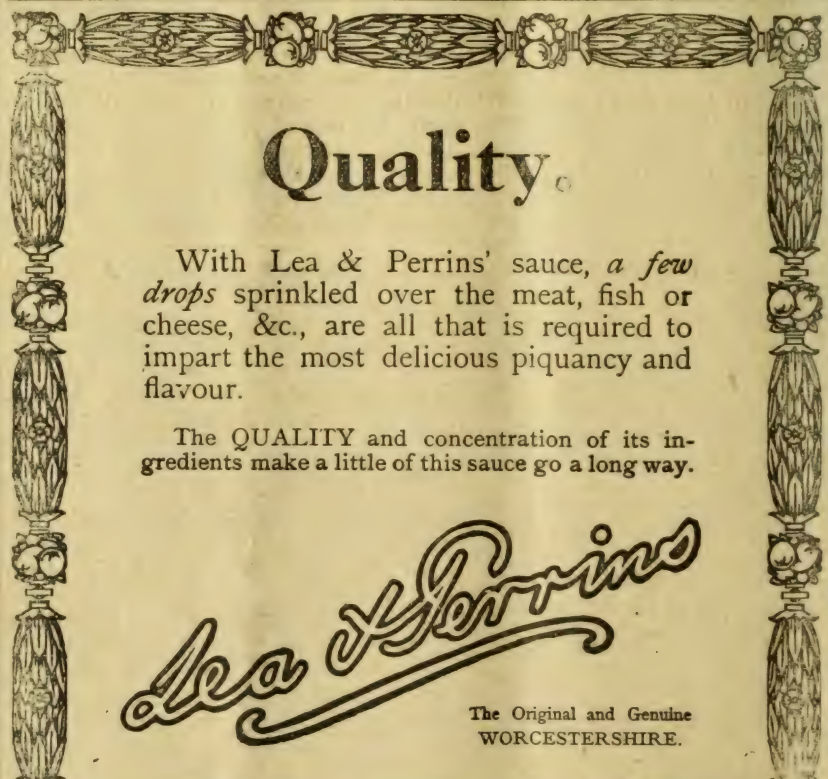
The present bill at the Imperial continues until May 15th, and from the 16th, the actresses will give an entirely different bill, until May 27th.

NIPPON SEIKOKWAI SYNOD

The Twelfth Synod (now held triennially) of the Nippon Seikokwai opened yesterday morning at the American Church Mission Centre in Tsukiji, under the presidency of Right Rev. John McKim D.D. supported by five other Division Bishops in Japan, namely, Bishop Foss of Osaka, Bishop Cecil of S. Tokyo, Bishop Lea of Kyushu, Bishop Tucker of Kyoto, and Bishop Hamilton of Nagoya. Bishop Andrews of Hakodate is absent in England. One visiting Bishop is attending the Synod in the person of Dr. Trollope from Korea.

While it will be seen that the Episcopal body is mainly Missionary, the Missionaries among the Clerical delegates are comparatively few. On the other hand the forty or more lay delegates are all Japanese.

The first Synod of the Nippon Seikokwai under the presidency of Bishop Bickersteth was held in Osaka in the year 1887—thus the Nippon Seikokwai is this year keeping its thirtieth anniversary.



NEW LORD KEEPER OF PRIVY SEAL RECEIVED IN AUDIENCE

As previously reported the installation of Marquis Matsukata as Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal as successor to the late occupant of the exalted post Prince Oyama was held at the Imperial Court on the 2nd with appropriate ceremony. H.I.M. the Emperor attended by Premier Count Terauchi, Baron Hatano, the Household Minister, and Prince Takatsukasa, the Lord Chamberlain, handed the Marquis in person a writ of appointment and further honoured him with the following gracious Imperial message:

"We, relying on your loyalty and sincere service rendered to the State in the past, appoint you to the onerous post of the Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal. We are aware of the onerous duty assigned to you and the weighty responsibility placed on your shoulders which may prove too weighty for your age, but We expect much from your sincere valuable service in view of the situation of the present time which has necessitated Us calling in your service. We wish you to understand Our wish and not grudge the labour of rendering Us your valuable help and sincere service."

After the ceremony Marquis Matsukata was received in audience by H.I.M. the Empress to whom he tendered his thanks for the gracious Imperial commands appointing him to the important post. Afterward the Marquis visited the office of the Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal and had an interview with Prince Takatsukasa and informally assumed his new duties.

As the result of his appointment to the post of the Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, Marquis Matsukata will cease to be a member of the Privy Council henceforth.

The Kanagawa Kencho has appointed a number of officials for the enforcement of the enemy trading act.

It is reported that the total amount of postal savings deposits at the end of last month reached 319,161,273 yen and the depositors were 15,433,173 in number. This is an increase of 5,256,986 yen in the amount of deposits and 5,250,000 persons in the number of depositors.

The Imperial Government Railways announced recently that the gross income for 1916 was 64,661,000 yen from tickets and 69,583,000 yen from goods delivery. This shows an increase of 7,192,000 yen in ticket revenue and 12,728,000 yen in goods revenue.

According to the latest investigation made by the Department of Communications, the total number of the Japanese ocean tramps exceeding the tonnage of 1,000 tons at the end of April reached 311 with the aggregate tonnage of 817,173 tons, of which 51 steamers totalling 159,374 tons were chartered to foreigners.

The total number of the tramcar passengers in Tokyo reached 262,703,000 persons last year, according to the investigation made by the Municipal Electric Bureau. The gross income from these passengers is said to amount to 10,739,000 yen, showing an increase of 477,000 yen over the estimated figure.

In view of the high cost of materials for medicine-manufacture, the Government has decided on increasing the amount of subsidies to both the Naikoku and Toyo pharmaceutical companies to 120,000 yen. A bill for this supplementary outlay will be introduced in the forthcoming extraordinary session of the Diet.

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has recently issued a notice to the prefectural authorities throughout the country requiring them to warn manufacturers and exporters of paper under their control not to export the pure Japanese paper to Switzerland, as there are dangers of the exported pure Japanese paper being bought up by enemy merchants in Switzerland and being used as materials for the manufacture of explosives.

The number of immigrants into Hokkaido has recently increased. Up to last month 23,767 people immigrated into the colony, with the corresponding number of 11,905 households. This is an increase of 8,541 people and 4,329 households over last year.

Germans and Austrians in Yokohama continue to make enquires in the local Kencho in connection with the enforcement of the Enemy Trading Act. There are about 180 neutral and allied subjects in the service of enemy firms in Yokohama. To be still in their employment they must obtain the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.

The Department of Communications has announced that the American government, which recently permitted the use of Japanese language in the dispatch of general telegraphic messages sent to Japan from America and vice versa, has again prohibited the use of Japanese, the prohibition being extended to those wireless messages transmitted through the Funabashi wireless station.

Mr. Kunizo Koike who has recently retired from the Tokyo Stock Exchange circles has donated 30,000 yen towards the fund of Waseda University. It is stated that this is not the first donation of Mr. Koike to the University.

According to investigations made by the Home Office, the number of infectious disease patients in 1916 in this country totalled 99,774, of which 24,187 patients proved fatal. It is said that 80 per cent of pest patients died while over 60 per cent. of cholera patients proved fatal.

In response to the invitation of the Osaka "Asahi," the Waseda and Filipino baseball teams which participated in the Olympiad will go to Osaka on May 18 and will play two matches at Naruo ground. The "Asahi" will also invite the Japanese and Filipino tennis players for a series of exhibition games

The authorities, it is stated, will shortly revise the regulations for the control of milk-sellers with a view to checking the growth of unlicensed dairymen and also to putting a stop to fraudulent practices among milk-dealers. It is also reported that the authorities will simultaneously place proper restrictions on condensed milk manufacturers too.

THE FAR EASTERN OLYMPIAD

Third Day

Winning the Base Ball Game from the Philippine team, Japan scored together 21 points Thursday, making the total of 45 points, while Philippine obtained 16 points on the third day of the Olympiad, and is five points behind Japan. The Chinese team secured two points Thursday making the total of eleven points . Ten points the Japanese obtained in winning the baseball game from the Philippine, put Japan ahead of Philippine, but in the field and track events, the Philippine carried off the hon ours of the day, and obtained 16 points.

The points secured in Thursday's events are as follows:

880 yard Run.....	—	—	6
220 Yard Low Hurdle....	—	6	—
Shot Put	1	5
Javelin Throw	1	2	3
Half Mile Relay	—	3	2
Base Ball	—	—	10
Total for yesterday	2	16	21
Points for first two days..	9	24	24
Grand Total	11	40	45

Despite the strong wind that blew all day all the fields were well crowded, but the cold wind had hindered the Philippine and Southern Chinese Athletes to show their best forms. Especially in the Volley Game, the wind played such tricks with the ball, that the players found it difficult to handle the ball.

The feature of the field events yesterday was the Volley Ball Game between the Chinese and Philippine teams. The Chinese team defeated the Japanese team on the second day, with the score of 21-4, 21-2 and the game with the Philippine team will decide the final outcome of the game. As it was expected the game between the Chinese and Filipinos was exciting from the very start. The Chinese team showed a better form that on the second day, and put the Filipinos in the defensive in the first game. Taam, the Chinese player, surprised the Philippine players by his smashes. He managed to obtain the large portion of the points. The first game ended with the score of 21-14 in favour of the Chinese.

But in the second game, the Filipinos picked up exceedingly well, and was able to obtain more points than the Chinese, The game finally ended with the score of 16-21 in favour of the Philippine. The third game was to be held to decide the match, but on account of the strong wind, it was postponed until this afternoon. If China wins the game from the Philippine, she will add, ten points to her team in the championship.

The 880 yard race was carried by the Japanese as it was expected, but at the start Heong, the Chinese runner, broke first, and led others for two laps, but at the end of the third lap, Taku, Yamanouchi and Sawada, three Japanese runners, passed the Chinese, and Taku finished first in 2 minutes, 1/5 seconds. Yamanouchi was second, and Sawada third. In this event, the Japanese added six points to their score.

However in the Final of 220 yard Low Hurdle, the honours were carried by the Filipinos. Lozada, G. Astraquillo, Bello, I. Astraquillos, Sapnu, and Chang started, and no Japanese was in the final. L. Astraquillo led his compatriots all through the course, and he finished first in 1 minute, 28 3/5 seconds. Bello and Sapnu were the second and third. Philippine obtained six points by winning three places in the Low Hurdle Final.

From the very start of Half Mile Relay Race, the Philippine led the way, and at the second change, the Japanese was several yards behind the Philippine runners. Madono, the last Japanese runner tried his best to overtake Catalon, the Filipino, but the difference was so great that he was unable to catch up to the Filipino leader. Catalon crossed the line one second ahead of Hattori. The time of the Philippine team was 1 minute, 38 1/5 seconds. In this event, the Philippine won three points and the Japanese two points.

In 161B. Shot Put, the Japanese representatives had no chance to score. Alvarez, Filipino, won the first place by putting the shot 35 feet 1 inch, and Cabanilla, another Filipino, took the second place putting the distance of 34 feet inches. Meng, the Chinese managed to get the third place with 33 feet 9 inches. The Philippine added five points more to the score, and the Chinese one point.

The result of the Javelin Throw was unexpected. It was believed that the Japanese will not be able to win in the Javelin Throw, but Saito threw the spear 143 feet 6 inches and won the first place. The second place went to Cardenas of the Philippine, who threw 126 feet 5 inches. Chen, the Chinese, threw the Javelin for 123 feet and 6 inches and took the third place. Japan gained the unexpected three points, the Philippine two and the Chinese one point in this event.

The Basket Ball Game between the Chinese and the Japanese teams was a one-sided game from the beginning, and the Japanese was unable to score against the Chinese, who were always on the aggressive. The Japanese obtained the ball many a time, and had many chances of scoring but they always failed to put the ball in the goal. The result of the first half was 20-6 in favour of the Chinese, and the final score was 35-16 in favour of the Chinese.

The Judges of the field and track events did not agree on the ruling covering Pentathlon, and the decision on the game was not made yesterday, although all events included in Pentathlon were carried out yesterday afternoon. Last night, the judges consulted with Dr. Kishi, Referee, and their decision will be announced to-day. The point of dispute was whether the scores of participants who did not take part in one event of the five, will be counted or not. Montes, the Filipino led all others in Broad Jump, Shot Put, Discus Throw, and he made a good time in 220 yard race, but he did not participate in the one mile run, the last event of the Pentathlon. In the four events, Montes had the largest points but he did not figure in One Mile run.

Five Japanese, five Chinese and three Filipinos participated in Pentathlon, and in Broad Jump, Montes, the Filipino led others by jumping 18 feet 9 inches. In Shot Put, he again took the first place by throwing 33 feet 2½ inches. In 220 yard race, Sagiyama, the Japanese was the first covering the distance in 25 seconds. In Discus throw, Montes was the first with 92 feet 3 inches and in One Mile race, Sagiyama made the fast time of 5 minutes, 17 2/5 seconds.

Results of Pentathlon were as follows:

Broad Jump: Arita, 15 feet 4 inches; Nemoto, 16 feet; Sagiyama, 17 feet 9 inches; Saito, 18 feet 4 inches; Udo, 15 feet 4 inches, Ho, 16 feet, 9 inches; Liu, 16 feet 3 inches; Ma 17 feet 8 inches, Tu, 18 feet; Chen, 17 feet 8 inches; Coscolluella 17 feet; Danao, 17 feet 6 inches; Montes 18 feet, 9 inches.

Shot put: Arita, 18 feet 2½ inches; Nemoto, 26 feet 9 inches, Sagiyama, 27 feet 10 inches; Saito, 25 feet 9½ inches; Udo, 26 feet 3½ inches; Ho, 26 feet 1½ inches; Liu, 29 feet 4 inches; Ma, 28 feet 8¼ inches; Tu, 27 feet 9 inches; Chen, 29 feet 7 inches; Coscolluella, 29 feet 10½ inches; Danao, 25 feet 4 inches, Montes, 23 feet 2½ inches.

220 yard Race: Arita, 25½ seconds; Nemoto, 28 seconds; Sagiyama, 25 seconds; Saito, 26 seconds; Udo, 25 3/5 seconds, Ho, default; Liu, 25 1/5 seconds; Ma, 26 3/5 seconds; Tu, 25 1/5 seconds; Coscolluella, 27 seconds; Danao, 26 2/5 seconds; Montes, 25 4/5 seconds.

One Mile Run; Arita, 6 minutes 1 1/5 seconds; Nemoto, 5 minutes, 49 2/5 seconds; Sagiyama, 5 minutes, 17 2/5 seconds; Liu, 6 minutes, 46 1/5 seconds; Tu, 5 minutes, 42 2/5 seconds; Chen, 5 minutes, 49 3/5 seconds, Danao, 6 minutes 11 1/5 seconds. Saito, Udo, Ho, M. Coscolluella and Montes defaulted.

Single Tennis games were held last Thursday morning and afternoon. In the morning game Kumagai defeated Pang with the score 6-0, 6-1, 6-4. Ho, the Chinese player was scheduled to play, but he did not make his appearance. In the afternoon, Pang played against Balonas, and the game was won by Pang with the score 6-3, 1-6, 2-6, 3-6.

By 15 goals to two the Filipinos, defeated the Higher Normal School at soccer. The game in one sense was similar to the first of the series in that the visitors from start to finish had all the best of the argument.

Amidst dust and the chilly gale blowing the second baseball game of the Far Eastern Championship was pulled off on the Shibaura diamond the contest resulting in the victory of Waseda, Japan's representative by white-washing the visitors with two runs to their credit.

The Second day was frigid for the Filipinos but yesterday proved cold even for the homers. Perhaps the stiffness of the muscles checked the players from hitting and the detraction of this department from a ball game cuts a great part of the interest. The close contest of the preceding day brought in a large crowd and anticipating a hard battle the Wasedas had their mass of rooters in two parts of the field. The Filipinos went into the game with the "win or die" spirit but within new climatic conditions and strange environment, they failed to gather enough rally.

The contest was started with the home team first at bat. The game was played off in the one, two, three order except in the fourth and fifth frame when the fatal runs were made which decided the series for Japan, giving Japan ten more points on the figure already won.

Hashimoto, Waseda's slab artist, showed good form issuing no free tickets, giving the opponents only two hits although strike outs were few. Juanito, the Filipino twirler, proved himself a better worker on the mound than his compatriot Baclay who pitched the previous day. Waseda only managed to obtain three hits and with better support he had a good chance of leading his team to victory.

The initial run of the game earned by Waseda in the fourth session was the result of an error. Kato earned a pass to the initial sack and sailed on to second by the sacrifice of Saeki. Iida grounded to short who threw wild sending Kato over the rubber. Even in the fifth, if the Filipino Team had handled the Waseda bunts in the ordinary manner the game may have been a different tale. The game to-day closes the official series and all programs hereafter will be exhibition matches.

The runs and hits by innings:

Hits	0	0	0	0	1	0	1	1	0	—3
Philippines	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

Fourth Day

Obtaining 26 points on the fourth day, the Philippine team is now two points ahead of the Japanese. The only events that will count in the championship, and are not yet held or finished, are Decathlon, Tennis, and swimming events. If the Japanese obtain three points more than the Philippine in these events, Japan will win the championship.

The Chinese team gained 31 points, and the Japanese obtained only 14 points. The Volley Ball and Foot Ball were won by the Chinese adding twenty points to their score. In Basket Ball the Chinese came in second and took six points, the championship of the basket ball having gone to Philippine.

Japan obtained six points in winning three places in the One Mile swim, and secured five points in Twenty Mile bicycle race, taking the first and second positions. The three points secured by winning the first in the One Mile Relay, made the total score obtained by the Japanese 14.

At this stage, the Base Ball game which was won by the Japanese team was the turning point, and if that was won by the Philippine, the difference in the scores between Japan and Philippine would be so large that Japan will only be able to win the championship by winning extraordinary large scores in swimming races. It is regrettable for the Philippine that her team lost the Base Ball to Japan.

The greatest event of the programme was the breaking of the world record of 100 yard Swim by Uchida, the Japanese swimmer, who covered the distance in 52 seconds. The World's record held by D.P. Koh'oku of Hawaii is 53 1/5 seconds. There was some criticism as to the timing by the umpire, but according to the time announced by the judges of the swimming events yesterday, Mr. Uchida broke the world's record by 1 1/5 seconds.

The Volley Ball game between China and Philippine was the first event in the field yesterday and it was held in the morning. The game played between the two teams on Thursday ended in a tie, and the final game was held yesterday morning. It was the best Volley Ball game played in the Shibaura field, and both the players were at their best form. The score of the game was as follows: 17-21, 21-15, 21-9, in favour of China.

The last game of Volley Ball between the Philippine and the Japanese was played in the afternoon, and it was pitifully one sided, and the Philippine won the game by the score of 21-7, 21-0. By winning the game from Japan, Philippine took the second place in the Volley Ball, the first place being taken by the Chinese.

The calling card of the Far Eastern Athletic Championship baseball games being completed the crowd at the Hosei versus Philippine game attracted only stray spectators. The Hosei played better ball than expected but the contest failed to present any excitement. The Filipinos showed superiority, the game ending by the score 6-3.

After a very foul game throughout the first half in which the Filipinos were the chief offenders, the Chinese were given the game by the referee with the score 3 to love. A penalty from which the Chinese notched their third point led to the trouble and a free fight resulted after which the game, as stated, was given to the Chinese.

The Basket Ball game between the Philippine and the Japanese, was also one sided, and the Japanese had no opportunity to outpoint their opponents, as they were kept at the defensive all through the game. However several times during the game good opportunities came to the Japanese, but they were always prevented from scoring. The score of the first half was 26-4, and the total score was 29-14 in favour of the Philippine.

The Philippine team won the championship by defeating both the Japanese and the Chinese teams, and the Chinese took the second place, as it defeated the Japanese team.

The One Mile Relay Race was won by the Japanese team and the Philippine was second. It was an interesting race all through, and for three laps, the Philippine and Japanese runners were abreast, but at the fourth lap, Saeki, the Japanese runner, passed the Philippine runner, and finished one second ahead of Ablan the Filipino runner. The time was 3 minutes 41 seconds .

The biggest event of the day was twenty mile bicycle race and four Japanese, one Chinese and one Filipino took part in the race. The riders were to go eighty eight laps, the track being only about 420 yards. For twelve laps, all five riders were together, but at the thirteenth lap, Chung, the Chinese rider, was left behind. The race went on with four riders together, but when 47 laps were finished Ikeda, the Japanese rider started a sprint and Fujiwara, another Japanese followed, but Aldaguer, Filipino and Matsukura, Japanese, were left one lap behind. In this condition, the riders pedalled on until they finished 86th lap when Ikeda started the final sprint. Fujiwara followed, a few yards behind. The third place was fought between Aldaguer and Matsukura, but finally the tall Filipino managed to come in third. The time was 1 hour, 2 minutes 52 seconds. The Chinese rider was lapped several times by the leaders but he kept on pedalling until the last.

Open Two Mile race was held yesterday and four Japanese runners participated. But finally Taku, won in 11 minutes 5 seconds, Kato was second and Suzuki was third. Kato led the way until the last lap, but in the last three hundred yards, Taku came ahead and finished first. This event does not count in the championship.

In the Pole Vault, the Japanese was unable to win any point. Ting, the tall Chinese vaulted 10 feet 6 inches, and Koo, another Chinese took second by going over 10 feet 3 inches bar, and Llanes the Filipino was third with ten feet. In this event, the Philippine was expected to win, but Ting was an unexpected surprise.

The result of last Thursday's Pentathlon was announced as follows. Sagiyama 295 points, Tu, 287 points, Chu, 252 points.

The events in Decathlon held were, 110 yard Run Yard Run, Broad Jump, High Jump, and Shot Put. Eight athletes trying for the All round championship took part in the event. They were Noguchi, Takeuchi, Chang, Y. Chang Chu, Puno, Saavedra, and Villanueva.

In the first half of Decathlon, Saavedra, the holder of Decathlon Championships of the Far East is leading, and in the five events held yesterday he obtained the total score of 389. The second is Noguchi, Japanese, who obtained 354 points. Among the Chinese athletes, Y. Chang had the highest point, having secured 313 points.

In 100 yard Run, Saavedra made the fastest time, covering the distance in 10 4/5 seconds, which gave him 80 points, Noguchi finished second in 11 seconds, obtaining 70 points. In 440 Yard Run, Noguchi made 90 points, finishing in 55 seconds and Saavedra made only 77 points. In High Jump, Saavedra and Puno obtained 74 points each jumping 5 feet 1/5 inch. Noguchi and Chu jumped 4 feet 10 1/5 inches, and took 66 points each. In Broad Jump, Saavedra jumed, 20 feet, 8 1/5 inches and added 109 points to his score. Y. Chang, the Chinese jumped 20 feet 4 inches and took 104 points. In Shot Put, Saavedra took 56 points by throwing the shot 28 feet 6 inches, but Chu, the Chinese did better than Saavedra and threw the shot 29 feet 2 inches, taking 48 points.

The total scores obtained by the eight athletes in the five events of Decathlon were as follows.

Noguchi (J) 354 points, Takeuchi (J) 278 points. H. F. Chang (C) 280 points, Y. Chang (C) 313 points, Puno (P) 301 points, Saavedra (P) 389 points, Villanueva (P) 338 points, Chu (C) 301 points.

The feature of yesterday's programme was the swimming races, the trials of 50 Yard, 220 Yard, 100 yard, 440 Yard, 100 yard Back Stroke, and 220 Yard Breast Stroke, and the one mile were held yesterday afternoon. Fortunately the day had been much warmer than the past few days, but the Filipino swimmers shivered in the cold water.

The hope of Japan in winning the championship now rests with the swimming races.

If Japan is able to obtain good points in the swimming races, she will be able to defeat Philippine. The results of yesterday's trials and one mile race, proved that there is a good prospect for Japan in winning the championship.

The event of the day was the breaking of 100 yard record, and Uchida, the Japanese swimmer, should be heartily congratulated in breaking the World's record for the distance, but it is regrettable that there was not more reliable judges to confirm his achievement. When the time was announced, there rose complaints from the crowd, but the Judges' word did not falter and announced that Uchida covered the distance in 52 seconds.

The first race was 50 Yard heats, and the winners of the three heats are as follows. The first heat, Saito, first, B. Versoza, second, Time, 26 2/5 seconds. The second heat, Ukai, first, V. Versoza, second, time, 27 2/5 seconds. The Third Heat, Ishii, first, Migallon, second, Time, 29 3/5 seconds. The Chinese swimmers did not qualify for the 50 yard final, and the final race will be held to-day among three Japanese and three Filipinos.

The second event was three heats of 220 yard swim, and in this event, the Japanese also obtained three first places and two second places. One Philippine took a second place. The result is as follows: First Heat, Iketani, first, Suzuki, second, time 3 minutes 6 seconds. Second Heat, S. Uchida first, Fernadez, second, time, 2 minutes, 46 2/5 seconds. Third Heat, Ukai, first, Kurama, second, time, 2 minutes 54 4/5 seconds.

In the 220 Yard Breast Stroke, the first places went to the Japanese and the Chinese monopolized the second places. The results are as follows; First Heat, Takahama, first, Yao, second, time 3 minutes, 54 2/5 seconds, Second Heat, Matsumoto, first, Cuna, second, time, 3 minutes, 53 4/5 seconds. Third Heat, Ishii, first, Lei, second, time 3 minutes, 51 1/5 seconds.

Only one Filipino secured a place in 100 yard Swim, taking the second place, and the rest were all won by the Japanese In the first heat, S. Uchida broke the World record in swimming the distance in 52 seconds. First Heat, Uchida, first, Yamamoto second time, 52 seconds. Second Heat, Okuda, first, Migallon second, time, 1 minute 8 4/5 seconds. Third Heat, Saito, first, Funakoshi second.

Only the Japanese will swim the 440 Yard final to-day as no other swimmers qualified in yesterday's heats. First heat, Kato, first, Inami, second, time. 7 minutes, 3 3/5 seconds. Second Heat, Imamura first, Tamai, second, time, 6 minutes, 56 3/5 seconds. Third Heat, Noju, first Miyake second, time 6 minutes, 47 3/5 seconds.

In 100 Yard back Stroke, one Chinese and two Japanese took the first places, and one Filipino and two Japanese took the second places. First Heat, Ikegava, first, Yamamoto, second time, 1 minute 25 seconds. Second Heat, Lei, first, J. Versoza second, time, 1 minute 30 second. Third Heat, Suzuki, first, Yamauchi, second, time, 1 minute 30 seconds.

Five swimmers participated in One mile swim, but the Chinese and Philippine swimmers could not overtake the Japanese swimmers, and the three places went to the Japanese. This victory gave the Japanese team six points. Imamura was first in 29 minutes, 43 seconds, Noju was second in 29 minutes 57 seconds, and Nakata was third in 30 minutes and 3 seconds.

The Chinese versus Philippine soccer championship game would have proved one of the best contests seen in this city for many a season had not the game been marred by a scramble in the latter part of the second half. From the start the contest was observed to be a keen one although veterans predicted that the Celestials had a superior combination. The two teams were out to win and the players were excited to the highest pitch. The Chinese students in the local colleges were out en masse to support their countrymen. The Chinese had to win the game if they want to gain some chance in the leadership in the Championship games for their showing in other lines proved poor and since they were trounced in the basket ball game of the day before. The Philippine team, on the other hand, looked forward with keenness to winning this game in order to balance the points lost from the defeat in the baseball series, if they wanted the neck and neck in the rivalry for laurels against Japan. Another potentiality adding to the pitched nerve was the volley ball contest of the previous day which ended with nobody's game.

The situation stood as described above. With Mr. Willes umpiring, the whistle was blown for the kick off at 10 a.m. sharp. The struggle began with the rainbow colored uniforms taking the upper hands. It was argued by many spectators that since the Philippine team whipped Japan 15-nil and the Chinese 5-nil, it proved that the Filipinos were the better squad This kind of reasoning never applies, in football or baseball. In the first half the Chinese scored two goals to nothing of the Filipinos.

The blood was warming up during the first half and in the second it was nearly spilled. The Filipino athletes resolved to even up in the latter half and there were many points in which fair play and sportsmanship may have been questioned. The climax was at hand; in the middle of the last half the Chinese neatly scored a goal, and tickled by the addition of another point, one of the Chinese forward went up to the opposing goalkeeper, whose blood was curdling hot like a Moro, offered to shake hands. The watchman took this as an insult stating that no hands are ever proffered during a continuance of a contest and refused to play. The Chinese refuted, when other verbal players entered into a pro and con dispute of the incident. However, when the nerves were already pitched to the limit, one of the Filipinos rushed against a Chinese who was arguing the case with him. The Filipino was knocked to the ground and had there been no neutrals around, more seriousness would have evolved. The Filipinos refused to play although the Chinese challenged them. Since they refused notwithstanding the overtures made by the umpire, he called the game as defaulted and decided the game as forfeited to the Chinese by the tune 3 to nil. This gave the Chinese 10 points, aiding them to win the largest points of the day.

The soccer game to-day will be called at 4 p.m. and after the baseball, the Chinese, as champions, playing against the best foreign team in Japan, picked from the cream of Tokyo, Yokohama and Kobe. This game is observed to prove one worth witnessing.

The first tournament in the tennis department of the Far Eastern Championship Games was Kumagai, versus Ho. The match proved too much one-sided, the set resulting as follows: 6-0; 6-0; 6-0.

The second bill on the programme was between Fargas and Matsubara. This contest proved more even for although Fargas is a better player Matsubara's under hand stroke seemed to give Fargas much trouble in handling. The Japanese sympathizers hoped that Matsubara may work Fargas out by this less thrilling method, and resorting always on the less risky side. However, Fargas proved a better man the final scores of the set being 6-4; 6-3; 6-5.

In the afternoon there was only one official game Kumagai versus Balanos. This match proved one sided, the Filipino being no match for the Japanese champion player. The result was 6-0; 6-1; 6-0. An exhibition of a double game was also made since the Chinese double team defaulted.

Closing Day

Winning 47 points in swimming events, the first place in Tennis, singles and double, and first place in Decathlon, the Japanese team finally carried off the championship of the Far East, 48 points ahead of the Philippine team, and 78 points ahead of the Chinese. The total points obtained by the Japanese equal to the combined total of the Chinese and Philippine teams; the Japanese score being 126, the Philippine 78, and the Chinese 48.

In swimming events, and long distance races, the Japanese athletes had no rival, but in the short distance races, and field events, the Filipinos led all others. The Chinese excelled in Foot Ball, Volley Ball and Running High Jump. Although the Japanese won the championship, it should be stated that the Philippine athletes fought well in all events, and excepting the swimming events, the scores of the two teams were almost a tie. Especially it is regrettable that the Philippine lost the baseball to the Japanese, as the Philippine team is excellent and had the good possibility of winning the championship.

The Third Far Eastern Athletic Games was the first of the sort ever held in Japan, and it was the first international athletic sports played in Japan, and the public interest in athletics and international games was greatly stimulated by the events of the Far Eastern Olympiad. The Japanese public generally did not pay any attention to athletic sports, and it was formerly only the students who witnessed the local athletic meets. But from the opening day until the end, the Far Eastern Olympiad was witnessed by an enormous crowd, and by every class of people. From the aristocratic circles, down to the labouring class, every one took a deep interest in the events, and they filled the four fields at Shibaura to the utmost capacity.

By holding the Olympiad in Tokyo, not only the Japanese athletes gained experience and honours, but the general public had received an invaluable education. It is by the effect of the Olympiad that a plan is now being discussed by the leading citizens of Tokyo to establish a permanent and magnificient stadium in one part of the Aoyama Military Parade

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 9.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig's Tuesday communique says: The enemy made heavy counterattacks early in the morning in the neighbourhood of Fresnoy and at first got a foothold in our trenches northeastward of the village; but the ground lost was shortly afterwards recovered.

Two fresh German divisions delivered an attack in force eastward of Fresnoy; but they were repulsed with heavy casualties on the right, and the positions were successfully maintained. On the other hand, after fierce resistance on the left we were compelled to withdraw from Fresnoy village and wood.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 9.—The struggle was keenest on Tuesday night on the Chemin des Dames, where the enemy attempted, at various points, to turn the French out of their positions. The attacks were preceded by a violent bombardment, but were everywhere repulsed. The French in turn attacked on Tuesday evening and carried the German first line trenches on a front of about 1,200 metres northeast of Chevreux, taking 160 prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 10.—The enemy, on Wednesday night attempted rather weak infantry reactions at various points of the Chemin des Dames. They all broke down. A stronger counter-attack in the region of Chevreux met with the same fate and did not prevent us from progressing again, and carrying the fortified point d'appui and, taking prisoners. A minor operation enabled us to extend our gains to the northern slopes of the Vauclerc plateau.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 11.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports that the British advanced their line slightly on Thursday morning on the southern bank of the Scarpe. The enemy at noon renewed attacks on positions on the Hindenburg line eastward of Bullecourt. They were completely repulsed, and further counter-attacks in night time near Fresnay were equally unsuccessful.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 11.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: The fighting on Wednesday at Bullecourt was severe and continuous. We made progress despite the enemy's repeated costly and fruitless efforts to shake our hold on his positions. We advanced our line in the night by local fighting eastward and southward of the Souche river. At the latter place we captured a portion of German front and support lines. We drove off night raids northeastward of Lievon and southward of Hulluch. We successfully raided the enemy's trenches northward of Givenchy lez la Bassee.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 11.—Reuter's correspondent with the British in France telegraphs that the lure of Bullecourt continues to be irresistible presumably because southeast of that point the British pierced the Hindenburg line, for otherwise it was of no strategic value.

Bullecourt will be one of the bitterest name of the war in thousands of German households.

At five o'clock yesterday evening the Germans made another heavy attack but again the British artillery wrought havoc on the assaulting waves. There is however unmistakable evidence that the enemy will not continue confidently in such an assault. Recently a Prussian division composed largely of returned wounded when ordered to the firing line, mutinied and refused to go.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 12.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: The Germans attacked on Thursday eastward of Arleux on the south of the River Souchez but were repulsed by artillery and machine-gun fire. We drove off a later attempt assisted by the Flammenwerfer on the south of the River Souchez. We successfully made a night raid on the east of the Ypres.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 12.—After a violent bombardment of the region of Cernyenlaonnais the enemy attacks on both sides of the village were shattered by our artillery and machine-gun. The enemy gained a footing on 200 meters of trenches on the west of the village but were immediately driven out.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 12.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: We very successfully attacked on Friday night and Saturday morning the Hindenburg line in the neighbourhood of Bullecourt and also astride the Arras-Cambrai road and the north of Scarpe, gaining all the objectives. We took some hundreds prisoners in local fighting resulting in our favour on the night eastward of Lempire and also carried out successful raids eastward of the Ypres.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 12.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig's Friday evening communique says: The enemy early on Friday morning launched a third attack using the Flammenwerfer. After three hours' severe fighting the weight of repeated assaults compelled our posts to withdraw from a portion of front. Our counterattack in the afternoon captured the whole lost trenches. The enemy's losses in the three attacks were heavy. Our positions are unchanged.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 12.—Reuter's correspondent with the British army in France telegraphs that it was sheer weight of numbers that drove the British back at Fresnoy, of which the British guns are now making a perfect inferno. The question of such gains or losses of territory must remain altogether subordinate to the main business of wearing down the Germans who have been forced to give battle on ground more favourable to the British than to them. It is manifestly to the advantage of the British that the Germans should continue to stand where they can be hampered.

This broad strategic view must be overlooked in the present ebb and flow of the great struggle. The Germans since have been attempting to follow up their temporary advantage, but hitherto their efforts have proved not only vain but frightfully costly to them. From Fresnoy to Gavrelle they have been prodigally throwing in their reserves for the past twenty-four hours, but all their attempts were broken up by our intense artillery fire mostly before they were within bombing distance.

What this fighting is costing the Germans is indicated by the fact that thirty-five German divisions appear to have withdrawn exhausted from this front since April 1. Even more eloquent of the growing strain in the German man-power is the manner in which convicts are incorporated in the ranks of the enemy. Among the recent prisoners was a Pole, sentenced two years ago to six years' penal servitude for striking an officer and shooting a non-com.; also a Prussian, sentenced only nine months ago to fifteen years for shooting his company commander.

Nothing but sheer necessity would cause the remission of such sentences.

The "Times" correspondent says the first attack at Fresnoy was made after the heaviest bombardment by the fifteenth reserve and fourth guard divisions who advanced in solid masses. Their losses were tremendous. By weight of numbers they reached the trenches only to be driven out again almost immediately. What were left suffered badly from the British guns and machine-guns in retiring.

Meanwhile the Germans brought up the fifth Bavarian division which also advanced in solid formation. The British, worn out, were compelled to give ground before the enemy's overwhelming strength, but it was these same tired men who after a few hours of breathing spell reattacked and recovered the ground despite heavy odds. On a large part of the ground yielded the enemy losses were so heavy that they far exceeded the strength of the whole British forces engaged in the counter battery work. The British artillery continues to maintain an unquestioned superiority, largely through the assistance of the airmen. The enemy's tendency is more and more to use long-range guns at the extreme limit of fire, preferring to lose much of his own effectiveness to the risk of duels with the British guns.

The new high velocity German fieldgun of which we had heard so much from the German prisoners does not seem to have reached this front or has not yet been noticeably effective.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 12.—To-day Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports that patrol encounters occurred Saturday northwest of St. Quentin. North-east of Leverguier the British advanced their posts at several points, inflicting casualties on the enemy.

The fighting continued throughout Saturday at Bullecourt. The British advanced their line slightly south of the River Scarpe and improved their position on the western slopes of the green hill-land north of the Scarpe. A counter-attack east of the Roeux cemetery was repulsed and fifty German prisoners taken.

London, May 12.—Reuter's correspondent at the British Headquarters in France telegraphs that throughout Thursday the enemy launched a series of attacks on various points of the British front, none of which were able to reach the trench. They began with an attempt to force our positions between Cavrelle and the Souchez river which quite broke down. Then at 7.30 p.m. the Germans, swarming in and around Fresnoy were seen forming for an attack upon Arleux. The British gunners got on to them and although they made an advance under their own barrage the attempt cost them dear and resulted in a complete repulse. South of Souchez river two formidable attacks were launched at 8.15 and 10.15. Liquid fire was employed and large bodies of infantry were thrown in. Fierce fighting followed, the Germans coming on with great determination but finally retired, our artillery creating havoc as they withdrew. They did not renew the attempt. At 3.30 in the morning the advanced section of the trench work which we took on Wednesday between Lacoulotte and Avion was attacked. The result has not yet been reported. On Wednesday night four deserters came over and said they had been told they would get neither relief nor rest until this trench was retaken. "So we preferred to take our own way," they said; one of them adding that a good many of his comrades would have accompanied him, but they "lacked the pluck."

These attacks must have been very costly for the enemy as few operations are more expensive than an attack which fails.

Between the Scarpe and Monchy the enemy guns tried to put a heavy barrage, presumably with the purpose of intercepting our communications, but this was actually beaten to silence by our artillery in a very short time.

A satisfactory point in the present fighting is that our men who went through the Somme battles say these were much worse than anything, that has yet happened in the Arras offensive and our casualties in those days were infinitely heavier. The Germans, on the other hand, declare that the present fighting is much worse than anything they experienced in the Somme valley and that their losses are far heavier.

New York, May 13.—A London official dispatch says that the British have established themselves in the village of Bullecourt. The fighting continues.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 13.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: Further details of Friday night's attacks confirm the success of the operation. After nightlong fighting we have established ourselves in Bullecourt village. The fighting continues. We have captured astride Arras-Cambrai road twelve hundred yards of trenches, including a strong farm position. We stormed Roeux cemetery and chemical works further northward and continued our advance on Saturday, carrying positions in this neighbourhood with a front of one mile and a half, taking seven hundred prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 13.—Marshal Haig's Sunday evening communique says: On Sunday morning we repulsed two counterattacks upon positions on the Hindenburg line eastward of Bullecourt. The Australians, in the past ten days, have gallantly maintained the positions in this sector, repulsing at least twelve determined counterattacks.

We hold the greater part of Bullecourt. We to-day have established ourselves in the western houses of the Roeux cemetery and again made progress on the western slopes of the Greenland hill.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

London, May 14.—War correspondents at the headquarters report: The British bombed the enemy out of Bullecourt. They drove him out of a maze of riverside defences around Roeux quarries in the cratered field. The German fort known as the "Cavalry Farm" near Cambrai-Arras road was easily captured. The Germans desperately endeavoured to retake Bullecourt at 3.20 Sunday morning. They launched a heavy attack which was, however, smashed up by our gunfire. Of twelve men who came within bombing distance, nine were killed and three taken prisoner who later died of wounds. A fresh attack was dispersed an hour later. But twenty men got through. They were all killed except one who was captured.

Summed up we made the most valuable advance. We took nearly a thousand prisoners, captured the better part of two villages, many bits of trenches and a fair amount of booty and put large numbers of the enemy out of action.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 15.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig's communiqué says: We continued progress on Monday on the north of Scarpe and completed the capture of Roeux, which presented a scene of much desperate fighting in the past month. We slightly advanced our line on the north of Carvelle.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT

Petrograd, May 8.—Western front. The enemy's scouts tried on the Berezina near Potashna to approach the Russian trenches, but were scattered by the Russian artillery fire. In the Vladimir Volynsk direction, south of Zubilno, the enemy's infantry, after an intense mine and bomb throwing, came out of their trenches throwing hand grenades at the Russian trenches, but by the fire of the Russian artillery and infantry they were driven back into their trenches. The enemy developed on the front Khabarovka Zoorox a strong artillery fire. A German aeroplane was knocked down by the Russian artillery falling into the region of Gura Gumora, the aviators—two officers—were taken prisoner.

Rumania. The enemy's attempts in attacking the Russian positions south west of Okna have been repulsed by the Russian defending fire.

Caucasus front. An unimportant Turkish attack north east of Kiga has been repulsed by the Russian fire, also another attack of the Turks about a company in strength near Ashaga Suvik (north west of Ognat).

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 9.—Western front. The enemy's artillery developed a strong fire in the Vilna direction near Smorgony, also in the Vladimr Volynsk direction. East of Zolochoff two subterranean galleries were blown up by the enemy, the Russian trenches being damaged by the explosion. North-east of Brzezany the Russian artillery caused a series of strong explosions among the enemy's batteries.

Caucasus front. The Russian troops north west of Senne advanced towards Djonnaver.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 11.—Firing and reconnaissances continue on the western and the Rumanian fronts.

Caucasus front. In the Sakkis region the Kurds tried to dislodge a Russian vanpost, but were discovered in time and partly annihilated, partly scattered. Firing is in progress on the rest of the front.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 12.—Western front. South of the Maroch lake a gas attack was performed by the enemy.

Caucasus front. The Kurds, about three companies in strength, and some Kurd parties assumed on May 10 the offensive on both banks of the Euphrates South West of Erzindian and near the Kelerkami mountain ridge, but their advance was stopped. The Russian troops seized in the night before May 8 a part of the enemy's positions between Senne and Pendjivin. The fight continued the following day and another part of the Turkish positions was seized, but owing to reinforcements, received by the enemy, the Russian troops returned in the evening to their previous positions. Having crossed the river Diala the Russian troops advanced towards Kifri. The Russian troops crossed, while fighting, the river Diala between Djuvaur and Omardvag.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, May 10.—In the Ledro and Adige valleys the enemy attacks were repulsed. Yesterday on the whole front there was the usual artillerying. The fire was more lively at Pruva, Gorizia and Carso. Yesterday night a hostile aircraft dropped bombs in lower Isonzo and near Cormons.

One of the camp hospitals was hit, wounding eight patients. The enemy aeroplanes unsuccessfully raided Italian territory at Albania but were driven off.

On the Trentino front there was artillery activity hindered by the bad weather. In Valdarsa an enemy detachment attempted to capture one of our advanced posts on the slopes east of Zugna, but was repulsed with appreciable losses.

Another enemy detachment attacked our positions on the Vodil, northwest of Toimino and met with the same fate.

In the Gorizia zone and on the Carso there was the usual enemy artillery activity, more intense during the evening, against the Allies' defences on Dessofaiti, but the vigorous intervention of the Allied batteries soon silenced the attacks. Allied fire caused an explosion of munitions at a depot of the enemy's near Boscamalo.

Rome, May 9.—There was desultory artillerying on the whole front, according to the Italian communique. Many patrol skirmishes occurred during the day in Vallarsi and Carso and elsewhere, some prisoners being taken.

Rome, May 11.—On the Trentino front the artillery is particularly active south of the Loppia basis on the Asiago plateau and in the Sugana valley. We repulsed enemy detachments in skirmishes southwest of More in the Adige valley, and at the head of the Maora valley.

On the Julian front the enemy's batteries are more active and in the southern sector of the Carso.

Fine weather has favoured aerial activity. On the night of the 10th, hostile aircraft dropped bombs in the Gorizia area without damage. Our seaplanes and naval airmen bombed the aviation grounds north of Trieste.

Yesterday one of our air squadrons bombed the railworks at Refemberga with good result and returned safely. One of the enemy was brought down in the fight.

Rome, May 12.—Yesterday the artillerying continued normal along the whole front, but was somewhat more active between Astice and Brenta in the Gorizia area and in the southern sector of Carso.

The aerial activity was lively on both sides. The enemy aircraft on the night of the 11th bombed Punta Saobba and also places in the lower Isonzo causing one casualty. One of our squadrons bombed the railway works at Santo Daniele in the Branizza valley.

One of our Caproni machines reached Pola with bombs and caused a large fire in the arsenal.

Yesterday the enemy aeroplanes repeatedly attempted a raid on our territory but everywhere were driven back by the anti-aircraft guns.

One hostile machine only succeeded in reaching Brescia but without dropping bombs.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, May 13.—The artillery activity has been more lively from Tolmino to the sea. Our fire caused explosions and fires in the enemy's lines and the enemy slightly damaged some buildings in Gorizia. In the skirmishes east of Vertoibizza Torrent we captured a dozen prisoners including an officer.

Rome, May 14.—On the Trentino front there were artillery duels yesterday on the Asago plateau. Enemy detachments were repulsed in the neighbourhood of Paneveggio in the Gnolo valley and on the slopes of Mount Castatiella in the Pellegrino valley.

On the Julian front the artillery was increasingly active. Fires are reported in rear of the enemy positions. Southeast of Gorizia patrol raids resulted in the capture of thirty prisoners, two machineguns and a quantity of ammunition. A hostile air squadron dropped bombs in the Aquileja area damaging a basilica and an archaeological museum.

In a brilliant air engagement in the middle of the Isonzo two enemy machines were brought down.

MR. BUCHAN'S WEEKLY REPORT

[OFFICIAL TO THE BRITISH EMBASSY]

London, May 12.—The main interest during the week has been concentrated on that portion of the line from Fresnoy to Bullecourt. These villages and the village of Oppy witnessed some of the fiercest fighting of the whole war. The German guards reserves clung to Oppy as though the fate of the Empire depended upon their holding it, suffering very heavy losses in the vain effort.

Every yard of ground was obstinately contended by the enemy and counterattacks on an unusually formidable scale developed promptly opposite every point where the British troops gained ground, some resulting in the bitterest combats. Most of the attempts were broken up by our artillery which maintained an almost incredible intensity. It is no exaggeration to say that the German dead could be numbered in thousands. The German counterattacks were made at a cost their leaders will never dare publish to the German people:

What the Hindenburg regime dreaded and most energetically sought to evade is now happening, namely the exhaustion of the German manpower at a pace which not only must spell defeat but leave Germany hopelessly crippled in power of regeneration for long years to come. Before the Arras battle started the German communiques and press trumpetted the German withdrawal as a fine strategic retirement effected by Hindenburg's military genius—a withdrawal which would leave the initiative with the German armies and enable them to strike hard with a big strategic reserve which the ruthless employment of the Polish, Belgian and Roumanian labour enabled them to train and accumulate during the winter months.

Despite the much advertised programme of fighting initiative, the German communiques, since the opening of the battle, were devoted to describing the alleged failure of the Allies to break through and the capture by the British and French of over fifty thousand prisoners and four hundred fifty guns as a disastrous defeat. This is a price at which the Allies would be glad to suffer many such disastrous defeats.

As the second week of April was fixed as the date for attack, many weeks before the German retirement had begun, obviously the date of the Allied attack was nowise affected by the withdrawal of the German armies. Every objective was gained in the early stages of the battle and the only check suffered by the British troops hitherto was at Fresnoy where the Germans were obliged to bring three divisions in order to retake.

The battle shows an ever greater advance on the successes than the Somme or Loos and fighting future can be expected on a still more gigantic scale. The Allies will continue to pile up men and ammunition to any extent necessary to achieve their purpose.

Comparing Arras with the battle of the Somme in the recent fighting, during a corresponding period, four times the ground was recaptured, twice the number of prisoners and five times the number of guns were taken, all at a much smaller cost.

One of the most satisfactory features is that the Germans used up double the number of reserves as in a corresponding period on the Somme. The German counterattacks, though very vigorously pressed, were most unsuccessful. Being often made by large bodies over open ground before their main trench lines, they suffered the heaviest casualties.

In a communique issued on the 7th of May the French report the capture of 8,200 prisoners in two days' fighting.

A German official communique on May 7th stated: "Since May 5th, between Soissons and Rheims we brought in as prisoners nine officers and 726 men."

Despite the fact that in two days' fighting the German claim only 735 prisoners against the French 8200, the German communique has the effrontery to state: "In the great battle the day was also successful for us."

In view of the above statement it becomes increasingly difficult to know whether the German communiques are written entirely to keep up the drooping spirits of the German people or whether they are still theoretically supposed to be truthful account of the operations on the front.

CHANCELLOR'S NEW PEACE SPEECH POSTPONED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 8.—The "Lokal Anzeiger" which is a semi-official organ, attributes the postponement of the Chancellor's speech to the possibility of the imminence of an agreeable political event facilitating his task toward peace. The German newspapers are generally impatient of the delay, especially in view of the growing isolation of the Central Powers.

GERMAN STATEMENT DENIED

London, May 12.—Commenting on the German wireless that the French trebled the figures of prisoners taken on the Soissons and Champagne fronts from April 16 to April 20 and asserting that only 7500 Germans were missing between those days, "Le Matin" declares that the third, twenty first, fifth and forty third Bavarian divisions lost respectively 2,383, 2,318, 1,929 and 1,374 prisoners. The losses of the various divisions give a total of 19,672 up to April 20. The French gave a total of 19,000, thus being below the actual figures.

ALLIED GENERALS REPORT FUTILE GERMAN ATTACKS

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 8.—The Germans yesterday and on Sunday night continued their fierce but futile onslaughts against the positions wrested from them in the course of last week. Huge forces in dense formation hurled themselves in vain against the iron barrier of the Allied armies. Sir Douglas Haig and General Nivelle report that enormous losses were inflicted on the enemy and that four more divisions had been identified on the front north of the Aisne. It is improbable that the Germans will be able much longer to keep up the exhausting pace they have been recently keeping, the only result of which can be to open up the way to further serious strategic defeats. In minor operations yesterday appreciable progress was made notably north and west of Rheims.

FOUR DUMA PARTIES MEET IN SOLEMN MEETING

Petrograd, May 12.—A solemn meeting of four parties in the present Duma was held yesterday in the Tauride Palace. President Rodzianko said Russia was not responsible for the war which she did not want but which she must continue to the last good end. The war must be prosecuted in unison with the Allies to a full decisive victory as only such a victory over German militarism will be capable of securing the welfare of all the world. After the speech Rodzianko and all the members rose and warmly greeted the representativs of the Allies.

The Premier Prince Lvoff pointed out that it was not the wonderful character of the revolution which is marvellous but the main idea of the change which embraces not only the welfare of Russia but also the interests of all nations. The great revolution is still proceeding, but every day increases our confidence in the creative powers of the Russian people. War Minister Goutchkoff said the only watchword is that Russia should be at war on the front but at peace at home.

Among other orators were members of the first Duma, the representative of the Labour Party Bramsen and the Social Democratic member of the first Duma Tzeretili, who in a long speech refuted the accusation that Russian Democracy wanted a separate peace. Russian Democracy, said Mr. Tzeretili, will boldly defend its freedom against the Imperialistic armies of the enemy and fight for peace fulfilling Democratic ideas, granting rights to all nations to decide their own destiny.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 12.—At an extraordinary session of the Duma M. Roditcheff, Secretary of State for Finland said that the greater our victory over the enemy the more complete will be the victory of democracy. Unless the German militarism is overthrown the work of all future generations must be devoted to armaments. Russia has adopted liberty in order to overthrow despotism and drive out the enemy from the occupied territories. The Provisional Government has the right to demand every sacrifice. The speech was loudly cheered.

RUSSIAN SOCIALISTS AVOID THE TRAP

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 10.—A conference of Socialists and Extremists has discussed Borgbjerg's invitation to Stockholm and resolved that as Borgbjerg was asking in agreement with Scheidemann and other German Socialists, who side with the German Government, therefore he is an agent of German Imperialists, and consequently they will not participate in a congress attended by Borgbjerg and Scheidemann.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 10.—The Executive of Labour Party meeting in the House of Commons has refused to associate and generalize with the Socialist conference at Stockholm. The meeting has decided to arrange a conference of Allied Labourites and Socialists at London in June.

MOSCOW ALLEGATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Petrograd, May 13.—The papers have published a recent interview of the President of Moscow Russo-Japanese Society Stchenkoff with the local Italian Consul-General, who, the press averred, had stated: "If the present disorganisation in Russia continues the Allies will leave the country to its own devices, and following the existing treaty Japan will occupy Siberia as far as the Urals."

The Italian Consul-General has now written to the press absolutely denying any similar statement, even refuting an official interview with Stchenkoff. The Japanese Consul at Moscow also has written: "Information regarding the existence of such a treaty is false. Japan cherishes no bellicose intentions towards Russia."

New York, May 14.—Mr. Bonar Law has denied the report that a treaty is contemplated with Japan, in virtue of which the latter might overrun Siberia if Russia relaxed her efforts in the present war.

London, May 14.—In the House of Commons Sir J. B. Lansdale asked whether the Government's attention has been called to an interview in a Moscow newspaper wherein the Italian Consul General of that city was represented as having stated that if Russia relaxed her military efforts in the war she would be threatened with serious danger from Japan and that according to a treaty concluded with the Allied Powers Japan would have the right to occupy all Siberia as far as the Ural mountains.

Mr. Bonar Law replied that the Government's attention had been drawn to the interview. "I understand," Mr. Bonar Law said, "that both the Italian Consul General at Moscow and the Japanese Consul have denied the reported interview. It appears scarcely necessary to say that no such treaty has ever even been contemplated."

The Foreign Office is in receipt of a report from Petrograd giving an account of the latest sensation evoked by the Russian newspaper story in which it was alleged that Japan would attack Siberia in case of Russia's conclusion of a separate peace with Germany.

"Of course," said an official of the Foreign Office yesterday, "the allegation is too absurd for us to waste our serious attention upon. The report to hand says the exact man or men responsible for starting such sensation cannot be ascertained."

In connection with this affair a well informed man on Russian situation, is of the opinion that the news in question was published by certain men identified with the war party with a single eye, ignoring the serious injustice to be suffered by a friendly ally of their nation, to the need of convincing those opposed to the further prolongation of the war by artificially vivifying a hypothetical menace. In view of the crisis now threatening the security of the Russian Cabinet it would be safe to say, the man

RUSSIA CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST DUMA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 11.—The anniversary of the opening of the first Duma was celebrated with an extraordinary sitting of members of all Dumas attended by the Government and Diplomatists. President Rodjianko, in a speech was loudly cheered when he repudiated the idea of a separate peace, and declared Russia's loyalty to the Allies.

The assemblage rose and cheered the Allied Ambassadors.

PETROGRAD NOW MOST ORDERLY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 9.—A telegram from Petrograd says that everything is now most orderly. The situation arising from the Government's Note to the Allies appears to have cleared up the Government's firmness and strengthened their influence in the country, while the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates have shown reasonableness unexpected by the pacifists.

VLADIVOSTOK ORDERLY AND QUIET

Lately in the Japanese press were published articles containing false informations about the situation in Vladivostok. These articles spoke about unsettled conditions existing in that town, which threaten the safety of the cargoes landed in the port. Such information can mislead the public by creating an erroneous impression, that it is not safe to send goods via Vladivostok.

The Russian local authorities deny as absolutely false the above stated rumours. Full order reigns actually in Vladivostok and the general situation in the port, as far as the movements of cargoes are concerned, is greatly improved since the recent political events.

above mentioned said, that the internal situation of Russia is far from what it ought to be. It is also not very hard to gather from the conditions reported to be prevailing that the advocates for the continuance of the war to a finish are forced to strain their every nerve in striving to silence the pacifists. There would be practically no choice of recourse that the war party can have to. It is extremely regrettable, however, he said in conclusion, that they should have dragged in Japan in passionately pursuing their end.

Petrograd, May 15.—Replying to an interpellation about the truth of the report that Japan had an aggressive design toward the Russian territory in the Far East, which was made by a member of the executive Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates at a recent meeting Mr. Milyukoff, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, said that Japan entertained a greater wish in the Far East than Baikal. He denied the truth of the rumour that part of the Russian territory in the Far East had been ceded to Japan, which was a pure fabrication.—"Nichi-nichi."

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK IN RUSSIA

London, May 10.—Referring to the decision of the Government to increase and attract to the staff of the Cabinet representatives of parties, which heretofore took no direct part in the administration of the country, the Premier Prince Lvoff wrote to President of Duma Rodzianko and President of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates Tcheidze, requesting them to take steps to further the said project.

The Executive Committee of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates resolved to take the initiative and convoke an international Socialistic Conference to be held in a neutral country.

The Provisional Government has issued a decree abolishing sentence of banishment substituting it by a minimum imprisonment of three years.

The Government has appointed a Commission of eleven members to elaborate statutes to govern elections for the constituent assembly.

The Government has relieved General Roussky of the chief command of Northern Armies.

TURKEY'S PROPOSAL TO RUSSIA

New York, May 16.—A Rome dispatch says that Turkey has proposed a separate peace to Russia through the neutral countries, on the terms of opening the Bosphorus and Dardanelles to the free passage of the Russian warships and merchant steamers.—"Nichinichi."

CHANCELLOR'S VISIT TO VIENNA

London, May 16.—Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg, has suddenly started for Vienna with the permission of the Emperor. It is believed that the Chancellor has gone to Vienna for the purpose of conferring with Count Chelnin, the Austrian Premier, about ways and means necessary for starting peace negotiations before declaring the object of the war on the 15th.—"Nichinichi."

London May 15.—The German Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg has returned to Berlin after visiting the Kaiser at the headquarters of the German army at the front and also visiting the Austrian Foreign Minister at Vienna. It is expected that the Chancellor will make a speech in the Reichstag on the 15th in compliance with the request of the Socialist party who demanded the Chancellor to make clear Germany's object of the war.

Keen interest is being centered upon the speech of the German Chancellor, because his declaration will not only produce a far reaching echo in the Socialist conference at Stockholm, but also has immense bearings upon the personal interests and position of the Chancellor.

The German Conservative party are convinced that the Chancellor is inclined in favour of the principle against territorial cession and war indemnity, which is adhered to by Austria and the Socialists, and are strongly opposed to that idea.—"Jiji."

NEW RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT ISSUES A MANIFESTO

Petrograd, May 9.—The Provisional Government has issued a manifesto stating that after the fall of the old regime, it has accepted unhesitatingly the heavy burden of power, confident of the full support of the country. It has also carried out a number of democratic reforms, viz. amnesty, abolishment of death sentence, national religious equality, etc. It has displayed intense activity in the organization of the defense of the country against the foreign enemy, has granted rights to Poland, has restored the autonomy of Finland, has reconstructed the foreign policy on the basis of renouncement of the violation of rights and the usurpation of foreign territory and fight united with the Allies for the establishment of durable peace, security, and freedom to all nations. But the anarchistic tendencies of some irresponsible groups of population who seek violent achievement of their aims to hinder the activity of the Government, constitute a danger for the future of Russia and prepare ground for a counter revolution. The Government believes it is incumbent on it to state the real situation which might lead to internal anarchy and the defeat of the armies.

In conclusion the manifesto summons the people to rally round the Provisional Government, which will continue its efforts to attract into its staff the representatives of creating forces of the country, who heretofore have taken no direct part in the state administration.

The Minister of Justice Mr. Kerensky has addressed a Note to the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, in which he says that he has entered the Provisional Government on his own initiative before the organization of democracy, whose power has now increased. Therefore it has no longer any right to remain aloof of state administration, when participation will bring the Government new strength and authority. Under the present conditions the representatives of labour democracy must be placed in power by the organization to which it belongs. Pending their decision he continues in office.

RUSSIAN POLITICAL REFORM

Petrograd, May 14.—Prince Lvoff, the Premier, has sent a letter to M. Rodzianko, the President of the Duma, proposing to reorganize the Provisional Government and admit entry into the Cabinet of the representatives of political bodies, which hitherto took no part in the administrative affairs of the Government. Rumours are current everywhere reporting the formation of a coalition Cabinet.—"Nichinichi."

COMMANDER OF PETROGRAD RESIGNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 13.—General Kornilov, commander of the garrison at Petrograd, has resigned his command. No explanation is given, but his action is apparently due to friction with the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates.

HUN INTRIGUE IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 9.—At a meeting of the Council of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, a Dane, named Borgbjerg, representing the labour parties of Scandinavia, transmitted the peace-terms proposed by the German Socialist Party's majority group, namely: The right of freedom of national development; compulsory arbitration of future international disputes; restitution by Germany of occupied territories; a plebiscite in Russian Poland on the question of independence or German or Russian annexation; the restoration of the independence of Belgium, Serbia and Rumania; the restoration to Bulgaria of the Bulgarian districts of Macedonia; to grant Serbia a free port on the Adriatic; amicable rectification of the Lorraine frontier.

The minority group of German Socialists propose even more liberal terms.

The Executive promised early discussion of the proposal.

JUNKERDOM ANGRY AT SOCIALISTS

New York, May 14.—The Berlin Government have refused to give passports to representatives of the minor Socialist party of Germany going to Stockholm to attend the proposed International Socialist Conference. This is due to the fact that the party has incurred the displeasure of the authorities by sending a warning to the committee of the Stockholm conference that the representatives of both the major Socialist party of Germany and the Socialist party of Russia at the conference have been inspired by the German Government, whose interest they are going to advocate at the meeting.—"Asahi."

London, May 8.—Later telegrams from Berlin confirm the belief that no radical change in the Constitution has been adopted.

The Radical and Socialist newspapers continue to urge that the Reichstag should have power to dismiss the Chancellor.

There is a disposition here to believe, however, that the debate on the Constitution in the Reichstag, and possibly even the comment on it, was officially stage-managed to a large extent, the object being, by giving a little talking, to keep the working-classes quiet and impress Petrograd.—Reuter.

May 9.—A flood of rumours has suddenly risen in Switzerland which point to another crisis over the German Chancellor. It is even reported that Count von Hertling, the Bavarian Premier, will succeed Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg.

It is worthy of note that Count von Hertling, who recently returned from a visit to Vienna, writing in a Bavarian newspaper, asserts that Germany does not need an indemnity, but the terms of peace must include the return of the German colonies and the seized ships and permission for German trade to continue as before the war in all oversea countries.—Reuter.

PARIS SOCIALISTS TAKE STRONG STAND

Paris, May 14.—The "Humanite" publishes a draft of the resolution to be moved at the meeting of the National Council of the Socialist Party which will be held on May 27th. This motion denies to any French Socialist the right of representing the Socialist Party at Stockholm and declares the Socialist Party will attend any future sitting of the "International" only on condition that the order of the day of the meeting will consist of:

First:—Examining the responsibilities incurred by the Government with regard to the origin of the present war.

Second:—The responsibilities incurred by Germany and Austria who refused mediation and arbitration shall be defined and the said Governments declared enemies of the "International."

Third:—The German and Austrian Socialists who have been and still are accomplices of the criminal Governments must be arraigned by the International Party and the latter must proclaim that according to the Russian example, Imperialist Germany must become Democratic.

Fourth:—In order that the International Socialist Party may resume its moral situation in the world, the Socialist Party lays before the International a bill indicting as guilty and felonous the representatives of Austrian and German Socialism.

GERMAN SOCIALISTS AT STOCKHOLM

New York, May 14.—An Amsterdam dispatch reports that the German Government has refused to hand passports to the minor party of the German socialists represented by Harse and his followers for going to Stockholm to attend the Socialists conference at Stockholm. Harse and his followers have recently sent a warning to the Socialist headquarters in Stockholm to the effect that the majority party of the German socialists and the Russian socialist representatives were inspired by the German Government and representing its wish and views. This attitude of the minor party has incurred the wrath of the Berlin Government and hence this refusal.—"Asahi."

GOUTCHKOFF'S VALEDICTORY ADDRESS

London, May 16.—The Russian Minister of the Army, who has resigned his post, declares that under the circumstances obtaining he finds it impossible to discharge his duty as the Minister in a satisfactory way.

A Petrograd dispatch reports that M. Goutchkoff, the Minister of the Army and Navy in a valedictory address made before the Duma, stated that he could by no means execute his duties as the Minister of the two branches of Service under the existing state of things.—"Nichinichi."

RUSSIAN WAR MINISTER TO ARMY CONGRESS

Petrograd, May 12.—At a Congress of delegates of Armies held at Petrograd on May 12 Minister Goutchkoff, in a long speech stated that the old regime had left the munition supply and food questions in a state of great disorganisation. The ammunition question has now greatly improved. A definite agreement has been reached with America, who has promised to organise the railway traffic and Russia would secure a favourable and prompt solution of this question. Further he mentioned the unsatisfactory state of the commissariat and summoned to rally all forces of the country to help improve matters.

Minister of Justice Kerensky said citizens must realise their responsibility in the general administration of the country, which must move like a clockwork. Otherwise all our dreams of freedom might be shattered, perhaps drowned in blood.

Tzeretili, a prominent member of the Executive Council of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, pointing out the importance of the attitude of Russia towards the present war, declared Austro-German proletariat have not stepped out of the chauvinistic intoxication into which the Bethmann Imperialistic bourgeoise has plunged them. While the German proletariat were at one with the Kaiser Wilhelm, our position was clear. If now we stretched out a fraternal hand to the people of Central Europe in order to conclude a separate peace, we would ruin our country and cover it with eternal shame. We don't want to break our engagements with the Allies. On the contrary we would make efforts that such should be consolidated in a fraternal union of Democracies and Allies.

Petrograd, May 12.—Minister Miliukoff, speaking at a meeting of the Armies' delegates at Petrograd, said that secret treaties with the allies exist but cannot be divulged, as it would bear prejudice on the prosecution of the war. Russia has renounced political annexations. Our Allies agree with this condition of peace, but understand that the reunion of three parts of Poland and the restitution of Alsace Lorraine to France are not to be an annexation. However no official statement from the allies has yet been received on this question. Nobody has been requested to cover the war expenses of other country but according to the view of our Allies the restitution of the ruined countries should be laid upon their destroyer.

Referring to the Dardanelles, M. Miliukoff said: "We have renounced usurpation politic and from this point of view we cannot pretend to obtain the Dardanelles. Respecting America we can say a loan has been given on very favourable terms. America has also pledged effectual help in unloading at the port of Vladivostok." He was glad to state that no political party in Russia wants a separate peace. (Cheers.) Concluding, the Minister said: Rumours that a part of our territory in the Far East will be given to Japan are not true, but negotiations have been held with this country respecting a railway to be built by Japan in the territory.

New York, May 14.—A Petrograd dispatch says that Mr. Goutchkoff, the Minister of War has resigned.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 14.—Mr. Goutchkoff has resigned the portfolios of War and Marine. In a letter to the Premier he explains that his resignation is due to conditions affecting the Government authority over the Army and Navy, which threaten to be fatal to the country's defence and liberty, even to its existence. He refuses to share the responsibility of the grave crime which is being committed against the country.

THE NEW WAR CHIEFS OF FRANCE

Paris via New York, May 15.—The Cabinet has appointed General Petain, the Verdun hero, Commander in Chief of French Armies. General Nivelle commands a group of armies. General Foch succeeds General Petain as Chief of Staff.

THE NEW BRITISH NAVAL STAFF

London, May 14.—Sir Edward Carson has announced in the House of Commons the formation of the Naval Staff headed by Admiral Sir John Jellicoe.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 14.—In the House of Commons, Lord Carson has announced the following changes in the Board of Admiralty: Admiral Sir John Jellicoe has the additional title of Chief of Naval Staff; Vice-Admiral Lord Oliver, at present Chief of Staff will be an additional member on the Board with the title of Deputy Chief of Naval Staff; Rear-Admiral Duff at present in charge of the Anti-Submarine Department will be an additional member on the Board with the title of Assistant Chief of Naval Staff; Rear-Admiral Halsey, at present Fourth Sea Lord will be Third Sea Lord, in succession to Vice-Admiral Tudor who will be appointed Commander-in-Chief on the China Station; Sir Eric Geddes at present Director-General of Transports will be an additional member on the Board.

GERMANY NEEDS GREAT MAN

London, May 16.—Prince Horstoa, of Germany, writing in the "Deutsche Zeitung" says that the urgent necessity for Germany is the appearance of a great figure like Marshal Hindenburg, other than military man, who will prove equal to the task of saving Germany from the threatening ruin and restoring the dignity of the German Emperor. He insists that Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg shall be held responsible for the destiny of Germany, it resting with him whether the Prussian dynasty will be ruined or maintained.—"Nichinichi."

WAR RESOLUTION BEFORE CHINESE PARLIAMENT

Peking, May 9.—The most prominent feature of the situation during the debate on the war resolution in the National Assembly yesterday was the fact that while the opposition party insisted on the immediate division on the resolution bill apparently with a view to dropping the bill before the Government could take any measures to secure the support of neutral members, the pro-Government members contended for the necessity of giving enough time for deliberate considerations on the bill from the motive to draw more support from the members still remaining undecided. Apart from these hostile partisans, those members who though favouring the war resolution are against the present Ministry opined in favour of the postponement of the proposal seeing the advantage of the delay of the final settlement which will give them time for their political manoeuvres against the Ministry. As the result of chaotic debate the bill was finally referred to the Whole House Committee.

According to later information, when the war resolution was placed on the order of day the President of the House read the text of the resolution, in which it is stated after the rupture of diplomatic relations Germany still continued her action in violation of neutrality of China, and dared to trespass on the principle of international law and humanity by destroying and injuring the lives and property of the Chinese citizens, and for the purpose of accelerating the return of peace and protecting the lives and property of the Chinese people the President of the Republic of China recognises the necessity of declaring war on Germany.

The chairman then announced that with this motive the Government had submitted the resolution to the National Assembly for its approval in accordance with Art 35 of the Republican Constitution and requested a camera meeting of the House. Premier Tuan, accompanied by his personal staff, then came in and explained the resolution.

Replying to an interpellation of Mr. Wang, an opposition leader, the Premier stated that though the Entente Powers had promised China to render assistance the matter lacked a final settlement as it was not submitted to formal negotiations of the Powers concerned and the pressing need of China was to declare war on Germany immediately which would lead to a favourable development of diplomatic situation. Further replying to an interpellator the Premier declared that he was confident of the decided victory on the part of the Entente powers and accordingly it was a great disadvantage to China if she did not identify her interests with those of the Entente powers by joining the war on the side of the allies. The Premier spoke in very determined way and asked the house for the immediate voting on the bill. A hot debate followed and a motion was made urging the immediate division on the resolution, but it was rejected.

The resolution was finally referred to a committee. During the debate, the Premier, replying to another interpellator who questioned as to the truth of the report that the Premier had had an interview with one Kamezo Nishihara alleged to be an emissary of Count Terauchi, the Japanese Premier, stated that he had had an interview with the Japanese in question, but denied the allegation that he was an emissary of Count Terauchi.—"Asahi"

Peking, May 10.—Up to a late hour no definite news was available concerning the committee meeting of the Lower House which was still sitting at 9 o'clock. A large crowd of so-called petitioners, who according to a report, are hired for the occasion has been demonstrating outside the House while inside a heated debate has been going on with frequent exciting scenes.

Soon after the opening of the sitting the attendance of the Premier was demanded but Premier Tuan Chi-jui did not appear until 5.30 p.m.

Many rumours are in circulation. One states that in the course of the proceedings the opposition attempted to leave the House destroying a quorum. The House at ten o'clock was surrounded by troops in order to prevent members from leaving.

Another report said that prior to the Premier's arrival a vote was taken resulting in a majority against the declaration of war.

Peking, May 10.—The Lower House of Parliament adjourned without reaching a decision on the war policy and declaration of war requested by the President and Premier.

A Shanghai correspondent wires that a rumour is abroad to the effect that as a counter-proposal to China's request for recognition of the actual 10 per cent. increase of her customs duty on all goods imported to China, the Japanese Government has asked China to make an exemption in the import duty on cotton manufactures from Japan and the export duty on raw cotton, iron and wool imported by Japanese merchants from China, and the Chinese Government has decided to comply with Japan's request as far as the removal of the export duty on cotton, iron and wool is concerned, partly in view of minimizing the persistent opposition opinion raised among the trading circles in Japan against the proposed increase of her customs tariff on imported goods, and partly for the purpose of aiding and encouraging the increase of her export trade with Japan.

The Chinese cotton spinners union at Shanghai is, however, against this proposal of the central government and has started an opposition movement against the measures of the Government. The Chinese cotton spinners opine that the recent inactivity of the native cotton spinning industry is due to the increase of the export of cotton to Japan and therefore, if the export duty on the raw cotton exported to Japan is removed the result will be a decided ruin of the native industry which will be paralyzed and compelled to an eventual stoppage, because, in the first place, the removal of the export duty will stimulate the export of raw cotton to Japan and further enhance the soaring tendency of its price, which is accounted for by the scarcity of stocks through the increased outflow of the goods in store, and secondly, the Chinese cotton spinning circles will be unable to compete with their Japanese confreres in the line, owing to a lack of monetary, shipping and other facilities for pushing their trade interests, while the Japanese cotton spinners are receiving every facility and benefit furnished by monetary organs, shipping companies and also at the hands of the Government in the matters relating to the accommodation of necessary funds, means of transportation, and other necessary facilities for carrying on their business with advantage.

In these circumstances the removal of the export duty on raw cotton, if enforced, will finally lead to the eventual ruin of the Chinese cotton industry, for which reason the Chinese business men concerned have determined to have recourse to a strong opposition against the decision of the Peking Government, which is understood to have come to a decision to acquiesce in Japan's counter request.

A Peking dispatch says that the National Assembly held a meeting of the whole house committee to discuss the war resolution submitted by the Government Thursday afternoon. Prior to the opening of the session, several thousands of citizens assembled before the parliamentary building and stopping the parliamentary members pressed them to support the war resolution, threatening, should their request be not accepted, to resort to violence. The crowd declared that unless the parliament pass the resolution they would not disperse, but were determined to appeal to force. The police detailed on duty to keep order in the House, apparently siding with the mob, also threatened the opposition members who were placed under strict surveillance and close watch of many police officials. The opposition members were indignant at the unconstitutional measures taken by the Tuan ministry and denounced the ministry as a second Yuan ministry for its high-handed oppressive measures because of its inciting the mob for threatening the opposition members.

According to a message received in official quarters on the 11th the meeting of the National Assembly on Thursday afternoon presented a scene of great confusion and uproar. Some three thousand men belonging to citizens league advocating the declaration of war went to the parliamentary house before the opening of the session and threatened the opposition members. In the demonstration, they appealed to force and about twenty members of the opposition parties were wounded by the mob. A force of the police was detailed for the suppression of the mob. Premier Tuan, being requested by the opposition members to attend the sitting, came to the parliamentary building toward the evening after the mob was dispersed to make a speech before the assemblage. Nothing is known as to the later development of the situation owing to a lack of detailed report since. But it is believed that in view of the great confusion the session must have been abandoned without being able to proceed with the programme of the day.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 13.—The Ministers of Justice, Navy and Agriculture have tendered their resignations and it is stated that the Premier has also prepared a memorandum tendering his resignation, but owing to the intervention of the Tuchuns still in Peking who held a meeting yesterday, the memorandum has not been forwarded to the President.

The party leaders in a meeting have decided not to take action at present in order to give the Premier an opportunity to prove the sincerity of his assurance that the instigators of Thursday's riot would be duly punished.

A number of the mob leaders have been arrested.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking May 14.—The Cabinet now consists of only two members namely the Premier and Minister of Education who is also acting Minister of the Interior. All the rest have tendered their resignations though it is uncertain at present whether they will be accepted.

Various proposals are being put forward to solve the crisis. A section of the Government supporters suggest the formation of an enlarged coalition Cabinet including the party leaders but this is not likely to meet with success, owing to the probable refusal of the leaders except those of the Chin-pu-tang to enter such a Cabinet in the present circumstances.

Opposition circles consider that the Premier has only two courses either to maintain his position by force or to resign immediately despite the Tuchuns' insistence on his remaining as Premier.

The vernacular newspapers mention three possible successors to the Premiership, namely, General Wang Shih-chen, Chief of the General Staff; Hsu Shih-chang, the ex-Premier; and Li Ching-hsi, recently appointed Minister of Finance.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 15.—With the exception of the ministers of the Navy and of the Finance practically the whole cabinet met yesterday to discuss the situation. Ku Chung-hsin, Minister of Agriculture, suggested that some definite action should be taken regarding the war policy and a reply should be demanded from parliament. Accordingly a despatch was drawn up and forwarded to Parliament saying that the cabinet on May 7th submitted the decision it had arrived at was to declare war on Germany. Although a week has elapsed Parliament has sent no reply. The Government now demand an immediate reply be given by Parliament to the questions. It is stated that Premier's future course of action depends upon Parliament's decision. At the same time it is understood a majority of the opposition will not openly vote against war but will abstain from attending Parliament in order to prevent a decision being reached, through lack of a quorum.

AMERICA AND BELGIAN RELIEF

Washington, May 11.—The United States has taken over the entire cost of Belgian relief supplies, thus relieving France and Great Britain, who have hitherto borne 90 per cent. of the outlay.

STEEL CORPORATION'S SUBSCRIPTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

New York, May 9.—The Steel Corporation has subscribed five million sterling to the Liberty Loan.

U.S. WAR ARMY AND NAVY DEFICIENCY BILL

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, May 9.—Congress will be asked to appropriate £200,000,000 to build American merchantmen to overcome submarinism, the Shipping Board proposing that the Government take over all the steel mills and the cancellation of private contracts.

The Board estimates that from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 tons of steel and wooden ships may be constructed in two years.

Washington, May 10.—The conferees on the Army Bill have agreed to eliminate the Senate provision authorising a volunteer force to be immediately sent to France, and fixing the ages of conscription from 21 to 30 inclusive. It is expected that the Bill will be promptly passed in the present form by both Houses.

Washington Via New York, May 15.—The Senate Appropriations Committee has favourably reported on the War Army and Navy Deficiency Bill, carrying an unprecedented total of $3,391,000,000, including $ 400,000,000 to build up the merchant marine.

ELEVEN GERMAN DESTROYERS SIGHTED AND ENGAGED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 11.—A scouting force of light cruising class on Tuesday morning, between the English and Dutch coasts, sighted eleven German destroyers, and immediately closed and opened fire. The enemy immediately steamed off at full speed southward under cover of a dense smoke-screen. Chase continued eighty minutes. The chasers engaged the enemy at long range but were unable to overtake them: Four destroyers chased the Germans until within range of the Zeebrugge batteries. The enemy was hit. Our casualties were one wounded.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 13.—The Admiralty announces that a portion of our Dover forces successfully carried out on Saturday morning a very heavy bombardment of Zeebrugge. The naval air service co-operated. Over fifteen air combats were fought wherein four of the enemy's machines were destroyed, five driven down uncontrolled. Two of ours are missing, one of which landed in Holland and has been interned.

AMERICAN TAXATION INCREASES

Washington, May 9.—The proposed war taxes Bill, which is made a feature of by the newspapers, would double the income taxes and abolish the free list of imports, making the minimum tariff duty ten per cent. with horizontal increases of ten per cent. on all articles now taxable. The internal revenue will also be greatly increased. A tea tax of two cents per pound is also proposed.

It is estimated that these levies and a multitude of other new taxes will bring the Government eighteen hundred thousand dollars per annum.

AUTHORIZES ROOSEVELT DIVISION

Washington, May 13.—The House of Representatves, after a stormy debate, has instructed its conferees on the Army Bill to restore the Senate amendment permitting ex-President Roosevelt to lead a division of American volunteers to France.

Oyster Bay, May 13.—Colonel Roosevelt has expressed deep gratitude for the House's wise and patriotic action, saying that it authorizes for immediate use at the front classes of troops not included in the selective draft.

An aide-de-camp in the Army Department quoting on the permission granted to Colonel Roosevelt to join the armies on the French front said:

"The Department has also received a report that the United States is intending to send a few corps to the French front but if Roosevelt was to join the Allies the American contingent will be like a 'single hair of nine oxen' and will not turn the tide of the war to any extent. Already there are 900 divisions fighting, total of each side, so that an insignificant number of American reinforcements will not affect the situation in any way. Instead of such steps, a greater benefit can be derived by sending a number of destroyers to drive away the undersea crafts." Another expert is quoted to the following effect:

"Germany has divined that the Russians have no strong will to fight so have transferred a part of her Eastern forces to the West giving much hardships to the Allies. Hence, the United States cannot be witnessing the scene without taking any steps. As leader of the volunteers Colonel Roosevelt is just the person. Reading between the lines of the ex-President's speech at the Cairo University in the itinerary of his hunting trip to Africa, it may be seen how much Roosevelt disliked the policy of Germany. The German papers at that time were wild at the attitude taken by Roosevelt. As an American he is surprisingly militaristic and the present turn of event in the life of the man is a safety valve after a stillness of these years and which a man of his temperament and energy cannot stand without nervous tension. However, with only a small contingent his going to the front will not affect the situation in any way outside of giving the armies at the front to have a man of his calibre there to fight. In short, it is nothing but busybodied step.

NEW BRITISH VOTE OF CREDIT LARGEST EVER ASKED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 9.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Bonar Law, in introducing a vote of credit for five hundred millions said it was the largest sum ever asked in a single vote. Expenditure recently exceeded the estimate, the average daily expenditure at present amounting to £7,452,000 of which two millions went to the Allies and Dominions, exceeding the Budget estimate of such advances by one million daily. But he hoped that the Budget estimate would still be realisable owing to the promptitude of America's financial assistance to the Allies.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN CHINA DISCUSSED

Black cloud is now threatening the political situation at Peking, and the "Jiji" fears that a storm might hit the Peking government if the statesmen and politicians of China do not foresee the coming disturbance and prevent the arrival of the storm. The paper hopes that Chinese politicians will put aside their personal and party differences at this important moment and give their full attention to the welfare of the nation.

Formerly, the Koumin party controlled the majority votes both in the Senate and House of Representatives, but the party failed in the election held last year and the influence of the Koumin party is weakening in both Houses of Parliament. If the general election of 1918 is held under the Tuan cabinet, the Koumin party will meet with another defeat. Consequently the party has been watching for an opportunity to overturn the Tuan cabinet, and hold the next general election under its own cabinet.

The problem of joining the war rose, and the Koumin party took it up to oppose the Tuan Cabinet. The members of the Koumin Party are not against the participation in the war, but they opposed the plan of Premier Tuan to join the Entente, merely from the intention to oppose the Tuan cabinet, and prevent the present cabinet from using the military powers to oppress the people, under the pretext to control the Germans and Austrians in China.

The opposition of the Koumin Party against the participation in the war was the cause of the present political disturbance at Peking. At this moment, several of the ministers of the Tuan cabinet had resigned, and the Koumin party regarded this as a good opportunity to attack the cabinet, and doubled its efforts to overturn the Tuan cabinet.

On the other hand, the Tuan cabinet desired to follow the example of other nations and declare war against Germany, but this desire has brought difficulties upon the cabinet. While sympathy should be extended to the cabinet, the Premier is responsible for the present situation, being unable to control and influence the people to give support to his noble desire. At the time of its organization, the Tuan cabinet had the support of the people, but it gradually lost its democratic tendency and became a bureaucratic cabinet. The cabinet and the Southern parties have been separated wider and wider, and at present the Peking government and Southern China can not stand together. The "Jiji" believes that the Tuan cabinet is partly responsible for the present political situation of China. It is reported that Premier Tuan may dissolve the Diet, but the paper considers that if the dissolution of the Diet is made, the cabinet is violating the present laws of China, and the political situation will become far more dangerous and chaotic than at present.

China's participation in the war is desired by the Entente powers, but they do not wish the joining of China at the sacrifice of the internal peace. The Premier should give full consideration to the problem of joining the Entente, or else, he will place the nation in a chaotic condition. Almost all members of the Tuan cabinet had tendered their resignations, and Premier Tuan is now relying upon his military power. But the military officers of Chihli are not under the control of Premier Tuan, and his military influence is limited. Yuan Shih-kai once controlled the military power of entire China, but Tuan has only a small part of the military organization of China under his control. The Premier should not, says the "Jiji," have too much confidence in his military influence.

The "Jiji" declares that the reorganization of the present cabinet is essential ever only for solving the problem of participating in the war. After the death of the former president Yuan, China can be only ruled by a joint cabinet, including both the northern and southern statesmen. However with proper arrangement, the differences between the cabinet and the Koumin party could be easily solved, as the paper believes that the party will not oppose the participation in the war, when the re-organization of the present cabinet becomes possible.

U.S. REVENUE BILL

The Committee on Revenue of the House of Representatives of the United States passed the bill of increasing the national revenue of the United States by raising the rate of taxes. The bill has to obtain the support of the Committee of Revenue of the Senate, and at present, it is not yet known, whether the plan of increasing the revenue will be actually carried out, says the "Chugai Shogyo."

But the Bill passed by the Committee of the House of Representatives includes the ten per cent. increase of the duty upon imports, and new duty of ten per cent. on articles admitted into the country free of duty in the past. If the bill was passed by the Senate, and actually put into force, it will greatly affect the Japanese trade with the United States.

The Japanese raw silk which has been imported to the United States free of duty will be taxed ten per cent., and the silk merchants of Japan believe that the ten per cent. duty will greatly increase the price of silk in the United States, and the demand will decrease. On the other hand the duty on silk fabrics will be increased by ten per cent., and the prices of silk fabrics will also advance, and the silk weavers and traders of Japan will suffer from the increased duty.

Even in the United States a voice is raised against the imposing of ten per cent. duty upon the free articles. All materials which were allowed free import, will be taxed ten per cent. and the American industries will also suffer from the increased cost of raw materials.

The "Chugai" believes that the increase of the import duties will be only a temporary policy of the American Government to increase the revenue of the country during the war, and it will not be kept after the war and the paper has no intention whatever to oppose the plan of the United States. But it points out that the increase of duty will affect the Japanese trade and industries and hopes that the Japanese government will explain fully and frankly to the American authorities the possible effect of such increased duty, and arrive at some arrangement satisfactory to both Japan and the United States.

TUAN CABINET IN DANGER

The "Tokyo Asahi" states that the Tuan Cabinet of China is in danger of change or dissolution, if the Committee in whose hand the bill of declaring war against Germany is now placed, decides in disfavour of the war. The Tuan cabinet tried to oppress the parliament to pass the bill, but recently the influence of the cabinet has been weakened. The weakning of the Tuan cabinet was caused by the strong opposition of the Koumin party, but was also influenced by the opposition of the general public.

Premier Tuan called the Military Governors to Peking to consult upon the situation, and it was believed to have been his intention to force the bill upon the Parliament with the military backing, but the conference of the Military Governors was concluded without accomplishing anything for the cabinet.

The "Asahi" believes that the most important political question to-day, is the lack of confidence in the Tuan cabinet, and the matter will be discussed independent of the declaration of war against Germany. The Koumin party is now giving more attention to the lack of confidence in the cabinet than to the declaration of war. It is natural that either the change or the dissolution of the cabinet will happen before deciding upon the declaration of war.

Among the Chinese statesmen, there are some who believe that the re-organized Tuan cabinet with the ministers from the Progressive as well as Koumin Parties will save the situation. However it is doubtful whether the Koumin party will accept the joint cabinet or not. On the other hand, Premier Tuan is expected to support the declaration of war even at the sacrifice of the re-organization of his cabinet. If this is so, the Tuan cabinet is only utilizing the declaration of war to oppress the Koumin party. Consequently, the political problem of China at present is not the question of the declaration of war against Germany, but the lack of confidence in the Tuan cabinet, and the counter scheme to uphold the power of the northern statesmen.

On May 9th, the Foreign Office at Tokyo held an important conference, although the paper is unable to learn the subjects of discussion, and on the same day, the Ministers of the Entente powers at Peking held a conference and the French Minister called upon Dr. Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese Foreign Minister. Judging from these events, the "Asahi" says that it is evident that the Entente powers are over-rating the Chinese declaration of war against Germany, and they have absolute confidence in the Chinese Premier.

The public opinion of China does not favour entrance into the European war, but the Japanese government is trying to aid the Tuan government and invite China to join the war. If Japan aid the Chinese cabinet, without considering the wish of the Chinese public, Japan will be hated by the Chinese in general. The "Asahi" says that its opinion regarding the policy towards China is entirely contrary to the policy now taken by the Japanese government.

DISORDERLY SCENE IN CHINESE PARLIAMENT

The Peking correspondent of the "Asahi" reports that the meeting of the whole house committee of the National Assembly on the 10th witnessed almost unprecedented confusion. The house could not assume its business until 6 o'clock in the evening. Premier Tuan Chi-jui did not come to the house, though all other ministers of the cabinet were present. A large number of armed police continued to pour into the parliamentary building not to suppress the mob but to threaten the members of the opposition parties. The opposition members thereupon appealed to President Li Yung-hung complaining about the wanton assault of the mob. The President ordered Premier Tuan to take measures to disperse the mob, whereon the Premier ordered the chief of the police board to take prompt measures to disperse the crowd. The order of the Premier was carried out, but the crowd refused to obey the commands of the police inspector, except a small number of coolies who were mingled in the mob. Mr. Fan, Minister of Education, and Mr. Tuan, the President of the National Assembly, interviewed the representatives of the crowd which professed themselves the citizens league and requested them to disperse the crowd.

The representatives, however refused to listen to their request and insisted that unless the house pass the war resolution within twenty-four hours they would not go away. When Premier Tuan appeared on the spot to attend the meeting at half past seven the representatives of the citizens league welcomed him with loud cheers and presented him a petition for the declaration of war. The meeting was opened with the attendance of the Premier, but the members were extremely indignant and refused to open the debate on the bill. The members made an uproar and asked the responsibility of the Premier for the disorder and confusion. President Li Yung-hung ordered the gendarmerie to disperse the mob but the gendarmerie refused to follow his orders.

About half past nine in the evening the chief of the police board ordered the crowd to disperse and detailed a force of mounted police and troops, by whose efforts the crowd was finally dispersed. At first the crowd offered a stubborn resistance to the police refusing to disperse and insisting not to go away unless the house pass the war resolution. Finally the chief of the police board ordered a batch of troops to disperse the crowd by force. At the command of the police inspector general the troops set about the task of dispersing the crowd, who were forced to retire being trampled down by the steeds or being wounded with the bayonet's end. In the disorder and confusion that followed many were wounded. A Japanese named Nakano who is a member on the staff of the Associated Press in Peking was hit on the forehead by a stone thrown by the mob while standing outside the parliamentary building. Within the parliamentary building the session of the whole house committee was continued amid uproar and confusion, but no debate took place on the order of day. Members severely attacked the Premier asking his responsibility for the disorderly scene. The Premier gave an assurance for the future and the meeting was closed without debate.

It has transpired that among the crowd who enveloped the parliamentary building and threatened the members of the opposition parties were some 500 men belonging to the garrison under command of the prefect of Kingchao, who were recently reported to have left Peking for unknown destination without any definite commission. The intrigue is believed to have been contemplated long since.

Further dispatches from Peking reporting on the disorderly scene in the session of the whole house committee of the National Assembly on the 10th state as follows:

The members of the opposition parties who were attending the session reported to President Li Yuan-hung by telephone on the serious state of affairs and appealed for protection. The President at once dispatched Mr. Fan, Minister of the Interior, to the parliamentary building to quell the mob and take proper measures for the suppression of the disturbances. On the arrival of the Minister, the house held an emergency council and decided to request the attendance of Premier Tuan and demand his explanations for the incident for which he was responsible. When the Premier made his appearance many members, indignant at the unconstitutional measures taken by the Premier, as they concluded, interpellated why the Premier took such oppressive measures to incite the mob. The Premier replied that he had no knowledge about the matter, and to the request of some members who asked him to disperse the crowd the Premier thought it improper to take such measures toward a body of rightful citizens who he understood as having come for the purpose of making a petition to the legislative body on the matters relating to political affairs. He refused to explain on the affair because he had no hand in the matter and therefore was not in a position to satisfy the demand of the members. Thereon some public procurators were called in and an examination of the representatives was started, when it was ascertained that the crowd mainly consisted of coolies and others who could hardly be called citizens and who had been hired by General Liu and a few other high officers of the army, according to their confessions, for an insignificant amount of money. As the result of the disclosure of the true aspect Premier Tuan was compelled to promise the punishment of those mob who had inflicted injuries on twelve members of the opposition party and ordered the crowd to disperse. The order was subsequently restored.

Prior to this, when Premier Tuan arrived at the parliamentary building many members indignant at the intrigue which they attributed to the instance of the Premier, assailed him with severe rebukes and demanded an assurance for the safety of the parliament in future. The negotiations took two hours and a half. Premier Tuan pledged to order the troops and police force to disperse the crowd and take proper measures for the protection of the parliament and personal safety of the members. Orders were given out and carried out by the metropolitan police inspector general, who dispersed the citizens petition league assembled in front of the parliamentary building. Thereon the house sat in session, but decided to put off the debate on the war resolution till the Premier clearly vouchsafed for his responsibility for the incident. The house then rose at half past ten.

The incident brought about very unfavourable turn of the political situation to the Premier and most of the radical members who hitherto supported the Premier and his colleagues have changed their mind and are going to shake hands with the opposition members because of their displeasure and indignation at the unconstitutional and oppressive measures resorted to by the Premier and his followers. They have come to a decision to vote for the want of confidence in the Tuan ministry before taking up the war resolution bill. The general impression is that the foolish scheme designed by the followers of the Premier has completely wrecked the political tactics of the Premier, which is impossible to relieve.

PRESIDENT OF TOKYO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

The problem of appointing the new President of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce, will be the leading question to be brought before the general meeting of the Chamber of Commerce to be held on May 27th. Dr. Soyeda has been named by some as the successor to Mr. Nakano, present President, whose term will expire this year, but Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, declared his unwillingness to sanction the appointment of Dr. Soyeda. It is reported that the General Meeting will not nominate Dr. Soyeda as the members of the Chamber do not like to have any controversy with the Department of Agriculture and Commerce. However in considering a new successor to Mr. Nakano discussions will take place at the meeting. It is likely that Mr. Nakano, who refused to be re-elected, will again be selected as the President, and members will persuade him to accept the re-election.

Tuesday afternoon, the officials of the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce, held a conference to discuss the problem of appointing the new President, but it is reported that they did not arrive at any decision, on account of disagreement of opinions.

If Mr. Nakano is re-elected and he accepts the nomination, there will be no more trouble in the Chamber of Commerce, but in case Mr. Nakano flatly refuses the nomination, and the members are unable to select any other suitable man for the position another outburst of discussion and disagreement will be caused.

OGODA RAILWAY DISASTER

At the Aomori District Court a sentence was announced in the case of the railway disaster at Ogoda some time ago. Toyamori, deputy station master of the Ogoda station, and Yamamoto, an employe of the station ,who were held responsible for the regrettable railway accident, were sentenced to 5 years penal servitude and 2 years imprisonment respectively.

grounds. It is their intention to erect such a stadium that will make it possible to hold the World's Olympic games in Tokyo. The Japanese athletes suffered from the absence of the proper Stadium to hold their athletic meets, and when this proposed stadium is erected, they will have what they longed for many years.

The Olympiad was successfully carried out, despite the inexperience of the officials and judges, and all those concerned in the management of the Olympiad should be heartily congratulated upon the success.

The feature of the last day's event was the winning of Decathlon by Noguchi, a Japanese, with the total score of 678 points . In the first five events of Decathlon, Saavedra, the Filipino, who won the Decathlon at the last meet of the Far Eastern Games, led all others, and he was expected to carry off the honour again, but in one mile run, he was unable to win good points, and Noguchi the Japanese won the first place. It is reported that the cold weather and his participation in too many events made Saavedra exhausted. Villanueva, a Filipino was second with the score of 646, and Saavedra was third with 641 points. Noguchi obtained most of his points in the running events and Broad Jump.

Japan should be proud to have an athlete who beat Saavedra and win Decathlon. Noguchi is still a young man, and with proper training he will develop into an excellent all round athlete. Thus both Pentathlon and Decathlon were won by the Japanese.

Twenty Five Mile Marathon Race was another event of the last day that drew a large crowd to the field as well as along the course from the Shibaura field to Tsurumi. Sixteen athletes, all Japanese, started on the race at a little after half past two. Among the sixteen runners were Mr. K. Nibino, Member of House of Representatives, who is forty-seven years old, and a sixteen year boy. Both failed to make fast time, but they both covered the course of twenty-five miles.

The drizzling rain and the cold weather was a bad handicap for the Marathon runners, and Hashimoto, the first man, made the good time of two hours, thirty one minutes, 23 1/5 seconds. The second man was Kato who was almost ten minutes later than Hashimoto. Despite the rain, a large crowd lined along the twelve and a half mile course to Tsurumi, and every runner as he passed was cheered by the crowd.

Open Two Mile Bicycle race was held on the last day and Fujiwara, Ikeda, Matsukura, and Aldaguer participated. The four riders were almost neck and neck for eight laps, and in the final lap, Ikeda started the sprint, and he was the first to finish almost ten yards ahead of Fujiwara, and Aldaguer was third. The time was two minutes 31 seconds.

Another open event was 220 Yard Race. Jacobson, Teacher of Kobe Higher Commercial School, Crane, Missionary, Silver, Cable Operator, Hongkong; Nelson, and Dosker, participated. Jacobson finished first in 24 seconds, Crane was second and Silver third.

The Open Half Mile Relay was held between the Japanese team and the foreigners' team. Jacobson, Silver, Nelson and Crane made the Foreign Team, and Madono, Seki, Okuno and Yamanouchi, the latest short distance Japanese runners made up the Japanese team. The Japanese team made the fast time of one minute and 38 seconds. The foreigners were only a few yards behind the Japanese.

Basket Ball Exhibition Game between the Philippine team and Foreigners was held in the afternoon, and the game was won by the Foreigners team by the score of 29-7. Volley Ball Game was held between the Chinese and Philippine teams, but on account of the slippery ground they were unable to play a brilliant game, and the score was 21-7, 21-4 in favour of the Chinese. Open Discus Throw, Hammer Throw, and Shot Put were also held.

The first places in the eight swimming events held were won by the Japanese, and the victories in the swimming events enabled the Japanese team to win so large a championship score. In the Swimming events, the Chinese and the Philippine obtained three points each.

In 50 Yard Swim, Saito was first in 26 2/5 seconds. Ukai was second and Migallon, the Filipino was third. In 220 Yard Swim, Uchida won the first in 2 minutes, 46 1/5 seconds, Ikegava was second, and Ukai third. 220 Yard Breast Stroke Swim was won by Takahama in 3 minutes 29 seconds. Lei, the Chinese, was second and Matsumoto was third. In 100 Yard Swim, Uchida who made so good a time on trial was expected to win, but he lost the first place to Saito, and took only the second place, and Shiroyama was third. The time was 1 minute five seconds. Whether Uchida was not in his good form yesterday, or the timing of his record on Friday was mistaken, is still unknown.

440 Yard Swim was participated by the Japanese only, and the first was Noju, the second, Kato, and the third Tamai. The time was 6 minutes, 41 4/5 seconds. The first and second places of 100 Yard Back Stroke were won by the Japanese and the third place went to Lei, the Chinese. Miyoshi was first and Suzuki was second. The time was 1 minute 23 2/5 seconds.

Only four Japanese participated in 880 Yard Swim, and Uchida, was first in 13 minutes 42 3/5 seconds, Yamaki second, and Ikeda third. 220 Yard Relay swimming race was also won by the Japanese, and the second was the Philippine and the Chinese finished third. The time was 1 minute 51 3/5 seconds.

From the beginning the Japanese swimmers had confidence of winning many points, but they feared the Philippine swimmers, but in many swimming events, the Filipinos failed to qualify, and almost all places were won by the Japanese. If the Philippine team had better swimmers, Japan might not be able to win the championship. However it should be considered that the Philippine swimmers suffered from the cold weather and cold water, while the Japanese swimmers were used to the cold water.

No world's record was broken in the entire events held at Shibaura, and the results of many events are far behind the amateur records, but they did much better than expected. Especially in the long distance races fast times were recorded, considering the bad course and cold weather. In the track events, also several good times were made, and the record made by Catalon in covering 100 yards in ten seconds flat is to be regarded wonderful, as the track was very soft on the day the event was pulled off.

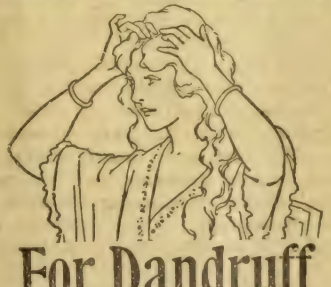
In Field events, the Far Eastern athletes are far behind the Occidental athletes, but it is probably due to their lack of proper training, and they are not used to take part in the field events. If the World's Olympic is to be held in Japan within a few years, by that time, the Far Eastern athletes will make extraordinary developments, and may be able to defeat the occidentals in some of the events at least.

The Filipino Team trounced the Waseda Team by 8-6 proving that they are non too weak for the winner's of the Far Eastern Baseball Championship. It was first scheduled that Meijis were to play to-day but since the Filipinos desired to get another chance at the Waseda nine the bill was altered. The visiting team knew what they were about in the game yesterday.

In the first inning the homers took the offensive and scored one tally by hitting the Filipino slabist and it looked like as if the Waseda's was to repeat the same tale for the third time. Before five innings were out the score stood 3-1 in favour of the home team.

The lucky frames for the visitors were the sixth and seventh when they scored seven runs.

Both teams hit well totalling 9 hits each. The Filipinos were credited with one two bagger and one three sacker which proved timely bringing in the large number of tallies.



The Waseda's rallied to even up but failed and the game ended by 8-6.

Kumagai, Champion of the Far Eastern Tennis Singles and Mikami-Kumagai, Champions of the Far Eastern Doubles were the decision given after the results of tournament.

As predicted the matches proved the most attractive both in the forenoon and afternoon.

for deciding the championship. Fargas played excellently showing signs at times as if he might down Kumagai. Kumagai maintained his peerlessness by his accurate placing on the corner lines working out his opponent. The sets were 6-4, 6-2 and 6-2.

Matsubara defeated Pan in the other match by 6-2, 6-2 and 6-3.

Matsubara is an under-graduate at Keio University and is a recruit with the regulation ball. He has developed rapidly and won in the preliminaries over such men as Asabuki, Yamazaki Mikami and Nomura.

Pan must be credited with his sportsmanlike playing. Nowithstanding his sprained thigh incurred during the broad-jump and his consecutive defeats, he played until the last. Pan is a graduate of Ann Arbor and it is in all probability that his spirit of sportsmanship was gained while there. Not that the majority of the athletes were unsportsmanlike but cases can be pointed out in the various events where this spirit may be questioned. It is urgently desired that the Japanese public learn to commend this sort of athletes for it is not always the victors who must be shown in the limelight of fame. A good loser is just as good.

The calling card of the list of matches culminated in the doubles between Philippines, represented by Fargas-Suarez and Japan by Kumagai and Mikami.

The two first named players have been playing together for many seasons and play a well balanced team work so that many a tennis fan will not have been surprised to see them come out as the top-notchers of this event. On the other hand Japan does not shine in doubles as compared to singles for whatever the reasons may be, there always seems to be a hitch in the co-operation between Mikami and Kumagai.

The tournament was a clean and an interesting one. There was but one match alone in the afternoon event but a large number of persons dug up their bills, a not too low fee, and entered to see the game. The results, however were not very close being 6-2, 6-1 and 6-2.

These results give the Japanese players the pennant of the Far East and although many of the other events may be contested as to the actual championship of the Far East but in this and in the swimming Japan may well challenge any comers in the East if any question is raised.

In order to congratulate the successful end of the Third Far Eastern Athletic Championship Games a Graham-White bomb-throwing bi-plane of the Japan Aviation Association flew over the grounds of the Track and Field.

Starting from its aviation practice field at Haneda, the machine sailed towards Shibaura at an altitude of 2000 feet. Nearing the scene, the plane descended to about 350 feet and soared around the bleachers twice scattering greetings to the athletes of the representing countries and to the Asscciation for the successful handling of the new undertaking in Japan.

After this, the machine continued its course towards the city throwing 30 false bombs down on the streets with a manifesto printed on many hundred sheets, warning the Japanese that it is high time that they take heed in this line which has a vast scope of development yet. The plane had to turn its course homeward due to the rain and mist when it was over the Shimbashi station since difficulty was encountered.

Such an attempt is the first of its kind ever contemplated in this country.

CONFERENCE OF FEMALE TEACHERS

By the promotion of Dr. Sawayanagi, the President of the Imperial Educational Society a mass meeting of female teachers in girls' and elementary schools throughout this country will be held in Tokyo for several days commencing October 20. The proposed conference of female teachers is being discussed with much interest by the vernacular press since there is no precedent to a meeting exclusively held for female teachers in Japan. According to Dr. Sawayanagi, the number of female teachers in Japan totals about 40,000 now-a-days, which is indeed 25 per cent of that of the opposite sex. There are held every year educational meetings which are attended by educationists and teachers in the country, but at these meetings female teachers unavoidably refrain from expressing their opinions with frankness, nor have they many chances to do so, with the result that these meetings generally have but little female attendance. It is reported that at the proposed conference in October Dr. Sawayanagi will submit first of all a bill favouring the shortening of the hours of service of female teachers who are married.

NEWS & NOTES

The Karuizawa Summer Residents' Association is now preparing the Hand Book for 1917. It will contain much useful information.

In connection with the opening of the Yokohama Town Hall on July 1st, it is proposed to collect exported goods for public view. They will probably be on view from about July 3rd.

According to official returns published by the police authorities of the city of Osaka the casualties in the recent disastrous explosion and fire at the warehouses in Osaka of the Tokyo Warehousing Company were 43 killed, 98 severely wounded, and 256 slightly wounded.

According to recent official statistics the number of peers in this country on the 20th of this month was 933 and that of persons with court ranks is 343. There are now 17 princes, 38 marquises, 100 viscounts, 380 counts and 398 barons in Japan.

The bill for the abolition of the tipping system in the trains which was introduced in the conference of the Directors of the Railway Administration Bureau has been shelved. The proposer was Mr. Nagao, of the Imperial Government Railways, and despite his endeavours for the passage of his bill it is reported to have attracted but little notice in the conference. Boys can now receive tips with impunity.

There is a movement in Osaka to reduce the car fares in view of the good business the city authorities are now doing with the tramway traffic in the city.

It is learned in this connection that the price of the commutation tickets available for fifteen rides has been hitherto 55 sen and that for thirty rides 1 yen and 5 sen. And now it is proposed that these prices should be each reduced to 50 sen and 95 sen.

The city authorities on their part are said to be making investigations as to the problem as the claims put forward by the representatives of the movement are based on undeniable facts, says one report. The news will be upsetting to Tokyo residents.

According to recent official statistics the number of prisoners in Japan up to the end of last month is 53,169, which is a decrease by 705, when compared with the corresponding period of last year. The above number includes 51,011 male and 2,158 female prisoners and it is further learned that 48,610 imprisoned criminals, 6,704 prisoners on remand, 822 prisoners under sentence of hard labour and 33 babies of the prisoners constitute the total number.

The amount of money donated by boys and girls in primary schools in Tokyo for the relief of Belgians groaning under the tyrannical rule of the Germans is reported to have reached 13,000 yen up to the 16th. and it is expected that when the subscription list is closed the amount will exceed 20,000 yen. It is also said that the appeal to school children in Tokyo has proved far more fruitful than the Belgian Minister, Count de la Faille, anticipated, who, it is told, expected the donations would amount to only 10,000 yen or so. We understand that the Department of Home Affairs will suggest to the local authorities throughout the country to solicit donations from school children for the relief of the Belgian sufferers.

May 27, being the naval festival day in commemoration of the victory won by the Japanese navy in the Japan Sea during the late Russo-Japanese war, will be formally celebrated and all the ranks of the navy will have a holiday on that day. It is reported that T.I.H. the Crown Prince and other Princes of the Blood will proceed on that day to the Navy Club at Tsukiji, Tokyo, to be present at a banquet in which all the naval officers of high standing will participate. Wrestling matches, will be given as an entertainment after th bar-

The Yokohama Silk Warehouses, built close to the Habutai Conditioning House, will be opened to business on May 29th. They will be thrown open on the previous day for the inspection of those concerned. They are to store silk, silk goods, hemp braids and other cognate exports. Habutai transported to these warehouses will be immediately inspected by officials of the Conditioning Bureau, and their prices will be given in official certificates. Without any anxiety banks may thus discount these papers. With these new monetary facilities, habutai will be stored in Yokohama in larger quantities than ever.

ASIA FOR THE ASIATICS IS SLOGAN OF WRITER

"Asia must be saved and freed from the political dominat on of Western powers and this quarter of the globe must be preserved for Asiatics. Let the economic and commercial competition here be settled by the natural law of the survival of the fittest." The speaker was Mr. U. Wakamiya, editor of the "Chuo Shimbun" and a well known writer, who was discussing yesterday with a representative of the "Times" the recent New York dispatch to the effect that the governments of America and Eprope are paying deep attention to Japan's attitude under the impression that this country is working for the establishment of an over-lordship of Asia. In this connection, Mr. Wakamiya's recent article in the "Central Review" is reported to have elicited grave attention in America.

"By no means am I pugnacious towards Western nations and their people," said Mr. Wakamiya. "But they will not be able to conceal the fact that from all the lands they have occupied they are determined to keep away or force out coloured races on the plausible pretext of this and that. Not only are Asiatic labourers refused access to any of the Anglo-Saxon lands, but even our merchants are robbed of the right to engage in legitimate business by a hundred and one artificial means. I do not want to impose the whole blame on Western people for the existence of these facts. Speaking of one instance, I am much in sympathy with the American people when they try to keep Asiatic immigrants at their arm's length for economic reasons.

"But we cannot submit to such a cranky theory claiming that this world is the white man's or belongs to any other one of the races. We have just as equal right as anybody else to live. We are entitled to a place in the sun. And where is that place? Asia. For the Asiatics there is only Asia left. But it is not enough that there is Asia for us. The question comes up: is it so secure that we can enjoy our free development there without any molestat on from outside?

"I am of the opinion that the close of the war in Europe will shift the stage of world struggle over to the Orient with China as its centre. This coming world drama, coupled with the present miserable status of China, makes it imperative for us to set out preparing to fortify ourselves in a secure position so as to be able to save Asia from the calamitous disaster that threatens to befall us. It should, however, be remembered that this gigantic task cannot be successfully borne by Japan alone. All Asia must awake and be prepared to rally to the cause of preserving Asia for the Asiatics. Asia must be saved and freed from the political domination of the Western powers. As to the economic and commercial warfare that will arise in this quarter of the globe, my forecast is optimistic and the Japanese by far bid fair to come out victorious in the long run. Western people are averse to the climatic condition of Asia. The opening of the Panama Canal is already proving tremendously beneficial and the exploitation of iron mines and other materials in China for our industries is bound to make Japan a great industrial country. Moreover, the geographical proximity of Japan to China is a god-bestowed advantage. We are in a position to be able to command, if we properly live up to the trend and demands of the times, supreme commercial power in China.

"Nevertheless, we must admit there are not a few stumbling blocks lying in our way to a successful attainment of our end. China's antipathy against Japan is one of them and the most detrimental to us. But this is not a difficulty that cannot be overcome. China must be convinced of Japan's harbouring no territorial ambition. Jingosts and imperialists are not influential enough to shape this country's fundamental policy towards our continental neighbour. Some statesmen and scholars harp upon the necessity of seeking some territory for our overflowing population. But the fact is that that necessity is never so urgent as represented by them. With the progress of scientific and intensive cultivation the production of rice, which constitutes the chief food of the nation, is increasingly keeping pace with the increase of population. Another fact is that about 70 per cent. of the population of Japan is distributed in the farming districts. The development of industries on modern scale and fashion is bound to attract a large portion of the farmers to urban localities, making room for the coming generations. These facts taken into consideration, I am a believer that Japan needs not seek territory for her ever growing population until it reaches the mark of 100,000,000.

"I am a firm believer that the Japanese being the only nation in the East who will be able to lead other Asiatic powers in the struggle to preserve Asia for Asiatics, Japan has a mission to perform. That mission is to spread the benefits of civilization in this quarter of the world. I am confident that fair-minded men of the West will see Japan's point.

"There was a time when the United States dreamed of the mastery of the Pacific. She annexed the Hawaiian Islands and occupied the Philippine Archipelago. No one expected that Japan would rise to loom so large and powerful on this side of the Pacific. But now America has realized the impossibility of her dream and is likely to grant independence to the Filipinos. Her ambitious eye is now looking towards China. Vast economic future possibilities for America there certainly are in China. But you can count on the fingers of your hand, so to speak the number of young men in America who are willing to come out to Asia as pioneers of commercial expansion of the country. That necessitates the Americans co-operating with the Japanese. It is a matter for congratulation that the Americans realize this."

GRAFTING CASE IN FORMOSA

The grafting committed by a large number of building contractors for the Government of Formosa, which was recently discovered and prosecuted by the judicial authorities seems now to have assumed serious dimensions as the investigation progresses.

Out of fifty-four contractors alleged to be involved in the case who had been arrested as soon as the case came to light twenty four have been bailed out or acquitted.

It is said that these wretches pocketed, about two million yen out of their undertakings for the Government in the past. As almost all of the fraternity of the contractors in the north part of Formosa are said to be involved in the present case the affair will probably become more serious.

AMERICA SHOULD JOIN HANDS WITH JAPAN NOW

"To co-operate with Japan in developing the unlimited resources of China is a comparatively new idea for America, and I do not know whether Judge Gary's suggestions to American capitalists that there are great future possibilities in the Far East awaiting the development by co-operative enterprises of the Japanese and Americans, have yielded any appreciable amount of material result," said Mr. William A. Rogers of Buffalo, N.Y., a Director of the American Iron and Steel Institute, now on a pleasure trip in this country, when the subject was introduced by a representative of "The Times." Mr. Rogers is engaged in the iron and coal business and is a friend of Judge Gary, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United Steel Corporation, who returned from a visit to this country last year with a conviction that Japan and the United States must co-operate in opening up the vast undeveloped resources of China, freely expressing it on many occasions.

"There are two ways" said Mr. Rogers when interviewed yesterday, "for America to dispose of the large wealth which has flowed into that country since the beginning of this war. In the past a large proportion of the industries of the United States has been maintained by borrowed capital, but now we are buying back our securities held in foreign countries and putting our industries in independent shape wholly controlled by ourselves. Another way is to invest our surplus capital in foreign countries.

"But in seeking an outlet for capital in foreign lands we Americans encounter a great obstacle: we lack knowledge of foreign languages and the conditions in other countries outside our own. American capitalists hitherto have had a profitable field in their own land with which they were satisfied and they did not have to look outside, however alluring a prospect it might have presented. This isolation policy of the American capitalists has hitherto kept them ignorant of the prospect or conditions in foreign lands; consequently they consider China and Japan too far away for them to invest their capital. There are, of course, a few heads of big business like Judge Gary who study world problems and familiarize themselves with those problems, but co-operation between Japan and America in developing the vast resources of China is quite a new problem for American capitalists in general."

Speaking of iron and steel conditions in America Mr. Rogers said:

"The production of iron and steel in America has expanded by leaps and bounds during the last fifty years, every ten years almost doubling the total tonnage of the former, until now we produce annually more than England, Germany, and France combined.

"Recently the steel men of America made an agreement with the Government to furnish all the steel it needs during the war at the price of $58 per ton, no matter what the ruling market price may be. If the importation of iron or steel to Japan from the United States has stopped, it may be due to this war contract with the Government."

Mr. Rogers said that Japan's art, especially that expressed in temples, shrines,

SEIYUKAI STAND NEUTRAL NEXT SESSION

It has been reported that the Seiyukai will take an impartially neutral position in the coming extra session of the Diet. This is believed to be according to the decision of the leaders. Among the members of the Seiyukai, there will not be many who will oppose impartial neutrality, but the Seiyukai obtained many new parliamentary members in the recent election, and it will be necessary to strengthen the unity of the party, and the leaders of the party are now preparing for a conference with the members as soon as they arrive in Tokyo to attend the extra session of the Diet.

There may be a few members who entertain their own opinions regarding such important subjects as the Chinese policy or the question of tariff, and such members may oppose the plan of remaining impartially neutral, but they will in the end obey the party policy when it is finally decided. Even the radical elements in the party who urged the party to join the movement against the government at the last session of the Diet, seem to hold milder views at present, realizing the change of the political situation. Those interested in politics believe that the Seiyukai will find no difficulty in taking a policy of impartial neutrality in the coming extra session.

As long as the Seiyukai remains neutral, the extra session of the Diet will be held smoothly, and there will not be any startling development during the session, although there are not a few who consider that another disturbance will characterize the coming session.

When the result of the recent election was announced, and it was known that the Kenseikai had lost so many of its candidates, it was believed that an internal disturbance would take place in the Kenseikai. In fact there had been several members who strongly criticised the campaign management of the party, and attacked Viscount Kato, the leader. But recent indications are that though there may be some members who are still discontented with the policy and attitude of their leaders, the majority of the Kenseikai members will submit themselves to the order of the leaders, as many of them owed their election to the support and aid of the leaders of the party. From these incidents, it can be stated that the extra session of the Diet will be held unexpectedly quietly and smoothly.

and palaces, was wonderful and of great interest.

"They should be carefully preserved" he continued, "for the interest of travellers from the rest of the world as well as for the people of Japan. I am surprised that more Americans do not visit Japan. Probably they do not appreciate what an easy trip it is. However, there is a growing disposition among the American people to travel in this direction. I think you can expect a large number of travellers from the United States as soon as times are settled and that number will only be limited by the facilities of ocean transportation."

Mr. Rogers was one of the American guests invited to a dinner by Premier Count Terauchi held at his official residence on Wednesday evening. He will leave for America to-day by the Empress of Russia.

KOKUMINTO LEADER ON RECENT ELECTIONS

Writing in current issue of the "Dai-san Teikoku" (the Third Empire) Mr. K. Inukai, leader of the Kokuminto, says that the result of the recent election was not a surprise to him, and the mere increase of the number of the members of the Seiyukai in the House of Representatives does not prove the victory of the Government.

The Kokuminto expected to elect forty five members at the recent election, writes Mr. Inukai, but only thirty six members were elected. However considering that some unattached members may have joined the party, in genral, the Kokuminto had a success in the election. The fact that the Seiyukai obtained 160 members is not a great achievement, and it is probable that the Seiyukai will gain about ten members more, but even if the party had 170 or 180 members, it is not to be feared.

The number of the members of the Kenseikai was reduced to 120 but it was only natural, and it is not a failure. When the Kenseikai was organized, it endeavoured only to gather a large number of members, and when the party stands against the Government, it is natural that the number of the members will decrease. It was expected that the number would fall to about one hundred, and the fact that it managed to keep 120 members was due to ample funds.

By the result of the election, the Seiyukai has 160 members and there are fifty independent members but that can not be proclaimed as a victory for the Government, continues Mr. Inukai. The attitude of the Seiyukai towards the Government is the careful watching of the Government's attitude, and it is not likely that the party will meekly follow the Government indefinitely. At the last session of the Diet, the Seiyukai refused the proposal to join in the movement against the cabinet, but before making the formal refusal of the proposition, there had been long and heated discussion among the members of the Seiyukai. Mr. Inukai believes that among 160 members of the Seiyukai, there will be many who entertain the same opinion as the members of the Kokuminto, and it is impossible to imagine that all of the 160 members of the party will obey Mr. Hara. Under such circumstances, the Government can not rest satisfied, although the figure shows the control of the majority members of the House of Representatives.

On the other hand, 120 members of the Kenseikai will not be all against the present cabinet, and even among the members of the Kokuminto, there are some who worked for Baron Oura in the past, and there will be some who will sell themselves to Mr. Hara.

The number of the members of the House of Representatives who will support or oppose the Terauchi Cabinet, can not be ascertained at present, and the Kokuminto intends to carry out the important duty of leading others in the coming political event.

Mr. Inukai further states that he is unable to say whether the Kokuminto will bring out the bill of lack of confidence in the Terauchi cabinet or not, until the party policy is decided by the conference of the Parliamentary members. The Kenseikai might be of the opinion that the Kokuminto should make the joint movement with the Kenseikai at the coming extra session of the Diet, but Mr. Inukai says that the promise to make the joint movement in the coming session will be entirely another thing. In inviting the Kenseikai to the movement against the cabinet, no promise or agreement was made as to the future attitude. Consequently whether the Kokuminto will bring up the bill of lack of confidence again or not, is not to be dictated by the Kenseikai.

There is an opinion that even if the bill is again brought out, it will certainly be defeated, but Mr. Inukai says that the Seiyukai can not depend upon its 160 members, among those being many advocators of pure party politics. The Kokuminto has not yet decided whether or not to bring out another bill of lack of confidence in the extra session of the Diet. Even if the bill is defeated, it will not be defeated by a large margin as expected.

Finally when it is decided that the Kokuminto can not defeat the cabinet, the leader of the party says, the party will decide its support or opposition on each subject, following the fundamental principle of establishing Japan firmly in the world's situation. Both the Seiyukai and Kenseikai are not acting according to their fundamental principles, and they are only fighting for political power and their attitude is not decided until the very happening of events.

THE TOKYO CHAMBER TO HOLD MEETING SOON

The Tokyo Chamber of Commerce will hold its general meeting on May 27th, and will elect a new President, Vice-Presidents and other officers. Regarding the election of other officials, there will be no difficulty, but in electing the new President, a renewed conflict between the Chamber and the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce is expected. As Vice-Presidents, Messrs. Fujiyama and Sugihara will probably be re-elected.

Dr. Juichi Soyeda had been recommended by the Chamber of Commerce as the new President, but Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce has declared that he would not sanction the appointment. The problem at present, is what attitude the Chamber of Commerce will take regarding the opposition of the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.

There has been no case in the past when the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce rejected the appointment of the Chamber of Commerce. It is reported that the Chamber of Commerce will submit the appointment of Dr. Soyeda as the new President, as he has been formally selected by the members of the Chamber, and in case Dr. Soyeda is rejected by the authorities, the Chamber is determined to fight to the end even going so far as to bring a suit against the Minister.

JAPANESE REGIME A SUCCESS IN KOREA

The following article from the London and China Express on the subject of the "Japanese Regime in Korea" speaks for itself:—

The days when Korea was spoken of as the "Hermit Kingdom" seem a long time back. Yet we think the Korean people would scarcely like to revert to them. Before the Japanese Protectorate the country for a long period was, so to speak, the shuttlecock of neighbouring Powers, during which Korean interests were the last thing thought of. With the annexation by Japan all that was changed. Internal turmoil, poverty and inertia have given place to peace, prosperity, and progress. This transformation was not effected without some suffering and hardship to the native population, but whatever mistakes were made by the Japanese authorities during the early days of their regime they have been amply atoned for by the excellent administration with which in recent years the country has been provided. All that has been achieved in this direction is clearly set forth in the "Annual Report on Reforms and Progress in Chosen (Korea), 1914-15," compiled by the Government-General of Chosen. It is a voluminous, but very interesting, document, and, unlike most official publications, contains a number of well-executed illustrations, together with a map and several coloured diagrams emphasising certain vital statistics connected with the industry, trade and finance of the country. A careful perusal of the report leads to the conviction that the Japanese Government has the real interests of the Korean people at heart. Not only their material, but their moral welfare is being cared for by their Japanese rulers, and, indeed, in all respects a sound foundation is being laid which should ensure Korea a great and prosperous future. As an indication of the material progress that has been made, it may be mentioned that the returns for all the products of the Peninsula for the fiscal year under review amount to double that for the year of annexation. Again, a very conspicuous feature in the foreign trade of Korea was the considerable excess of imports over exports which prevailed for many years. In 1912, for instance, this excess amounted to over 46,000,000 yen, while in 1915 the excess of imports over exports was under 10,000,000 yen. This favourable tendency, although caused to some extent by the European war, was largely due to the agricultural and industrial development, and not only were certain foreign products replaced by home products, but the surplus of native products found its way abroad. Further, the report states that the advancement of their material welfare being of primary importance to the impoverished Koreans, the Government has most strenuously paid attention to the encouragement of agriculture and industry by establishing model farms, experimental stations, and seedling stations, by granting State subsidies, and by appointing technical experts to the various localities. As a result, larger returns from these productive undertakings are being obtained year by year. Thus, the production of rice, the chief agricultural staple of the Peninsula, which stood at about 8,000,000 koku in the year of annexation (1910), increased in the year under review to 12,159,000 koku, barley increased from 3,500,000 to 6,000,000 koku, cotton from 11,000,000 kin to 36,000,000 kin, cocoons from 13,000 to 46,000 koku, mineral products from 6,067,952 yen to 8,402,649 yen in value, fishery products from 7,871,910 yen to 12,064,685 yen, and the output of factories from 19,000,000 yen to 32,700,000 yen.

The above facts indicate very substantial progress in the material sense, but in other directions there have been many beneficent reforms which have tended to the happiness and general welfare of the Korean people. For example, as a result of the adoption of thorough hygienic measures, those epidemic diseases, that formerly broke out each year so regularly as almost to warrant them being termed endemic, have been practically stamped out in the Peninsula. Modern common schools, then numbering less than one hundred, have been increased to over four hundred during the last five years. Communication and transportation facilities have been improved and extended, and much help afforded in various indirect ways. In the important matter of education, the aim of the authorities is to give the younger generations of Koreans such moral training and general knowledge as will make them loyal subjects of Imperial Japan, while at the same time enabling them to meet the actual needs of the times and the gradual advance in their standard of living. Although but a few years have elapsed since the new educational system came into force, it has already been productive of a favourable tendency. It is stated that even the Yangban (nobles), most of whom naturally clung to the old-fashioned education as provided by the study of Chinese classics only, are now willingly sending their children to the new public common schools. It may be noted in conclusion that steps are gradually being undertaken to bring about the fiscal independence of the country. Altogether the situation in Korea would appear to be most satisfactory, and the Government-General at Söul are to be congratulated upon the good results they have achieved.

CHOSEN TO HAVE ARSENAL

Among the claims for the Army Department in the supplementary budget estimates decided on at the recent meeting of the Cabinet council is an item set aside for the establishment of a new army arsenal in Chosen, the outlay amounting to 3,000,000 yen. The creation of two army divisions in Chosen, which was passed in the 1915 session of the Diet and was carried out last year, has necessitated the establishment of an army arsenal in the peninsula and an opinion urging the importance of the establishment of an independent arsenal has been raised by the experts of the army long since. In view of the lessons learnt in the European war and from the necessity to fill the deficit in the arrangements of national defense the army authorities have decided to carry out the long contemplated scheme and to introduce the claim for necessary funds in the coming special session of the Diet to be convened in June next.

In the event of the establishment of the new arsenal in Chosen the troops of the Chosen divisions and the Manchurian garrison will be enabled to get a direct and speedy supply without relying upon the supply from Japan proper in case of an emergency in future. By this means they will not only be able to get a supply of the latest ordnance and weapons of war, but the opening of the supplying depot near at hand will greatly contribute to the efficiency of tactical facilities in the case of an emergency. Besides this the army department has decided to claim an additional expenditure of 900,000 yen to be appropriated for the construction of fortresses in Chosen, which is also held in great importance from the viewpoint of the defense of the peninsula.

THE AIR CLAIMS TWO MORE VICTIMS AT SHIBAURA

Another civilian aviator who cut a prominent figure in Japan's local aviation world met a tragic death, when Mr. Tamai, one of the founders of the Nippon Flying School, fell headlong to the earth with his machine at the Shibaura reclaimed ground on last Sunday morning. The tragedy also involved the life of Mr. Yukawa, a photographer of the "Nichinichi" whom the aviator took skyward as a passenger.

Mr. Seitaro Tamai set out on Sunday morning at 6.55 from the Nippon Flying School, Haneda, in the newly-constructed three-seater aeroplane of the Graham-White type for a series of flights over Tokyo.

The machine was constructed by Mr. Tamai himself who was skilled in constructing aeroplanes, and as may be remembered, the machine piloted by Mr. Tamai visited Shibaura on the day of the conclusion of the Olympiad.

After a brief halt at Shibaura where he alighted, Mr. Tamai resumed his flight at 7.35 a.m. and maintaining an altitude of 4,000 feet passed over Shimbashi, Tokyo Station, Kanda and other places, dropping a manifesto printed on thousands of sheets warning citizens against the danger of aeroplanes. The aviator successfully returned to Shibaura after 20 minutes, and then taking a passenger he gave a short exhibition flight for the pleasure of the crowds assembled there.

At 9.25 a.m. Mr. Tamai taking on board Mr. Yukawa, the "Nichinichi's," photographer, started for another flight. He made a circuit of the reclaimed ground and was going to descend, when at a height of some 30 metres some of the wires controlling the upper left wing became disconnected. The machine suddenly lost its balance and fell headlong. The petroleum tank burst, causing a fire and the whole machine was ablaze. The bodies of Messrs. Tamai and Yukawa were frightfully charred, and when students of the school and others reached the scene of disaster they found life was extinct.

The breaking up of the wing was fatal and even an aviator of better ability than Mr. Tamai could never have averted the disaster. The photographer of the "Nichinichi" died in harness. He took several pictures from above, but the plates were smashed to pieces. The death of Mr. Tamai leaves his disconsolate colleagues and students of the Nippon Flying School to mourn his loss, for the institution owed its establishment and existence to Mr. Tamai and Mr. Aiba, his partner. The "Asahi" and "Jiji" have given several hundred yen to the family of Mr. Tamai out of their respective relief funds, and the funeral of these two victims will be jointly conducted at the sanctuary of Aoyama under the management of the "Nichinichi."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 17.—Reuter's Correspondent at British Headquarters says:—Preceded by a heavy cannonade, the enemy, fulfilling anticipation, fiercely counter-attacked in great strength against Roeux, six miles east of Arras.

Grey waves of picked troops swept over from Plouvain, 1½ miles south-east of Roeux, and were met with a whirlwind fire. Although the enemy was mown down like corn, some reached the chemical works and fought hand-to-hand, but our counter-attacks promptly restored our positions and inflicted terrible punishment.

London, May 18.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports that the British troops have now completed the capture of Bullecourt.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 21.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in his Sunday evening communiqué says:

"As a result of an attack early this morning, we occupied a further section of the Hindenburg Line, along over a mile of front, between Fontaine-les-Croisilies and Bullecourt. [Fontaine is 2 miles north of Bullecourt.]

"The enemy counter-attacked unsuccessfully, and fierce fighting continued all day long.

"We inflicted heavy casualties and took some prisoners.

"The fighting continues in our favour."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 21.—The Press Bureau announces that the official German report of casualties in April gave the number as 42,838, of which 11,979 were deaths. The total number of casualties through the war is given as 4,245,804, including 1,041,029 deaths. In these figures naval men are not included.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Paris, May 22.—The French repulsed three counter-attacks, which the Germans launched against the positions captured by the French yesterday. The prisoners now total 1,000.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 22.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports:—"Operations between Bullecourt and Fontaine-les-Croiselles were successfully continued on Sunday night. We captured a support trench after fierce hand-to-hand fighting and beat off counter-attacks with heavy losses for the enemy. We took 150 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 22.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "New positions on the Hindenburg line, north-westward of Bullecourt were secured on Monday with little interference from the enemy. Excepting in a sector 2,000 yards in length immediately to the west of Bullecourt, we hold the whole Hindenburg line from a point one mile east of Bullecourt to Arras."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 22.—The French, on Sunday evening, carried out in two sectors from Moronvillers to Massif, a fairly important operation which brilliantly succeeded. They carried several lines of trenches on the northern slopes of Mt. Cornillet. Their fire turned back the German counter-attacks with huge losses. Eight hundred prisoners were taken. The enemy's dug-outs were found filled with dead.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 22.—Reuter's representative at French Head-quarters telegraphs: "Sunday's brilliant operations have given the French effective possession of a chain of dominating heights three miles long overlooking the Valley of the Suippe between Auberive and Nauroy. The French command of the Moronvillers group of heights threatens the strongholds whence the Germans have been hammering the Rheims group, and which constituted a bastion whereon the enemy based the security of his extreme left in the Aisne and Champagne battlefields, as the Craonne plateau buttresses his right. It was while the enemy yesterday was attempting to eject the French from the Craonne plateau, that the latter captured the left buttress of the enemy line. This success may prove of far-reaching strategic consequence."

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 17.—Caucasus Front. Thirty-five kilometres east of Uhoul the attempts of Turkish scouts in approaching the Russian positions were repulsed. Near Hasrishirin, a Russian detachment composed of Cossacks and frontier troops was surrounded by Kurds, but succeeded after a nine hours' fight in forcing its way through, losing 15 killed and 7 wounded.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 20.—In the Mitava direction, east of Kalnzeem the attempt of enemy columns in attacking the Russian positions was stopped by fire of the Russian artillery.

Rumania. South of Koverki in the Bystrica direction the enemy tried to attack the Russian trenches, but was scattered by the Russian fire.

Caucasus front. The Turks and Kurds about two companies strong attacked the Russian vanguards north of Bitlis, but were repulsed.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 18.—Western front. In the Kovel direction near Kuhara the enemy is maintaining strong bombing and mining activity. In the Vladimir-Volynsk direction near Shelkov compact enemy columns assumed the offensive on a section of the Russian positions, but were repulsed by rifle, bomb and protecting artillery fire. Firing and reconnoissances continue on the rest of the front.

Caucasus front. The attempt of the Turks, about one company in strength, to attack from Ognat has been repulsed. In the rear of the Russian troops, the Kurds are attacking the Russian posts, digging out the Russian fallen and mutilating the corpses.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

Rome, May 16.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"After a vigorous offensive in the Julian front, resolutely continued, the infantry established themselves on the steep wooded heights on the eastern bank of the Isonzo northward of Gorizia. These had been transformed into a formidably fortified defensive position. One of our left wing columns forced a passage across the river and captured Bombrez village. We captured on the centre the heights northeast of Plæva, stormed the villages of Zagora and Zagomila and carried the crests of Mount Cucco and Mount Vodice. Our right wing progressed considerably on the slopes of Mount Santo where fierce counterattacks were repulsed.

"We conquered the enemy eastward of Gorizia on the strongly fortified heights northward of Tivoli. Insistent counterattacks were backbeaten here. We made prisoners of 3375, of whom ninety-eight were officers, a mountain battery and much war material."

Rome, May 17.—It is officially announced that the Italians captured 3,375 prisoners and a mountain battery besides occupying the villages of Zagora, Bombrez and Zagomallo. In addition thirty machine-guns were taken as the result of the offensive begun on Tuesday.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 17.—A message from Undine reports that the Italians are advancing along a front of 60 miles from Tolmino towards the sea.

An official statement from Rome reports: "A vigorous offensive on the Julian front has resolutely continued. Our infantry have established themselves in the wooded heights on the eastern bank of the Isonzo. Northward of Gorizia, one of our left wing columns forced the passage across the river and captured the village of Bombrez. In the centre of the line, we captured the heights northeast of the Plaeta and stormed the villages of Zagora and Zagomallo. We carried the crests of Mount Gucco and Mount Vodice. On our right wing, we made considerable progress up the steep slopes of Mount Santo. We repulsed fierce counter-attacks and, eastward of Gorizia, conquered the strongly fortified heights northward of Tivoli, taking 3375 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 18.—The Italian official communiqué states: "There has been bitter, prolonged fighting between Gucco and Vodice. The enemy repeatedly launched considerable masses of troops against our new positions, but all attempts were repulsed. We made appreciable progress toward an important summit at height 652 on Monte Vodice. We took prisoner 4021, of whom 124 were officers between May 14 and 16."

Rome, May 19.—It is officially reported that 5,432 Austro-Hungarian prisoners have been captured to date in the Italian offensive on the Julian front.

London, May 19.—It is announced by the War Office that British heavy artillery is co-operating in the Italian offensive on the Julian front and affording material assistance.

Rome, May 19.—The Italian official communiqué reads:

"On the Julian front night surprise attacks against our positions on Hill 592 were repulsed. On the morning of the 18th our troops opened a vigorous attack in order to capture height 652, the key to the enemy's defences north of Mont Santo. The enemy's stubborn resistance supported by numerous batteries of all calibres, maintaining a continuous fire from the rear, rendered the action long and severe. Advancing from rock to rock and expelling the enemy from trench and cavern and destroying the machineguns the infantry by the evening reached the crest of the contested heights, maintaining their position against the enemy's concentrated fire. The task of diverting the enemy's attention was assigned to the troops of the Bodez Loga sector. Our success was completed by the capture of block houses between mounts Cucco and Vodice and the troops withdrew to the right bank of the Isozo without molestation.

"East of Gorizia we maintained all our positions against persistent enemy attacks which were especially violent south of Grazigna and Hill 174 south of Tivell.

"Incessant artillery duels, and especially violent against Gorizia and the surrounding villages, with aerial activity have continued.

"Our squadrons bombed the encampments east of the canals and the Gargar valley, safely returning to their bases. Two enemy machines were brought down.

"On the 18th, our troops were engaged in fortifying the position captured east of Gorimisa and organizing communications with the rear. The enemy attempted, but completely failed to hinder the work of our indomitable Gorizia army.

"During the night of the 17th the enemy attempted surprise attacks against our positions of the bridgehead of Brodres on the Todice and at Gradizgna.

"The following morning, the enemy brought up strong reinforcement and again renewed the attack which was particularly violent in the Vodice area south of Grazigna. Broken by our battery fire, masses of the enemy were counter-attacked and repulsed by the infantry who at several points surrounded their assailants and forced them to surrender.

"The number of prisoners as far as known is 6432 including 143 officers. It is not yet possible to estimate the quantity of war material taken.

"The artillery continues very active all along the front from Tolmino to the sea."

along the front from Tolmino to the sea.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, May 19.—The official Italian communiqué to-day reads: "We are fortifying the positions captured eastward of Gorizia The enemy attempted surprise attacks on Thursday night against the bridgeheads at Brodres, Vodice and Crazigna. They renewed their attacks on Friday morning, but our artillery and counter-attacks broke them up. Our prisoners now total 6,432."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Odine, May 19.—The Austrians, after being reinforced, launched furious counter-attacks at frequent intervals along the crest of Monte Santo, which changed hands many times. The enemy are striving to preserve this last stronghold, whence they threaten Gorizia and the middle Isonzo. The Italians, by a series of brilliant drives, are advancing hourly.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 20.—The Italian official communiqué yesterday morning read: "We captured, after a long and severe struggle, Hill 652 on Monte Vodice, which is the key to the enemy's defences northward of Monte Santo. We took 379 prisoners. We maintained all our positions eastward of Gorizia against persistent enemy attacks."

Rome, May 22.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"On the Trentino front the enemy's artillery activity, which began on the 19th, grew more intense and extensive yesterday, being particularly violent between the Adige and Terragnolo valleys. Local attacks had already been repulsed on the night of the 19th at Coecci in the Lappo Valley and Rio Freddo. The enemy's attempts proved without success, in the Campo area (Daone Valley) southeast of Lake Loppio and on the Maso Torrent line.

"Late in the evening dense masses of the enemy vigorously assaulted our positions on Pasubio, west of Monte Dente. After heavy hand-to-hand fighting, the enemy, having suffered severe loss, was completely driven back all along the line of attack. On the Julian front, enemy attacks on the northern slopes of Saint Marco, East of Gorizia, were repulsed.

"We took Hill 363 between Parliova and Britovo, east of Plava and extended our positions still more on the Vosice.

"We captured some hundreds of prisoners and a considerable quantity of war material abandoned by the enemy in caverns.

"Two enemy machines were brought down during the air fighting."

MR. JOHN BUCHAN'S WEEKLY REVIEW OF WAR

London, May 18.—The present phase of the war on the western front has been brought about by the success with which Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in co-operation with the French armies has forced Hindenburg to fight under conditions which his so-called masterly retirement was planned to avoid. The Germans are concentrated in great strength upon a relatively indifferent defensive line, parts of which are commanded by the British artillery and the holding of which consequently entails a heavy and constantly growing casualty list. This phase of the war, so far as the positions on the map are concerned, may be more or less stationary for some time to come, but it is none the less a phase perfectly suited to the strategy of the allied armies.

There is very little doubt that Hindenburg contemplated a much deeper withdrawal than the allied armies have allowed the German troops to make, but at the moment, apart from the unceasing pressure to which these troops are subjected it would be difficult for Germany to fall back further in the west without giving the impression of defeat which would be much too dangerous in view of the troubled state of internal conditions in the Fatherland.

In his speech in the Reichstag on May 15th the German Chancellor stated that the military position of Germany was never so good since the beginning of the war.

During the past month the Allies have captured on the western front fifty-two thousand prisoners, over four hundred and forty guns, twelve-hundred machineguns and trench mortars in addition to inflicting casualties in killed and wounded the publication of which would stagger the German people.

As the statement of the Chancellor was received with cheers by the Reichstag the only two possible conclusions to be drawn are either that the Chancellor was deliberately deceiving his listeners or he and the Reichstag make the most modest definition of a good military situation.

The moment is opportune to review the line which at present is being taken by the enemy and his official communiqués about the battles on the western front.

Early in the spring the Hindenburg retirement was heralded as a brilliant military operation which had ruined the chances of a successful allied offensive and put at the disposal of the German high command a big strategic reserve which could be employed for an offensive at any point desired, such as on the Italian front.

Owing to the allies swift and vigorous advance the German plan missed fire and the battle of Arras so completely upset Hindenburg's scheme that the Germans were forced to look for some plausible explanation of their failure. In this attempt to explain away failure lies the reason for the persistency with which the German press and communiqués wrote of a failure of the British and French attempts to break through.

The allies have always had fixed and limited territorial objective and with the exception of the loss of Fresnoy these objectives have always been won.

The main object of the allied operations has been to force the Germans to fight and engage their reserves in order to subject them to a gradual wearing down process. So successful has the fighting of the past months been, from this point of view that, whereas at the beginning of the battle the Germans had forty-nine fresh divisions in reserve they have only four divisions now out of the forty-nine which have not been put into line.

For obvious reasons the Germans do not wish to retire further, so that they have now no alternative left but to try to gain time by holding up the British and French advance while trusting to the "U" boat warfare to achieve what the military operations have failed to accomplish.

The heavy German casualties and the relatively small British losses in the early stages of the battle were due to the care and detail with which the attacks were planned and to the heavy artillery con-

RAID ON DRIFTERS BY AUSTRIAN CRUISERS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 19.—The Admiralty reports that early on Tuesday Austrian light cruiser destroyers raided the Allied drifter line in the Adriatic and sank fourteen British drifters from which the Austrians claim they took seventy-two prisoners. The warships Dartmouth and Bristol, and French and Italian destroyers co-operating chased off the enemy. The chase continued with the enemy under heavy and continuous fire. When near Cattaro enemy battleships were seen approaching when we drew off.

Italian airmen attacked the enemy warships outside Cattaro and assert that a cruiser heavily on fire was towed towards Cattaro in a sinking condition. The British Admiralty reports that another was badly damaged. It adds that a submarine torpedoed the Dartmouth which returned to port. Three men are killed and five missing, also believed to be dead, and seven are wounded. There are no other casualties.

The Dartmouth belongs to the light cruiser class, 5,250 tons, launched at Barrow in 1911.

GERMANY'S LOSS OF DIVERS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 19.—L'Echo de Paris affirms that between May 1 and May 5, a dozen German submarines were certainly sunk. Most of them were sent to the bottom by the British.

The week's shipping reports read: The arrivals were 952 and sailings 991. Three vessels over 1,600 tons were sunk, and none under that tonnage. Four vessels were attacked without success.

GERMANS BUSY IN AFGHANISTAN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Tashkent, May 19.—German agents are again busy in Afghanistan, inciting the invasion of Turkistan, where, it is declared, the Russian garrison is weak and the Mohamedan popular rebellious.

THE PIRATES VICTIMS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 17.—The Admiralty announces that the arrivals of shipping during the week were 2,568, the sailings 2,552; 18 over 1,600 tons and 5 under 1,600 tons were sunk; 19 were unsuccessfully attacked; and 3 fishing boats were sunk.

The Italian authorities officially announce that the shipping arrivals for the week were 580; the sailings 562. Four sailing vessels were sunk.

centration which has been the most striking feature of all the recent fighting.

During the past week nearly all the attacks have been made by the German troops and the discrepancy between their constant failure and the official communiqués issued by the German higher command, makes it obvious that a policy of deliberate deceit and misrepresentations has become necessary to keep up the flagging spirits of the German people.

SITUATION IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, via London, May 15.—General Gurko, commanding the Armies on the western front, and General Brusiloff commanding the southern group of Armies have asked to be relieved of their commands.

Petrograd, May 15.—The Provisional Government of Russia, while accepting the resignation of Guchkoff as Minister of War, most emphatically reminds him of the proclamation of May 8, in which it is declared that the country is in danger, and that to insure its salvation it is necessary to utilize all the creative forces of the country, and also essential that the country has full confidence in the Provisional Government.

At the same time the Government unanimously decided to make all efforts to attract to its staff the new forces which heretofore have taken no part in the responsible work of the administration. Without awaiting for the settlement of this question, Guchkoff judged it possible to take a personal step and tender his resignation without thought, and to release himself of a heavy responsibility for the destiny of Russia.

The Provisional Government thoroughly realizes the danger threatening Russia, but considers it its duty not to abandon the heavy burden of power, but to remain at its post. The Government believes that by the participation of the new representatives of democracy in the responsible work of the Government, full confidence will be re-established, and that a unity and plenitude of power in which the country will find its salvation will be given to the Ministry.

Upon his retirement, M. Guchkoff published an order temporarily transferring the Ministry of War to the assistant-minister, General Manikovski, and the Ministry of Marine to the assistant-minister of that department, Admiral Kedrov.

The executive committee of the Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, after a discussion, has decided in favour of the participation of representatives of the Socialist parties in the Provisional Government.

The Council of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates has published two appeals. The first, addressed to the Socialists of all countries, states that the Russian proletariat wants a general peace of all nations to result from their common efforts, based on the renouncement of aims of conquest. A separate peace, however, is impossible, as it would first give a free hand to the Austro-German alliance and would completely paralyze the democracy and the working classes of all countries before a triumphing imperialism.

The second appeal is to the army and insists that peace can be concluded only after the complete defeat of Kaiser Wilhelm. It exhorts the Russian soldiers to defend the liberty of Russia and not to renounce the offensive, but to fight and attack the enemy. It warns the troops against fraternization on the front, which constitutes a dangerous trap.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 16.—In a speech to the delegates of the Armies Minister of War Guchkoff announced his resignation, explaining that he could not remain in his post because he was helpless to fulfil his task owing to the condition under which the Cabinet, particularly the War Minister was obliged to work.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 16.—At a special meeting of the Provisional Government to-day, M. Milyukov, the Foreign Minister, announced his resignation. He explained that he had taken the step owing to a divergence of views with the majority of the Provisional Government.

The portfolio of the Foreign Minister is expected to be transferred to the present incumbent of the post, the assistant of M. Milyukov. M. Kerenski has been appointed Minister of War.

M. Tereschenko, the Minister of Finance, has been given an order suspending the annual payment of 100,000 roubles to the Greek Government in compensation for damages inflicted on Greece by the tax on currants imported into Russia.

A decree of the Provisional Government establishes the equal distribution among the population of rye, wheat, millet, beans lentils, peas, Indian corn, barley and grain of all kinds.

A message from Minsk says that the German troops, according to news from the front, have received orders to suspend fraternization with the Russian soldiers and shoot all coming out of their trenches.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 16.—A joint meeting of the Provisional Government and the executive Committee of the Duma was held last night. Prince Lvoff, the Premier read a proposed declaration by the Government containing eight points.

Strictly respecting the principles of peace without annexation the project dwells on the basis of the rights of nations to decide their own destiny.

The declaration states that the defeat of Russia and her allies would constitute a source of national calamity. Therefore, the Government is firmly convinced that the revolutionary army of Russia will never admit Germany to gain the victory.

The Government is firmly decided to fight against economical disorganization of the country, not only by taking control of, but also by the organization of production.

Government intends to take all possible measures in order to regulate land exploitation, leaving the final settlement of the land problem to the constituent assembly. The Government will use its best efforts to summon the constituent assembly at the earliest possible opportunity.

The supreme commander of the armies, General Alexseef, and all the commanders-in-chief have arrived here.

Speaking to representatives of the press, General Alexseef said that the supplies of the army, like their spirits, were greatly improving. He hopes that he will be able to utilise the favourable situation to attack the enemy, created by the success of the military actions of the Allies. General Brussiloff said the army of the south-west was perfectly steadfast, though passive. He noticed the enemy also remains passive along this line. He does not think the Austro-Germans will attack this line in the near future. Together with General Alexseef he is convinced that the armies will be ready and fitted to meet the enemy at the beginning of active operations.

The Generals and the number of members of the Cabinet, after reorganization, will reach 14. The Socialists, including M. Kerenski, will receive five portfolios.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, May 16.—Three cardinal points on which the Government, the Executive Committee of the Duma, and the Committee of the Soldiers and Workmen are agreed are

1. Unity at fronts with the Allies.
2. Full confidence of the Revolutionary Democracy in the reconstructed Cabinet.
3. Plenitude of the powers of the Government.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, May 16.—The Council of the Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates has issued an appeal to the Army saying:

Do not forget that the regiments of the Emperor Wilhelm destroying the Revolutionary Russia, the loss to free Russia will be an irreparable loss. A separate peace is an impossible thing, it being evident that the German Imperialism, after defeating the western Allies will turn on us, seize the country, and enslave the Russians. Peace is not achievable if you do not check the enemy pressure on the front. How can you accomplish this if you remain inactive in your trenches? Do not renounce the offensive fight for liberty. Fear the enemy's traps of fraternisation. Peace is not obtainable by separate treaties or fraternisation of isolated units. This will only lead to a loss to Russian Revolution, the safety of which does not lie in peace or separate armistice.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, May 16.—Mr. Milyukoff, Minister of Foreign Affairs has resigned.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, May 17.—Milyukoff has resigned and is leaving the Cabinet. Tereschtenko has been appointed Foreign Minister and Kerensky Minister of War.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 17.—M. Tereschchenko, hitherto Minister of Finance, succeeds M. Milyukov as Minister of Foreign Affairs. M. Kerenski, at present Minister of Justice will take the place of M. Guchkoff at the War office.

Petrograd, May 18.—The formation of the new Russian Cabinet is as follows:—

Premier	Prince Lvoff.
Interior	Prince Lvoff.
Foreign	M. Tereschchenko.
Commerce	M. Konovaloff.
Comptroller	M. Godneff.
Agriculture	M. Tchernoff.
Justice	M. Pereverzeff.
War and Marine	M. Kerenski.
Finance	M. Shingaref.
Posts & Telegraphs	M. Tzereteli.
Communications	M. Nekrasoff.
Education	M. Manilloff.
Supplies	M. Piexhehnoff.

The Socialist members are M. Tchernoff, M. Tzereteli, M. Kerenski and M. Piexhehnoff. In addition the Socialist M. Skobeleff Vice-President of the Council of Workmens' and Soldiers' Delegates has been elected Minister of Labour.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 18.—Generals Dragomiroff, Alexieff, Gourko and Brussiloff declare that a coalition ministry will restore discipline in the army, which is enthusiastic at the appointment of M. Kerenski as Minister of War.

At a meeting of the Provisional Government and executive delegates, Prince Lvoff, the Premier, declared that the defeat of Russia and her allies would be a national disaster; hence the government is confident the revolutionary army will not allow the Germans to become victorious.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 19.—The new Cabinet has been constituted including six Socialists. Generals Alexieff, Brussiloff, Gourko, Dragomiroff and Scherbatscheff attended several conferences with the Government, when the question of munitions and supplies was discussed and the position regarding them announced as improving. It is understood that Generals Brussiloff and Gourko have withdrawn their resignations.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 18.—The Commanders-in-Chief of the armies, Generals Alexeiev, Brussiloff, Gourko, Dragomirov, and Scherbatov have conferred with the Provisional Government.

The Minister of Agriculture Shingaref explained the question of the food supply. Views were exchanged and a settlement of the question was established. The situation in this respect is greatly improving every day.

At yesterday's meeting of the members of the Duma, M. Guchkoff, ex-Minister of War, explained that he left the Cabinet because it had full responsibility without power. Commenting on the coalition Government he said: "Whatever may be the opinion respecting the new combination, our duty is to support the Government because our assistance will make it strong. Only a strong power can save the country from anarchy."

Professor Milyukoff declared that he was obliged to leave the Cabinet because his views on foreign politics differed from the opinion of a majority of the Government. He thought that a coalition Cabinet might strengthen power and lead to the organization of a single Provisional Government.

The Congress of Delegates of the armies now sitting at Petrograd carried a resolution stating that the present disorganization constitutes a danger to freedom.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 19.—M. Kerenski, Minister of War, has issued an order to the armies in the course of which he says: "The country is endangered. Every one must do his share in defending it. No requests for resignation by the High Command in the desire to escape responsibility at this grave time will be entertained by me. Deserters are enjoined to return to the army and fleet by a date prescribed, viz., May 28. All disobeying will be severely punished."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, May 20.—The reconstituted Provisional Government of Russia has issued a proclamation declaring that it will be guided by the spirit of liberty, equality and fraternity. It rejects the idea of a separate peace, but aims at a general peace, without annexations and indemnities, on the basis of the rights of nations to decide their own affairs. It is convinced that the defeat of Russia and her allies would prove not only a calamity, but would postpone the coming of a world-wide-peace. It firmly believes that the Russian army will not suffer the Germans to destroy the Western Allies and then throw themselves on Russia

Petrograd, May 19.—The new Government has published the following declaration:—

The Provisional Government, reorganised and reinforced by representatives of revolutionary democracy declares it will steadfastly realize the ideas of freedom, equality and fraternity. The foreign policy will be carried on along the following lines: "Rejecting in union with all the people any idea of a separate peace, the Government will pursue in its foreign policy the prompt attainment of peace not aiming at the domination over foreign nations, or the violent usurpation of foreign territory. But a peace without annexation or contributions, based on the rights of all nations to decide their own destiny.

"The Provisional Government will undertake preparatory steps in order to secure an agreement with the allies on the basis of the declaration of the Provisional Government of April 9. Convinced that the defeat of Russia and the Allies would constitute not only a national calamity, but would remove all possibility of the conclusion of peace upon the above basis, the Government believes the revolutionary army of Russia will not permit the German troops to defeat the Allies and then turn all their might against us."

In conclusion the declaration appeals to all the people now against the Government, which will take most determinate measures against all attempts at counter-revolutions, also against anarchistic actions.

The papers publish the speech of M. Kerenski to the Congress of Peasants at Petrograd.

He said: "Comrades, soldiers, sailors and officers, I call upon you to the last deed to show that the Russian army is a mighty and formidable power which is able to force its esteem upon the world and defend the free Republic of Russia."

After pointing out that he had never lived in military circles and was not familiar with special military problems, M. Kerenski continued: "I am determined to carry out the task I have undertaken. I intend to establish iron discipline in the army and am convinced of its success, as such discipline represents the duty of every citizen before the country. By order of the Government all Russian subjects not belonging to the Slavonic race residing in Russia, who ever were mobilised under the old Government for war defense work, are allowed to return home."

Petrograd, May 21.—Yesterday, M. Kerenski, Minister of War, reviewed the Petrograd garrison. He appealed to the soldiers to maintain severe discipline, based on sensible regulations and mutual confidence. The soldiers of the Preobrajensky regiment, in replying, said that the Minister of War could tranquilly proceed with the management of the affairs of war while the revolutionary regiments will employ their efforts to defend the country's freedom against all attempts to destroy it.

The Russian doctors, who have returned from captivity in Germany, reported to the Congress of Peasants' delegates that the Russian war prisoners are subjected to

RUSSIA AND THE ALLIES

New York, May 22.—A Petrograd dispatch says that negotiations of important significance are in progress between Russia and the other allied powers relative to the revision of Russia's objects in the war. M. Tereschchenko, the new Minister of Foreign Affairs, interviewed the allies' Ambassadors in Petrograd yesterday and exchanged views on the subject. It is generally believed that the new Russian Government will make public a statement outlining the contents of what is known as the "No territorial annexation and no indemnity principle," and at the same time issue a declaration to the labouring classes to the effect that though Russia does not desire a separate peace she cannot but support the other members of the allied group for the present object of the war. Thus it is quite patent as well as certain that the agreements between Russia and the allies will have to be revised. It is also reported that the allies will hold a conference to discuss the questions bearing upon the future of Russia in connection with the war, with a view to establishing a lasting peace on a more comprehensive basis and arriving at a proper solution of the internal problems of Russia.—"Nichinichi."

VON BETHMANN HOLLWEG DEMURS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 15.—A Berlin dispatch says that Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, in the Reichstag, replying to interpellations, declined to state the German programme of war aims at the present moment on the ground that it will not serve the interests of the country.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 17.—There is general disappointment in Germany over Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech, which is described by the News von den Dag as a confession of defeat.

WILSON ORDERS TROOPS TO EMBARK FOR FRANCE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 17.—The Admiralty announces that a U.S. Flotilla of destroyers has arrived to co-operate with the British Navy in the prosecution of the war.

U.S. Rear-Admiral Sims, commanding the American Naval forces in Europe, is daily in touch with the Chief of the British Naval Staff.

The services the American vessels are rendering to the Allied cause are of the greatest value and are deeply appreciated.

Washington, May 18.—The Senate has adopted the conference report on the War Army Bill, which the House of Representatives ratified yesterday. It now goes to President Wilson for signature.

Secretary of War Baker in response to a suggestion by one of the Senators that selective drafts be used to help harvest the crops, stated that it was not expected to call out the first 500,000 men before September. At first, therefore, there will be no appreciable interference with the labour of the country during the harvest.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 19.—The first contingent of the American army, in the shape of a medical unit, has arrived at a British port.

Washington, May 20.—The Senate has ratified the War Budget of $3,342,000,000, including $400,000,000 for the merchant fleet.

Washington, May 20.—After signing the Army Draft Bill to-day, President Wilson issued a statement in which he said: "Acting on expert advice from both sides of the Atlantic I am unable, at the present stage of the war, to authorise the organization of volunteer divisions."

This means that Colonel Roosevelt will not be permitted to raise a volunteer expedition. The statement said that if permission were granted for the organization of volunteer divisions, it would seriously interfere with the carrying out of the prompt creation and early use of an effective army, and would contribute practically nothing to the effective strength of the armies now engaged against Germany.

Washington, May 20.—President Wilson has directed that an expeditionary force of approximately a Division of regular troops, under command of General Pershing, shall proceed to France at the earliest date practicable.

Washington, May 20.—President Wilson has ordered all males between the ages of 21 and 30 inclusive to register for possible army duty before June 5.

U.S. OFFICIAL DESPATCH THROUGH KOKUSAI

Washington, May 19.—Orders have been issued directing that an expeditionary force of approximately one division of regular United States troops in command of Major General John J. Pershing proceed to France at the earliest practicable date. General Pershing and his staff will precede the troops abroad. This force is in addition to nine regiments of engineers recently ordered recruited for service in France. An American army division is between twenty and twenty-five thousand men. The President also issued a proclamation, on putting the draft law in force, requiring that all males between 21 and 30 inclusive shall register for military service on June fifth. It is estimated that this category of citizenry numbers ten million, of which the President is authorised to select two increments of 500,000 each. At the same time, the War Department announces that the full strength of the National Guard will be drafted into the United States Army. All Governors of States have been ordered to bring the militia regiments to full war strength. These will number 329,000 men. The Regular Army has already been ordered increased to 293,000. The following are extracts from the President's proclamation, fixing the registration date.

"The power against which we are arrayed has sought to impose its will upon the world by force. To this end it has increased armament until it has changed the face of war. In the sense in which we have been wont to think of armies, there are no armies in this struggle. There are entire nations armed. Thus the men who remain to till the soil and man the factories are no less a part of the army than the men beneath the battle flags. It must be so with us. It is not an army that we must shape and train for war, it is a nation. To this end our people must draw close in one compact front against the common foe. The nation needs all men, but it needs each man not in the field that would most please him but in the endeavour that will best serve the common good. The whole nation must be a team in which each man shall play the part for which he is best fitted. The day here named is the time upon which all men shall present themselves for assignment to their tasks. It is for that reason destined to be remembered as one of the most conspicuous moments in our history. It is nothing less than the day upon which the manhood of the country shall step forward in one solid rank in defence of the ideals to which the nation is consecrated."

COLONEL ROOSEVELT GIVES UP HIS SCHEMES

New York, May 20.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has definitely given up his attempt to raise a volunteer force. He has advised the men who volunteered to serve under him that the only course left for them is to enter the military service in some other way, or serve their country in civil life.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 21.—The United States State Department announces that a Division of Regulars, under command of General Pershing, has been ordered to proceed to France at the earliest possible date. This force is in addition to the 9 regiments of engineers recently recruited for service in France.

Washington, May 21.—Two thousand six hundred marines will accompany General Pershing's Division to France, making, with the contingent of engineers, a total of forty thousand men.

MR. HERBERT C. HOOVER NOW FOOD ADMINISTRATOR IN U.S.

Washington, May 20.—President Wilson, in formally announcing the appointment of Mr. Herbert C. Hoover as food administrator of the United States, outlines the Government's policy. He declares that the powers asked are no greater than those which other governments at war have been compelled to take.

There is no intention by the Government, the President says, to interfere with the normal processes of production. At the same time, he asks the power to fix prices in certain cases, and otherwise regulate the business of food production and its distribution. President Wilson is confident that it will be necessary to use the power in but few cases, where a small selfish minority proves unwilling to put the nation's interests above personal advantage.

A FAIR IN PARIS IN WAR TIME

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 15.—Before a very large audience in the reception hall at the Hotel de Ville the inaugural ceremony of the Paris Fair took place. Speeches were made by the President of the Parisian Council; by the Minister of Commerce; by the prefect of police and the prefect of Seine.

Whilst this ceremony was taking place the President of the Republic visited the buildings set up on the Esplanade des Invalides, being desirous of showing how much importance he attaches to this manifestation of France's economic activity in the midst of war. A large crowd of visitors despite the uncertain weather is a good omen for the success of the fair which is to last till the end of the present month.

LORD ROBERT CECIL IN COMMONS ON PEACE PACT

London, May 17.—The Rt. Hon. Lord Robert Cecil, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs (and Minister of Blockade) replied in the House of Commons today to the demand, by Mr. Philip Snowden, Socialist member for Blackburn, for a British declaration that there should be no annexation and no indemnities, similar to the new Russian declaration, included in the terms for peace.

Lord Robert spoke as follows:

"The British Government has constantly declared that we did not enter the war with any scheme of imperialistic aggrandisement. We did not conquer the German Colonies solely in order to rescue the natives, but as part of the plans of war. If there is any measure of success in war, I should regard with horror the idea of handing back the natives who had been freed from Germany.

"Does the restoration of Poland mean annexation? Likewise, does the restoration of Alsace Lorraine and the Italian Irredenta spell annexation. I deprecate the abandonment of such desirable achievements. Does the demand that there shall be no indemnities mean no reparation for Belgium, Serbia and Northern France and for the destruction of peaceful shipping?

"Regarding the speech of the German Chancellor, the same thing is happening now as happened before. There was a popular movement and popular demand for reform in Germany. There was an appearance of yielding by the Government; then the Junkers protested offensively and the Government surrendered."

BRAZIL'S ATTITUDE DURING THE WAR

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rio de Janeiro, May 19.—It is expected that the decree of Brazil's neutrality in the war between Germany and America will shortly be revoked.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rio de Janeiro, May 22.—Senhor Wenceslao Braz, President of the Republic of Brazil, issued a Message to Congress to-day. The President has recommended that the declaration of neutrality by Brazil in the war between the United States and Germany be revoked.

ENGINEERS' STRIKE SETTLED

London, May 17.—The position with regard to the engineers' strike is hourly improving. The King and Queen had a splendid reception at the munitions works, docks and ordnance factories of Liverpool and Manchester. They received an especially enthusiastic welcome in the Irish quarters of Liverpool.

It is estimated that well over fifty per cent. of the engineers in Manchester and East Lancashire have resumed work. The remainder is awaiting the result of a conference in London by their leaders numbering one hundred. The latter who are mostly of military age met most secretly and with extraordinary precautions being apparently apprehensive of a police raid to secure those eligible for the army and being also afraid of public hostility which is daily growing.

The officials of the amalgamated society of engineers did not participate in this conference which decided to send a deputation to the Ministry of munitions to attempt to open negotiations.

There has been no stoppage of work on the Clyde or at Barrow.

At a meeting at Chatham dock yard the men passed a resolution refusing to strike because the resolution said:

"Our duty is to our country in its present need and a cessation of work would be contrary to all principles of justice to those fighting at the front."

Meetings of the munition girls of London adopted resolutions refusing to associate with any man under forty-one working or skulking in the munitions factories.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 19.—Government has ordered the arrest of the engineer strike leaders at Sheffield, Liverpool, Coventry and Manchester. They have been charged at Bow Street Police Court with impeding the supply of munitions. The magistrate remanded all the accused.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 20.—Both the omnibus and engineers' strike have been settled.

DISASTROUS OUTBREAK OF FIRE AT ATLANTA

Atlanta, Geor.; May 21.—A fire started here to-day in the ware-house section and spread to the residential quarter. It has already destroyed twenty blocks of houses. One thousand men from the officers training camp at Fort McPherson have been summoned to assist the firemen.

Atlanta, the capital of Georgia, is a flourishing City situated 1100 feet above sea-level, 294 miles north-west of Savannah, and 7 miles south-east of the Chattahoochee River. Seven railroads centre at it. The city has an extensive and rapidly increasing trade in cotton, dry goods, horses and mules, and especially in tobacco. Public buildings are the custom-house, state-house, opera-house, the Atlanta University for the education of coloured young men and women, Clark Theological School (coloured Methodist) and two medical colleges.

On September 2, 1864, the city was captured by the Union troops under General Sherman, and the entire business portion destroyed by them on leaving it a month later. Since the restoration of peace, however, its prosperity has been uninterrupted and its growth rapid. Atlanta was settled in 1840; was incorporated as the village Marthasville in 1842; as Atlanta in 1847. In 1910 the population was 154,839.

Atlanta, May 22.—The fire in this city was got under control early this morning. Three thousand homes were destroyed, and the damage to property is estimated as close to five million dollars. There was one fatality only, but thousands are homeless.

London, May 18.—The Austrian counter assault failed to recover an inch of the ground occupied by the Italians in the north of Gorizia. The failure of the Austrian counter-attacks testifies to the fact that despite one month's rest the Austrians could not find sufficient men to replace the loss sustained in the recent engagement in Russia and Rumania.—"Jiji."

SITUATION IN PEKING

Peking, May 16.—There is little change in the situation though some of the smaller parties are again inclining towards the Premier Tuan Chi-jui. Nevertheless it is very uncertain whether a quorum will be obtained in the Lower House in order to discuss the war declaration on Friday or Saturday.

The deadlock is due to the opposition's determination not to permit the passage of the war declaration with Tuan Chi-jui as premier. At the same time they do not wish to reject the bill because, according to the constitution, a bill cannot be submitted twice in the same session, therefore the opposition is abstaining from attending the House.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 23.—The Reuter and Kokusai News Agencies' correspondent is authoritatively informed concerning the present political situation. It appears that the Premier is quite willing to resign if he is convinced that the interests of the country both internal and external will not be adversely affected thereby.

Yesterday, the Premier after a consultation with Wang Shih-chen, chief of the General Staff, went to the president and asked him to name anyone he might have a mind to nominate as a successor to the premiership in order that he might advise the president.

With respect to this action Tuchuns Meng En-Yuan and Chang Hwai-chih, the Tuchuns of Kirin and Shantung respectively, had luncheon with the President and afterwards discussed the situation. They stated on behalf of their colleagues that contrary to parliament's opinion that the cabinet is incapable of carrying on the administration of the country the Tuchuns considered parliament itself is incompetent.

In support of this opinion they pointed out that although parliament has been in session nearly ten months only two measures have been passed into law namely the National Burial Act and the Celebration of the completion of the Constitution Act. The Tuchuns therefore are strongly opposed to Parliament's alleged attempt to usurp executive powers and they particularly desired the president to give the closest attention to their petition demanding the amendment of certain clauses in the draft of the constitution affecting the position of the premier or, alternatively, the dissolution of parliament.

The Tuchuns left Peking last night for Hsu Chow-fu where they will hold a conference with Chang Hsun before finally departing to their various posts.

Respecting the arrest of Eugene Chen, the correspondent is informed that the government took the action because it considered the article in the "Peking Gazette" of 18th as liable to create a serious situation in the government arsenals. It was calculated moreover to provoke bitter feeling against a friendly neighbouring country. The case will be dealt with according to the usual legal process. A preliminary examination is being held in camerâ, but if and when the accused is formally charged the trial will be held publicly with at least three judges on the bench as required by the Chinese court system.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 23.—A Presidential Mandate has been issued to-day dismissing General Tuan Chi-jui, the Premier, from office. Dr. Wu Ting-fang, the Foreign Minister has been appointed acting Premier. The Mandate was issued at 2 p.m.

Peking, May 23.—This afternoon at 2 o'clock President Li relieved General Tuan of the Premiership and appointed Dr. Wu Ting-fang as Acting Premier. He also appointed Mr. Chang Shih-chin as Acting Minister of War. General Tuan left Peking for Tientsin at 7 p.m.

President Li, simultaneously with his dismissal of Premier Tuan, telegraphed the matter to all the provincial authorities, and also sent a telegram to General Tuan requesting him to make efforts in future for the sake of the state though he is out of office now. Dr. Wu, the Acting Premier, visited this afternoon the foreign legations here and made a circumstantial report of the political change.—"Asahi."

Canton, May 23.—Suspicion of the actions of the military leaders is increasing here since the report of inspector general Lu Yung-ting to the Tuchun of Kwangtung, Chen Pin-chun, recommending the reappointment of Lung Chi-kwang. In addition, correspondence is being carried on between former revolutionists and also republicans concerning the means to oppose militarism and support parliament and the constitution.

[BY OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, May 10.—General Chang Hsun, Tuchun of Anhui, commander of the Ting-wu Chun Army Corps in Northern Kiangsu and inspecting Commissioner of the Yangtsze Valley, arrived in Peking last night to discuss important military affairs with the Cabinet, in person. Regarding the war on Germany, this old-typed General of the Chinese Army, is entirely in agreement with the central government so that his presence will further facilitate matters as the war resolution is now under the discussion of the Parliament. Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang has wired to Premier Tuan about his inability to leave Nanking for Peking at this moment. Both Generals Chang and Feng have announced that they will oppose, with their full might, any politician who tries to utilize the existing international issue for political purposes and that they will support Premier Tuan under whatever circumstances. The military conference will be dissolved after one or two meetings in which General Chang Hsun will take part and the military governors will then return to their posts.

The notorious blackmailer, Hsu Shih-yin, late Minister of Communications, has, through the strong assistance of his friends in high places, gained a victory over Yang Yin-hang, chief of the High Procuratorate of Peking, for his wrongful arrest without orders because by a Presidential Mandate, Yang has been suspended from duty and will be handed over to the Committee for the Punishment of judicial officials, for misusing his power. During the course of the last few years, many people were arrested by the Procurators by this way without the Government mentioning anything about the cases; but this time, not only has the notorious blackmailer Hsu Shih-yin been released; but the official who dared to apprehend him for the sake of justice, is to be punished for misusing his functional powers. Mr. Yang is a foreign-trained judicial official and his suspension from duty was ordered by Mr. Chang Yao-tseng, Minister of Justice.

Up to five o'clock this evening, the war resolution still had not passed through the Chungyiyuan or Lower House and the members of the Whole House Committee were, up to five o'clock, waiting for the arrival of Premier Tuan Chi-jui to give explanations on the war policy of his government. It seems the opposition may prevent the passage of the resolution and a political crisis is inevitable.

[BY OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, May 16.—Although there is no definite settlement, the political situation is much clearer at present. There is no question about the resignation of Premier Tuan Chi-jui; but with the exception of Dr. Wu Ting-fang, whose letter of resignation has been returned to him through his son, Mr. G. C. Wu, the Cabinet has taken no action towards other Ministers especially those two Kuomintang members, Mr. Chang Yao-tseng and Mr. Ku Chung-hsiu, Ministers of Justice and of Agriculture and Commerce. Mr. Fan Yuan-lien, Minister of Education and Acting Minister of the Interior, has promised to resume his dual-post on the completion of his sick leave while Admiral Cheng Pi-kuang, Minister of the Navy, will also resume his duties as his resignation has been returned to him. Pending the arrival of Mr. Li Ching-hsi, Mr. Li Shih-hou will continue to act as Minister of Finance while Mr. Chuan Liang, Acting Vice-Minister of Communications, is in control of this Ministry. Thus the efforts of the Opposition in tearing up the existing Cabinet by compelling its members to resign from it cannot be fulfilled.

The reasons for Premier Tuan's not resigning his post are:—

1.—The unhappy incident occurred outside the Chungyiyuan on the tenth instant should be solved judicially and not politically.

2.—The resignation of the Premier at this critical moment will cause serious trouble to the country because there is already bad feeling between the Opposition and the Peiyang Military Party over political affairs.

3.—As Hsu Shih-chang, Wong Shih-tseng and Li Ching-hsi who are qualified to succeed Marshal Tuan as Premier have firmly refused to accept this heavy responsibility at this dangerous time, so his resignation without finding a suitable successor will do great harm to the Nation.

4.—His remaining as Premier will be beneficial to the Nation than his resignation because by his remaining, collisions between the Opposition and the Peiyang military men can be prevented by his influence.

5.—Any serious troubles in China caused by the resignation of the Premier may cause uneasiness in China's foreign relations with the various Powers.

Hence there is no resignation of the Premier and Mr. Chang Kuo-kan, chief secretary of the Cabinet, has also resumed his duties.

ALLIES REMAIN CALM OVER TUAN'S DISMISSAL

It was all so sudden when President Li Yuan-hung drove out Tuan Chi-jui from the Premiership and appointed the veteran Wu Ting-fang as Premier ad interim that a well informed quarter here on the Chinese situation was unable to shed any light as to the possible successor to Tuan yesterday. Wang Shih-chen, Chief of the General Staff, is reported to have been approached several times by Tuan, while still at the head of the shattered Cabinet, asking the former to take up the task of steering the ship of state in the rough sea of international complications in which the country was engulfed. But he is said to be suffering from the effects of the opium habit and in no way able to shoulder such a grave responsibility. Another man cutting a large figure in the situation and likely to be selected as the new Premier is Hsu Shih-chang. Hsu is also reported to have declined an offer made by Tuan to take the latter's place. However, the Kuomin-tang, which has succeeded in driving out Premier Tuan, has no leader who is big enough a man to head the new Cabinet to be formed and it is expected that the President's choice will devolve upon Hsu Shih-chang though he belongs to the Bureaucratic school.

The Cabinet cataclysm of China will naturally force the Peking Government to be further tardy in deciding its course against Germany. But it seems an undue anxiety to be doubtful as to China's ultimate resolution to participate in the war against the world enemy. In official quarters here yesterday no such doubt was discernible. The Kuomin-tang has announced in its press organs time and again that its fight to oust Tuan Chi-jui from power had nothing to do with the question of joining the war, and further, that as a principle the party was in favour of China's siding with the Allies in the great struggle.

The Japanese Government, therefore, is in no way perturbed by the present political crisis of China and is strictly keeping its hands off. Some vernacular papers here reported that Minister Baron Hayashi in Peking personally interviewed Tuan, just before the latter was dismissed from the premiership, and warned him of the consequence of the dissolution of Parliament by resorting to force. The Foreign Office here yesterday denied having ever instructed Minister Hayashi to take such a step. Not only Japan, but the other members of the Entente are understood to be strictly refraining from interfering in the situation at Peking. This may be taken to indicate that the Allies are not shaken in their confidence with which they look towards the final entry of China in the war on their side.

WANT DECIMAL, METRIC SYSTEMS

London, May 20.—The inter ally commercial conference at Rome has passed a resolution in favour of the adoption of decimal and metric weights and measures, and requesting the delegates of Britain, Japan and Russia specially to do their utmost to induce their parliaments and governments to agree.

A cable report from Rome states that the Economic Conference of the Allied powers held there passed a resolution to change all weight and measure systems now in use in the Allied nations to the metric system, and that Japan will be asked by the conference to adopt the metric system.

Regarding this report, the authorities of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce are reported to have remarked that the weight and measure system of Japan is very complicated, and various systems are used together. The Foot, Yard, pound and metric systems are all used in this country and the complication of the systems gives rise to many difficulties and inconveniences. When the metric system is adopted, it will be a great convenience to the public of Japan. The metric system has been invented after a lengthy study by scholars, and now it is regarded as the best system. A report says that England is planning to adopt the metric system. In Japan the authorities have been studying the complicated system of to-day, and it is likely that the metric system will be finally adopted.

But the officials consider that while the metric system is desirable, the sudden change to the metric system is not practicable in Japan, and the matter has to be carefully considered by the government.

GERMANY, RUSSIA AND PEACE

The rumour of the German proposal of a separate peace with Russia is not confirmed, but there is not any sufficiently strong evidence to deny the rumour, and the "Tokyo Nichinichi" states that it has to believe the rumour and reports it has received from its foreign correspondents. One report said that the Russian government rejected the proposal of separate peace with Germany. Whether the rumour of the proposal of separate peace is well founded or not, the paper says that it is true that the Russian government has no intention to listen to such proposals.

When the peace proposal was made by Germany last fall, the Russian government rejected it at once, but according to reports now to hand, the Russian government took at least four days before refusing the recent proposal for separate peace. This shows, that the government of Russia was unable to reject such a proposal without considering some outside influence which is standing behind the government.

The attitude of the Russian government was undecided for some time, and the opinion of the cabinet was divided, and the situation made many believe in the possibility of a separate peace. The "Nichinichi" is glad that the new coalition cabinet has been finally organized and the German proposal flatly rejected. As the new cabinet of Russia includes many different elements, its foundation is weak and it may not be able to rule the country for any long period, but all political parties and factions are now represented in the cabinet, there will be no more conflict between the cabinet and the outside factions. The former cabinet of Russia had been busy in oppressing and fighting the opposing influence, but now with the establishment of the coalition cabinet, there will be no more of such unpleasant incidents.

Even though Russia may not be able to take aggressive steps against Germany, she will be able to defend her own country against the attack of Germany in future. The Entente powers cannot expect more than the defence of her own territory from Russia under the present circumstances. The people who had been the mere critics of the government, are now appointed as administrators in Russia, and the "Nichinichi" believes that Russia will give her best possible assistance to the Entente powers and will bring peace in her own country.

The rapid success of the recent revolution so influenced the Russian people that they were in the habit of dreaming of impossible golden days. Absolute freedom, permanent peace and equality were the subjects they loudly discussed and they have critically attacked the government, but now these critics are represented in the new coalition cabinet. This development will make the people realize the importance of practical movements and the "Nichinichi" declares that the establishment of the new coalition cabinet will steady the Russian nation, and bring peace in the country.

FOREIGN OFFICE URGES TO REFUTE MOSCOW ALLEGATIONS

Insinuating remarks have been spread recently to injure the feeling existing between Russia and Japan, but the Foreign Office of Tokyo has not taken any measure to refute such rumours, says the "Tokyo Asahi." The first remark of the sort is credited to the Italian Consul-General at Moscow, and the "Asahi" believes that the Entente people might have spread the rumour purposely to stimulate the Russians to take more interest in the war. Japan, being situated so closely to the Russian territory, should always endeavour to be on friendly terms with the Russians, and to have injurious rumours going around is greatly disadvantageous to the Japanese.

The paper fails to understand why the Foreign Office of Japan does not take any measure to refute such rumours and explain the true situation to the general public of Russia. The Japanese Acting Consul at Moscow, made a statement to one or two newspapers of Moscow regarding the subject, but the "Asahi" says that such a statement will not reach the entire public of Russia.

In addition to such a wide rumour, M. Milyukoff, the Russian Foreign Minister, recently spoke of the Japanese railway in the Far Eastern Territory of Russia, and it had made the situation worse. The Japanese government should endeavour to request explanation from the Entente Powers, and inform the Russian public of the true condition of Japan, and the feeling of the Japanese public towards the Russians. If Japan slight such rumours as merely wild rumours, the Russian people will misunderstand the Japanese, and the friendly relation between the two countries which had been made closer since the outbreak of the war, will be all at once destroyed. The paper hopes that the Japanese government will take proper steps at this moment to prevent the misunderstanding on the part of the general public of Russia.

AFTER-WAR DEVELOPMENT

The "Jiji" is surprised at the energy with which all belligerent nations, as well as neutral countries, are now preparing for the development after the war. The Japanese government has also established Bureaux for the investigation of the necessary developments to be made during and after the war, and among the general public, various organizations are also being established to prepare for the after-the-war economic struggle. The 'Jiji" believes that the Government and public of Japan, have been stimulated by the efforts of the belligerent powers to lay foundations for development after the conclusion of war, and is glad to see that the Japanese public have realized the necessity of such preparations.

However it is necessary to realize, says the paper, that what Japan is required to do in this direction is different from the circumstances of other nations. While other belligerent nations suffered financially on account of the present war, Japan has gained financially. Since the very beginning of the conflict, the industries and commerce of Japan have made unprecedented development. But such rapid developments are only temporary, and a reaction is sure to arrive after the conclusion of the war, and what Japan should undertake at this moment is to make the foundation of the Japanese industries and commerce firmer so that it will not suffer from the coming reaction.

JAPAN'S SUPPLY OF RAW MATERIALS

Japan has been obtaining raw materials from foreign countries, but since the beginning of the war, the supply of these raw materials has been cut off, and not only is she experiencing difficulty at present, but even after the conclusion of the war, Japan will meet with similar difficulty, as all nations will try to control the supply of raw material, says the "Chugai Shogyo."

While Japan should consider the self-supply of all raw materials the "Chugai" believes that the first material which should be considered is cotton. Japan is the greatest importer of cotton, and the total import of cotton last year amounted to 276,000,000 yen, and the amount is ever increasing. Japan should raise cotton in her own territory, but it is impossible to raise all the cotton required in Japan. In Japan proper, the land is not suitable for cotton cultivation, and there is not enough spare land to be given to it but fortunately in Chosen, the cotton raising has been successful, and the recent yearly product amounted to 45,000,000 pounds. With proper encouragement and cultivation, Chosen will be able to raise a large amount of cotton, but not enough to supply the entire demand of the country.

However the cotton cultivation in China has made wonderful progress and the yearly product increased to two million bales. Japan imported 659,000 bales from China last year. China has a large area of land suitable for cotton raising, but the cotton cultivation in China is still in a primitive stage, and with the introduction of capital and science, the cotton output of China will greatly increase.

The "Chugai Shogyo" suggests that Japan should invest her capital in the cotton cultivation in China, and make the Chinese labourers cultivate cotton under proper supervision. Unless Japan helps China to develop this valuable land suitable for cotton cultivation, Japan will not be able in future to obtain the necessary cotton. The plan will, besides giving Japan sufficient cotton, increase the wealth of China and develop her natural resources.

Friendship with China has been repeatedly discussed, and the "Chugai" believes that such a joint attempt to encourage the cotton cultivation will be profitable both to China and Japan, and bind the two nations closer in friendship and economic relations.

The main shortcomings of the Japanese industries as well as trade are the imperfect organization of industries and trade, and the inefficiency of Japanese labour. The perfection of industrial systems and trade organization, and bettering the condition of the labourers to increase their efficiency, are the two important problems for Japan today.

To take part in the coming international trade war, and to maintain the foreign markets opened for the Japanese products on account of the war, the above two improvements are absolutely necessary. The "Jiji" asks the government and public to concentrate their efforts on these two points, or else the healthy development of the Japanese trade and industries cannot be expected.

JAPANESE DESTROYERS SAVE LIVES ON CAMERONIA

The British press bureau announces that while the British transport Cameronia, carrying over 1,000 troops and hospital nurses, was traversing the Mediterranean on May 15, the vessel was twice attacked by German submarines with fish torpedoes and eventually sank with the loss of over 100 lives. In this connection the British press reports that crews from Japanese destroyers which were present near the scene of the disaster rescued over a thousand lives showing the most admirable valour and fortitude. The press pays high tribute to the daring heroism exhibited by the sailors of the Japanese navy which has established another record in the history of heroism at sea. The British government is especially grateful for the brave action and gallant spirit of the Japanese sailors in saving so many able officers and nurses, who owe their lives to the courageous and self-sacrificing conduct of the Japanese bluejackets. Such is the report which has been recently received here from England.

The sinking of the transport Cameronia by the German submarine has been already reported by press dispatches from various sources. But as to the alleged activity of the Japanese destroyers, which seem to have escorted the British transport in the light of the British press reports, nothing is officially known because the navy authorities express no opinion as to the genuineness or otherwise of the report. But taking into account the fact that the report has emanated from a member of the British press bureau, as is understood, the story is most likely based upon the facts, says the "Jiji," which recalls what was stated in private correspondence sent home by a Japanese resident at Singapore some time ago. The said correspondent stated to the effect that from about the time when a German converted cruiser was said to have made its appearance in the Indian Ocean early in April the number of the Japanese warships detailed in that direction was increased, the reinforcement consisting of powerful leviathans, and that in the near future a powerful destroyer flotilla would be dispatched to the Mediterranean with the object of keeping a cordon against the German U-boats conjointly with the British navy. The correspondent reported that furthermore several powerful cruisers would be dispatched to reinforce the warships keeping lookout for German vessels and be detailed at various important points of the Indian Ocean and the South Seas to detect and if possible attack the Germans. At that time the strength of the squadron detailed in those directions was very limited. The correspondence was regarded as mere rumour at that time, but from the light of the report which has just emanated from the British source the report of the Singapore correspondent was apparently right.

In view of the fact that the strength of the Japanese navy is sadly short of the mark required for the purpose of national defense it is not difficult to suppose that not more than two destroyers were detailed for the escort of the British transport Cameronia and considering that the transport was twice attacked by the enemy submarines and yet the greater part of the crew was saved from the jaws of death, it can be well conjectured that the Japanese destroyers which escorted the vessel encountered great difficulty in saving so many lives. It is thus clear that the Japanese navy is playing her part and has been maintaining activity in the direction of the Mediterranean for some time past.

According to another report the details of the brave deeds of the crew of the Japanese destroyers which saved the lives of so many officers and nurses on board the ill-fated transport Cameronia in the Mediterranean will be officially announced from the Navy Department shortly.

CHARITY WORKERS TO UNITE IN FUTURE

To unite various charity organizations in Tokyo-fu, to improve the conditions of the poor and distressed, and to remove the misunderstanding of the public regarding charity organizations and workers, the Charity Association of Tokyo-fu held its first mass meeting in the Botanical Gardens Wednesday morning. Not only the representatives of all charity organizations in Tokyo-fu, but prominent citizens and officials interested in welfare work were present.

Among those gathered at the Botanical Gardens yesterday were, Countess Itagaki, Viscountess Motono, Dr. Inouye, Governor of Tokyo-fu, Baron Goto, Minister of Home Affairs, Mr. Mizuno, Vice-Minister of Home Affairs, Dr. Kuwada, Baron Ishiguro, President of the Japan Red Cross Society, General Yamaoka, Dr. Nitobe, and Baron Shibuzawa.

Dr. Inouye, Governor of Tokyo-fu, who is the President of the Association opened the meeting by an address and said that on account of the lack of a proper understanding of the nature and purpose of the charity organizations, the public are apt to misunderstand such organizations and the workers, and that the Association aims to perfect the charity organizations in the district and unite them closely so that they can work jointly for the same noble cause.

Baron Goto read a congratulatory address on the organization of the Association, and he was followed by Mr. Mizuno, Vice-Minister of Home Affairs who related the incidents of foreign charity organizations, and hoped that similar institutes in Tokyo would develop to give worthy aid to the needy. Baron Shibuzawa said that the betterment of the charity organizations is an important problem for Japan, and hoped that officials and the public would heartily cooperate in developing the organizations established for the welfare of the people.

At noon, the formal meeting came to an end, and luncheon was held. At two o'clock in the afternoon, Baron Ishiguro and Dr. Nitobe delivered lectures on the charity organizations.

MRS. GUTHRIE ARRIVES AT HONOLULU

Mrs. Guthrie, the wife of the late American Ambassador to Tokyo, arrived at Honolulu by the Columbia on Tuesday, states a special dispatch to the "Asahi." The cruiser Adzuma is reported to have sailed from Honolulu for San Francisco on Wednesday morning on her sad mission of conveying the remains of the late Ambassador to America.

MISS STROUT LECTURES TO PATRIOTIC LADIES

Burma like many countries in the world sang in praise of Japan's achievement and greatness after the Russo-Japanese War, but her praise of Japan has now become nothing but a memory to the great disappointment of all the lovers and admirers of the Japanese Empire. "Japan is a country too indifferent to conducts of immorality" is an opinion universally held by the people of Burma. This was the statement made by Miss Flora Strout, a representative of the World Christian Temperance Union, formerly in Japan but for the last seven years in Burma, before the officials and members of the Japan Ladies' Patriotic Society on Monday afternoon. Miss Strout, as reported already, is on her way home to America, being expected to sail from Yokohama on board the J.P.L. liner Vondel on Saturday, and on Monday afternoon in response to the invitation of the Ladies' Patriotic Society she spoke on her work in Burma at the Society's headquarters, Kudan. Her address was listened to by many ladies with much enthusiasm, being interpreted by Mrs. Gauntlet into Japanese.

Burma, she said, is inhabited by 175 different races who use as many different languages, and women there enjoy more freedom than in any other country in the Orient, but the standard of morality among Burmese women is very low. It is simply surprising that they are so backward in the idea of chastity. Miss Strout told the audience that at present there are about 22,000 unfortunate Japanese women in Burma and with them are many Jewish, Indian and Chinese sisters who are generally reputed to prize chastity above all things. Japan owes the sudden fall of her high reputation among Burmese people simply to the deplorable conditions of many Japanese women there, declared Miss Strout. She often strove hard either by lectures or private talks to sweep away the misunderstanding of Burmese about the Japanese women, but her efforts have so far been futile; they do not cease to hold Japanese women in great contempt, nor are they at all inclined to associate even with Japanese ladies of good character and position.

She said that Burmese women used to tell her that it was a crying shame to talk of Japanese women who can get married on their return to Japan by dint of the money accumulated by evil practices in Burma and that, though she appealed to the Burmese people to join hands with workers of the W.C.T.U. in the task of saving these unfortunate women from the abyss of ruin and to approach the Japanese Government to let them return home, her appeals and suggestions attracted but little attention on all occasions under these circumstances. The Burmese authorities, according to Miss Strout, sympathize with the work of the W.C.T.U. so much that they have accorded her liberal support constantly in the prosecution of her task and supplied her with a house free of rent and electric light dues.

In conclusion, Miss Strout told the audience that the majority of Japanese women of ill-repute in Burma owe their deplorable conditions to villains who had abducted them to Burmese soil, and she ex-

TOKYO TO HAVE FIRE ALARM SYSTEM SOON

The lack of a proper system of fire alarms in Tokyo has been keenly felt by the public, and much damage caused by fire was due to the want of proper means of notifying the Fire Department. To prevent disastrous fires, several leading businessmen of Tokyo have been recently discussing the plan of organizing a Fire Alarm company to instal fire alarms in houses and along the streets.

The plan will be soon realized, as recently Baron Shibuzawa, Baron Nakamatsu, Mr. B. Nakano, Mr. Z. Yasuda and others have decided to organize a Fire Alarm company with a capital of one million yen. The company aims to instal the fire alarm system in Tokyo, Osaka, Kyoto, Yokohama, Kobe and other large cities, and has already filed an application for the City of Tokyo. The Governor of Tokyo, and the Superintendent-General of Police are giving hearty support to the project, and the company has offered to present the entire system of the fire alarm in Tokyo free to the city after thirty years.

The company intends to instal the alarm first in Tokyo, and in three years the installation in Tokyo will be completed. The Company will erect Fire Alarms along the streets all over the city, and the citizens can request the installation of the system in their offices and houses by paying the charge of sixty sen a month. The company will select the latest and most serviceable alarm system. Not only will the alarm be connected with the Fire Department, but also with the Police Department. In case of emergency, the citizens will be able to notify the police as well as the Fire Department.

The Fire Insurance Companies are interested in the project, and they believe that the installation of such a system will greatly decrease the number of fires in Tokyo.

THE FUKUOKA MURDER

The hearing of the public trial of Tokuichi Tanaka, the murderer of Mrs. Irma Sahldern, the wife of Lieutenant von Sahldern, a German prisoner of war detained at Fukuowa, was held at the Fukuoka district court yesterday morning. The court room was crowded to overflowing. Presiding Judge Nose questioned the accused about the facts enumerated in the charge of the public procurator. The accused confessed his crime giving details of the murder and admitted the correctness of his confessions made before the preliminary court. Public Procurator Okamura opened his argument and asked for the death penalty. Counsel for the accused pleaded for a sentence of penal servitude. Judgment of the court will be announced on the 26th.

horted the members of the Society to appeal to the authorities to deal rigorously with such villians engaged in traffic in innocent women and to employ measures to save their unfortunate sisters abroad from miserable degeneracy for the honour of the renowned Japanese womanhood she loves so much.

DR. KISHI HAS PERMIT TO ERECT AERODROME

Permission has been given to Dr. Kishi, a noted doctor and zealous student of aeronautics, to establish an aviation school, aerodrome, garage, magnet factory and works for manufacturing aeroplanes and engines at Iwabuchi-machi, in the suburbs. The projects of Dr. Kishi are expected, when materialized, to contribute greatly towards the progress of Japan's civilian aviation which is still in the rudimentary stage, and he has recently purchased for 160,000 yen a tract of land covering an area of 50,000 tsubo, close to the river Arakawa at Iwabuchi-machi, where the proposed buildings will be erected.

The laying out of the purchased ground will be started shortly. It is told in this connection that Dr. Kishi has disposed of his excellent collection of curios and treasures because there was no other way of raising money necessary for the carrying out of his cherished project. His collection is reported to have been bought for approximately 750,000 yen by Marquis Hachisuka and his friends.

AVIATION ASSOCIATION'S PLANS

The Imperial Aviation Association after a conference of its officials has decided to increase its present capital of 200,000 yen to one million yen with a view to organizing work on a bigger scale for the development and progress of Japan's aviation. The increase of the capital will be made by public donations which the Association will solicit, and it is further reported that the Association is contemplating the inauguration of an air mail service between Tokyo and Osaka.

BAD EARTHQUAKE SHOCK FELT

At 4.20 a.m. on the 18 an earthquake was felt in Tokyo. The shock was not strong enough to cause any damage in Tokyo, but in Shizuoka Prefecture where the earthquake originated, the shock was much stronger, and many houses fell, and three men were killed.

The shock continued for forty minutes, and was felt in a very wide district. The largest vibration felt in Tokyo was 5.5 millimeters. The origin of the earthquake is believed to have been in the mountain bordering on Suruga and Totomi provinces. The earthquake of yesterday morning was felt in Kofu, Tsu, Nagano, Nagoya, Gifu, Miyazu, Kyoto, Hamamatsu, Numazu, Iida, Hikone, Fukui, Yokosuka, Yokohama, Tokyo, and Kumagai.

In Shizuoka, where the severest shock was felt, walls and houses fell, and crevises opened in the streets. One house collapsed so suddenly that three of the inmates were instantly killed. A large number of people in the district were also slightly injured.

Even in Hamamatsu, Nagoya, and Numazu, clocks stopped, and things on the shelves fell; it was the severest shock felt in recent years in these districts. The telegraph wires were broken, and telegraphic communication in Shizuoka and the neighbouring prefectures was temporarily stopped. A train which left Shizuoka at 3.50 yesterday morning for Akashi, ran into the earthquake zone while passing Hinodemachi. The train swayed so badly that it had to be pulled up for fear of its being overturned.

VOTE TELEPHONE EXTENSION IS CUT DOWN

The Department of Communications demanded 10,800,000 yen for the extension of the telephone service, but the Cabinet cut down the demand and allowed only 8,310,000 for the service.

There are at present 150,000 applications for the erection of telephones, and owing to the small number of the new installations a telephone is now valued at several hundred yen and in some cases at over one thousand yen. Thus the extraordinary business of telephone brokers is flourishing.

Regarding the telephone service of Japan, Mr. K. Uchida, Vice-Minister of the Department of Communications, is reported to have remarked that in the national treasury, there are not sufficient funds to extend the telephone service, and it should be enlarged by floating Telephone bonds. But the former Cabinet rejected the plan of floating bonds to extend the telephone service. While there is abundant capital among the public and the demand for the installation of telephones is ever increasing, the government is unable to extend the telephone service. He greatly regrets that there are some officials who oppose the plan of floating bonds in order to extend the service.

However, at present a plan is being considered to float 100,000,000 yen Telephone bonds to enable the installation of 150,000 telephones before 1924. The amount of the telephone bonds will be probably announced at the end of May.

The telephone service has been profitable, and during 1916, the total revenue amounted to 19,000,000 yen, and a net profit of nine million yen was obtained.

THE EXHIBITION AT UYENO

The exhibition in commemoration of the jubilee of the city of Tokyo now open at Uyeno Park is still proving a big attraction and it is reported that its closing has been postponed till June 10.

TERRIBLE ITCHING ECZEMA ON HANDS

And Arms to Elbow. Lost Sleep Also Weeks of Work. Soothed and Healed by Cuticura.

"I suffered from eczema on my hands and arms up to the elbow. It first started between my fingers and when it was at its worst it was fearfully red and with yellow places on it. These places used to turn wet and then used to dry and scale off. I lost nights' sleep with it and I also lost weeks of work.

"I tried all remedies, but none did any good till I got a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I quickly got relief so I bought more and they have healed me completely." (Signed) Peter Lucas Lamb, 41, Franklin St., South Shields, Eng., July 29, 1915.

CHANGE OF BILL AT THE IMPERIAL THEATRE

Three classical tragedies and one modern comic act are billed for the last half of May at the Imperial Theatre. It is the first attempt of the Theatre to change the bill at the middle of the month, and as the actresses of the Theatre have not many opportunities to appear on the stage, the management of the Theatre tried the new plan of staging two different bills in one month when the actresses appear.

Three tragedies, "Suruga Dainagon," "Gishi Meimei-den," and "Sanzeso Nishiki Bunsho" were fairly well played by Kanya, Sojuro and actresses of the Theatre, but in many scenes, Kanya, and Sojuro, the two actors of the old school overshadow the actresses, who become only the background for the two experienced actors.

Strange to say, every scene except the last comic, shows some one cruelly murdered, and the present bill at the Imperial is so full of murders and death scenes that nervous persons are advised not to visit the show. In the first piece one woman and four men are killed, besides several who are wounded in the battle. In the second play, one girl is murdered by her brother, and one Samurai is killed. In the last tragedy, one child is killed by her uncle who is in turn killed by his sister, the mother of the child, and finally the mother and her husband commit suicide.

It is difficult to say whether it was a mere coincidence, or the intention of the management to stage three tragedies, so full of murder and death scenes. It is characteristic of the Japanese tragedy to have the murder scenes, but to witness so many murders and death scenes in one sitting is too strenuous and too much for the average public. When those three tragedies are played separately, they are all good Japanese tragedies, but thus played in the same bill, the audience becomes not only tired of the repetition of murder, but becomes disgusted with the cruelty.

If there was not the last comic added in the bill, the audience has to cry and shed tears all through the evening, and they will be haunted by horrible dreams after going home. Fortunately the last comic put back the people in the merry and happy mood, and they are saved from the haunting bad dreams.

The best of the Japanese plays are tragedies, and the staging of three tragedies is not wrong, but among tragedies there are many which do not have so many murder scenes. If the management selected three tragedies not having so many cruel scenes, the bill might have been a better success.

The first tragedy, "Suruga Dainagon" tells the story of Tadanaga, brother of the Shogun, who was not on good terms with the Shogun. He was imprisoned in a small castle, and finally he commits suicide. The three scenes of the play tell the loyalty of Jirokichi, the stableman, who also dies in the end. His sweatheart is also killed in the last act. It is a pretty tragedy with a touch of romance and the Samurai spirit.

"Gishi Meimei Den" is a side history of the 47 Ronins. One Samurai trying to find out the real intention of Oishi, the leader of the 47 Ronins, disguises himself as the messenger of Moronao, the enemy of the Ronins. Finding the unlimited loyalty and firm determination of Oishi to avenge the wrong done to his lost master, the Samurai kills his own sister and another Samurai to prevent the secret leaking out. He was rewarded for his devotion, and he was finally allowed to be one of the 47 Ronins.

"Sanzeso Nishiki Bunsho" is a story of Osono, a Geisha, who refuses the offer of money and marriage by a rich man who is recommended by her brother. Her brother entices her with every means, but she refuses the offer. During the discussion, a younger daughter of the Geisha appears, and tries to separate her mother and her uncle. The uncle angry at the interruption kicks the young girl to death. At the sight of the death of her daughter, the Geisha becomes exceedingly angry, and kills her brother with a dagger. The Geisha, then runs away with her husband, and together they commit suicide. The last part of the play is especially beautiful, but it is regrettable that the actor and actress did not satisfy the audience with their dancing just before the suicide.

The "Kappore" the comic piece, is a merry dancing and singing act, and the entire actresses of the Imperial appear on the stage, and sing and dance the "Kappore."

THE FAMOUS EILLS CASE

Decision was given Tuesday morning at the Court of Cassation in the appeal instituted by Mrs. Harriet A. Eills against the judgment of the Tokyo District Court in the famous Olga case. As may be remembered the Tokyo District Court passed a decision some time ago in favour of Mr. John Eills, the court, as the result of the second trial, recognizing the claim of Mr. John Eills for the recovery of his daughter Olga whose guardianship constituted the object of the lawsuit between Mr. Eills and his wife Mrs. Harriet A. Eills. The Court of Cassation upheld the claim of Mr. Eills and rejected the appeal brought by Mrs. Eills.

KOZAN'S CERAMIC WORK ON VIEW AT UYENO

An exhibition of master works of the late Miyagawa Kozan, the celebrated ceramic artist, who originated the Makuzu porcelain wares, will be opened for public view Friday morning at the Japan Fine Art Association Building, Uyeno Park, under the auspicies of the Japan Exposition Society.

Mr. Miyagawa Kozan was the son of the family of master ceramists of Kyoto, and his great feat was the discovery of a simple process of painting unglazed biscuits, and his works have been awarded the highest honours at various International Expositions held abroad. He was the greatest ceramist of modern Japan, and was appointed the Art Commissioner of the Imperial Household.

The exhibition at Uyeno will include hundreds of his best works, and many of his works in the Imperial Collection. Any one who is interested in Japanese ceramic art, will find the exhibition interesting and instructive, as not only are the works of the late Miyagawa Kozan the best ceramics produced in Japan, but they have a peculiarity and beauty which can not be duplicated by any other artists. Mr. Miyagawa Kozan was one of the few modern ceramic artists who realized the possibility of developing the old and prescribed method of the Japanese ceramic art, and who succeeded in bringing out the indescribable charm of the Makuzu porcelains. The exhibition will be held until May 31st. Besides the works of Miyagawa Kozan, the Japan Exposition Society will exhibit a number of the modern paintings of Japan, collected by the "Japan Magazine," in the Japan Fine Arts Association building.

Quality.

With LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE, a few drops sprinkled over the meat, fish or cheese, &c., are all that is required to impart the most delicious piquancy and flavour.

The QUALITY and concentration of its ingredients make a little of this sauce go a long way.

NEWS & NOTES

The price of eels has been raised very high owing to the bad catch. Eel which was quoted at 3 yen or so per kan is now over 7 yen per kan.

Owing to the war, there will be no Official Reception at the British Embassy on Sunday June 3rd, the anniversary of King George's Birthday.

The Chinese Government has established a bureau for the registration of Germans. According to its report, there are 1,288 Germans in Shanghai.

The Dai Nippon Sericultural Society proposes to establish a branch office at No. 2, Benten-dori Itchome, Yokohama, with a view to forthwith conducting various investigations and opening a show room in due course.

The Yokohama Marine Transportation Guild has resolved to raise transportation rates by 30 per cent. It raised them by 30 per cent. toward the end of last year. Another enhancement is said to be inevitable, in view of the continued upward tendency of commodities.

It is reported that since the opening of the park at Inokoshira in the suburbs of Tokyo visitors have been increasing in number. Consequently the passengers on the train on the lines between either Shinjuku or Iidabashi in the city and Kisshoji have greatly increased to the extent of inconveniencing traffic on those lines.

Though it is not officially reported yet, the gross receipts of the South Manchurian Railways for the last fiscal year are estimated at 46,000,000 yen, the net profit being about ten million yen, states a message from Dairen. The profit is reported to show an increase of two million yen as compared with the previous year.

Subscriptions to the fund for the establishment of a new medical college at Keio University are reported to have amounted to over 1,800,000 yen. Mr. Kuhara, a multi-millionaire, who donated 100,000 yen to the fund some time ago, has made another handsome contribution and Mr. Yamamoto, a shipping millionaire, is also reported to have contributed 20,000 yen recently.

The Government will introduce a bill in the coming special session of the Diet, providing for issuing bonds of small values, averaging between one yen and three yen in order to have it within the power of the lower working classes to subscribe to them, thus preventing them wasting the rich earnings which they are now enjoying as a result of the boom in the industries of this country brought about by the war.

As the inspection of cinema films hitherto made by the police stations in the city has been decided to be conducted at the Metropolitan Police Board when the new regulations for the control of the movie shows come in force, the authorities have decided to erect a cinema hall in the compound of the Metropolitan Police Board. The authorities say that a number of inspectors and officials will be appointed exclusively for the work which promises to be a heavy one and that the new regulations will be made public later.

The uninterrupted long-distance flight which is now intended by Dr. Kishi, the famous enthusiastic student of aeronautics between Tokyo and Osaka, will be shortly attempted by Lieutenant Takesaburo Inouye at the Doctor's request. It is reported in this connection that Lieutenant Inouye started his investigations recently as regards the various atmospheric conditions which he is bound to encounter in his attempt to fly over that distance. It is expected that as soon as the military aviator has finished his preliminary investigations the intended flight will be carried out. The distance between Tokyo and Osaka will probably be covered in five hours by the aviator provided he makes no stop on the route.

A gang of several hundred robbers which has made the stealing of iron materials during transport by water its chief business has been recently exposed by the police at Tsukiji. The accused include many sailors in the employ of transportation agents and many second-hand furniture sellers, in the city. These sailors, it is said, have long practised the pilfering of part of the cargo on board ships in transit and the stolen materials have been received by second-hand furniture sellers. What is curious about this big band of thiefs is that they have been carrying on their activities under a form of military organization to secure promptitude and discipline of their actions. About one hundred of the band have been arrested and sent before the prosecutors bureau already.

PREFECTURAL HEADS MEET IN CONFERENCE

The Conference of Prefectural Governors, the first to be convened since the general election last month, opened its session on Monday at the Official Residence of the Prime Minister and was attended by all the Governors and the Ministers and Vice-Ministers of State. The first day's session opened at 10 o'clock and the Premier Count Terauchi addressed the meeting, being followed by Minister of Finance Mr. Shoda. After luncheon the meeting broke up, at 1 o'clock.

The Conference will continue to be held every day June 4.

The Premier's address is as follows:

When the Prefectural Governors' Conference was convened in October last year, I took the opportunity to outline the main features of the administrative policy which my Cabinet had decided upon in consideration of the unprecedented world situation and with a view to meeting the requirements of the Empire's advancing destiny. It is, however, a source of profound regret that the execution of the measures I then outlined has been unavoidably interfered with on account of the dissolution of the House of Representatives within three months after the organization of the Cabinet, followed by a General Election. We are now, however, in a position to take up once more our original plans and endeavour to carry them out to a successful issue.

The past half year has witnessed a further extension of the War in Europe, threatening to involve the whole world in its woful meshes. Such being the case, it is incumbent upon the whole nation to be united in its efforts to meet the needs of the present perilous situation. To that end it is necessary that, at home, efforts should be directed toward strengthening the foundations of the country by perfecting its defence and promoting its industries, while abroad it should be our aim to cultivate friendly relations with foreign nations and promote our external trade. In this way alone can we expect to be able to carry out the profound wishes of His Imperial Majesty. It is, however, a matter of deep concern to find in the present temper of the people a tendency toward flippancy and love of luxury. On the other hand, if we look at the state of things in the countries we are fighting hand in hand with we find that their people, while engaged in a life and death struggle, do not fail to take a thoughtful view of the trend of affairs after the war and shape their course in view of their needs in the future. This should be a warning and a lesson to our countrymen. In any case, we should under no circumstances, fail to cherish the virtues of frugality and industry, and endeavour by a single-minded unity to carry out successfully all the necessary post-bellum measures.

In regard to foreign affairs, the Government has steadily and conscientiously carried out the plans it announced soon after its appointment. We have, for instance, faithfully done our part of the common war by rendering our Allies all the assistance and services demanded of us by humanity or obligation. It was in execution of the same policy that we definitely endorsed the resolutions adopted at the Economic Conference of Paris, and similarly we are now actually engaged in giving effect to the prohibition of trade with the enemy. As to the United States' participation in the war, besides being a matter for congratulation by all the Allied Powers, it is particularly satisfactory to us because it has materially strengthened the ties of interests binding Japan and that country. The political change in Russia is of serious importance, but it has not affected Russia's hostile attitude toward the common enemy. The question of China's joining the War is very much complicated and remains to be decided. The Imperial Government has all the while consistently maintained an attitude of neighbourly friendship toward China, an attitude which it is our intention to uphold to the best of our ability.

In the domain of national defence, it is our aim to complete it as far as the state of the finances may warrant. We are actually taking steps to effect all improvements in the military organization and in arms, the necessity of which has been impressed upon us by the experience of the present War. Taking, however, a more comprehensive view of the question, it is obvious that the true defence of a country is closely bound up with the health of its youth, the vigour of its national spirit, the efficiency of its steel industry, the completeness of its merchant marine, the perfection of its horse breeding, and so forth. These details, accordingly, are engaging serious attention on the part of the Imperial Government.

As for the finances, the Budget for the current fiscal year unfortunately did not come into existence, and it has, consequently, been incumbent upon the Government to compile working estimates on the basis of the Budget for the past fiscal year, in order to render possible the continuance of the ordinary work of administration. With regard to special expenditures required by undertakings already authorized in connection with national defence, public loans, promotion of industries and so forth, or in reference to disbursements of urgent importance in view of the progress of the war, they will be embodied in supplementary Estimates to be submitted to the Diet in the coming extraordinary session. And we hope that with the Diet's approval it may be possible to meet the demands of the present situation of more immediate urgency.

It is satisfactory to notice that since the outbreak of the war our foreign trade has grown by leaps and bounds. It has led to a remarkable activity in our industrial world, which has enabled us to supply our Allies with materials badly needed by them and also to cultivate new markets in all parts of the world. In order to maintain our present prosperity after the war, it is necessary for us to utilize the present opportunity for concentrating our industries and improving the standard of business morality. At the same time it is important that the accumulating specie should be employed in such a manner that it shall at home meet the requirement of various enterprises for the development of our domestic wealth and abroad strengthen the foundations of our resources in international exchange. By these and other devices, the whole nation should be united in getting prepared for the coming commercial war. Nor must we neglect to encourage the improvement of agriculture, which after all constitutes the basis of national life and supplies materials for industries. I regret to notice a general tendency among our countrymen to be so far overmastered by the immediate profits of commerce as to forget the needs of nursing the basic resources of wealth. With this fact in view it is the aim of the Government, while encouraging commerce and industry, to protect at the same time the interests of the farming communities, so that the permanent welfare of the country as an economic state may be effectively attained.

In proportion to the increase of general prosperity, there has taken place a rise in prices and wages. The resultant advance in the standard of living has been attended by a general tendency toward luxury. It is important that this tendency toward luxury and ease should be effectively checked, for otherwise the future of the nation will be fraught with sources of deep anxiety. By constant industry and frugality, the people ought to be always well provided against sudden disturbances in the economic condition of the country. Another consequence of our recent industrial development and rise of prices, has been a tendency toward lack of harmony between capitalists and labourers. It is, therefore, important that attention should be paid to the attitude and doing of the capitalists toward working people, and also to the currents of thought among the latter. Problems of social improvement demanding attention will increase in proportion to the advance of the times, especially so during and after the present war. The Government recognizes the importance of encouraging, on the one hand, the beautiful habits of industry and simplicity, and of materializing, on the other hand, schemes of affording relief and improving the sanitary condition of the people at large. The Government looks to you, Gentlemen, to the municipal corporations and other public bodies, for assistance and initiative in providing remedies required by the times for curing social ills.

The industrial development of local districts depends to a large extent upon the completion of the means of communication and transportation. The Imperial Government, therefore, will take steps to carry out, according to their degree of urgency, all necessary undertakings of a national character, such as the construction of railways, the improvement of harbours, the extension of the telegraph and the telephone, and so forth. Likewise the improvement of roads and river courses in the various prefectures is of great importance for the economic development of the respective localities. Looking at the way works of these descriptions are actually carried out, I regret to have to say that they are too often marred by an undue desire to complete hastily out of vain rivalry or by lamentable carelessness in design. Roads of utmost importance from military as well as economic reasons are in some cases so neglected that they are altogether unfit for army wagons or motor vehicles. No less unsatisfactory is the condition of riparian works. There are a number of large rivers with important bearings upon the economic condition of the districts traversed by them, that still remain utterly neglected. Nor is this all. There are even instances where lack of proper administrative regulation with regard to the protection of river sources has led to disastrous consequences. The Imperial Government will do its best to promote these much-needed undertakings in so far as they fall within its sphere of competency, and with regard to such of the works as may come within the jurisdiction of prefectural authorities, the latter will be urged to deal with them promptly and efficiently.

With regard to education, care should be taken to nourish the spirit of public devotion by pointing out the path of loyalty and filial piety in pursuance of the ideas of the Imperial Rescript on Education and in accordance with the basic principles of our political system. Our Empire is ruled by an unbroken line of Emperors, and the relation of sovereign and subject, determined at the beginning, will last for ever. Such is the essence of our national polity, of which we are justly proud in the face of the whole world. Those charged with the important task of education should point out the right path of loyalty and set the minds of the people in the right direction. They should also make it their object to invigorate the spirits of the people by inducing them to cultivate the virtues of industry and simplicity. They should above all things strive to lead their pupils by their personal example. It is also important that these things should be carefully attended to by the local authorities charged with the duty of supervising educational affairs, to the end that national education may be inspired with common aims and aspirations. I may also take this opportunity of calling your attention to the importance of promoting popular technical education side by side with general education, for the development of industries, the basis of national wealth, is dependent upon the practical application of science.

It is unavoidable that changing times will bring about changes in the thoughts of the people. It is, however, to be deeply regretted that the atmosphere in our world of current discussion is of late more or less charged with a spirit of careless abandonment. There are people who take pleasure in voicing the extreme view, while some others do not hesitate to pollute the minds of their readers by printing dirty and obscene matter. There is even danger of mistaken views being aired concerning the basic principles of our political system and reflections made derogatory to the dignity of the Imperial House. The freedom of speech should of course be respected, but it is necessary that strict measures should be taken to prevent the publication of matters calculated to undermine the national polity, or disturb the order and peace, or to poison public morals. Particularly regrettable is the fact that since last winter our periodical literature has not seldom been marked with discussion of the political changes that have recently taken place in some foreign countries with pointed references to the fundamentals of our political system. It is incumbent upon the prefectural authorities to exercise careful judgment in this respect and miss no opportunity of taking such measures as may best conduce to the maintenance of peace and order.

I am persuaded to think that there has hitherto been a tendency on the part of local officials to pass down to the inferior orders of authority instructions and notifications received from the Central Government merely as a matter of form and without any special idea as to their practical execution. The result is that very often these instructions and notifications are not properly understood by the people at large and thus remain dead letters. The Prefectural Governors are expected to keep the inferior officials, whether government or municipal, in a proper state of orderly subordination with a high sense of responsibility. These officials should thus be made to see the proper execution of instructions and notifications, and they should also be instructed to lead the people by their personal example.

As to the maintenance of discipline among the officials, the Imperial Government has already issued instructions concerning the strict enforcement of the Regulations for the Conduct of the Government Officials. It is also important that the enforcement of discipline should be extended to the municipal officials, and the Prefectural Governors are charged to take proper steps with this end in view.

Such briefly are the outlines of my administrative policy, and I have ventured to invite your attention to it once more, because I feel my responsibility for carrying it out. But for its proper execution, I must depend upon your assistance and co-operation. I must, therefore, ask you to get a correct understanding of my views and wishes, and I earnestly hope that by your personal example and exertions you will be unfailing guides and stars to the people under your charge.

The address of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Shoda, was substantially as follows:

The Empire's financial and economic policy will be to leave no stone unturned in adapting itself to the progress of the times. Internally, industries will be helped to develop and, externally, economic expansion abroad will be planned, at the same time preparing to meet the post-bellum change and stemming the ill results accruing from the prosperity of the financial condition.

The most important of all is the realization of the friendly tie between Japan and China, which is one of the principles of the foreign policy of the present Government. To realize this I am convinced that there is no other way than by the economic co-operation of the two countries, and we are carrying on our programme accordingly. On the other hand, we are assisting the Allies for the purpose of promoting the cordial and co-operative relations between this country and them, at the same time devoting our efforts in bringing about the economic co-operation between Japan and America with China.

As to the financial programme, although the Government is obliged, as the result of the dissolution of the thirty-eight session of the Diet, to adopt the budget of the preceding year, we have prepared a supplementary budget for those special expenses which are indispensable in carrying out the plans on which the Government has decided and the special needs of the time. This supplementary budget, to explain briefly, covers a total amount of about 140,000,000 yen, from which 20,000,000 yen is to be spent in adjusting the national debt, thus bringing up the total amount to be paid back to 70,000,000 yen, and 15,000,000 to be added to the Navy Replenishment Fund to enable the completion of the so-called 8-4 system. The expenses needed in improving and expanding the telephone services are also included in this budget.

I cannot help adding a word or two here and that is that, since the Empire participated in the world war and captured Tsingtao, nearly three years have passed and the people are prone to forget the fact that our country is a party to the war for our military operations are not conspicuous on the surface. But the Empire is giving to the Allies every assistance at its command, and the special fund needed for that purpose reaches no small amount. Fortunately, at the outbreak of the war, our national treasury was in such a fine condition that we did not have to seek a special revenue source in defraying those expenses. But what the close of the war will bring no one knows except the prospect that the expenses will only increase. The Government, therefore, is at present considering the ways and means to solidify the foundation of our war-time finance, and feel convinced that it is a high time that the people themselves also should be widely awake in view of the present situation of the war and the position of the Empire.

Turning to the economic condition of the country an unprecedented prosperity is being experienced in all fields. For instance, the excess of export over import since the beginning of the war reached at the end of the last year the total amount of over 860,000,000 yen, only to assume an increasingly favourable trend this year, bringing up the excess of export over import during the five months of the year to 111,000,000 yen, about a three times increase in comparison with last year. This has naturally brought about the over-supply of money which is one of the greatest problems of to-day. The definite way of disposing of this surplus money cannot be outlined in the days like these when the world is full of sudden changes, and necessitates us carefully adapting ourselves to the special needs of the time. Viewed from a broad standpoint, however, the wisest way seems to me to utilize the needed funds to readjust the Government finance and to develop the industries of the country, the next being to invest abroad what we have left. The industries of the country have shown a marked development of late but there still is a great field if we are to live up to the trend and demands of the time. The people must not be satisfied with small success and must be encouraged to engage in industry so as to be ready to enter into the economic activity after the close of the war.

The investment of our capital in China is indispensable in realizing the economic co-operation between Japan and China. For that purpose, the financial organs must be unified and readjusted and co-operative enterprises of Japanese and Chinese must be encouraged. It should be remembered, however, that the interests of the two peoples should be promoted for their common good and conflicts should be avoided as far as possible.

AMERICAN ADVISORY COMMISSION ARRIVED

The American Advisory Commission of Railroad Men to Russia arrived at Yokohama on May 25th by the Empress of Asia. Major Stanley Washburn, the military aid to the Chief Commissioner, who is attached to the party as a representative of the War Department, gave out the following statement to the Press on arrival.

The Advisory Commission of Railroad Men has been appointed by the President of the United States and sent to Russia by the American Government. It has but one aim and object in its mission to the Russian people, and that is to render them the greatest possible service in their war against what has now become a common enemy.

On the entrance of America into the war, there was a universal demand by the people of the United States that every practical aid and encouragement should be extended to each and every one of the nations that have now become its Allies. It is, and has been, the conviction of the American Government that its first duty was to place at the disposal of the allied powers, whose interests and aims have now become the interests and aims of the American people, every available form of encouragement or assistance, material, financial, economic and military, that lies within its power, to secure for civilization the vindication of which has now become the issue upon which the war is being fought.

It is clear that some little time must elapse before American material aid can be a dominant factor in Europe. It is the wish of the American Government to learn at first hand how it may serve at the earliest moment the needs of its Allies. As the war has progressed the Entente powers have been drawn closer and closer together, each giving to the other that in which it excelled, and taking from the other that in which it was deficient. Thus the French by their advice and experience helped to educate the early new British armies that came to France. So Russia helped Rumania, both in material and in teaching her little ally through experience gained after two years in the conduct of war. Both England and France have sent commissions of experts to America to advise with the American Departments of Government in the lessons they themselves have learned, both in the raising of armies and in the conduct of those armies after they have reached the fighting line. We in America have not the experience in modern warfare that even the smallest of our Allies can now claim, but we believe that in problems of railroading and transportation our practice compares favourably with the highest developments known abroad. France, quick to realize this, has already declared her eagerness to avail herself of American labour and experience in the development and operation of her railway systems. Russia, with her huge area and limited lines of communication, has had by far the most difficult transportation problems that any country in war has ever been called upon to face. It now is the earnest hope of the American Government that it may be able to contribute something to the solution of these problems in any or every way which lies within its power.

The American Railroad Commission comes to Russia with no preconceived idea of how it may best serve its new sister in democracy. It comes with one idea and one idea only, and that is to serve in any and every way possible in assisting the people of Russia. It has not come to discuss any political or diplomatic problem which exists in Russia: it comes only to place its knowledge of railroad practices which exist in America, unreservedly at the disposal of the Russian people to use or reject as their judgment may dictate. There is no man connected with the mission who has any commercial or financial aims whatsoever, and the Commission is interested only in placing its knowledge and experience at the disposal of Russia, if the Government of Russia can in any way make use of them.

This Commission has no connection, either in personnel or objective with any other American Commission to Russia. It is strictly a body of technical men who come to offer Russia the product of the best practical experience America possesses in handling huge railroad and transportation problems. The members of the Commission have been chosen from the railroad systems of America, and without qualification, represent the best talent in American railroad experience and practice.

The head of the Commission is Mr. John F. Stevens, known throughout America as a man of broad vision and vast experience in every form of railroad problems. By his work as Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal in its early construction days he justly earned not only the place as one of the foremost American engineers, but also a high reputation as an able organizer and administrator. With more than forty years experience in building and operating American trans-continental system, he embodies knowledge and experience in every branch of railroading, constructive, operative and executive.

Mr. Henry Miller ranks as one of the ablest operating officials in America. His years of experience in handling the transportation problems of some of the most successful systems of American railways have eminently fitted him to assist by his advice and counsel, in the solution of similar problems anywhere in the world.

Mr. George Gibbs brings to the Commission thirty-five years experience in the equipment, operation and maintenance of motive power, rolling stock, as well as in the shop practice of railways. He is the President of the American Institute of Consulting Engineers and has for many years been the consulting engineer of the Pennsylvania System, and as such had charge of the design and construction of that company's famous passenger terminals in New York City, a pioneer work unparalleled in magnitude and wealth of detail.

Mr. John E. Greiner has been picked from scores of American Railroad engineers, and his thirty-seven years experience have made him one of the first authorities in the United States on bridges, bridge construction, wharves and terminals. His extensive experience in railroad structures and the upkeep of light structures under heavy loads, makes him peculiarly fitted to study bridge problems in Russia where light and temporary structures have replaced bridges destroyed by the enemy.

Mr. W. L. Darling has had more than forty years of railroad experience in America. He was active in the construction of early trans-continental lines, and is widely known throughout the American West as a man whose opinions on the economics of railroad location, maintenance of way and railroad engineering problems is final and conclusive. As a construction and maintenance engineer he has no superior in the United States.

These men are representative of the best American railroad practice in its several departments. As a commission these five men embody in their experience and knowledge every phase of American railroad organization and operation.

With admiration for the extraordinary bravery of the Russian people in their war and with prayers for Russian success, they come modestly and without pretense, representing the President and the people of the United States, to offer the Government and the people of Russia their experience and their time, no matter at what personal sacrifice, that they may in any measure that within them lies, contribute something to lighten the great burden the problems of war have placed upon the Russian people.

So far, Major Washburn's statement. Major Washburn was the "London Times" correspondent at the front, and recently passed through Japan for home. Besides those mentioned above, the party comprise Mr. E. B. Shannon, Secretary, and Mr. Franklin Reading, Disbursing Officer. On the arrival at the new customs quay, the party was met by Dr. Post Wheeler, American Chargé d'Affaires, among others, and drove to the Oriental Hotel.

The investment in other countries than China is made for various purposes, for example, to pay for the war supplies from our country, to adjust the exchange rate, or to assist the Allies' finance. Among these we must be prepared to respond unflinchingly to orders for the war supplies in order to help the Allies win the war. To give the Allies every convenience in their paying for the war supplies from our country I feel it is to be our duty to them and at the same time it serves in promoting the international position of the Empire. As to the present unfavourable foreign exchange rate condition which is the inevitable result of the accumulation of our specie held abroad, the Government is considering to introduce into the forthcoming Diet a definite programme drafted to meet the situation.

In order to execute the programme outlined above the existing financial institutes must be facilitated to develop themselves to the fullest capacity, as well as to establish new ones. With this idea the Government is studying and planning to provide financial conveniences for the ships, to improve the exchange bank business, and to give the traders more financial facilities.

In conclusion, I must not omit a few words of warning against the tendency to become increasingly extravagant of late and the marked rise of prices. There may be various causes that force the prices up but I believe one of them is attributable to the unreasonable raising of the standard of living. To encourage thriftiness among the people the Government will adopt some definite measure.

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 24.—The French, on Tuesday evening, made a lively attack at three points on the front from Vauclerc to California Plateau with good results, which terminated in the capture of the last observation points dominating the Tillette valley, thereby greatly extending the positions on the northern slopes. The French carried three lines of trenches in the region east of Chevreux. At night time, the French fire smashed an enemy counter-attack on California Plateau with heavy losses to the Germans, who left 350 prisoners in French hands.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 23.—The French army in Champagne has effected on the northern slopes of Moronvillers Massif a brilliant operation which not only cleared the northern slopes of Cornillet Mount on the extreme left of the massif, but also resulted in gaining the intermediary heights between the summits previously captured by the French. Moronvillers Massif is of great importance being situated between valleys and dominating the Rheims plain eastward.

These operations show that the method of offensives with limited objectives is now being carried out as well in Soissonnais as in Champagne. These are the same tactics as were used in the Somme and which proved energetic and prudent, giving the best results. They consist of continuous hammering, causing the enemy line to yield gradually and destroying it, so to speak, stone by stone.

Some idea of the extent of the German losses during the last Franco-British offensive can now be formed, says "The Matin." Verdun itself which was called by the Kaiser's troops themselves the charnel house of Germany, did not cost them greater sacrifices. In fact on the Verdun front from February 1916 to February 1917 the Germans used 56 ½ divisions, of which fourteen were sent twice to the front and six three times; but in one month only from April 9 to May 9 the Germans used 84 divisions, seven of which had to be brought back twice.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 28.—Three more enemy attacks on Casque Teton, in Champagne, were completely repulsed. A French detachment penetrated the enemy's second line in the region of Offholtz, in Alsace. They found many German dead and brought back a number of prisoners.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 21.—Firing and reconnaissances are reported from the Western and Rumanian front.

Caucasus front.—West of Ardany, the Turks tried to assume the offensive but were repulsed by the Russians. South of Bana, Turkish cavalry tried to approach a hill occupied by the Russians but were repelled.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, May 25.—The usual firing continues on the western, Rumanian and Caucasus fronts. Four bombs were dropped from an enemy aeroplane on Shlok, west of Riga.

An air fight occurred south-east of Galich an enemy aeroplane being shot to pieces by the Russian artillery and the aviator wounded.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

Rome, May 22.—The official Italian communiqué to-day reads:—

"On the Trentino front the enemy, notwithstanding the repulse he has suffered in the last few days, still persists in making desultory and fruitless attempts to divert the Italian general staff from its main objectives.

"On the night of the 21st violent raids were made against our advanced lines in Cavanto Pass. These were all repulsed. Between Lake Cerd and Adige the enemy, after an intense prolonged bombardment with artillery of all calibres, attacked our positions at Mount Dosso Alto southwest of Loppio Lake and Mount Zugna, but was driven back with heavy loss. Other local attacks were attempted yesterday in the Posina Valley, and on the Asiago plateau and in Carnia; all failed.

"On the Julian front in the sector north of Gorizia, the artillery duel, already lively yesterday morning, became more intense towards the evening, but was not followed up by the infantry.

"The position taken on Hill 363 east of Plave, was consolidated. One gun and about thirty prisoners were captured.

"East of Gorizia, the enemy repeatedly attempted to drive us from Hill 126, south of Gorizia, but failed owing to the effective action of our artillery and reserves."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, May 24.—It is officially announced that the Italian forces, yesterday broke the Austro-Hungarian lines from Castagnavizza to the sea. They have taken 9,000 prisoners.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, May 24.—The text of the telegrams between King George and King Victor Emmanuel and an interview with the Italian minister of the interior on his return from London, which first revealed to the mass of the Italian public the presence of heavy British artillery on the Italian front, has evoked a feeling of general satisfaction. The whole Italian press expresses warm appreciation of this new brotherhood of arms which "Le Tribune" says "is a new example of the principle of a common front uniting the allies in a solid concord of will and action."

In all quarters the material assistance which Great Britain is rendering is greeted with enthusiasm.

Rome, May 24.—The Italian official communiqué to-day reads:

"On the Trentino front, between Garda and Brenta, the enemy artillery has been less active for the last few days. The enemy attack is also limited to minor patrol encounters.

"In the Lagi basin a raid on the enemy lines north-east of Maio Mountain brought us some prisoners.

"In the Travignolo Valley, there has been very severe fighting on the night of May 22nd. After a violent bombardment destroying the massif of Piccolo Colbricon, the enemy launched a strong attack penetrating part of our lines in spite of our stubborn resistance.

"On the arrival of our supports there was violent fighting lasting until yesterday afternoon, resulting in our recapturing the whole position. Hundreds of dead were left on the field. We took sixty prisoners, including one officer, and captured three machine-guns. The considerable amount of war material taken by us is evidence of the heavy reverse suffered by the enemy.

"On the Julian front the artillery action was intense. Enemy attempts against our lines north of Marco were repulsed by us.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 25.—The Italian official communiqué reads: "On the Carso plateau on May 24, after 10 hours' violent bombardment, we assaulted and broke through the enemy's line from Castagnavizza to the sea. While we were heavily engaging the enemy on our left, our troops, after carrying the enemy trenches on the centre and on the right, occupied part of the area to the southward of the Castagnavizza and Boscomalo road. They passed Boscomalo and captured Jaminano and five strongly fortified heights. The sudden onslaught surprised and non-plussed the enemy, who counter-attacked in the evening, only to be severely repulsed. We took over 900 prisoners, including 130 officers. Our aeroplanes and sea-planes participated in the battle. We made considerable progress at Monte Santo and Vodice, after severe fighting."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, May 25.—The battle is still raging on the Julian front from the sea to Plava. Yesterday our troops, advancing tirelessly over very difficult and intricate ground, fought their way yard by yard through the deep labyrinth of the enemy fortifications, stubbornly defended by strong and well-trained forces.

Further brilliant successes were achieved. The total number of prisoners counted on the 23rd and 24th of May amounts to 10,245 men and 317 officers with much war material.

In the sector between the sea and Jamiano and the Brestovizza road the gallant Tuscan, Arezzo and the second Bersaglier brigades supported by the field batteries, advancing with the infantry drove back the enemy as far as a line south of Jamiano.

North of Jamiano, after heavy fighting, the strongly fortified heights 235 and 247 were captured and our positions extended as far as the outlying houses of Versic.

The enemy attempted to relieve our pressure on the southern Carso by violent counterattacks from Castagnavizza to Frigido all of which failed before the firm resistance of our troops especially the Barletta brigade.

INTERNET ARCHIVE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

East of Gorizia persistent enemy night raids were repulsed against Hill 174 north of Twoli and Grazigora.

In the Cucco Vodice area the enemy is vainly endeavouring to recapture lost positions.

On the whole front the gallant second army especially the 53rd division of the enemy suffered very severe losses.

Yesterday an enemy column attempted a surprise attack against our lines east of Hill 652 (Vodice) which was counter-attacked and driven back to the point of departure which was then carried and held by our troops.

East of Plava we extended our occupation on Hill 363. The aircraft is very active. Squadrons of our machines bombed the station at Sante Lucia with visibly effective results. Three enemy machines were brought down by our airmen.

London May 26.—A great battle is still raging along the Italian front, from Plava to the sea.

The Italian troops have fought their way through a labyrinth of fortifications, stubbornly defended by strong and well-trained forces.

The total of the prisoners taken in the battles of Wednesday and Thursday was 10,245.

The Austrians have made violent counter-attacks on the southern Carso front and in the Monte Cucco and Vodice areas, and have failed, suffering heavy losses.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, May 26.—The tactical result of the Italians' latest victory on the Carso plateau is that they have at length fought their way to the lower of the rocky terraces descending from the Carso to the Adriatic. Thus they have secured a firm hold on the coast road and the railway to Trieste, which is only thirteen miles from the point attained.

Moreover, near Gorizia the Italians have captured the formidable Monte Santo.

Summing up the last fortnight's operations, the Italians have captured two of the strongest mountain fortresses north of Gorizia, have repulsed an Austrian counter-attack in the Trentino and have inflicted on the enemy the most severe reverse he has yet suffered on the Carso front.

Yesterday's official communiqué states:

"On the Carso front, after ten hours' violent bombardment on May 24, the troops of the Third Army assaulted and broke through the well organized lines of the enemy from Castagnavizza to the sea.

"While we were heavily engaging the enemy on the left, our troops, after carrying the enemy trenches in the center and on the right, occupied part of the area south of the Castagnavizza and Boscomalo road. They passed Boscomalo and Locati, captured Jamiano and the important strongly fortified heights of Hills 92, 77, 58, Bagni and Hill 21.

"The enemy was at first surprised and nonplussed at the sudden onslaught, but toward evening counter-attacked in force, supported by an exceptionally heavy bombardment. The attack was repulsed with severe loss.

"During the day we captured more than 9,000 prisoners, including over 300 officers.

"Our air squadron, composed of 130 machines, including a group of navy seaplanes, took part in the battle and dropped ten tons of bombs on the enemy's lines, and brought their machine-guns to bear on the masses of the enemy. The airmen all returned safely.

"In the Gorizia area we repulsed heavy enemy attacks and captured a strong point on the northwest slopes of San Marco. After severe fighting we made considerable progress in the Monte Santo and Vodice areas."

Rome, May 26.—The Italians have captured the heights north of Jamiano and gained ground south of the Jamiano-Prestovizza road. The Italians have captured 5,500 more prisoners on the Carso, where heavy fighting continues.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, May 27.—It is semi-officially announced that the Italians are now masters of the whole zone between Castagnavizza and the sea. Thus, Sermada is the only stronghold standing between the coast road and the Comen Plateau. Italian action toward Trieste and Laibach is now possible.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 27.—The Italian official communiqué reads: "Heavy fighting continues on the Carso. We carried another fortified position, taking 3,500 prisoners. We also seized a net-work of trenches from the mouth of the Timaro river to the east of Jamiano, and took prisoners on the heights between Flander and Medeazza. The enemy's defences east of Boscomalo were broken and the trenches around Castagnavizza taken. We extended our positions on the hill northward of Tivoli and drove back the enemy in the Vodice area with heavy loss. The number of the enemy taken prisoner on the Julian front since May 11 is 22,419, including 487 officers.

Rome, May 27.—The Italian official communiqué to-day reads:

"On the fourth day of the furious Carso battle positions southern part plateau were extended by the untiring efforts of our troops. The positions already captured in other sectors were firmly maintained. On the afternoon between the coast and Jamiano, our infantry by a brilliant assault succeeded in reaching a point by the Monfalcone and Duino and carried the strongly fortified hill 145 southwest of Medeazza establishing themselves a few hundred yards from the village. During the battle parties of our infantry reached the enemy guns capturing a field battery of ten guns with ammunition. Two hundred and twelve prisoners, including 34 officers, were captured.

"North of Jamiano violent attacks and counterattacks in succession continued all day supported by artillery fire. The village of Castanavizza was also reached, but persistent concentrated shelling by numerous enemy batteries compelled us to evacuate the same. We maintained our hold on the western boundary. In the area east north of Gorizia there was intense artillery action in Plava sector and at Udine. The infantry brilliantly carried the heights at the head of Palliowa valley joining our Cucco lines with those of hill 363. They captured 438 prisoners including ten officers and one gun, two trench mortars and seven machineguns. The aircraft continued bombing the enemy communications by railway and returned safely. One enemy machine was brought down."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 28.—The Italians have extended their positions on the southern part of the Carso Plateau and reached a point beyond the Monfalcone-Duino railway. Northwest of Sanziolani, they carried by storm Hill 145. Southwest of Medeazza they captured a field-battery, 10 guns and 712 prisoners. "We reached and passed Castagnavizza, but the concentrated enemy artillery fire compelled us to evacuate our positions. We maintained our hold of the western boundary. By a brilliant attack, we carried the heights at the head of the Palliowa valley. In the Plava sector, we captured 438 prisoners."

Rome, May 28.—The Italian official communiqué to-day reports:

"On the Julian front though hindered by bad weather we extended our positions yesterday, and strengthened those previously captured. On the Carso, after effective artillery preparation more strongly fortified trenches east and southeast of Jamiano were taken from the enemy. The Timav river was crossed and the village of Sanioranni northwest of Duino was occupied. Our troops captured nine 149 millimetre guns of recent pattern in excellent condition.

"In the Gorizia area, on the night of the 27th, two successive violent attacks against our positions in the Vodice sector and the height east of the city were repulsed. Last night, the enemy shelled with great violence our positions at Hill 126 south of Crozingna. Strong parties of infantry then attacked and succeeded in penetrating a point in our lines. A prompt counterattack drove them out completely. One hundred and fifty-six prisoners, including three officers, remained in our hands. The enemy aircraft bombed localities on the lower Isonzo, causing a few casualties; another raid was made against Chivsaforte without damage."

Rome, May 29.—The official communiqué to-day reads:

Heavy fighting still continues on the Carso. Our gallant troops have carried another strongly fortified enemy position, capturing 4,500 prisoners and much war material. After intense artillery preparations, lasting until four o'clock in the afternoon, the Seventh Army Corps of infantry vigorously attacked and carried a network of trenches from the south Timavo River to east of Jamiano, capturing the heights between Fiendar and Medeazza. Further north, after severe hand-to-hand fighting, the enemy's defences at the labyrinth east of Boscomalo were broken, and Hill 220, south-east of the village, and the trenches around Castagnavizza were captured.

The operations in the northern sector of the Carso were confined almost exclusively to artillery actions.

We extended our positions to Hill 174, north of Tivoli. Fighting is very heavy in the Vodice area, where the enemy endeavoured its utmost to dislodge us from the important point at Hill 652, which remained firmly in our possession. After violent artillery preparation, dense enemy masses yesterday again attempted repeatedly and stubbornly to attack our lines. The splendid resistance of our troops held the position, the enemy being repeatedly driven back with heavy loss, leaving over 500 prisoners in our hands.

In the Plava zone we further progressed on the slopes of Hill 368 towards the Rogat valley. The total of prisoners on the Julian front from the 14th is 22,419, including 487 officers.

A large number of our airmen flew over the enemy's rear yesterday and bombed railway works, ammunition dumps and batteries. They attacked the enemy infantry on the march with machine-guns and all returned safely. One enemy machine was brought down.

GERMANY STILL FAR FROM STARVING BRITAIN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 25.—Mr. Lloyd-George, speaking in the House of Commons to-day, said that the food situation has distinctly improved as the result of the successes in the anti-submarine campaign of the past three weeks. These, he said, had been more effective than at any corresponding period. The Germans, added the Premier, were doomed to disappointment if they were depending upon the submarine warfare for success.

SPANISH MAILBOAT SUNK IN DIRTY WEATHER

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 28.—The Spanish mail-boat C. de Eizaguirre, 4,376 tons, built at Bercelona in 1904, has been sunk in five minutes in very dirty wintry weather. A tremendous sea was running at the time, and the Second Officer's boat with 22 occupants was swept away. Almost simultaneously, the vessel broke in half. No other boat was got afloat. One hundred and thirty-three passengers and members of the crew are missing.

GOLD INFLUX FROM U.S. TO JAPAN EXPLAINED

Washington, May 27.—The Japanese Embassy explains that the continued large shipments of gold to Tokyo are due to the enormously expanding Japanese exports. Japan is not only sharing with the United States the vast outpouring of European gold in payment for munitions and other manufactures but is even piling a huge balance against America, as shown by the statistics of exports of Japanese silk and other products to the United States.

The Embassy recently conferred with the Treasury Department regarding the gold exports and as a result announced that the Department would continue to transfer gold by draft from New York to San Francisco, exporters paying the cost thereof.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 24.—The Provisional Government has ordered a series of measures to be taken in order to arrange the prompt summoning of the Constituent Assembly, which was originally fixed for May 7. The first meeting of the commission appointed to elaborate the regulations for the elections has taken place.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 24.—The Finnish Diet, after the second reading, voted in favour of a Bill granting rights to Russian citizens without distinction of religion or nationality

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 20.—Government has ordered the mobilization of all women physicians up to the age of 45, except those having children under three years of age.

M. Kerenski, the Minister of War, has issued an order authorizing the promotion to the rank of officer, all those non-commissioned officers, who here-to-fore were ineligible owing to insufficient instruction.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 22.—Yesterday the Congress of officers from all parts of Russia opened here.

The American Ambassador, in thanking those present for their greetings, said that he will report to the American Government that all disagreements have been settled and that free Russia is ready to oppose to German absolutism one undivided front with the Allies. The representative of the sailors from the Black Sea pointed out that the freedom won must be strengthened. The old régime had purposely worked out the gulf between officers and soldiers. The speaker believed that the day is near when soldiers will understand their officers as chiefs and highly salute their freedom, which soldiers will face bloodshed to defend.

M. Kerenski, the Minister of War, was enthusiastically greeted by the assembly. He said he wants all the assistance of the officers to lead the military forces of the country to defend their freedom. "It will insistently require the subordination of everyone to discipline and truth. This will make the army a mighty moral force of formidable physical power."

At Moscow, the Congress of Mahomedans carried a resolution recognising that the only form of Government possible was a federate democratic Republic.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Armies, General Alexeef, addressed the Congress of officers in the following words:

"The enemy has occupied an eighth part of our territory. He will not be bribed with the Utopian phrase of peace without annexations and contributions. He has openly declared that he will not retreat, but will extend his greedy hand to the rich provinces of Volhynia, Podolia and Rief and the whole right bank of the Dnieper.

"I summon all the people to unite on one platform. Russia is in danger! Russia perishes! should be our cry. Every faithful son of the country should do his duty and find means of salvation for his Fatherland, and hasten to give his service to Russia."

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Sebastopol, May 24.—After an appeal from M. Kerenski, the Minister of War, the garrison here unanimously applied for an order to be sent to the front to fight the enemy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 25.—Generally the news from Russia is better than a week ago. The crews of the Baltic Fleet have returned to their ports, discipline has therefore been revived. The new Government is making a big effort to evolve order out of chaos. The Sevastopol Garrison has volunteered for service on the Riga front.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Odessa, May 25.—The Congress of delegates from the Russian armies on the Rumanian front was opened here to-day.

General Scherbatchef, in greeting the members of the Congress said that the moment was a critical one, but that he looks forward cheerfully to the future. "The watchword of peace without annexations and contributions," he said, "is highly moral but does not change the methods of war. This watch-word will be fulfilled at the peace conference, not by the armies in the trenches. Never was Russia so strong, never was the German army so weak as at the present. Victory is necessary to defend our freedom. The offensive requires a high war spirit and a disciplined army." The speech was received with loud cheers.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 25.—The representatives of the metallurgic industry visited the President of the Council to-day and explained the difficult situation in the factories, especially in those manufacturing war material owing to the excessive demands of the workmen. The representatives pointed out the impossibility of their assuming further direction of the enterprises and demanded the energetic interference of the government. In the Ural districts the demands for the increase of wages reach 300 millions while the annual business does not amount to 200 millions. Other figures justify the statement. Under such conditions capital will soon be expended and the factories will have to be closed.

M. Skobeleff, the Minister of Labour, said the workmen were not so irreconcilable in their demands and elected a special committee of delegates, who are now on their way to Petrograd. The excessive demands, are caused, says M. Skobeleff, by witnessing the extraordinary enrichment of owner during the last two years. The Minister, however, thinks that Government will be obliged to interfere and organize state control of all industries, where intensive, uninterrupted work is essential for national defense.

M. Tereschchenko, the Foreign Minister, M. Konovalof, the Minister of Industry, and M. Skobeleff, the socialist Minister of Labour, discussed measures in order to regulate the relations between capitalists and workmen. The necessity is recognized of the prompt taxation of all war profits to facilitate the passing of such revenue into State possession. Respecting the war profits realised in the last two years, it has been decided to try and return them to the State by a corresponding increase of the income tax. It has also been decided to adopt more energetic intervention by the State in industrial concerns, especially over mining, metallurgy, textiles and factories. Concerning the increase of wages, the Ministers accepted the proposition of the Minister of Labour that demands for the increase of wages should be formulated by corporations of each special branch of the industry and addressed by them to the Government.

Petrograd, May 28.—M. Kerenski, the Minister of War, has issued the following stirring appeal to the army in which he says:

"You will advance in closed ranks, soldered by discipline to duty and the limitless love of resolution and of country. The free army and free navy will prove that liberty is a pledge of strength not weakness. It forges the new iron discipline of duty and raises the fighting power of the country. Remember! he who would stop or look back would lose all. Do not forget that if you do not defend the free honour and dignity of your country, your names will be damned. By the will of the people you must deliver Russia and all the world from the usurpers. To accomplish this high deed, I appeal to you."

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 28.—The Council of the delegates of "the peasants of all the Russias" has carried a resolution recognising the urgency of asking the Provisional Government to take definite steps in order to secure the agreement of the Allies to the watchword of Russian democracy—"a war without annexations and contributions."

The suggestion of some extremists, urging the immediate publication of Russia's different Treaties was rejected by the whole Council. A resolution recognising that fraternisation on the front constitutes a danger, was carried unanimously with the exception of one vote.

The new Russian Government on May 18 made a declaration, inspired by the ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity, to execute a series of programmes, at the same time demanding that the political rights be given to the people which are necessary therefor, and making it known to adopt a drastic policy to put down the revolutionary movements and anarchistic riots of various natures. The substance of the declaration was received at official quarters here Wednesday and is as follows:

(1) The Provisional Government will co-operate with the people of the whole country in dispersing the idea of a separate peace and openly set forth as the object of Russia that every nation has its liberty to decide its own destiny, and to endeavour to attain an early general peace without any indemnity or annexation of territory. Preparatory measures will be taken to open negotiations with the Allies on the basis of the declaration made on April 9.

(2) The defeat of Russia and the Allies will make impossible the attainment of peace based on the foregoing foundation. Therefore, in order not to enable the German forces to turn towards this direction after defeating the Anglo-French forces, the Provisional Government will mass the Russian forces so as to make them systematic and strong in both defence and offense.

(3) A state and social control will be exercised over the production, transportation, transaction and distribution of food stuffs. Economic panic will be fought to the Government's best ability, and should necessity demand, proper steps to systematize the production of food-stuffs will be adopted.

(4) Further measures to protect the labourers will be formulated.

(5) The question of placing the control of the land in the hands of labourers will be referred to the Constituent Assembly and preparatory steps necessary thereunto will be executed, at the same time facilitating the abundant production of cereals and providing means to utilize the land for the sake of the national economic welfare and in the interest of the labouring class.

(6) For the purpose of reforming the financial policy on the basis of the principle of democracy a special effort will be made to increase the inheritance tax, war-time revenue tax, and property tax, imposed on the property-owning class.

(7) Democratic organs will be established for local autonomy.

(8) Every endeavour will be made to convene the Constituent Assembly in Petrograd as soon as possible.

"Russia will never consent to Germany's proposals for a separate peace and is firmly determined to live up to the existing treaties with the Allies until the war has been fought to a successful issue," was the statement by M. Boris Bachkmetev, the New Russian Ambassador to the United States, now stopping in Tokyo on his way to America, when interviewed at the Imperial Hotel Wednesday.

"I want to lay all the emphasis I can," continued the Ambassador, "on the determination of my country to defeat Germany in this war, for Germany is the real enemy of the principles which the Russian people hold dear in their heart—democracy. I know that rumours are going the round that Russia is on the verge of listening to the German proposals for a peace, but that rumour is absolutely contrary to the present existing state of affairs in Russia. We have some radicals who want to have peace at any price. But these radicals are by no means strong enough to shape the national policy of Russia. The majority of our people are firmly determined to win the war and will never betray our Allies fighting against the common enemy.

"There was at one time, a good deal of talk of our people entertaining anxiety about Japan's attitude towards Russia, especially in the Asiatic territory of our country. I was very glad to find when I passed through Harbin, Vladivostok, and other Siberian cities that this was not the case. Thrusting aside as insignificant those trifles the Russian people as a whole are very friendly to Japan. We appreciate the part Japan has played in supplying the necessary materials for the war."

Among the members of the party, M. Sookine is representing the Foreign Office of Petrograd. He was equally strong in denying that Russia was likely to accept the German offer for peace.

"Democracy is now the national principle of Russia. We have won it by the revolution. But with a militaristic and imperialistic nation like Germany in our neighbourhood our democracy is never secure. We must fight to put down this German menace for ever."

M. Sookine was asked about Russia's abandonment of her claims to the Dardanelles and France's determination to win back Alsace-Lorraine.

"Those problems have not come up for definite decision yet. They are only side-issues of the war and are to be settled at the peace conference. Russia has only declared a general principle and fights for that principle.

"The present Foreign Minister, M. Tereschchenko, does not belong to any party and is strongly determined to keep faithfully the pledges with the Allies to carry on the war to a victorious end. That some radical Socialists and labourers are clamouring for peace I admit, but they will not become the predominant power to alter the country's war policy."

"I believe Russia will adopt the republican form of government. The idea of restoring the Tsar to the Throne is an impossibility; neither will our people be satisfied with a limited monarchy. The chief mission of the party going to the United States is to study the methods and systems with which the American Government is being carried out, with a view to learn what is best for our new institution."

Madame Bachkmetev, wife of the Ambassador, was then asked what the Russian women's sentiment towards their new Government was, and she said it was sincerely sympathetic.

"Though the women of Russia," said Madame Bachkmetev through an interpreter, "had no chance to take an active part in the revolution which was successfully brought about so spontaneously and swiftly, they are ready to give full support to the new Government."

GERMAN MACHINATIONS DISCLOSED

Washington, May 29.—Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, has testified before the House Commerce Committee that the U. S. Government had evidence that Germany, while the United States was neutral, had sent agents to America to buy ships and lend Americans money to purchase grain for shipment by them in order to raise a controversy with Great Britain and France over their seizure.

MUSSULMEN WANT REPUBLIC

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Moscow, May 24.—The Congress of Mussulmen delegates from all parts of Russia have passed a resolution by 446 votes to 271 in favour of a federal republic for Russia.

SITUATION IN BRAZIL

[OFFICIAL TO BRAZILIAN LEGATION]

Rio de Janeiro, May 23.—The following is the full text of the message addressed by the President of Brazil to the National Congress on May 22nd, asking that the neutrality of Brazil in the war between the United States and Germany be revoked:—

"Gentlemen of the National Congress.

In the message addressed by me to the National Congress on the 3rd instant, I declared that I had issued the decree No. 12,458 of the 25th of April last, regarding the neutrality of Brazil, in view of the state of war existing between the United States of America and the Imperial German Government. I took this action in spite of the severance of diplomatic and commercial relations with Germany following the general rule there admitted; in compliance with the decree No. 11,037 of August 4th, 1914, which summarized the principles of the two conventions signed by Brazil at the Hague, referring to the rights and duties of neutral nations and individuals, but avoiding the use in this document of the phraseology employed in preceding acts of this nature, and only ordering the authorities to observe and comply with the neutrality regulations until otherwise advised. The Government could not proceed further, but the Brazilian nation, by its legislative organ, is able firmly but without bellicose instinct, to consider that one of the belligerents is an integral part of the America continent, that it is bound to that nation by a traditional friendship, and by the same political aspirations in defence of the vital interests of America and the principles accepted by International Law. This has always been guiding principle of Brazil; the Republic remains faithful to the uninterrupted traditions of its external policy, and to-day could not repudiate the ideas which inspire the note of protest of the Empire of Brazil on the 15th of May 1866, where a European fleet bombarded a South American city.

Our principle even there was that the nations of a continent whose resources and population were widely disseminated along extensive and unprotected coasts needed more than others the maintenance of the principles of modern civilization which constitute their principal and most efficious protection. Accentuating finally that the policy of continental solidarity is not a policy of this period of Government in this régime, but a traditional policy of the Brazilian Nation, I submit the subject to the judgement of the National Congress convinced that if any resolution be adopted it will further more securely the happy understanding between Brazil and the United States."

The sinking of the steamer Tijuca by a German U-boat off the coast of Brittany aroused the popular feeling of Brazil to such a degree that she is very likely to decide to follow the steps of the United States in declaring war against Germany, according to the information received at the Foreign Office here yesterday. President Braz has sent a message to Congress urging it to adopt a drastic policy, adds the report.

Rio de Janeiro, May 25.—According to the "Journal de Commerce," at a meeting of the Parliamentary Diplomatic Commission, it was decided to adopt the principle of revocation of Brazil's neutrality. It was further decided to police the South Atlantic waters with the Brazilian Fleet.

Ships of the Brazilian Navy are as follows: Dreadnoughts, Minas, Geraes and Sao Paolo, laid down in 1907, each of 19,281 tons; old battleships Deodoro and Floriano, of 3,200 tons each; the protected cruisers Bahia, Rio Grande do Sul, each 3,500 tons and Barrozo, 3,450 tons; five torpedo gun-boats, Tupy, Tonibira Tamoyo, Gustavo, Sampaio, and Tviadente; 10 Yarrow destroyers, 4 first-class torpedo boats, 4 destroyers, a mine-ship, 3 submarines, and a submarine salvage vessel.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rio de Janeiro, May 25.—Senor Pecanha, the Brazilian Foreign Minister, says Brazil need not declare war on Germany, but must accept the state of war which circumstances have imposed on her. She must pay full attention to her military and naval organization, with an especial view to collaborating in the policing of the South Atlantic, and must be ready for any eventuality.

[OFFICIAL TO BRAZILIAN LEGATION]

The President of the Republic sent the following message to Congress on the 26th inst.:—

"Gentlemen of the National Congress.

I submit for your information to-day authenticated copies of the intelligence I received from the Brazilian Legation in Paris, relating to the sinking of one more vessel belonging to the Mercantile Fleet of Brazil, by torpedo from a submarine of the German Naval Force. The attitude which the Government assumed, when Germany communicated to all nations the establishment of a submarine blockade on the western and southern coasts of Europe, restricting thus the liberty of the sea, and extending indiscriminately to the world outside the conflict the most violent process of war, is well known to the whole nation.

The Brazillian Government then protested and, when the Parana was torpedoed severed diplomatic and commercial relation with Germany.

And now that the second boat has been torpedoed without previous warning, and we are menaced by a daily decreasing of our navigation and external trade, the Government is compelled to put into practice the measures for defence which the high resolution of the National Council shall inspire. The Government, in submitting this matter for your consideration, as is its duty, does not desire however to avoid the responsibility to it, of giving its opinion frankly. It appears urgent to the Government to utilize the German mercantile boats interned in the Brazilian ports, excluding in the meanwhile any idea of confiscation, which is repugnant to the spirit of our legislation and to the general sentiment of the country. Such utilization would find support in the principles of the Convention signed at the Hague on the 18th of October 1907, and would be without compensation until we could verify whether they were private property, which even in a state of war ought to be, and would be respected by Brazil, or whether they belonged to companies depending on official connection. In any case what appears to the Government to be beyond delay is that measures imposed by the public interest and by the honour of the nation should be taken."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rio de Janeiro, May 29.—The Brazilian Chamber of Deputies has passed the first reading of the Government measure revoking Brazil's declaration of neutrality by 136 votes to 3.

SIXTEEN ENEMY AIRCRAFT VISIT BRITISH ISLES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 27.—It is officially announced that a large squadron of enemy aircraft, about sixteen in number, attacked the south-east of England between 5.15 and 6.30 on Friday evening. Bombs were dropped in a number of places. Nearly all the damage occurred in one town, where the bombs fell into the streets causing considerable casualties among civilians and serious damage to shops and houses. Seventy-six persons were killed, of whom 27 were women and 23 children. The injured numbered 174, of whom 43 were women and 19 children. British aeroplanes pursued the raiders and naval aeroplanes from Dunkirk engaged them as they returned. The Admiralty reports that three enemy aeroplanes were shot down.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, May 27.—Three German aeroplanes were destroyed in a raid over the south-east of England on Friday evening.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 27.—The air-raiders flew at a great altitude coming from inland and crossed the town in formations of five, dropping bombs continuously. It is estimated that 50 bombs were dropped. The first bomb crashed into a thoroughfare, the quarter of which was crowded with shoppers, including a potato queue of women and children. When the column of black smoke had dispersed, the street for 200 yards resembled a shambles of dead and dying humans, and disembowelled horses. The shops of a green-grocer, a butcher and a draper were demolished at this spot. The bomb tore an enormous hole in the road-way, blowing to atoms a number of cabs and killing the horses. The drivers, who at the moment were absent, escaped. A Girls' School and a hotel were demolished, but there were no victims.

ONE HUNDRED OVERSEAS AEROPLANES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 25.—Mr. Walter Long at the annual meeting of the Overseas Club was handed over a cheque for the Flying Corps for the purchase of the hundredth aeroplane of the Overseas Imperial Aircraft Flotilla, subscribed for by Britons overseas. It was explained that since the cheque had been received, cheques from Durban and Shanghai provided additional machines.

WAR AIMS OF FRANCE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 24.—The Chamber of Deputies re-assembled to-day. Forty interpellations were submitted. M. Ribot, referring to those relating to the recent offensive, said that excessive hopes had been entertained; mistakes had been made, but there was no reason to minimise or exaggerate the results. Never had the Anglo-French troops so splendidly checked the German masses.

The Government had taken plenal measures and also made changes in the high command in order to relieve the latter of everything not connected with actual operations.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 25.—When the French Chamber of Deputies resumed its sittings yesterday, the Premier, M. Alexandre Ribot, made a speech in the course of which he defined France's objects in the war. He declared that the formula "without annexations or indemnities" will not hold good where it is a case of restitution founded upon right and justice. This sophistry will not hold good either when it is a case of taking into account the terrible ravage inflicted by German barbarity upon this country.

M. Ribot dealt with the military and naval questions and referred to the offensive of April 16, saying that the offensive did not fail to achieve important results which will do France honour.

M. Ribot said: "It rendered us masters of the offensive which we should have had to sustain and unmobilized all the German army reserves before us. We made more than 20,000 prisoners, took five hundred cannon and reconquered a portion of our territory."

The Premier announced that debates on the submarine question would come up on Friday. He said the matter should be taken seriously, but there was no need to exaggerate. The number of vessels torpedoed in May was considerably less than in April, he declared.

Coming to the question of France's foreign policy, M. Ribot declared the Russian people had never thought of making a separate peace. The best proof of this was a telegram he had received the same morning from Mr. Terestchenko, who said that "Free Russia" will never give way. The Russian Government can never forget that wonderful efforts were put forth by the French people during the Russian crisis which attracted the German forces to the western front and enabled Russia to reconstitute her forces.

As for peace conditions M. Ribot said the German sophism of peace without annexations or indemnities could not apply to provinces once taken by force; but no one disputed the right of the German people to a free development, and if the Germans realised this it would be comparatively easy to restore peace. Such peace would be made on conditions worthy of France. If the enemy did not accept it, it would be forced on them.

ARCHIBALD HURD AND SUBMARINE PROBLEM

London, May 27.—Archibald Hurd, in the "Daily Telegraph," discussing the submarine problem says:—Never before has there been the co-operation at sea in the spirit which is now being exhibited. The British people will not fail to recognise the devotion to the common cause which is shown by the United States and Japan. They are acting as no Allies ever before acted. The naval authorities of Japan, who, since the opening of the war, have done fine work in the Pacific, have now given further proof of their devotion by despatching light craft half across the world to strengthen the combined forces which are keeping open the Mediterranean.

This co-operation must in the long run prove of immense advantage to both the United States and Japan. It may be doubted whether that consideration had any weight with either country, but it is a fact that if German submarines were to triumph, neither nation could regard its sea communication, which is essential to its economic state, as free from the threat of fatal interruption.

There is no reason to anticipate that although the American and Japanese seamen are co-operating, any one satisfactory solution will be found as a result of a brain-wave materialising in an invention. On the other hand, much is to be hoped from their assistance.

It is no slight gain that Japanese with their unique war experience and their distinctive point of view, should be co-operating in the study of this problem.

During the war in the Far East seamen throughout the world were filled with admiration for the competence, resourcefulness and courage of the Japanese sailors. The concentration of the trained seamen of the Allied navies on this predominant sea problem means that many minds with various characteristics will be brought to one focus by a common experience. Apart from the new devices which may be evolved, the remedy for the menace, as the younger American officers appreciate, is "the gradual hemming in of Germany's submarine craft." That involves the use of many thousands of small vessels as well as arming every merchantman.

Now that the resources of the five fleets of the Allies are in a varying measure available, the suggestion of setting back the German submarines and forming a great concentration in the neighbourhood of their bases, may not prove impossible.

Everything depends upon the extent to which our Allies realise the supreme importance of co-operating to the fullest possible extent to inflict on Germany an overwhelming defeat.

The "Morning Post" says that Germany is now beginning to understand what is meant by the naval power which she thought to invalidate by the mine and submarine while her own main battle fleet remained in harbour. She succeeded in arraying against her the five other greatest naval nations of the world—France, America, Russia, Japan and Great Britain. She will learn in due time that in challenging the free nations she sealed her own fate.

The "Daily Chronicle" asks to what is due the increased destruction of submarines. Partly it may be assumed to be the sudden swelling of our anti-submarine force through the addition of the destroyer flotillas of America and Japan.

WILHELM'S THRONE IS NOW IN JEOPARDY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

New York, May 29.—The Germans here have established an organisation, covering the whole of the United States, for the purpose of dethroning Kaiser Wilhelm and inaugurating a German Republic. An appeal has been addressed to the German-Americans, which says that recent developments in Germany clearly point to an upheaval similar to that which recently took place in Russia. Things are getting uncomfortable for German autocracy, although it attempts to show a bold front to the outside world, the appeal concludes.

COUNT ANDRASSY'S APPOINTMENT

Zurich, May 29.—It is officially announced that Count Andrassy has been appointed Premier of Hungary.

TISZA CABINET RESIGNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 24.—An official despatch from Budapest announces that Emperor Karl has refused to assist the Government's Franchise proposals. Count Tisza has tendered the resignation of the entire Cabinet which has been accepted. Count Tisza's fall is regarded as a serious blow to Germany as he was a pillar of Germanism in Austria-Hungary.

LLOYD-GEORGE IS CONFIDENT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 27.—The submarine menace is decreasing, according to a statement made by Mr. Lloyd George in the House of Commons yesterday.

"During the last three weeks or a month," the Prime Minister stated, "we have dealt more effectively with the submarines than during any corresponding period of the war. There is no doubt that that effect has been manifested in a considerable reduction of our shipping losses.

"If our losses for the last week in May do not exceed the ratio for the period from May 1 to 25, the reduction of losses as compared with the figures for April will be very considerable.

"The arrangements for dealing with the submarines are increasingly efficient. There is a distinct improvement in our food prospects, as the result of the improvement in the submarine situation.

"If the nation economizes and is not guilty of waste; if everybody does his duty patriotically, then I say that the submarine campaign cannot defeat us, and the hopes of Germany of a victory based on the submarines is to be the greatest miscalculation in the whole series of miscalculations of that fated Empire."

FRENCH STEAMER SUNK

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, May 24.—It is officially announced that the steamer Sontay, carrying a crew of 81 and 344 passengers, was torpedoed and sunk while proceeding from Salonika to Marseilles. Forty-five perished including the commander.

A French fishing boat crew fought and drove off a German submarine in the Bay of Biscay.

AMERICA'S PART IN THE WAR

[Official to U.S. Embassy.]

Tokyo, May 28.—Seven weeks have passed since the declaration of war by the United States. The things accomplished during this period effectively demonstrate the nation's complete participation in the war and ability to give immediate and powerful aid.

A bill providing for selective drafts has been passed and placed in speedy operation. This will ultimately give an army of two million men.

Loan legislation was passed and the law providing this loan is in operation with a prospect of tremendous success. Seven hundred and fifty million dollars have been advanced to the Allies.

Flotillas of American destroyers have been sent to the submarine zone where they are effectively co-operating.

Nine regiments of engineers, one army division (25,000) and an expeditionary force of Marines have been ordered to France.

Ten thousand physicians, in addition to many nurses, have been ordered to England and France; hundreds have already gone.

With those Americans who are already members of the British and French armies, these additional units will soon give a total of one hundred thousand Americans in France, a number equal to five German divisions.

By August the National Guard will be at full war strength of four hundred thousand an increase of two hundred and fifty thousand. The regular army has been increased nearly one hundred and eighty thousand men by ordinary enlistment, and the navy personnel has been doubled by the same means. Forty thousand of the finest types of young Americans, assembled in sixteen camps, are now receiving intensive training to become officers.

Conferences with the British and French Commissions, for the arrangements of the essentials of co-operation, have been completed.

A great industrial mobilization has been arranged, including that of 262,000 miles of railway.

Arrangements have been made for the construction of 3,500 warplanes and for the training this year of 6,000 aviators.

Industrial firms in all parts of the nation have been lined up for war work, and the nation's industrial resources have been inventoried and have been placed within reach of the Governments of the United States and of her Allies.

ALLIES CO-OPERATE WELL

New York, May 23.—The Washington correspondent of the Associated Press says an Allied Purchasing Board has been planned, with power to purchase in the United States about ten billion dollars worth annually of arms, munitions and war material on behalf of the Entente Powers, including Japan.

Of this amount it is expected that three and a half billion dollars' worth will be for the U.S. Army and Navy.

The International Agreement is not yet completed, but will probably be ready for signature by the various Ambassadors shortly.

SITUATION IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 24.—The Ex-Premier General Tuan Chi-jui went to Tientsin yesterday. The President sent delegates to Tientsin to persuade Mr. Hsu Shih-chang to come to the capital but it is doubtful whether he will accept the Premiership owing to the opposition of the Kuomingtang which regards him, though he is a civilian, as belonging to the same school as General Tuan Chi-jui. Mr. Wang Shih-chen appears to be the most acceptable candidate.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 25.—Mr. Hsu Shih-chang has definitely declined to accept the premiership. Efforts are now being made to persuade Mr. Wang Shih-cheng to accept, but it appears probable that the latter will also refuse. This will leave Mr. Li Ching-hsi as the most probable candidate.

Mr. Li Ching-hsi is the man likely to become the new Premier of China, judged from informations received in official quarters here yesterday. It is reported that President Li Yuan-hung has selected Mr. Li Ching-hsi, who was recently appointed Minister of Finance but has remained in Tientsin without exhibiting his willingness to accept the nomination, as the head of the new Cabinet to be organized. Mr. Wang Shih-chang, who had been regarded as the possible successor to General Tuan Chi-jui, is reported to have been asked to accept the portfolio of the War Ministry.

The President had this appointment of the Premier submitted to Parliament on May 25 for its approval and though some opposition is likely to be met, officials here are inclined to believe that a Li Ching-hsi Cabinet will be formed.

While the information received in official quarters here does not mention anything about the other members of the new Cabinet, Mr. Tang Shao-yi is likely to be nominated Minister of Foreign Affairs and Mr. Sun Hung-i as Minister of the Interior. These two men, it will be noted, have been stout leaders of the movement against China's participation in the war. Their attitude on the war question after their occupancy of the chairs in the Cabinet remains to be watched and will be the subject of much interest. But, as China is in a position to gain nothing but to lose much by incurring the ill favour of the Allies it is doubted as improbable if the opposition against entering the war will hold to the last.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, May 26.—The occurrences in Peking have caused no excitement here. The provincial assembly has resolved to support the President and Parliament. It is believed here that Parliament is able to stand against the militarist element in politics.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 27.—Mr. Li Ching-hsi, a nephew of the famous Li Hung-chang has been nominated for the premiership. The nomination was made without Mr. Li Ching-hsi's consent but it is not anticipated that he will decline, if his appointment meets the approval of parliament.

The situation is most peaceful, though many rumours are being circulated concerning impending trouble. These rumours include the report that General Chang Hsun has demanded the cancellation of the mandate dismissing Tuan Chi-jui. It is believed there is no truth in this report. On the contrary, the news from Hsuchow is reassuring.

The Tuchuns after a brief conference with Chang Hsun, in which it is stated the latter counselled them to remain calm, dispersed to their various posts.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 27.—It is confirmed that General Chang Hsun has telegraphed the Government expressing his views and those of certain tuchuns concerning the legality of Tuan Chi-jui's dismissal in strong terms. This, however, is practically annulled by a subsequent communication stating that the tuchuns have dispersed to their various posts. The message says that Chang Hsun has no intention of assisting in any movement to oppose the government.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 28.—The Lower House has passed the appointment of Li Ching-hsi to the premiership by a vote of 388 to 56. Wu Ting-fang received a great ovation on introducing the nomination. The Senate will vote to-morrow.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 28.—The Senate has passed the nomination of Mr. Li Ching-hsi by 166 votes to 25.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 29.—It is reliably reported that Mr. Li Ching-hsi still declines the premiership in spite of parliament's approval of the nomination. It is even stated he intends leaving for Peitaiho to spend the summer. Nevertheless strenuous efforts are being made to induce Mr. Li Ching-hsi to accept the new post which, it is hoped, will prove successful. If not the President will be placed in the most embarrassing position and a grave situation result.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, May 30.—It is reported that General Ni Szu-chung, the Tuchun of Anhwei and General Tso-lin, the Tuchun of Fengtien have declared independence against the Central Government.

The latest press telegrams from Peking state that I Ssu-chung, civil governor of Anhui, has declared independence of Anhui province and denounced the measures of the President and the Parliament, which he declares has taken an oppressive step jointly with the President. I Ssu-chung has seized 50 cars of the Tientsin-Pukow railway and is going to send the provincial troops to Peking. Rumours are current that a clash occurred between his troops and the government troops under command of General Chang Hsun, but this is not confirmed. Great uneasiness prevails throughout Peking.

Another Peking dispatch says that a rumour was circulated in Peking on the night of the 29th reporting the independence of Mukden, creating quite a sensation. It transpired afterward that the rumour had its origin in a dispatch from Military Governor Chang Tsuo-lin of Mukden to the Peking government, in which the military governor denounced the step taken by the central government in dismissing ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui as an illegal proceeding and opposing the government measures. The alleged independence of Mukden has thus been found to be a figment of imagination, but the public generally expects an outbreak in the provinces and many government officials and wealthy citizens have deposited valuable articles in foreign banks or sent them to foreign warehouses for custody. The Communications Bank has also followed suit by removing its hold of paper-money to a place of safety.

Dispatches from Tientsin report that Li Ching-hsi has declined the offer of the President to become Premier and refused to receive the special messenger dispatched by the President. On the 29th Mr. Li sent a dispatch to the President in which he formally declined the kind offer of the President stating that he was not equal to the task of shouldering the weighty responsibility and onerous duty of the Premiership especially at the present moment. He asked the President to find a man of better qualifications and ability who might do justice to the weighty task of steering the craft of state at such a momentous period like the present. President Li has dispatched further messengers to Tientsin to try and persuade Mr. Li to accept the offer, but as Mr. Li is a very far-sighted man and is strongly determined to decline the offer the efforts of the President will probably again prove futile. At the root of the present trouble is an intrigue attempting to place in dire straits the Peking government and President Li, by disturbing the political situation in Peking and to compel the President Li to retire. The central figures of this intrigue are ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui, Hsu Shih-chang, and other military leaders, General Chang Hsun being also involved in the league. His ideal is believed to be the restoration of the Imperial regime. The scheme is already in progress and the restless situation in Anhui and other provinces account for the gradual progress of the intrigue which has its centre in Tientsin.

A Peking dispatch states that Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister, in audience with the President on the 28th, said that the Japanese government would take a watchful attitude regarding the political change in China, and asked the President not to lend ear to any rumour reporting the contrary as regards Japan's intention.

A telegram from Tientsin reports that Military Governor Chang Tsuo-lin of Mukden has declared independence. Another dispatch from Peking, received yesterday afternoon, says that I Ssu-chung has also declared independence and risen in revolt against the Peking government. He has seized the cars of the Tientsin-Pukow railway for the purpose of transporting the force under his command to Peking. On the 29th clash took place between his troops and the government troops under command of General Chang Hsun at the Pengpu station. The train service on the line has been interrupted probably owing to the fighting. The Peking government, on Tuesday night, issued orders to General Chang Hsun and Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang to suppress the revolters at the head of punitive forces. Chang Tsuo-lin, Military Governor of Mukden, and Chan Huai-chih are going to join the independence movement supporting I Ssu-chung

According to another message from Peking I Ssu-chung seems to be the first to declare independence and soon after his raising the banner of revolt against the Peking government Chang Tsuo-lin, Military Governor of Mukden, followed suit and declared independence at Mukden. The movement started by I Ssu-chung is likely to be supported by other military governors of various provinces. I Ssu-chung is the civil governor of Anhui province. President Li Yuan-hung will dismiss I Ssu-chung on Thursday and appoint General Chang Hsun civil governor of Anhui to act in his place. The troops under command of I Ssu-chung are about 20,000. and taking for granted that he is supported by Chang Huai-chih, who is Military Governor of Shantung, and Chang Tsuo-lin their combined forces will be in the neighbourhood of 50,000 which is not a formidable strength compared to the government army, in as much as they are located in three different places. Chang Tsuo-lin, Military Governor of Mukden, is under influence of Feng Lin-kuo, who is a staunch supporter of the Peking government, and therefore the Military Governor will be unable to carry out any strong military operation against the Peking government on a gigantic scale.

Owing to lack of any authentic report and the unusual delay of the arrival of telegraphic messages from Peking and other sources in China, probably due to strict censorship or other official interference, nothing accurate is learned as to the true aspect of the occurrence. Still in view of the general dissatisfaction and displeasur among the military governors of various provinces since the dismissal of ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui and the persistent rumour that those military governors are planning another political upheaval, it cannot be denied that some new trouble has cropped up in China to further disturb the chaotic situation lingering in the republic, though the situation may not be so grave as it appears at first blush.

REBELS IN SZECHUAN

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, May 25.—A special despatch from Chengtu says that at Mowkong the trouble is spreading. The rebels have taken one town. It is declared that reinforcements are urgently necessary to prevent the rebels from moving southwards from Tatsien.

Note: Tatsien is in the south-western section of Szechuan Province.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Chengtu, May 26.—Nearly 3,000 civilians have been killed or wounded in the course of the recent fighting in southwestern Szechuan, according to the returns of the casualties in the disturbances. On May 25 the authorities distributed eight dollars in tickets to the wounded and twenty dollars to relatives of the dead.

The situation here is somewhat easier owing to the expectation of a favorable settlement for the Szechuanese.

ONE WISE GREEK

Washington, May 29.—M. Constantinidi, the Secretary of the Greek Legation here, has resigned because he disapproved of the Constantine Government. In tendering his resignation, the Secretary wrote: "It is the duty of every honest man to arraign himself beside the Entente. It is simply a question of Humanity and Civilization against German Barbarity and Bestiality."

BRITISH PRESS PAYS TRIBUTE TO JAPAN

London, May 25.—Lord Robert Cecil's disclosure of the assistance rendered by the Japanese navy is generally commented on by the British press. The "Daily Chronicle" says: Lord Robert Cecil did well to lift the veil which has hidden the substantial services of the Japanese navy to the Alliance. One must realise the immense size of the water areas in the Indian Ocean and Pacific and the element of constant danger lurking in them from possible German raiders, in order to appreciate properly the service rendered by our Far Eastern Ally.

The Japanese flag has now come to European waters. The repeated losses of Mediterranean transports make this help particularly welcome. We have no doubt that the help given by the Japanese navy, which has such a brilliant record of war and success and has steadily maintained such a consistent level of efficiency in ships, officers and men, will be of high value in this critical case of the struggle.

The "Daily Graphic" says: "The news of Japanese help in the Mediterranean is in the highest degree gratifying. It will be very unwelcome to Germany. This is a fresh reminder that Japan is ardently pursuing the task of punishing the criminal outcast among nations."

The "Times," after pointing out the necessity of "small craft to defeat the submarines," says: "For this reason the British nation will warmly welcome the announcement of the presence of a strong Japanese flotilla in the Mediterranean just as we welcome the help of the United States destroyers in our own waters.

"But we also welcome the increasing co-operation of the Imperial Japanese Navy because it constitutes one more proof of that faithful devotion to the objects of the Allies in common which has conspicuously marked the efforts of Japan from the moment she drew her sword. She has crushed for ever the arrogant pretensions of Germany on the Chinese mainland and she has mobilized all her resources for the production of a steady stream of munitions.

"When the full extent of the help given by Japan on sea and land especially to Russia, can be made known, the world will realise how steadfast she has been to the cause she espoused. She has done her share silently but with incessant energy and persistence and we may be sure that the Japanese naval units now in European waters will not be long in gathering fresh laurels."

THE DISMISSAL OF PREMIER TUAN

The dismissal of General Tuan Chi-jui, the Premier of the Chinese Republic from office, is regarded by the Tokyo press as a remarkable development in Chinese politics, and as a victory for the Kuomin party. But all papers express anxiety as to the future development of the situation, because they believe that there are many military governors who still support General Tuan, and the appointment of the succeeding Premier will be an important problem upon which depends the future of the political development of China.

The "Tokyo Asahi" is surprised at the news of the dismissal of General Tuan, but believes that there was no other way to control the political situation at Peking. There are many who over-rate the power of General Tuan, but actually he only managed to maintain his influence by inertia. When General Tuan had a disagreement with President Li regarding the problem of the severance of diplomatic relations with Germany, he tendered his resignation and fled to Tientsin on March 4th. At that moment the Kuomin party planned to establish its own cabinet, and advised the President to accept the resignation of General Tuan, and appoint Dr. Wu Ting-fang as acting Premier. However the development was so sudden that the party was not prepared for such activity, and President Li finally became reconciled with General Tuan and called him back to Peking.

Recently Premier Tuan planned to use his military influence to force the President and House of the Representatives to pass a declaration of war against Germany, but he was not able to oppress the Kuomin-to and gave time and opportunity to the party to make a thorough preparation for taking a decided policy. The "Asahi" believes that the present development was not a sudden outburst, but the Kuomin party carried out a well-planned scheme. General Tuan has powerful military support, and several military governors will not remain inactive now that General Tuan is ousted from the cabinet, and the paper believes that the future development of politics at Peking can not be foretold.

The Kuomin party realized the influence of the military party and it did not try to make hasty movements, and even in organizing the succeeding cabinet, it is not trying to establish a Kuomin cabinet at once, but is planning to organize a coalition cabinet at first, and gradually make it a Kuomin cabinet. With the dismissal of General Tuan, Dr. Wu Ting-fang became acting Premier, but according to the development in future, the Kuomin plan to appoint either Mr. Hsu Shih-chang or Mr. Yu Shih-chen as Premier.

President Li who took a mild policy when General Tuan tendered his resignation in March, on this occasion adopted a drastic decision in dismissing General Tuan. The "Asahi" declares that Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister at Peking is responsible for stimulating the President and military governors to decide on such a drastic measure. When General Tuan tried to force the passing of the bill of declaring war against Germany, Baron Hayashi unofficially advised the Chinese government that such a policy is not desirable, and at the same time gave similar advice to the military governors who had been staying in Peking since March. On May 21 the military governors left Peking and started for their respective provinces, and it is considered that they left the capital when they realized the impossibility of General Tuan's policy.

What development will be seen in Peking, is a question that can not be answered at present, but the "Asahi" says that it is watching the development with the keenest interest.

MAY TRY TO REGAIN POWER

The "Tokyo Nichinichi" believes that General Tuan and his followers will not be inactive and submit to the victory of the Kuomin party, and it is likely that they will scheme to regain power and control the government again.

The intention of the Kuomin party is to restrict the power of the cabinet and enlarge the power of the House of Representatives, and their hope is to govern the nation by controlling the House of Representatives. The present political situation in China is exceedingly abnormal. General Tuan leads the Bureaucrats of the North, and he is supported by the military Governors. The Kuomin party controls the majority in the House of Representatives, and President Li is supported by the Kuomin party. Southern China is supporting the Kuomin party, and it is up to President Li to keep peace and harmony between the northern and southern powers. But there is a Bureaucratic party in central China which is always looking for an opportunity to obtain more power. Under such circumstances there are military governors who are not cabinet members and who are not members of the House of Representatives nor the Senate, but they have sufficient power to influence the cabinet, and the President.

However the Kuomin-to restrict the power of the cabinet, and however it controls the House of Representatives, as long that there is such outside military power, it will not be able to control the government. If the government is weak, the military governors will become stronger.

The "Nichinichi" declares that it is an important problem for China to prevent the political activities of military officials, or else, the country will never be politically peaceful.

FINE WORK OF JAPAN'S FLEET

The "Tokyo Asahi" is exceedingly happy to hear that the Japanese fleets are aiding the British Navy in the Mediterranean and the Southern Atlantic. By the declaration of war made against Germany in August, 1914, it is understood that Japan stood up for the sake of the peace and safety of the Orient, and in the past, the Japanese fleets performed their parts in destroying the German fleets in Asiatic waters and assisted the British Navy in protecting the merchant marine in the Indian seas. The Anglo-Japanese treaty which was instrumental in bringing Japan into the vortex of the present war, was originally concluded for the sake of peace in the Orient. The "Asahi" declares that the activity of the Japanese navy in the Mediterranean and the Southern Atlantic is beyond the terms of the declaration of war against Germany, and our participation in the naval battles in the Mediterranean and the Atlantic, is entirely different from the duty placed upon Japan by the term of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance.

The paper regrets that various works of the Japanese Navy have not be made public by the Japanese authorities, and the public and the world are left ignorant of what the Japanese navy has been accomplishing. Some of the vessels now in the Mediterranean left Japan in February, but until a few days ago, it was not announced by the authorities. While it is absolutely necessary that the movements of fleets and army should be kept secret at the time of war, the "Asahi" cannot understand why the Japanese government did not announce such an important matter to the public. The French and British governments and newspapers have been praising the activity of the Japanese Navy, but the Japanese authorities have not made public any announcement until recently.

The British government is announcing every little movement and advance of the British forces on the western front, spreading the news all over the world, and even the United States has already announced the despatch of one division of the Army to the European front. For a certain period the movement of the army or navy should be kept secret, but the general announcement of the movements of the forces should be made public as soon as it is no longer a secret. The knowledge of the movements of the Navy or Army of one nation, will greatly encourage the people of the country, and will also make the people of other nations realize the part she is playing in the war.

The "Asahi" greatly regrets that the Japanese authorities did not announce the activity of the Japanese fleets in the Mediterranean sooner.

U.S AND RUSSIA

The "Tokyo Nichinichi" believes that the assistance of the United States to the new government of Russia, will establish Russia on a firm foundation. Before the revolution in Russia, the friendly attitude of the United States was stimulated by the economic profits, and it was the intention of the United States to develop the market in Russia and monopolize the Russian trade after the conclusion of the present conflict. But when the revolution took place in Russia, and the United States joined the war, the fundamental attitude of the United States changed, and with the noble idea of aiding and establishing the new Russia, the Great American Republic has abandoned its economic gain in Russia.

The United States has been always working for humanity and justice, and in the past she refused the payment of the Boxer indemnity and used the amount in educating the young Chinese, and with the same spirit, she is now aiding Russia. The Railway commission from the United States is now on its way to Russia to develop the transportation facilities of Russia and solve her food problem, and Mr. Root is going to Russia to give political and diplomatic aid. It is reported that when the United States declared war against Germany, the Entente powers decided to ask the aid of the United States for Russia, but before the envoys of the Entente powers reached Washington, Mr. Root was named as the special envoy to Russia.

If the aid of the United States can firmly establish the new government of Russia, it will not only be the joy of the United States, but it will be a fortunate turn of events for the Entente powers. The "Nichinichi" hopes that the Japanese will realize the intention of the United States towards Russia and give them both the best possible assistance.

RELATIONS BETWEEN JAPAN AND AMERICA

Hold a conference of representatives of the both peoples of Japan and America—not of the representatives of the governments—and let it discuss and study every phase of the Japanese-American question. Such a conference will be productive of results of vast significance in formulating proper methods through which the pending problems between Japan and the United States may be peacefully solved.

That is the idea of Mr. Lincoln Steffens, for some time the editor of the "McLure Magazine" and "Everybody's Magazines" of New York, who is now in Tokyo on his way back to America from Russia, where he went to study the effects of the recent revolution. Mr. Steffens, though not connected with any publication at present, is a well known newspaper and magazine writer in America and particularly takes interest in international and political problems. An interesting article from his pen on the Californian-Japanese affair contributed to "Colliers' Weekly" last fall attracted a good deal of attention. In this article Mr. Steffens proposed the above-mentioned conference of Japanese and American representatives.

"The war has affected my idea not a little," said Mr. Steffens when interviewed yesterday. "The war has made my idea impracticable for some time to come, but my conviction that the conference of such nature ought to be held after times are settled, has not left me.

"President Wilson was perfectly right," he continued, "when he recently said that knowledge of one of another must be diffused among the nations to dispel suspicion and create confidence. What is wanting is the correct understanding between the peoples of Japan and America.

The Governments of the two countries have a perfect understanding with each other and there exists nothing even bordering on suspicion. When California raised a hue and cry against the Japanese, the Japanese Government readily entered into the Gentleman's Agreement to stop sending emigrants to America, and that was in 1908. That Japan is faithfully keeping her agreement everybody in the world knows. Three departments of the Washington Government made a thorough investigation, and I myself also made a personal investigation only to find that Japan is enforcing her agreement more rigidly than the American Government was able to enforce its Chinese exclusion law. This is an example of the high efficiency of the Japanese people.

"But the American general public does not know this sincerity of Japan and are suspicious. Neither do I think the Japanese public knows very well that the American Government is perfectly satisfied with Japan's policy. It is a matter of prime importance that the general public of both sides should know each other in this regard.

"What the people of California fear the the Japanese for is the efficiency of your countrymen. There is no question of colour or race. Japanese could say that they win by their efficiency in competition with Americans. If so, the Japanese are on the right side of the argument. Competition is a human proclivity and everybody is entitled to beat the other man. But, to beat others by underbidding or such means that will lower the standard of living of the opponent is wrong."

HUDSON MARU REACHES YOKOHAMA

The steamer Hudson Maru, belonging to the Tatsuma Steamship Co., Kobe, which was captured by a German raider in the Atlantic and afterward was released, returned to Yokohama Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock. The Hudson Maru, chartered by the Standard Oil Company, left Kobe on September 15 last year for Bombay and thence went to Capetown. About a week after the steamer left Capetown and entered the Atlantic she encountered the German raider, which took her to Pernambuco with the crews of several other steamers which fell victim to the attack of the raider. At Pernambuco the steamer disembarked the crews of the sunken vessels and being released there proceeded to New York via Barbadoes and thence to Philadelphia where she discharged her cargo and taking in fresh freight returned to New York. On the return voyage the steamer passed through the Panama Canal and touching at San Francisco, which port she left on April 30th, was due to arrive at Yokohama about the 26th of this month, but owing to the heavy seas her arrival was delayed until Wednesday evening. From Yokohama the steamer will proceed to Moji where she will unload her cargo from America. The charter contract with the Standard Oil Company expires after the completion of this voyage and the steamer will be overhauled after discharging at Moji.

As soon as the Hudson Maru came to anchor at the port officials of the harbour police station and a public procurator of the Yokohama district court proceeded on board the steamer and started investigation in connection with a criminal case that occurred on board the steamer during the voyage, a fracas among the crew as it is understood. The captain and other officers of the ship were examined by the public procurator. Owing to the examination no one was allowed to board the steamer nor was the crew permitted to land up till late last evening.

YOKOHAMA SILK WAREHOUSES OPENED

Simultaneously with the decision two years ago for the establishment of a Habutai Conditioning House in Yokohama, already opened to business, it was proposed to build special warehouses for export silk fabrics and cognate goods. Such warehouses are now completed, and will be opened to business on June 6th. They were thrown open yesterday afternoon for inspection by those concerned. Mr. Sobei Mogi is the President of the said Company, and Mr. T. Sada Manager.

The Silk Warehousing Company stands close to the Kanagawa Ken Habutai Conditioning House. The Yokohama Silk Refining Company is still under construction close to the Warehouses, and is expected to be completed in the autumn. The Silk Warehousing Company has twenty four rooms for housing silks besides a few rooms for other purposes. Banks are now ready to discount certified papers for goods stored in these rooms, and the operation of the Company will no doubt conduce to the prosperity of Japan's silk trade. The forthcoming completion of the Silk Refinery will further facilitate this line of business.

AMERICAN PROSPECTS POOR IN CHINA TRADE

"There are very small possibilities in China for the future prospect of American trade except the chance for big American concerns to open up the natural resources and to undertake public utility enterprises." This was the opinion of Mr. Lindsay Russell, President of the Japan Society of New York, who returned here on May 24th from several weeks' tour through Chosen, Manchuria and China. Mr. Russell said, when interviewed yesterday at the Imperial Hotel, that China was in such an unsettled condition that he "wouldn't care to invest a dollar" in that country.

"A few big concerns in America," said Mr. Russell, "may have the chance of developing the unlimited natural resources of China but American capitalists, as a whole, are very slow in turning their attention towards the East. As to the future prospect for the American trade with China I cannot see many possibilities there. There are three reasons for my belief. In the first place, we have too much chance at home and in the countries nearer home which are more inviting than this part of the globe. The South American countries offer a bright and great opportunity. In the second place, we Americans cannot successfully compete in China with other peoples—British, German or Japanese. And in the third place, there are few capitalists in the United States who are willing to hazard risks by investing in such an unsettled country like China as long as the Government does not back up the enterprises, and the attitude of the American Government on making loans to China has not changed from that announced when our bankers were invited to participate in the Six-Power-Loan.

"For some years past America's trade with China has not been showing much increase. I could not see anything, during my observations there, which might be taken to justify much hope in the future expansion of our trade with that country. At present oil and tobacco constitute two-thirds of the exports to China. But there is not any other thing that bids fair to increase."

Mr. Russell was asked what he thought of the spasmodic fuss made by the American press from time to time about the alleged monopolization by Japan of trade with China. He replied:

"They make a fuss to keep the Open Door, for they think China will become very valuable to America four hundred years hence."

Mr. Russell is going to stay here several weeks more and expects to leave for the United States by the Empress of Asia scheduled to sail the middle of June.

DOCTOR GORDON MUNRO REPLIES TO MR. TORII

We have received the following signed letter from Dr. Gordon Munro in reply to statements made by Mr. Torii in the Tokyo Anthropological Journal and gladly give it publicity in view of the fact that Mr. Torii appears to have based his article on the report of Dr. Munro appearing in these columns. Dr. Munro writes:—

Only a few days ago I learned that Mr. Torii, an archaeologist of high repute, has published in the Tokyo Anthropological Journal his "Reflexions à propos d'une Conference du Docteur Gordon Munro." As Mr. Torii states that he obtained his information of my ideas from the resume of my last lecture in your estimable paper, I venture to enlist your kindness in permitting me a reply. Had the criticism of Mr. Torii been based on a full report I venture to think it would have taken a somewhat different form. But a short newspaper resumé does not usually furnish appropriate material on which to sit in judgement and I am obliged to say that I did not make the statements which, in particular, he finds too absolute and wanting in clearness.

I did not say that the construction and the contents of dolmens in Europe, Africa and India are identical with those in Japan, nor do I find the word identical in your report. The report says that I represented them as similar. Now similar dolmens are found in Europe e.g., in Ireland and France. I did not say that the contents are similar, only that some things found in Japanese dolmens are found in Europe and continental Asia, or things similar to them, not that the latter are found in dolmens. This is what I said. Where then did the dolmen originate? That is likewise uncertain. But we know where dolmens existed at a date long anterior to those in Japan. That was in North Africa and in Europe, where dolmens contain relics of the later stone age and the early phases of copper and bronze, but rarely the last trace of iron. In Japan on the other hand, the dolmens are of the iron age, with vestiges of the bronze period and mere traces of a stone age in conventional offerings.

Mr. Torii denies that the word dolmen can be applied to the sepulchral chambers found in Japanese tumuli and informs his readers that what I call dolmens are certainly tumuli, where the earth has been removed revealing sepulchral chambers of stone. I infer from this a belief on his part that what he takes to be the 'true' dolmen was never covered by a mound. If this be his opinion I shall say that some dolmens in Europe are still covered by mounds and that, to quote from "Rough Stone Monuments" most "were originally covered by mounds of earth, though in most cases these have disappeared." It is highly probable that the mound, before completion, was utilised as an inclined plane to facilitate the raising of the gigantic blocks of stone which cover the chamber or chambers. In Japan all stages of weathering may be seen, while in Europe, possibly in Korea, denudation is in proportion to antiquity, the loosening action of heavy frost and certainly the size and density of the mound.

I do not say that the dolmen was invariably a sepulchral chamber, but I do say that the name is conventionally applied to ancient tombs of rude megalithic construction. In my last lecture I followed the usual derivation of the word from dol, a table and men or maen, a stone. In a popular lecture one could not go into every derivation. Mr. Torii assures his readers that this derivation is "according to all the dictionaries." In that he is mistaken. He evidently had no opportunity to refer to the most authentic and scholarly dictionaries in the English language, the "Century" and the "Oxford." These give alternative derivations and meanings. The "Century" admits the use of dolmen for corridor tombs. The "Oxford Dictionary" seriously questions the origin of dolmen from tol and maen, pointing out that the Breton compound of these would be, not dolmen, but taolven or tôlven, saying that "the m and d are not thus satisfactorily accounted for." It says that Borlase in his "Antiquities of Cornwall" called these structures cromlêh, but gave tolmên, literally "hole of stone," as the current Cornish name for those enormous blocks found in Cornwall and Scilly, naturally poised upon two supporting points so as to leave a hole or aperture beneath. . . there is reason to think that this is the word inexactly reproduced by Latour d'Auvergne as dolmen and succeeding French archaeologists to the cromlech." Not to be too prolix, I refer Mr. Torii to this dictionary for the original meaning of cromlech, established by writer from the years 1603 and 1695 to recent times as the name for what is now often called dolmen. The word cromlech is now usually used for stone circle and dolmen for the rude chamber or chambers built of huge boulders. Mr. Torii of course does not stand alone in thinking that the word dolmen should be restricted to a single supported cap-stone, but he is in error in saying that this is the usual acceptation. The Encyclopaedia Britannica uses it for one or more chambers. So did Fergusson, Lubbock and other authorities. Gowland, in his "Dolmens and Burial Mounds of Japan," a pioneer work of first importance, includes in the word dolmen chambered tombs and corridors of megalithic construction. As to the fact that such chambers occur in Europe as in Japan, there can be no question. I illustrated several in my lecture. On the other hand there seem to be some distinctive features in the forms of Japanese mounds. Mr. Torii gives emphasis to the fact that the Ainu did not make dolmens, but surely he could not think that an archaeologist of my experience would make such a proposition.

Like Mr. Torii, I stated in my lectures that similarity of culture may arise independently and is not always proof of propagation of culture. That is well known to all ethnologists, but Mr. Torii's illustration of the child playing with flat stones and building dolmens, though previously employed by Lubbock, is too simple to meet similarity in intricate devices. In such cases there is sometimes, however, a common factor, as in the similarity of conventional designs passing through similar technique, such as basketry and textiles, to arrive at forms resembling each other. Mr. Torii knows that what he calls the true dolmen i.e., with a single cap-stone, is common in Korea as it is in Europe, and he knows that the Yamato stock came through Korea. Why, therefore, does he base his main argument for the exclusive individuality of the Yamato sepulchre on the etymology of a word and the comparative prevalence (for it is no more) of corridor tombs in Japan?

None of my lectures conveyed the impression that either Japanese culture or race were entirely products of the West. I did not hint that Japanese civilisation was wanting in originality and it is difficult to understand how Mr. Torii could think so. No one who has lived in Japan so long as I have could harbour such an idea or fail to admire much that belongs entirely to Japanese culture. But I have stated what I know to be the case, that roots of Japanese culture are found in the West and in China, and I stated it, not dreaming that my remarks could be taken in a national or political sense, but solely because I think that those who have some knowledge of human relations should employ it to weld rather than to divide or differentiate our common humanity. While with regard to the Japanese themselves I clearly stated, as Mr. Torii has subsequently done, that the Ainu, the Indonesian and the continental Yamato combined to form the people of Japan, yet I concluded that there is a common brotherhood in a common ancestry just as there is a common chord in the music of thought and common roots in culture. If humanity is one, it is no longer a question as to who is the borrower and who the lender, for all advance is by mutual co-operation and none is creditor or debtor; all are of one family and all are endowed with thought from a common source, the Cosmic Thought, through which and in which we have our being.

KANAGAWA LADIES AID BELGIAN CHILDREN

Madame Ariyoshi, wife of the Governor of Kanagawa Prefecture, some time ago organized a project among the Japanese ladies of the district to raise a fund on behalf of the relief of Belgian children, who have suffered such terrible hardships in the present war.

On Monday afternoon, at the official residence of Governor Ariyoshi a pleasing ceremony took place when the amount raised by the ladies of Kanagawa was handed over to M. Bastin, the Belgian Consul-General by Madame Ariyoshi.

In handing over the money subscribed, Madame Ariyoshi said:

M. Bastin:—

I presume the present European war is the most terrible ever known in the history of the world. Your country being the centre of the battle-fields and occupied for the most part by the enemy, we realize that the people of your country are faced with the utmost hardships and difficulties.

With strict adherence to righteousness and humanity, your country entered into the present war, and we, of the allied powers, cannot help but appreciate the patriotic spirit and vigour manifested by His August Majesty the King of Belgium and his countrymen since the outbreak of the war.

Being in such deep sympathy with the present state of your country, and especially with the innocent children who, we are told, are starving through the oppression of the enemy, we, the ladies assembled here, consulted with, and appealed to the public at large to raise money with a view to relieving the suffering of these stricken children.

With the hearty response to our appeal from the general public, especially from Yokohama people, the total amount collected reached double the first estimation, the persons subscribing number more than eleven-thousand, and we have to tender our sincere thanks to the subscribers for this hearty manifestation of their sympathy.

Though the amount is very small to be appropriated for the rescue of your country's children, we wish you to accept and forward the same to the proper authorities mentioning our profound sympathy with them.

In conclusion, I would say that I have no doubt the victory and happiness will in the end favour Belgium, which is fighting to the utmost for the order of the world and to establish ever-lasting peace.

M. Bastin, Consul-General for Belgium, who was visibly affected, in returning thanks to the generous donors spoke as follows:

Ladies, Your Excellency,

Words fail me to express in a suitable manner the deep gratitude that fills my heart for the splendid token of practical sympathy, which you have shown to the unfortunate little children of my oppressed country.

That so many ladies in the Kanagawa Prefecture should spontaneously and graciously have associated themselves with the project of Your Excellency constitutes, in my eyes, another proof of that Japanese spirit of benevolence, which has now become proverbial. Owing to your generosity, which admirably reveals the depth of the Japanese sympathy for the undeserved misfortunes that have befallen the nation which it is my privilege to represent at Yokohama, the sufferings of thousands of Belgian children—those most innocent victims of the most disloyal act of treachery known to history—will be considerably alleviated.

After the war, a monument is sure to be erected in Brussels for generations and ages to come in commemoration of the relief that will have been granted to Belgium in these times of her sore trial.

It will be impossible to engrave on it the names of the many cities, individuals or committees having participated in that magnificent work of international charity, but you may be certain that such names will be written in the hearts of all Belgians for ever.

As my sense of gratitude cannot possibly come up to the level of your generosity, I shall confine myself to the translation into words of the sentiments of those children who will be able, thanks to your timely aid, to become men or women ready to serve their country and the cause of humanity and who otherwise would have been left to misery and destitution. On their behalf, I say to you all from the bottom of my heart "thank you."

SUCCESSFUL CONCERT AT UYENO

The concert held by the Tokyo Academy of Music on May 26th was an unusual success. Not only was the programme excellently selected, but the music was heartily appreciated by the enthusiastic audience that nearly filled the large auditorium of the Academy in Uyeno Park.

The feature of yesterday's programme was the Concerto for piano with orchestra (D flat major) composed by Prof. Werkmeister, of the Tokyo Academy of Music. The piece was played admirably by Prof. P. Scholz, also of the Academy. It is the first public rendering of Prof. Werkmeister's recent composition, and many music lovers of Tokyo and Yokohama attended the concert especially for the purpose of hearing this production. Prof. Scholz must be heartily congratulated upon his exquisite interpretation of Prof. Werkmeister's composition.

Mrs. K. Ando delighted the audience with the Concerto for violin (Op. 64) Second and Third movements by Mendelssohn. Mrs. Ando is the foremost violin player of Japan, and probably there is no other Japanese who could have interpreted such a difficult piece with the same ease and aplomb. Her performance is the more remarkable since she was handicapped by a sore finger.

Miss H. Hanashima sang pleasingly the Aria for Alto from "Alcesto" by Gulck. This young singer has greatly improved recently, and she is now one of the most promising singers of the future in Japan. Unlike most of the alto voices of the Japanese, her voice is strong and clear, and she sang the Aria yesterday with a pleasing expression.

The orchestra under the bâton of Prof. Gustav Kron, added much to the afternoon's pleasure.

The programme was as follows:

1. Symphony with the drum-roll (No. 1, E flat major).....Haydn.
   Adagio-Allegro con spirito,
   Andante,
   Minuetto,
   Allegro con spirito.
2. a) "Ave Maria" for female voices with piano .....Brahms
   b) "Consolation" for mixed voices with piano .....Reger.
3. Concerto for violin (Op. 64) 2nd and 3rd movement..Mendelssohn.
   Mrs. K. Ando.
4. "Invitation to the dance" for orchestra (Op. 65) .....Weber-Berlioz.
5. Aria for alto from "Alceste"...Gluck.
   Miss H. Hanashima.
6. Concerto for piano with orchestra (D flat major) ....Werkmeister.
   Mr. P. Scholz.
7. Three Hebrew melodies for mixed voices with organ and orchestra..Bruch.
   Organ: Mr. A. Nakada.
8. Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg" .....Wagner.

NEWS & NOTES

Lovers of wrestling will doubtless rejoice to hear that shows of wrestling matches will be held at Shiroogahi, Shintomi-cho, Kyobashi-ku, city for three days beginning the 16th inst. and similar shows will in due course be also held at Asakusa, Waseda, and Yotsuya.

In connection with the opening ceremony of the Yokohama Town Hall on July 1st, the Yokohama "Boyeki Shimpo" proposes to arrange a baseball match on that day in the recreation ground of the Yokohama Park. Preliminary matches will be played during this month to select one picked team each from middle schools and clubs.

The rumour which was afloat some time ago that a second flying battalion on the same footing as the first battalion at Tokorozawa will be established at Kagamigahara in Gifu prefecture, the new aerodrome which has been recently laid out there being put at its disposal seems now to have been unfounded. It is now reported that the proposed second flying battalion will in all probability be instituted in Osaka.

The establishment of a medical college in Hokkaido will be carried out within the current fiscal year as a branch of the Tohoku university in Sendai and with this in view a budget estimate for the funds necessary will be brought forward in the coming special session of the Diet. It is reported in this connection that the new college will be later on detached from the University as an independent institute together with the Agricultural college at Sapporo which is under the same control.

The inventions to which chemical science is applied have shown a great increase in number here since the beginning of the present war. Annually the different inventions patented at the Patent Bureau of Japan number 40,000 on an average. It is said that the devices employed in these inventions have lately become more complex and ingenious. The Patent Bureau, it is learned, has decided on a plan to encourage promising would-be inventors by supplying them with funds in case of their standing in need thereof, for which purpose the institute is expected to present its demand for 40,000 yen per annum in the coming session of the Diet.

It is reported that an immense number of Koreans, both male and female, are streaming into the mainland of Japan at present as a result of shortage of hands in Japanese industrial circles. Most of these immigrants from Chosen come from the southern portion of that peninsula and are hired by Japanese spinning mills, collieries, glass works, etc.

The new tramway line which has been laid between Sakanamachi, at Komagome, Hongo-ku, city and Komagome-bashi, branching off from the trunk line between Mita and Sugamo, has been completed recently and is expected to be opened for service on Monday next. Another new line which has been laid through part of Uyeno park as far as Dozaka in Hongo-ku, it is expected, will be opened about the middle of next month.

The Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, it is reported, are showing extraordinary activity in the shipping business, which is held responsible for the continued upward tendency in charterage. Charterage rates went up 10 yen during the last month. This is no doubt an exceptional phenomenon. With this upward tendency there is still a scarcity of vessels and only three Japanese ships will be available for new contracts for deep-sea services September next. Then charterage rate will go up to 35 yen, according to one authority.

Dr. Mikinosuke Miyajima, of the Kitazato Infectious Diseases Laboratory is reported to have recently made a very important discovery in regard to the means to exterminate the well-known blood-sucking insects peculiar to certain farming districts in Japan. The Doctor's discovery was that the larvae of the fireflies devour the flesh of the cockle known as Miyairi-gai after the name of the discoverer, Dr. Miyairi in which the detestable insects dwell. By this discovery, it may be hoped, much will be done in future to lessen the danger from the attack of this mortal enemy of man.

The Department of Communications announces that the parcel post to Russia via Vladivostok had been stopped, but owing to the success of negotiations made between the Japanese and Russian governments, hereafter, parcel posts can be despatched from Japan to Amur Coast Provinces and Saghalien, through Vladivostok. But parcels coming to these parts of the Russian Territory, from Japan, can not be re-forwarded to other parts of the territory.

VISCOUNT KATO TELLS OF TALK AT PREMIER'S

Viscount Kato, the president of the Kenseikai, who refused the overtures made by Premier Count Terauchi to become a member of the temporary diplomatic committee created on Wednesday, reported on the details of the negotiations between himself and the Premier on the subject before a meeting of the leaders and other prominent members of the Kenseikai Thursday afternon. The report is outlined as follows:

On the morning of June 1st Viscount Kato received a telephone message from Premier Count Terauchi, who spoke over the phone, to the effect that he had sent Count Kodama, the chief secretary of the Cabinet, to call upon the Viscount and asked him to grant an interview to his envoy. A few minutes later Count Kodama came to the Viscount's and on behalf of the Premier asked him to call on the Premier at ten in the morning of the 2nd as the Premier wanted to consult with the Viscount on some important affairs of State. Count Kodama added that Mr. Hara, the president of the Seiyukai, and Mr. Inukai, the leader of the Kokuminto, would also be present at the interview to which Viscount Kato was invited. The Viscount asked Count Kodama what was the nature of the conference proposed, and wished to know something about the matter to be discussed, also asking what was the reason for his being invited to the interview with the presidents of the Seiyukai and the Kokuminto.

Count Komada did not reply on the spot, but went back to the Premier's, and returning to the Viscount's later brought the reply that the conference pertained to diplomatic affairs and that the Premier thought it convenient to talk over the matter together with the Viscount as well as the leaders of the Seiyukai and the Kokuminto. Viscount Kato said that he would not refuse to be present at the conference if the subject pertained to affairs of State, but he wanted to learn from the Premier himself, what was his intention for summoning a conference of the leaders of the political parties in order to determine whether he could consent to be present after hearing the explanation holding a definite response subject to the reply from the Premier. Count Kodama, who then went away, visited the Viscount for the third time and told him that he was instructed to prevail upon Viscount Kato to accept the invitation. Though the Premier gave no answer to the Viscount's query nor gave any information to satisfy his curiosity, the Kenseikai leader thought it proper to accept the invitation in view of the Premier's exalted position, especially as he was so pressed to attend the meeting. He, therefore, complied with the Premier's request.

The following morning Viscount went to the Premier's to keep the appointment. Mr. Hara and Mr. Inukai were also there. Premier Count Terauchi submitted to them the plan of establishing a new political organ called the temporary diplomatic investigation committee and, explaining the object and reason for its establishment, asked the opinion of the leaders of the political parties present, adding that if they approved the idea he would like the party leaders to give their consent to become members of the committee. Viscount Kato, who had not the remotest idea as to the proposed scheme beforehand, thought it better to refrain from advancing any definite opinion about the plan and to form his opinion after deliberate consideration of the subject. He replied to that effect, requesting to be given time to form his opinion. The Premier then asked the Viscount to let him know his answer by the morning of the following day or by the morning of the 4th. The Viscount mentioned the impossibility of giving any definite time for his answer though he would take care to send in his reply as soon as possible. The Premier then stated that as the matter wanted a speedy decision he would carry out the scheme without waiting for the answer of the Viscount in case he failed to send his reply at the proper time. The Viscount observed that the Premier must please himself, but requested him not to take such steps as to decide on carrying out his intention as regards the inclusion of the Viscount in the personnel of the committee without waiting for a definite reply. Count Terauchi agreed to this.

Having formed his determination Viscount Kato sent word to the Premier on the evening of the 3rd that he would call on the Premier between the hours of 9 and 10 the next morning and would personally reply on the subject, asking him to appoint a time convenient to himself if he found it inconvenient to receive him in the morning. To this the Premier replied that he was unable to see the Viscount the following morning and moreover the Premier did not want to see the Viscount as there was no necessity nor had he any time to spare for an interview. What he wanted being simply "Yes" or "No." He further said that he would send Count Kodama to the Viscount on the morrow to get his reply.

The next morning Count Kodama came to the Viscount's, and the latter handed him a letter in which he set forth the outline of his opinion about the matter submitted by the Premier, adding that he regretted that he could not personally express his views and opinion on the subject. In the letter sent to the Premier through Count Kodama, Viscount Kato set forth his opinion about the proposal of establishing the diplomatic investigation committee to the following purport:

The necessity of unifying the nation's opinions about diplomatic affairs of state is a matter of course. But it is against the principle of making clear the responsibility of the Ministers of State, whose duty it is to assist His August Majesty in directing the affairs of State, to create a separate organ under the direct control of the Emperor and apart from the Cabinet, which may lead to restriction on the operation of the machinery of the ministry and the power of its members. Moreover it is difficult to attain the object aimed at by such means. If the Cabinet is in need of listening to the opinions of the outside about any question bearing upon diplomatic affairs, we shall be glad to explain our humble views and opinions. If the Government wants to effect the unity of the nation by including men of ability and wisdom in the Empire in view of the grave situation that obtains, it will better answer the purpose to organize a national cabinet rather than to establish such committee.

The above is the gist of the reply sent by Viscount Kato to the Premier which amounts to his disapproval of the idea of the establishment of the diplomatic investigation committee. Viscount Kato added in his statement before the meeting of the leaders of the Kenseikai that in principle he approved the idea of the Premier in urging the necessity of uniting the nation's opinions about diplomatic affairs, but such matters should properly be attended to by the Government, which is bound and entitled to execute such function with responsibility according to the dictation of the constitution. It is the proper duty of the Government to strive to listen to the will and wish of the nation and direct the affairs of state in consonance with the tendency of the nation's opinion. Premier Terauchi stated that the diplomatic committee would attend the task of investigating and considering the peace measures and diplomatic questions towards China, but for such matters there are proper organs in the Government, whose duty and responsibility it is to settle the diplomatic principle of the country and carry it out. As regards peace terms, they are very clear as far as the interests of Japan are concerned, and there is no necessity of taking the labour of especially investigating the matter at present. The nation must have its definite opinion; every Japanese subject has his own opinion on the subject, and his opinion, on the whole, concurs with what is conceived by all of his fellow countrymen. Only it is disadvantageous to the State to point out what will be their opinion on the subject. The Government must have its own views and opinion about the matter, and whether what are entertained by the nation or the Government about that subject can be successfully attained or not, entirely depends upon the issue of the war and the future development of the international situation as well as the trend of the peace negotiations and therefore it is quite useless to especially establish a special organ for their investigations.

It is said that the committee will also investigate questions of national defense and find measures for the establishment of the national policy or some such thing, but what do they mean by the national policy? Perhaps they mean diplomatic policy by so-called national policy, and the policy of the State concerning important affairs of State. If so, there is no necessity of establishing any special organ for such purposes, as the government is not lacking in proper organs to attend such work. As regards diplomatic policy, the country has already a definite principle for guiding its diplomatic measures and is in no need of settling any definite policy or principle for that purpose. The Anglo-Japanese Alliance forms the basis of the diplomatic policy and principle of the country, according to the spirit of which the country settles its diplomatic measures. Thus we see no use of establishing any special organ for making investigations into such questions apart from the government and outside of its control.

The relation between the government and the new committee is another question which calls for our attention. Though there may not occur anything to contradict the provisions of the constitution, the government may or may not be placed in a very difficult and awkward situation in case the committee does not confine itself within the scope of mere investigation, but takes upon itself the task of settling the policy or opinion on important affairs of State and requests the government to carry out the execution of the decision arrived at by the committee. If, on the contrary, the committee is limited to deliberating on and approving the proposals submitted by the government there is no necessity of specially creating such organ.

Both the power and the responsibility of the committee are very ambiguous and taking it for granted that all decisions arrived at by the committee are entrusted to the government for execution, who will be held responsible for the matter? Such a system is in no way consistent with the spirit of the Constitution, because it makes very ambiguous the responsibility of the Ministers of State as well as of the members of the committee. If the committee is to look after all and every diplomatic affair, great or small, it will only cause unnecessary delay and impromptitude in the execution of diplomatic measures which needs strict secrecy and promptitude above all things. If the government is in sheer need of unifying the nation's opinions in the pressing moment of national affairs, which is, to be sure, the case in Japan at the present, it is better for the government to reconstruct the Cabinet and by including the ablest and greatest wisdom of the country contribute to the promotion of the welfare of the State and the nation. The experiences in the past show that in case of national emergency the views and opinions of the nation always concur and unite unconsciously and without waiting for the influence and efforts from outside. And, moreover, the country is not yet in such a critical state as needs the organization of a National Cabinet at the present. The system of the present special committee or council not only does not meet such requirement, but also it is against the good and interests of the government, as it is liable to cause inconvenience to the smooth operation of the machinery of State by bringing pressure upon the execution of the proper function of the government and thereby defeating the object aimed at.

HERMANN FINED 300 YEN

Herr Victor Herrmann, former managing director of the Siemens Schuckert Co. and associated with the notorious naval scandal, who as reported was recently prosecuted by the Kobe police for the violation of the regulations for the control of telegraphy, was sentenced to pay a fine of 300 yen at the Kobe district court on May 30. Mr. Griebel who was prosecuted together with Herr Herrmann was fined 150 yen. It is stated that for the six years ending on March 2 they had had installed private telephones in their houses and exchanged messages with each other.

TERAUCHI CABINET NOW ON ITS LAST LEGS

In the May number of the Shin Nihon (the New Japan), both Mr. Y. Hamaguchi, General Manager of the Kenseikai, and Mr. H. Motoda, General Manager of the Seiyukai, predict that the tenure of the Terauchi cabinet will not be long. The Seiyukai is considered to be the pro-government party, but still Mr. Motoda writes in his article that the Terauchi cabinet is not in a healthy and sound state, and it will not last long.

The question given to the public to decide by the dissolution of the 38th session of the Imperal Diet was simple and clear. It was the question whether a cabinet not founded upon public support should be trusted, says Mr. Hamaguchi, General Manager of the Kenseikai. But actually it was a fight between the Kenseikai and the Seiyukai. The result of the general election held in April gave the majority members to the government and the question of lack of confidence in the cabinet was finally solved. However, Mr. Hamaguchi believes that a cabinet to govern Japan should be a party cabinet. The government expected to elect a large number of independent members in the House of Representatives, but only about sixty independent members were elected. Of the sixty independent members, the majority has affinity with the existing parties, and only a very small number is purely independent. Even such independent members will join the parties, and in future an independent member and a non-party cabinet can not exist.

This is not the tendency only in Japan, but in the whole world. The present war in Europe is generally called a war between the Entente powers and the Central Powers of Europe, but it is really a war between the militarism of the Central powers and the democratic principle of the Entente. It is nothing but a war between the bureaucracy of Germany and the popular government of England and other Entente nations. The outcome of this war is already known, and Prussian militarism will be destroyed by the democratic principle, and popular government will defeat the bureaucracy. Revolution has broken out in Russia, and in Germany the democratic movements have started. Mr. Hamaguchi does not know how far the democratic movements in Germany are progressing, but it is beyond any doubt that even in Germany militarism and bureaucracy will be destroyed and in their place will stand democracy and popular government. Thus the democratic development is now influencing the whole of Europe.

In Japan the bureaucratic statesmen have all followed the example of Germany. Many of the Japanese statesmen, Army officers and scholars studied in Germany, and those who are still blinded by the bureaucratic thoughts believe that a constitutional government is not an ideal form of government. They know that for the internal administration, popular government is suitable and it will develop the welfare of the people, but when it comes to military and diplomatic affairs, they consider that the popular government hinders prompt decision and drastic movements, and the bureaucratic government is the most suitable form of government. There have been many statesmen who had full confidence in bureaucratic government, but Mr. Hamaguchi believes that the present war in Europe has opened the eyes of such statesmen in Japan. The war in Europe has proved that under popular government, the energy and efforts of the nation and people can be quickly and thoroughly devoted to military and diplomatic affairs.

Judging from every point, the Terauchi cabinet can not last long, as only a party cabinet can smoothly run the nation. By the result of the general election in April, there will be no more general opposition against the cabinet. The Seiyukai has repeatedly announced that it will be neutral, and will stand pro-Government and anti-government according to each measure and policy of the government. The Kenseikai and Kokuminto which brought the bill of lack of confidence in last session of the Diet, will also criticise the cabinet on the merit of each policy. On a certain question, the three parties all might support the cabinet, but on the other, they might all oppose the cabinet. The Terauchi cabinet should be prepared to meet the opposition of the three parties. The Terauchi cabinet, having no supporters, will be unable to carry out its political policy.

It would be better for the Terauchi cabinet to resign at the close of the coming extra session of the Diet, as it has proved that the bill of lack of confidence brought in the last session was groundless. But if it tries to exist through the session of the Diet to be held in December, there may appear various diplomatic and financial questions that will bring ruin to the Terauchi cabinet. At any rate, Mr. Hamaguchi says that the end of the Terauchi cabinet is not far off.

Mr. Motoda, General Manager of the Seiyukai, says that at such an important moment, Japan needs a healthy and sound cabinet to guide the country and people, and it is not a time to engage in useless political fights. The present cabinet, as Mr. Inukai said, is not a healthy and sound cabinet, without considering whether it is constitutional or unconstitutional. The Seiyukai is determined to judge the present cabinet impartially, and will attack or support the cabinet according to the policy of the cabinet on each important question that arises. The tenure of the Terauchi cabinet cannot be for long, and when a cabinet that will not fall for many years, is organized, it will be the greatest fortune and happiness to Japan and the Japanese.

MURDERS, BURGLARS AND FIRES

According to the returns obtained at the Metropolitan Police Board, four cases of murder were committed a month on the average in Tokyo during the five months ending May this year. The most shocking case, it is stated, took place in Shitaya, when the murderer tortured his wife to death. Binding her hand and foot, he brutally chopped off her fingers and toes one by one and when she had become fingerless and toeless he sprinkled vitriol over her naked body. To give her further agonising pain, he touched her back with hot tongs, writing letters thereon. Some other cases of murder were committed in equally atrocious manner, but it is said that all the murderers except only two have been arrested. Half the burglars on the other hand are reported to be still at large.

The returns also show that altogether 365 fires, either big or small, broke out in and out of Tokyo under the jurisdiction of the Metropolitan Police during these five months, the figures averaging more than two fires a day. Of the number, it is reported, 19 were due to incendiarism, 98 were by accidents and 120 were caused by leakage of electricity, sparks from chimnies and others, embers and so forth.

SPECIAL CABINET IN SESSION ON 3RD

The special cabinet meeting held on the 3rd decided upon the establisrment of a Special Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs under the direct supervision of H.I.M. the Emperor, in order to decide on the national policy of diplomatic affairs.

The question of establishing such a board has been discussed recently among the leading statesmen and government officials, and obtaining the support of the Elder Statesmen, Count Terauchi, the Premier, brought the matter to the attention of the leaders of the three political parties, on June second. Among the leaders of the three parties there are still some who have not yet expressed their opinion on the plan, and it is still unknown whether the scheme will be unanimously welcomed by the political parties. But the special cabinet meeting held on Sunday decided upon its establishment, and within a few days the members of the board will be announced with the sanction of His Majesty the Emperor.

The members of the board are to be selected from cabinet ministers, members of the Privy Council and members of the House of Peers and House of Representatives.

The special cabinet meeting was held at the official residence of the Premier at ten o'clock in the morning, and Count Terauchi and all members of his cabinet were present. Count Terauchi announced the plan of establishing the Special Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs, and it was seconded unanimously by all present. Count Terauchi also reported the result of the conference with the leaders of the political parties on the subject. The plan for establishing the Board will be announced as soon as the reply of Viscount Kato, leader of the Kenseikai is received.

On the 4th H.I.M. the Emperor summoned Marshal Prince Yamagata, Marquis Matsukata, Lord Keeper of Privy Seal, and Marquis Saionji to the Palace, and asked their opinions regarding the establishment of the Special Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs.

Following the special meeting of the cabinet council on the 3rd, at which the plan of establishing a supreme advisory board for diplomatic affairs of state under the direct superintendence of the Emperor as submitted to the leaders of the three political parties on the previous day by Premier Count Terauchi was decided upon together with the system of the organization and other details pertaining to the advisory council, a special council of Genro was held at the Imperial Court yesterday morning. Marshal Prince Yamagata, Marquis Matsukata, the Lord Keeper of the Privy Seal, and Marquis Saionji were present when Count Terauchi explained the proposed establishment of the new board and replied to the queries made by the Genro. After discussing the proposal the Genro and the Premier were received in audience by the Emperor when Prince Yamagata reported on the result of the conference. As the establishment of the proposed advisory board has been approved by the Genro the regulations relating to the official organization of the board will be announced probably to-day by ordinance as soon as Imperial sanction is obtained. The appointment of the members of the advisory board will also be announced at the same time.

It is learned that the proposed advisory board will be placed under the direct command of the Emperor and have its office in the Imperial Court as in the case of the privy council, its function being to deliberate on and investigate important diplomatic affairs of state and establish a guiding principle for the diplomatic policy of the empire, from the necessity of establishing perfect unification and understanding between the government and public opinions on diplomatic questions of grave importance in view of the great change in the trend of the world's political situation consequent upon the war. For that purpose the personnel of the board, which will most probably be named the temporary diplomatic investigation committee, will comprise the representative wisdom of the country both in government and political circles. As probable candidates for membership are mentioned the names of Premier Count Terauchi, who will preside over the committee as chairman, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, Admiral Kato, Navy Minister, General Oshima, War Minister, Mr. K. Hara, the president of the Seiyukai, Mr. T. Inukai, leader of the Kokuminto, Viscount Hirata, Baron Goto, Home Minister, Admiral Count Yamamoto, Viscount Ito, and Baron Makino, the three last named representing the Privy Council and the House of Peers.

An unnamed member of the cabinet is quoted as stating that the committee is meant for the establishment of the unification of the nation's opinions and the highest policy of state concerning diplomatic affairs. It is quite different in its significance from an ordinary investigation committee and is placed under the direct control of the Emperor. Unlike the military council of Great Britain, which possesses the exclusive right for the execution of the matters decided upon by the council, the diplomatic investigation committee has no responsibility whatever on the matters decided upon, its nature being an advisory body, and for the execution of the matter decided on by the committee the cabinet will bear all responsibilities. Otherwise the new organ will come to bear the semblance of a cabinet in its significance and create an inconsistency in the regulations of the Constitution. The number of its membership will be very limited.

Viscount Kato, president of the Kenseikai, who participated as the president of one of the three political parties in the conference at the Premier's official residence on Saturday morning in connection with the proposed establishment of the board and was asked to become a member, sent a reply of refusal to Premier Count Terauchi yesterday morning by letter. The reason for his refusal to act is understood to be briefly as follows:

That the establishment of the proposed advisory council which bears the nature of a super cabinet is against the principle of a responsible ministry.

That for purpose of realizing the principle of combination of national opinions a national cabinet should be organized.

The gist of the letter sent by Viscount Kato to the Premier is expected to be made public by the Kenseikai president shortly. Commenting on this subject Mr. Egi, formerly chief secretary of the cabinet, in his capacity as a member of the House of Peers, remarks:

It may be a matter of great necessity and a proper measure to unify the nation's opinions and prepare for the coming international situation in view of the war gradually coming to an end, when this empire must dispatch an envoy to the peace conference in Europe, and from this view it is most opportune that the Government should have made such proposal with the object of unifying the nation's opinions. The idea of the Government is quite satisfactory and welcome in principle, and since the proposal is admirable and satisfactory it makes no difference whether the special organ will include the leaders of political parties. But in adopting such measures it is required of the Government that it should follow the steps dictated by the constitution. There are many ways and means for unifying the Nation's opinions; the Government may invite and listen to the opinions of the leaders of public opinion, or it may establish a special council consisting of some select members of the cabinet. Should there be a necessity of facing the coming situation with the combined efforts of the nation an organization of a national cabinet may answer the purpose with better results. But the present proposal, which proposes an exceptional creation of a special highest council above the cabinet and under the direct control of the Emperor makes ambiguous the responsibilities of the ministers of state whose duty it is to assist His Majesty the Emperor with absolute responsibilities. It is decidedly a departure from the orbit of the principle of a responsible cabinet and against the spirit of constitutional government.

WREATH FOR BOUQUET

Innocence expatiates and absolves many sins and transgressions. But ignorance, especially when the least commonsense will turn it into proper information, often aggravates the offense. This latter remark applies with particular force to manners and practices—conventionalities and etiquette—introduced from foreign countries. To avoid unintended offences, care should be taken that such manners and practices are exactly in the form they are in the place of their origin.

Now the sending of flowers as a token of admiration and affectionate respect is absolutely a custom of foreign introduction in this country, and it should be done exactly as in the west. We hear that on the first night of Kismet at the Imperial many flowers were sent to the performers. So far so good, but among them was a wreath which shocked the management which did not know what to do with it. We are quite certain that no offence was meant. Nevertheless it constituted an offense of ignorance and was therefore unpardonable. One may say that flower presentation has now become a part of Japanese etiquette, developing its peculiar local features, so that there is nothing strange to see strangers welcomed at railway stations with bouquets and wreaths. We hold, however, that where the person or persons to be complimented are foreigners, the thing should be done in their own style or not done at all, which will obviate any unpleasantness or awkward explanation afterwards.

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 1.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Thursday evening communique, says: "There has only been mutual artillery fire at different points along the front."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 1.—After violent bombardments with heavy artillery and poison shells, northwest of Auberive the enemy, at night time, attempted violent attacks at several points on the Champagne front. The efforts of the Germans were directed particularly against Teton Casque and Mont Haut, which they attacked most violently. Four times the waves of the enemy were smashed by our fire or beaten back. After heavy losses, fractions of the enemy were smashed by our fire, or beaten advanced elements north-east of Mont Haut.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 1.—The French Thursday evening communique reads: "There have been fairly lively artillery actions in the regions of Vauxaillon, Laffaux and northwest of Rheims. In the Vop region at Hill 108, which is south of Berry-au-bac, the enemy exploded several mines and occupied elements of the trenches wrecked by the explosions. A vigorous counter-attack however, ejected the enemy from the points where he had gained a footing and last night our line northeast of Mont Haut was completely restored."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 2.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Friday evening communique states: "During May we took prisoner 3,412 men, including 68 officers. We captured one field-gun, 80 machine-guns and 21 trench mortars.

"We drove off a raiding party early this morning north-west of Borsies, on the Bapaume to Cambrai road. We successfully raided and bombed a number of occupied dug-outs south of Ypres. There was considerable artillery activity south-east of Epehy on both banks of the Scarpe. In the Ypres sector, there were long-distance bombing raids by aeroplanes on Wednesday night. Good results were obtained against the ammunition depots and railway stations. Two German aeroplanes were brought down, and another driven down. None of ours are missing."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 2.—Reuter's correspondent with the French armies reports that between April 15 and May 25 the French captured 31,829 prisoners, of whom 28,045 were unwounded. With the British and French captures of the last eight weeks this makes a total of over 75,000, the equivalent of the bayonet strength of nine divisions, as the enemy divisions are now constituted.

London, June 2.—A special dispatch from French headquarters in the west says that between April 16 and May 24, the French took nearly 32,000 prisoners between St. Quentin and Auberive.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 3.—The Franco-British forces have captured over 52,000 Germans, including 1,000 officers. In addition, they have taken an enormous quantity of material, which includes 146 heavy and field-guns, 1,000 machine-guns and numerous trench-guns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 3.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "We opened an attack southward of Souchez River on Saturday night. Already we have made good progress and taken a number of prisoners.

"The enemy kept up a violent bombardment all night long in the Craonne region, after which they made three attacks on California Plateau and two on Vauclere Plateau. Everywhere the Germans were repulsed with important losses, including a number of prisoners taken."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 4.—Reuter's representative at Head-quarters with the British troops in France sends details of a most brilliant little advance on the Souchez River, referred to by Sir Douglas Haig. The Canadians stormed and occupied the Central Electric Power Generating Station and brick stacks at Avion. At Eleuditleauvelte (?), they crossed the river and established a post on the north bank. They took 80 prisoners and their gains robbed the enemy of several strong machine-gun positions. The fight still continues. There is great reciprocal artillery fire and the airmen are very busy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 4.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "There has been fierce fighting all day long with varying fortune to the south of the Souchez River. The enemy lost heavily in our first attack, and subsequently delivered a number of violent counter-attacks with considerable forces. Owing to this, we were unable to maintain the rate of progress made this morning. We took 92 prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 5.—The French afternoon communiqué states: "The artillery duel became violent on Sunday evening, northwest of Froidmont Farm. Shortly before 10 o'clock, the enemy made an attack on a salient in our line and gained a footing in some of the advanced elements.

"The Germans have not renewed their attempts on Vauclere of the California Plateau."

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 2.—Western front. Heavy artillery fire was developed by the enemy in the region of Krevo Bogushe, also on Brody

Caucasus front. The Turks continue to attack the Russian trenches. Near Revangir, north-west of Kermanshah, about 1000 Kurdish horsemen assumed the offensive against the Russian troops.

South-west of Van the Turks, about one company in strength advanced, but were repulsed by the Russian fire. A Kurdish attack was repulsed in the Dkevanrud direction.

Black Sea. The Russian vessels patrolling the Anatolian coast annihilated provision stores and a factory near Gekir Ogly. Barracks, artillery stores and a steam mill were destroyed near Samsun. The office of the port commander was destroyed at Unia, also the staff of the rear of the army, barracks and various stores besides 147 sailing vessels with different provisions were annihilated.

Petrograd, June 3.—A gendarme post well equipped with telegraph and telephone was destroyed east of Samsun by a detachment which had gone on shore, also grain stores were burned down. Two sailing boats were brought to the coast and two taken in tow to Trebizond.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June, 6.—Western front. In the Kovel direction the Russian scouts forced their way through four ranges of the enemy's wire entanglements and scattered a German vanguard post. In the Carpathians near Pnevo Russian scouts in spite of the enemy's rifle and machine-gun fire, rushed into his wire entanglements dislodging the enemy from his trenches and seizing one machine-gun.

No change is reported from the Rumanian and Caucasus fronts.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 5.—German prisoners and escaped Russian prisoners all bear witness that the Germans practically have evacuated the rear of their Russian front, throwing all available forces, also part of their heavy artillery from Dvinsk onto the French front.

The same is noted on the Rumanian front whence the younger contingents of Germans are being sent via Bucharest to France.

An Austrian gunner, a deserter, affirmed that a great number of the horses of the Austrian artillery are succumbing, owing to lack of fodder.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 30.—Reuter's Agency is officially informed that besides occupying a number of important enemy positions, the Italians inflicted great wastage on the foe. The 23,582 prisoners taken were only a very small part of his losses.

The battle-field is covered with tens of thousands of his dead, while the number of wounded is very large. Whole divisions were practically wiped out, and many others put out of action for weeks. Nevertheless, the Austrians continue to offer formidable and desperate resistance.

Rome, May 30.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads as follows:

On the Carso Monday, the enemy showed great activity with the guns and trench mortars with the object of disturbing our work of strengthening our lines. The attack against our positions along the railway east of San Giovani and Duino was repulsed by our artillery. East of Gorizia on the night of the 28th and all day yesterday enemy guns of all calibres were engaged in a heavy concentrated fire on Hill 126 south of Grazigna. The furious reply of our batteries many times dispersed the enemy storming parties massing for the assault in the advanced trenches. There was artillery activity in the Vodice area which was not less violent against our positions on Hill 52.

In the morning an attack in force by strong enemy parties was made against the summit of the hill but was broken by the prompt action of our troops, our infantry overcoming the tenacious resistance of the enemy hidden in the caves, made important progress on the southeast slope of the Hill and established themselves in these positions. In the Plava sector we drove the enemy to the end of the valley east of Globno and captured about one hundred prisoners. The total number of prisoners captured in the Julian front since the 14th is 23,681 including 604 officers. A great quantity of material captured during the battle is being collected. We have already counted 36 guns, thirteen of which are of heavy calibre, 143 machine guns and 27 trench mortars besides a large quantity of rifles and war material of every description.

Rome, May 31.—The Italian communique to-day reads:

"In the Trentino and Carnia fronts heavy rain limited the artillery activity yesterday.

"On the night of May 30 the enemy made a surprise attack on our advanced post at two places in the north of Tohale ridge but was discovered and driven back. The enemy twice attacked our lines in the north side of Monte Pizzul and Valley Roccolona, but failed completely.

"In the Julian front our artillery effectively replied the enemy's fire and our assaulting parties hindered the enemy in strengthening himself in the new positions.

"In Vodice area our artillery dispersed the enemy troops massing for attack.

"In Albania the enemy irregulars on the night of 28th were attacked by our Albanian troops at 25 kilometres east of Berat on the upper reaches of Osum river. A heavy fighting continued throughout the day and the following night. We occupied the villages of Cerevoda, Velisest, Osaja and Cofa successfully resisting the regular troops despatched to dislodge us.

Rome, June 1.—Considerable artillery activity has been reported in the northern section of the Carso Plateau and on the line between Gorizia and Plava,, says the official report issued today. It continues:

"In the Vodice area numerous enemy masses violently attacked our positions on Hills 592 and 652 on the night of May 31. The attack was prepared by intense artillery fire and was stubbornly executed, but failed completely before the firm resistance of our troops and the accurate fire of our batteries, which dispersed the enemy's massed reinforcements. The enemy suffered severe losses leaving 83 prisoners, including three officers. There were minor successful encounters between our advanced posts and the enemy patrols at the head of the Dogva stream in Posina valley.

"Last night the enemy aircraft raided Udine and Cervignano, dropping incendiary bombs but was driven off by our anti-aircraft guns. Slight damage was done and only one civilian was wounded. Our machines in reply successfully bombed the enemy's military works at Barcola, north of Trieste, and returned safely."

The artillery was not so active yesterday on the Trentino front and in Carnia, but the war was very heavy on the Julian front, particularly from the sector of Mount Cucco to Vodice in the east of Gorizia. The enemy again persisted in attacks on the Italian trenches in Hill 652 but three successive attacks, prepared by intense artillery fire, failed completely. The Italians captured some thirty prisoners.

"In Carso, the work of strengthening our lines is proceeding actively," says the communiqué. "The enemy assault attempted in the east of Boscomalo was broken by our battery fire. Between Jamiano and the coast we extended by local offensive actions our occupation in the west of Medeazza."

In the afternoon of May 27 one of the enemy aeroplanes was brought down in a severe airfight in the east of Mount San Marco.

Rome, June 2.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads:

"The artillery fire has been heavier in the area north and east of Gorizia particularly in the northern sector of the Carso. The enemy bombarded our lines at Nosso Faits followed by a patrol attack to which our artillery vigorously replied.

"On the night of the 31st we again repulsed an attack against Hill 652 in the Vodice area. Two enemy attacks, preceded by heavy artillery fire against our lines at Hill 126 Soudi Crazigna and Hill 174 north of Tivoli, were also unsuccessful.

"On the same night on the Carso, south of Castagnovizza, we surprised the enemy and advanced our line about 400 metres on a two kilometre front.

"Numerous air fights above Gorizia were attempted and raids on that city were repulsed. An enemy machine was brought down near Aisovizza.

"Aerial bombing squadrons accompanied by chasing machines were very active yesterday, bombing the military works, aviation camps, dumps and railway stations north-east of Trieste. All our machines returned safely."

Rome, June 3.—The official communiqué to-day reads:

"The activity on the whole front is mostly confined to the artillery, especially against our positions east of Plavia, in the Vodice area and northern sector of Carso. An outpost engagement took place in Vallaasa at the head of Rio Pontebrand north of Tolmino and on the Carso where south of Versia our pickets surprised and took possession of an advanced post. The enemy aircraft which attempted reconnaissances over our lines in Trentino were driven off by the anti-aircraft batteries and our airmen.

"This morning an enemy aeroplane over Gorizia was brought down and another east of Vertojba."

ALBANIA'S DECLARATION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 5.—A message from Rome states that a Proclamation issued at Agyrocastro, one of the principal towns of Albania, under date of June 3, announces the establishment of the independence and unity of all Albania under an Italian protectorate.

MR. JOHN BUCHAN'S WEEKLY SUMMARY

London, June 2.—Interest during the past week has almost entirely been confined to the Italian front and the enthusiasm with which the Italian successes are greeted in all allied capitals proves again the complete solidarity of the allied peoples.

The capture of such positions as Monte Cucco, Vodice and the assaults on Hermada and Monte Santo constitute feats that any army might be justly proud of. Vodice which is one of the most important links in the mountain bulwark north of Gorizia was taken at an early stage and is becoming the tomb of entire Austrian brigades. From the moment the troops of the 53rd division set foot on the summit of Hill 652 the enemy made most desperate efforts to retake the position pouring in a long range fire alternating with hurricanes from smaller calibre guns. The Austrian counterattacks were so numerous that it was impossible to keep account, but the result has always been the same. Battalion after battalion of Austrians was mown down by the Italians' machinegun fire or barrage. The whole terrain is piled with bodies and the Austrian high command would not in view of the critical internal situation dare to publish a truthful account of the quite exceptional losses the Austro-Hungarian troops have sustained during the past two weeks. In order to better appreciate the difficulties the Italian army has overcome it is interesting to recall that the Isonzo runs along a valley between the heights of Monte-Santo and Monte Sabotino at about 100 metres above the sea level. Monte Sabotino which the Italians have now occupied entirely rises to 609 metres. Monte Santo crest is still held by the Austrians, but they are being slowly expelled. It reaches a height of 683 metres. The distance from the summit is about 1,000 metres. The river flows along a gorge some 600 metres deep.

Additional to numerous guns, machine-guns and other war booty the Italians captured 24,000 prisoners and the scale of the operations leads to the conclusion that the Anglo-French offensive on the western front so entirely dislocated the whole German plan that General Cadorna no longer believes a serious German offensive on the Trentino is possible.

There is a comparative lull on the western front marked by great aerial activity, while preparations are energetically pressed forward for the second phase of the Allied offensive in the west. Despite the stubborn attempts of the German aviators to regain some of the lost prestige, the British flying service still keeps the upper hand. The German losses steadily increase. On the 27th thirty German machines were put out of action, fifteen crashed to the earth and fourteen were driven down completely uncontrolled. One was brought down by artillery fire. On the night of the 31st the Germans made several attacks on the French positions in Champagne especially in the region of Hochbery. All were beaten off without any result beyond the addition of several hundreds to the thousands of dead Germans now lying before the French and British lines.

GERMANS PILLAGE PERONNE CEMETERY

Paris, June 4.—In an official report the commission of inquiry charged with obtaining evidence of the actions committed by the enemy in violation of International Law gives the following details in which the whole brutality and vulgarity of the German soul may be read.

At Peronne the cemetery has been shamefully pillaged and numerous tombs in it have been profaned. At Hervilly five vaults have been sacked. An altar or memorial stone of the Paux family has been smashed. At Cartigny the Germans by loosening the stones opened five vaults each one surmounted by a chapel. They acted in the same way at Ronssoy, Beequincourt, Dompirre, Bouvencourt and Herbecourt. At Morlu Roisel and Bernes they even smashed the coffins.

In the closed ground used as a private cemetery by the Rehan family they buried great many of their own soldiers and incredible as it may seem, set up a kitchen inside the Rehan mausoleum and at the same time latrines among their own tombs.

In the Crypt where indescribable disorder reigns, almost all the graves are open and empty. A child's coffin was taken from one of the receptacles, its head having been removed. A heavy lead coffin, half pulled out of another niche, bears trace of chisel marks on its lid.

A block of marble in the midst of which a little hollowing may be observed has been thrown among the rubbish. It bears the following inscription. "Here lies the heart of the Countess de Daisay, who died at Paris July 16, 1830 aged twenty two."

To what motive can such monstrous sacrilege be attributed? Did the enemy hope to find gold placed by families under the protection of their dead, and jewels in the coffins?

It is to be noted that the rich tombs especially have suffered.

PIRATES HAVE POOR WEEK WITH ALLIED SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 1.—The admiralty announces that the arrivals during the past week at British ports were 2719 and the sailings 2,768. Eighteen steamers over 1,600 tons and 9 under that tonnage were sunk. Seventeen vessels were unsuccessfully attacked and two fishing vessels sunk.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, June 1.—The arrivals during the past week at Italian ports were 498 vessels of a tonnage of 486,110. The sailings were 476 vessels, representing 451,355 tons, not including fishing boats and small coasting vessels. No steamers were sunk, though 12 sailing vessels, each under 50 tons, were sent to the bottom.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 1.—The French official shipping returns, for the week ending May 27, are: "Arrivals, 1046; sailings, 1042. Two vessels over 1600 tons and one under that tonnage were sunk. Five vessels were unsuccessfully attacked. No fishing vessels were sunk."

BRAZIL REVOKES NEUTRALITY

Rio de Janeiro, June 3.—President Braz has signed the degree authorising the utilization of all German ships now lying in Brazilian ports.

[OFFICIAL TO BRAZILIAN LEGATION]

Rio de Janeiro, May 2nd 1917.—The President of the Republic, in accordance with the Legislative resolution signed yesterday, issued the following decree:—

"I make known that the National Congresso decrees and I sanction the following resolution:—

Article I.—The decree No. 12,458 of 25th of April ult., establishing the neutrality of Brazil in the war between the United States of America and Germany is revoked.

Section: For the execution of this Article the President of Republic is authorized to take the necessary measures, acting in accordance with the requirements arising from the cessation of the said neutrality.

Article II.—The Executive Power is authorized:

1.—To utilize the German mercantile vessels interned in the Brazilian ports, for which authorization it will be empowered to perform any necessary acts in accordance with the message of the 26th of May ult.

2.—To take measures for the defence of our navigation abroad, being able to combine with friendly nations to assure the liberty of commerce of exportation and importation and to revoke for that end the decrees of neutrality, when it shall be deemed advisable.

Article III.—The Executive Power is authorized to open such credit as may be necessary for the execution of the present law.

Article IV.—All existing dispositions to the contrary are hereby revoked."

FRENCH SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, May 26.—The question of the submarine menace came up for discussion in the Chamber yesterday. Admiral Lacaze, Minister of Marine, said: "I never denied the submarine peril, but what I did say was that the submarine peril will not bring about our defeat. The Germans through the medium of one of their Admirals boasted that they would bring England and France to their knees in a few weeks but after a thorough study of the figures I can testify, my words are corroborated by Lord Milner and Lloyd George, They will not beat us with their submarine campaign."

Then the Minister said on August 1st, 1914 the total tonnage of the Allied and neutral vessels was about 40,500,000 tons.

The losses caused by the enemy to the end of 1916 were 3,840,000 tons to which must be added 1,700,000 through the risks of navigation. Within the same period the Allies built 4,020,000 tons of shipping, took 990,000 tons as prizes, so that at the beginning of the year 1917 the amount of tonnage at the disposal of the Allies and neutrals was about the same as when the war began. From January 1st to the end of April the losses amounted to 2,500,000. If the whole year was as unfavourable as the first four months the losses of the year would amount to 7,500,000 tons against which the set off for new ships, without reckoning the German ships seized by the United States, would be 4,850,000 tons.

Could anyone suppose that this reduction out of forty millions would be sufficient to starve out the Allies? Last year France imported from the overseas 2,800,000 tons of cereals, 21,000,000 tons of coal and the quantities lost by torpedoing were less than one per cent. The trade figures are higher for the present year. How could it be argued in the face of these figures that there was a blockade of the French coast?

AUSTRIAN REICHSRATH ATTRACTS ATTENTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 1.—The meeting of the Austrian Reichsrath is attracting a great deal of attention everywhere, owing to the possibility of the big developments that may eventuate.

The Czechs have already begun a policy of bitter hostility against the Government. They took no part in the voting for the President. However, they appointed M. Klofatsch as their chairman as a protest against the action of the Government for having sentenced him to 3 years' imprisonment without trial on a charge of High Treason.

THREE MORE DEATHS FROM GERMAN RAID

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 30.—Three more deaths have occurred as the result of the German air raid on the town of Folkestone.

At the inquest, the Coroner congratulated the population on the calmness shown. The Chief Constable gave evidence that 43 bombs had been dropped in the borough. Sixty persons were killed and 93 injured. The dead included 26 women and 24 children.

HUNS SINK HOSPITAL SHIP

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, May 30.—The Admiralty announces that the Hospital Ship Dover Castle was torpedoed without warning at 6 o'clock on Saturday evening in the Mediterranean, but kept afloat until 8.30 p.m. when she was again torpedoed and sank. The whole of the patients, staff and crew were saved, except six who are missing; and it is feared they were killed by the explosion.

The mercantile cruiser Hilary was torpedoed and sunk in the North Sea, four men being killed by the explosion.

A British destroyer has been sunk as the result of a collision, but there were no casualties.

SITUATION IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Helsingfors, May 23.—M. Kerenski, the Minister of War and of the Navy, assisted to-day at a meeting of the delegates of the Army and Navy held at the People's House. He was enthusiastically greeted by an audience that more than filled the room. The Minister made a long speech in the course of which he said:

"I take this outburst of feeling and zeal as a token for the ideals of freedom, equality and fraternity. This outburst must be converted into a perfect steel engine organized of creative power, which will forge new forces of a free democratic state life. Being a Socialist, I took the post of Minister of War because the fight along our fronts is exactly the same as a revolutionary fight. The revolution is a formidable creative power. Nobody must think the Russian revolutionary people a weak, negligible force. The enemy will have to reckon with us. We have openly declared we want no conquest nor violent usurpation. But we want a speedy peace. The enemy understood we were incapable of defending our rights, and started to fraternise with our soldiers at the front, while destroying the forces of our allies. We want a peace which will suit the dignity of free Russia. Let us use the strength of freedom we have gained."

On concluding his peroration, M. Kerenski was loudly cheered. He was frequently interrupted in his discourse by the acclamations of those present.

In reply to questions about the Treaties, M. Kerenski said the secret Treaties could be published when the other parties to the pacts published their Treaties—at the same time and on the same day—this will occur, he said, at the Peace Conference.

On hearing this, those present exclaimed: "Right! we believe you."

At the suggestion of the chairman, Admiral Maksimiff, on behalf of the sailors and soldiers pledged the armed forces to trust and defend the Government, and not lay down their arms until ordered to do so by the Minister of War and of the Navy.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 29.—At a meeting of the party of revolutionary socialists, the Minister of Labour, M. Skobelef said: "It is time to realise that the revolution is not a holiday, but hard duty. The responsibility lies not only with the Ministers, but with every citizen. I openly declare that we are crossing a precipice on the edge of a knife. To find the issue, everybody must remember his duty. Nobody must decline to shoulder his share of responsibility."

Summoning all the citizens to the endurance of sacrifices, the Minister concluded by saying that there is a complicated international situation. If our allies do not understand us in time, we shall roll over the precipice in spite of our efforts."

In a speech at Kieff, M. Nekrasoff, the Minister of Ways and Communications, told a meeting of the Party of National Freedom how the recent crisis had nearly terminated in a dictatorship. He said: "The offensive of our army is a historical necessity, and on its behalf, we must make new sacrifices. We shall ask the army to fulfil its duty, but we require the same thing from every citizen in the rear."

Petrograd, May 30.—The Congress of officers and army delegates has carried a resolution in which they greet the aspirations of the provisional government towards a durable fraternity of the people. The resolution declares that the only possible means to attain it is the vigorous re-establishment of the common activity of the army and an immediate offensive.

The Minister of Agriculture, M. Peschechonoff, made a speech at the Congress of Army delegates in which he stated that the unfavourable economic situation of the country explains why the monopoly of corn could not be accomplished as yet owing to the difficulty of organization. He declared that the country is in danger of catastrophe of the population—especially the peasants—refuses to make sacrifices. The President thanked the Minister for his sincere statement.

The delegation of Italian Socialists has arrived here.

M. Kerenski, the Minister of War, has arrived at Odessa where he was enthusiastically welcomed by the Congress of Army delegates. He summoned everybody to work hard and make sacrifices, saying "all we have, we have laid at the stake. If the Russian people, especially the Russian army, will not find courage to steel themselves under the armour of discipline, we shall perish, despised by all the world which will also despise socialistic ideas, in the name of which we accomplished the revolution. We cannot allow this."

The representatives of the soldiers' delegates, in reply to the Minister said "we shall go forward when the order is given by the ministry."

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, May 30.—M. Peschechonoff, the Minister of Justice, has transferred to the Provisional Government his report on the case of General Souchomlinof, Minister of War when hostilities started. According to the indictment General Souchomlinof, after the declaration of war did not take the necessary measures in order to intensify the very low output of the state factories. He also neglected to attend to the service of Government private factories: provoking by this a lack of munition supply for the armies and helping the enemy in his offensive against Russia. General Souchomlinof transmitted to Miasoiedov, while knowing he was a German spy, a number of secret instructions from headquarters. He further informed an Austro-Hungarian subject, Altchiller, whom he also knew as agent of the Austrian Government, of the contents of his reports to the Tsar on the state of defence in Russia. He transmitted to Doumandze different information referring to the mobilisation and organisation of war traffic. The wife of General Souchomlinof, the accused, was also helping her husband.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 1.—The Council of soldiers and workmens' delegates have discussed the necessity of "discharge" from Petrograd in order to assure the normal supply of the country. They passed a resolution according to which in view of the excess of labour in Petrograd the measures should be taken to organize regular distribution of labour from the different centres. Some factories should be transferred from Petrograd nearer to the centres of raw material. The Finnish Diet has decided to introduce a bill granting full rights to Jews residing in Finland. An order of the Minister of Public Instruction prescribes the simplification of the Russian autograph beginning next academic year.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd, June 2.—The Cossack Council has decided to send to the Russian Government further assurances that the Cossacks will assist with all their strength in the offensive operations. The decision was arrived at because of the conviction that peace cannot be secured except by force of arms.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 3.—It is impossible to generalize the Russian situation, but the Government is making continued efforts to restore discipline in the Army, although authority is still questioned in some districts, and workers are showing signs of dissatisfaction. The workers in 120 of the largest munition works in Petrograd have resolved to strike, demanding a six hour day and a minimum wage for women of 150 rubles per month.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 3.—Mr. Kerenski, the Minister of War, has addressed to the President of the Council the following telegram: "Having inspected the situation on the western and southern fronts, I have arrived at definite conclusions as to the possibilities of a Russian offensive in the near future."

Mr. Kerenski arrived at Kieff yesterday, where he received a particularly solemn welcome. Answering greetings, he declared that as a result of his visit to the front he could state that fraternization with the Germans was not of a general character.

Referring to the constituent assembly, he said that it could not be assembled until November, owing to the impossibility of taking any of the population away from the work of the rural districts for an election campaign.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Kieff, June 3.—M. Kerenski, Minister of War, in reply to the army delegates, said that having visited most parts of the Russian front, he can now affirm that what was heretofore taken as "agony" was nothing else than the last period of the "painful labours" of the revival of the new Russian State. Notwithstanding the destruction of the old discipline, the power of the Russian army increases every day. The new discipline has taken root, based on the full conscience of duty and mutual respect. He stated that fraternisation on the front had completely ceased.

M. Kerenski has now arrived in Petrograd.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 3.—The Judicial Commission appointed by the Provisional Government has elaborated the proposed law for the election of members to the Constituent Assembly, fore-seeing universal, direct, secret suffrage without distinction of sex, and based on a proportional system of election. All Russian subjects, having reached the age of 20 years are granted the right to participate in the elections.

SITUATION IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, May 31.—There seems to be no doubt whatever, according to latest advices, that the military governors of Chekiang and Hunan have declared independence. A special edition of the "Hsin-shun-pao" reports that the military governors of Shantung, Hupeh and Fukien have also announced their independence.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, May 31.—Traffic on the Tientsin-Pukow railway has been suspended owing to the action of Ni Shih-chung, the Governor of Anhui and leader of a group of Provincial Governors, in seizing the rolling stock at Pengpu. The director of the railway has resigned.

Many unconfirmed reports in circulation state that Anhui has declared its independence and in conjunction with Fukien, Hunan and Shantung taken action towards the Government. It is believed to be correct that the Government has received strongly worded telegrams from these provinces but the contents have not been announced. Well-informed circles while taking a serious view of the situation regard the action of the Tuchuns as merely a demonstration which will not lead to any fighting.

Dispatches from Peking and elsewhere continue to report an alarming situation in China, and an imminent outbreak of another revolutionary disturbance. A report emanating from a reliable source in Peking says that the situation has taken a sudden turn for the worse and is assuming grave proportions. Between the 29th and 30th of May eight provinces, namely Mukden, Amur, Shantung, Honan, Shenshi, Anhui, Szechuan and Hunan, declared independence. General Tsao Kun, commander of the Government troops at Paoting, is taking an observing attitude, while in Peking all army commanders, except General Chen Kwang-yuan, Commander of the 13th division, are supporting the northerners that is, the provincial military governors. Their chief intent and purport is to compel the retirement of President Li Yuan-hung and the dissolution of parliament, besides which aim they have no other drastic intention in view.

According to another report the military governors who declared independence are planning to march on Peking with the troops under their command along the Peking-Hankow and Tientsin-Pukow railway lines with a view to attack the capital. If the plan be carried out it will become necessary for the foreign Powers to increase their Legation Guards and in this connection a conference of the powers representatives will be held to discuss on the subject.

General Ni Szu-chung, the Tutuh of Anhwei, who was the first to declare independence, has seized a number of freight cars belonging to the Tientsin-Pukow railway for the purpose of using them for the transportation of his troops to Peking. Traffic on the railway line is, however, maintained as usual.

General Chao chou, Military Governor of Honan, met Chao Ching-yao, Military Governor of Loyang, at Chenchou and after consultation has decided to declare independence, supporting Ni Szu-chung. Chao sent an ultimatum of twenty-four hours to Peking and seized all freight cars on the railway line southward of Chengchou. General Chang Hsun will, it is learned, take a neutral attitude for the time being, but intends to start a movement aiming at the restoration of the Imperial régime, later.

General Chen Shu-fan, Military Governor of Shenshi, and General Meng Ye-yuan, Military Governor of Kirin, also declared independence on Wednesday. The same day the independence was also declared by the provincial governments of Shantung and Hupeh according to the reports received at the Communications Department. The Peking government is relying upon Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang and General Wang Shi-cheng, and intends to suppress the revolt without taking recourse to arms. The parliament also assumes a rather indifferent attitude and is occupied with its business, leaving the measures for the suppression of the revolt to Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang and Wang Shi-chen. Still they regard the situation as grave and apparently take only a conciliatory attitude in dealing with constitutional problems. The state of things in Peking is still quiet.

A Mukden dispatch states that Military Governor Chang Tsuo-lin of Mukden, conjointly with the military governors of the ten other provinces, sent a note, announcing rupture with the central government, to Peking and all provincial governments on the morning of May 30. At the same time he seized the revenue from the customs dues, postal dues and salt tax belonging to the central government, and issued orders to all prefectures under the jurisdiction of Mukden province to strengthen the defences. On May 31 the military governor held a military council and passed a resolution that in case the central government fails to acquiesce in the demand, the troops of the Mukden army should be dispatched to the south of Shanghaikan and march on Peking from all sides with the troops of various provinces, with a view to envelop Peking. General Chang insists on General Tuan Chi-jui, being reinstated as Premier and on the exclusion of the southern elements from the portfolio of Premier of the republican government.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 1.—The present situation is that the provinces of Anhui, Shantung and Shansi have declared independence. The provinces of Fengtien and Hupeh are supporting them conditionally.

The Peking authorities still regard the movement as a demonstration designed to cause the downfall of the President and Parliament.

The conflict is defined militarism versus constitutionalism, but at present it is not thought it will be carried to an extreme.

The goods traffic on the Peking-Mukden, Tientsin-Pukow and Peking-Hankow Railways is practically suspended, but passenger traffic is little interrupted.

General Feng who has his head quarters at Kon-Pengtse, in command of the twenty eighth division is believed to be loyal to the President and the Constitution.

The Chinese newspapers state that the Tuchuns of Anhui, Shantung, Fengtien, Fukien, Chihli, Hupeh, Honan and Chekiang have all proclaimed independence and intend sending a joint expedition to Peking to dissolve Parliament. The attitude of Feng Kuo-chang and Chang Hsun has not been defined. It is feared, however, that both favour the Tuchuns.

The "China Press" Pengpu correspondent says a battalion of Ni Shi-chung's troops has arrived there. Others are coming. It is stated that Ni Shih-chung is supplying twenty-thousand men as his part of the expedition and these are starting northwards. The report is that the first line of the attacking force will be Shantung men, the second Chang Hsun's troops and the third Ni Shi-chung's army.

Members of Parliament are quoted as saying that the secession of the Tuchuns is a fulfilment of a step of a programme long ago decided upon, and precipitated now by the failure of the attempt to force a dissolution of parliament. The programme included the removal of Li Yuan-hung, the President, the restoration of the young Emperor Hsuan-tung and other steps.

These members of Parliament contend that the secession is the best thing that could happen giving as it does, an opportunity once for all to end the domination of Chang Hsun and such-like men and the establishment of a Republic on a firm foundation. The radicals are confident that the Tuchuns will be defeated. Anhui, Shantung and Fengtien being the only provinces that will fight to the limit, Honan, Chekiang, Fukien and Shensi are only half-heartedly supporting the movement, while the southern provinces are solidly loyal. Feng Kuo-chang is remaining "on the fence." The population generally is thwarting the Tuchuns as much as possible.

A Peking dispatch says that General Chang Hsun has sent a telegram to President Li Yuan-hung proposing to use his good offices for reconciliating the President and the Military governors of various provinces who have declared independence. For that purpose Chang Hsun has submitted the following terms:

That all military governors shall participate in the constitutional council: That ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui shall be reinstated in his former post: That four unnamed figures closely attending President Li Yuan-hung shall be dismissed: That those who have been punished on account of their connection with the Imperial regime restoration movement shall be acquitted of the charge: That some radical elements in the Parliament shall be dismissed.

With these conditions General Chang has proposed to take the task of mediating between the President and the Military governors and asked the President to give a definite reply within five days, stating that if the President accepts his offer he would come to Peking and render his good offices. The President is inclined to accept the offer of Chang Hsun, which, if true, is tantamount to his acquiescing in the demands of the military governors.

According to another version Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang, by the wish of President Li Yuan-hung, is determined to assume the task of mediating between the President and the military governors, and is exchanging views on the subject with General Chang Hsun with whom he will cooperate.

According to the "Asahi" correspondent at Peking, General Chang Hsun has dispatched Li Sheng-to to Peking as messenger and submitted mediation proposals to the President. The important item of the conditions for the mediation is understood to be the dissolution of parliament. The government, however, takes a different view and sees room enough to admit of mediation without having recourse to the dissolution of parliament as suggested by Chang and has invited Chang to come to Peking for negotiations with the government. Chang has complied with the request of the government and sent word that he will come to Peking shortly without taking troops with him. Li Sheng-to, the messenger of Chang, has returned to Jochou.

Meanwhile General Ni Ssu-chung, Military Governor of Anhui, who declared independence, is pushing on his programme of military operations. The vanguards of the troops under his command have already arrived at Techou passing through Hsuchou and Tsinan. Two battalions of his troops, who are stationed at Wuhu, Anhui province, are concentrated at Fengpu preparatory to starting for Peking and have commenced requisitioning vessels for transportation. General Ni Ssu-chung intends to occupy the army arsenal at Techu. A Tsinan dispatch says that General Chang Hsun, General Ni Ssu-chung and General Chang Huai-shi have dispatched troops to the districts along the Tientsin-Pukow railway lines for the protection of the railway lines. From Hankow it is also reported that the troops under General Chang Chi-yao, commander of the 7th division, are assembled at Tienchou along the Peking-Hankow railway line where a great animation is in evidence.

General Wu Kwang-hsin, Commander of the northern army stationed at Yochou, is reported to have declared independence. The declaration of independence by the military governor of Amur, reported by a Peking telegram yesterday, is not confirmed. The independence of Szechuan and Hupeh also lacks confirmation, and it seems more likely that the two provinces are observing developments. They will, however, take the final step as soon as the development proves in favour of the northerners.

Shanghai, June 1.—Martial Law has been proclaimed at Sian-fu.

It is reported that at a special meeting at the Palace of the President, to-day, Mr. Wang Shih-chen was appointed Premier pro. tem. It is stated that General Chang Hsun has demanded the dissolution of Parliament, the resignation of President Li Yuan-hung and the restoration of the Young Emperor Hsuan Tung. There are now indications that President Li Yuan-hung may resign.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 2.—General Tsao Kun, the Tuchun of Chihli, has declared independence. The movements of troops are reported in various quarters but hitherto no definite advance toward the north has been made. It is indeed reported that the Tuchun of Shantung refused to permit General Ni Shih-chung's troops to cross the border, saying that they must wait till the President defines his attitude. Opinion is growing that the crisis will not lead to actual fighting. It is believed that an understanding exists between Chihli troops and those of independent provinces. This belief tends to bear out the report that General Chang Hsun will come to Peking in the capacity of mediator. The names of Feng Kuo-chang and Lu Ying-ting were also mentioned in connection with such mission. A number of Chinputang members of Parliament resigned, but hitherto only the resignation of Mr. Tang Hua-lung, speaker of the Lower House, has been accepted. It is believed that the Chinputang is endeavouring to solve the situation by bringing about the "voluntary" resignation of the whole Parliament.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 2.—Mr. Lu Yung-hsiang, Commissioner of Defence of Shanghai District, has sent a circular telegram to Peking and the provinces. He points out the illegality of the dismissal of General Tuan Chi-jui from the premiership without his signature in the mandate. Mr. Lu Yung-hsiang says that President Li Yuan-hung shows bad elements and treats provinces as enemies. Mr. Lu Yung-hsiang is willing to see an amicable settlement, but in view of the serious situation following the declaration of the severance of relations made by Fentien, Anhui, Shantung, Honan, Chekiang, Fukien, Hupeh and Chihli, he earnstly requests President Li Yuan-hung to dissolve the parliament immediately for reelection. Otherwise, he says, to maintain order he will be compelled to take a similar step to the above-said provinces.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 2.—A despatch to the "Daily News" from Nanking says that the injuries of two of the five Japanese mentioned in yesterday's telegram have proved fatal. A Nanking despatch to the "China Press" says that it is reported four Japanese have been killed.

The Peking correspondent of the "China Press" reports that General Chang Hsun arrived there Friday evening to act as mediator. He is in favour of the dissolution of the Parliament. The combined forces of the Tuchuns of Anhui and Shantung are at present at Techow arsenal, the Honan troops are at Changtefu, and General Chang Tso-lin's men outside Shanhaikwan.

Mr. Li Ching-hsi will take up the premiership provided that President Li Yuan-hung sacrifices parliament.

Press dispatches from Peking show an indication that another political change involving the possible retirement of President Li Yuan-hung will be inevitable after all. On Thursday last, President Li telegraphed a long note to the chiefs of all provinces, in which the President detailed the complicated political situation, apologized for his inability which has brought about the present turbulent state of things, stated that the dismissal of ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui was a temporary measure it being his intention to reinstate him in his former office after some interval, and also adding that the dismissal of the Premier was in no way a violation of the constitution, finally mentioning that there was room for the revision of the constitution. President Li sent a messenger to Tientsin the same day and asked Hsu Shi-chang to make efforts for mediation between the government and the military governors.

The two houses of parliament held a social meeting at the respective buildings and conferred about the closure of the session. As the result of the conferences the houses decided on adjournment, it is presumed, as a means to avoid the dissolution which is possible at any time. Several members of parliament tendered their resignations after the meeting.

At Tientsin, which is the rendezvous of the northern leaders and the hot-bed of their political machinations, a scheme aiming at the restoration of the monarchical system of government is believed to be making progress meanwhile. It is said that the northern leaders are forming an intrigue to upset the present government and force the retirement of President Li Yuan-hung, with a view to establishing a new government with Hsu Shi-chang at its head as new President.

On the other hand, the southern leaders including Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Mr. Tang Shao-yi, Mr. Tsen Chun-hsuan, Mr. Li Lieh-chun and others of the former revolutionary colour, have organized a new political body among themselves aiming at the protection of the constitution, with a view to founding an independent republic apart from the northern group. Their scheme is understood to be a combination of seven southern provinces, namely, Kwangtung, Kwangsi, Yunnan, Kueichou, Szechuan, Hupeh and Hunan, into an independent state. In the event of the dissolution of parliament, it is probable that the seat of the parliament will be removed to Shanghai, the centre of southern influence, and the eventual partition of China into two separate states seems inevitable.

According to a later message from Peking, Chili province also declared independence in the name of Military governor Tsao Kenn and Governor Shu Chia-pao on Friday. The provincial government of Shanshi also followed the suit of Chili and sent in a declaration of independence to the Peking government the same day. The declaration of independence by Amur Province, which was stated to be untrue, is now confirmed and up to now altogether thirteen provinces have declared independence, the names of those provinces being Mukden, Kirin, Amur, Shantung, Shensi, Shanshi, Szechuan, Chekian, Anhui, Fukien, Chili, Hupeh, and Honan.

From Harbin it is reported that the provincial army of Amur has suddenly raised the red flag against the central government, and the fate of the government troops sent to Hairal to suppress the Mongolian bandits who had occupied that city is unknown. General Tang Chi-yao, Military Governor of Yunnan, says a Peking report, has occupied Szechuan for the purpose of the maintenance of the republic and sent his troops to Szechuan to make the place a base for military operations against the northerners. His troops have already occupied four important cities.

Peking, June 2.—No further news has yet been received here about General Chang Hsun. It was reported that he would arrive this evening, but it is thought probable that he will stay at Tientsin for a day or two to confer with the leaders of the Chinputang and of the Peiyang party, who are now assembled there. It is understood that the Presidential mandate summoning General Chang Hsun to Peking was issued owing to his refusal to come unless officially summoned.

A large number of members of the Parliament have left here for Tientsin in the last few days, and the quorum was not obtained at yesterday's Constitution Con-

The troops of the Seventh Division, commanded by General Chang Ching-yao, have occupied the Yellow River bridge on the Kinhan line. The traffic on the line continues normally, though every train is inspected.

According to reliable reports received at Peking there has been no large movements of troops, and the situation is practically at a standstill pending General Chang Hsun's mediation.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 2.—A Presidential mandate was issued to-day summoning General Chang Hsun to Peking to confer upon the situation.

The President has entrusted Wang Shi-chen, Chief of the General Staff and commander-in-chief of the precautionary troops, with the entire responsibility of the military situation. General Wang has accepted.

Chang Hsun is bringing a number of his troops here as a bodyguard. His arrival is awaited with intense interest, as though he had not joined the independence movement. Some regard him as one of the instigators, but it is believed that he has decided to remain aloof in order to be able to assume the role of mediator and to attain his object without fighting.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, June 2.—Inspector-General Lu Yang-ting and the Tuchuns of Kwangtung and Kwangsi will support the central government, while the republicans, being ready to defend the President and Parliament, are working quietly to organize an effort to oppose the rebellious Tuchuns.

The Kwangtung Provisional Assembly, assuring President and Parliament of loyal support, is demanding the punishment of the rebellious Tuchuns, after they are first ousted from office. It is understood that the former revolutionary leaders, Chen Chiung-ming, Hu Han-min, Tsen Chun-hsun and Li Lieh-chun will soon visit Canton, probably to organize a force for the defence of the republican interests.

Military Governor Chen Pin-chun of Kwangsi and Civil Governor Chu Chiang-lan of Kwangtung, attending a reception May 31, denounced the revolutionary Tuchuns, while the Yunnan troops at Canton are highly indignant over their lawless actions and will obey any summons if called northward to defend Li Yuan-hung and Parliament.

Canton is peaceful at present. The people are not excited, although reports relieved from the north are unfavourable.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 2.—It is reliably learned, regarding the trouble of May 30 at Pukow, that the dispute arose in the slightest manner between the sailors of the Japanese steamer Sorachi Maru and Chang Hsun's soldiers. One Japanese sailor was wounded seriously and six slightly. Three Chinese soldiers were also slightly wounded, but it is believed that no one was killed on either side.

Shanghai, June 3.—Chengtu in Szechuan remains remarkably quiet, but the Szechuanese are keenly watching events in other provinces. It is assumed here that General Liu Tsun-hou commanding the Szechuanese army is in favour of the North, while the attitude of Governor Jui Kan is unknown. It is rumoured that if the Yunnanese attempt to move toward Chungking, General Chou Tao-kang's Division will be prepared to resist.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 3.—A special to the "China Press" from a correspondent at Nanking says that Sze Ching-yung, the Chief of the Staff, officially states that General Feng Kuo-chang, the Vice-President, will support President Li Yuan-hung morally only. General Feng Kuo-chang opposes the Tuchuns' move and disapproves the attempts of the military to dictate and will not help the Tuchuns but he will not oppose them by force. Meanwhile the Vice-President is endeavouring to mediate and arrange a compromise.

It is the general opinion in Nanking that Feng Kuo-chang will do nothing at present.

If the Tuchuns win he will do their bidding but his neutrality is making the other Tuchuns hesitate.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 3.—A train of thirty trucks containing Ni Shih-chung's troops passed Tsinanfu at seven o'clock last night. It stopped when it reached the Yellow River. Whether it will proceed further north is not yet known.

The Tuchun of Shantung has prohibited the remittance of the proceeds of the Salt Tax to the Government.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 3.—General Chang Hsun has declined to come up to Peking saying that the way is blocked. The rebels have decided to call a convention at Tientsin to form a provisional Government headed by a Dictator functioning both as President and Premier. They intend to declare war on Germany. It is most improbable that such declaration will be acceptable to the Entente. Peking will be completely isolated.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 4, 10 p.m.—The report that President Li Yuan-Hung has resigned or has any intention of resigning is absolutely without foundation. The Reuter and Kokusai News Agencies' correspondent is authoritatively informed that the President intends to remain at his post and will not submit to the threatening demands of the military faction now in rebellion and the mutiny against the Government of China.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 4.—The President states that if he thought his resignation would benefit the country he would not hesitate to retire but on the contrary, he considers that his retirement at this time would result only in the greatest confusion and chaos. The President has a deep sense of his duty and responsibility. He feels that he has the support of the masses of the people of China who, he believes, look to him to defend the democratic principles of the Republic. The President says that the military elements now in rebellion are not looking to the welfare of the nation but to their own interests solely.

The setting up of a so-called Government of Tientsin and the restoration movement looking to a regency which would be nothing more than a dictatorship would be a return to the very worst conditions of oppression and unrest. The so-called declarations of independence by a few of the provinces will, the President and his supporters feel sure, have the effect only of solidifying the great mass of the people and ensuring the loyalty of the other and more wealthy provinces to the plan of a parliament and a constitutional government.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 4.—Mr. Hsu En-Yuan, Governor of the Bank of China, was arrested this afternoon, charged with giving financial support to the rebels, but was subsequently liberated. The charge appears grotesque as the Bank of China is entrusted with the payment of the troops and naturally made the arrangements for payment last month.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Hongkong, June 5.—The Hongkong "Daily Press" in a leading editorial on "The Political Crisis in China" says: "It is gratifying to learn that the navy does not approve of the course taken by the leaders of the revolt and that the southern provinces have held aloof from the movement which is strongly denounced by the Kwangtung assembly."

Dispatches from Peking report that on the 2nd when President Li Yuan-hung proposed his resignation and was about to leave Peking to quit office and return to his native place in the south, Wang Shih-cheng and other northern leaders stopped the President and persuaded him to retain office, warmly expostulating with him to change his mind and remain at his post. President Li was prevailed upon and abandoned his intention to leave. The action of the northern leaders is considered to be owing to their fear that should President Li retire, the southerners will support him and establish a separate government of the southern provinces with President Li as its head, and in case he retires from office Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang will naturally succeed him as new president which is against their wish and interests. Apparently the northerners want to retain President Li in the post of President for the time being and meanwhile carry out their scheme to establish a new government exclusively consisting of northern leaders. Still President Li does not entirely abandon his intention to resign, but retains his determination to carry out his intention according to the future development of the situation meanwhile observing the attitude of the northerners.

The same day Dr. Reinsch, the American Minister at Peking, interviewed President Li and Wang Shih-cheng, and pointing out the political situation warmly advised them to the effect that should President Li resign at the present moment it will surely lead to dividing China into southern and northern republics and cause further disturbances, plunging the state and nation into a great national calamity.

On the other hand, telegrams from Tientsin report that the military governors of all provinces at Tientsin decided on advising President Li to resign. If President Li resigns, according to their wish, he will naturally recommend Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang as his successor according to the provisions of the constitution, but as they do not like to have Feng Kuo-chang as president they are planning to recommend Hsu Shi-chang as provisionary generalissimo of the military government, when he will enter Pkeing to take over the power of the central government. In other words, the military governors want to get rid of both President Li and Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang and take over the reins of the central government at the risk of the violation of the constitution. Whether Hsu Shi-chang will be willing to accept the offer to become the head of the military government and direct their movements even in violation of the constitution is doubtful. The cabinet planned by the northerners will be a coalition ministry consisting of the leaders belonging to the Peiyang party and the Progressive party and will be presided over by Liu Cheng-hsiang.

Peking, June 6.—Protests against the Tuchuns' movement have been received from Yunnan and Szechuan. The President is again endeavouring to persuade Mr. Wang Shih-chen to accept the premiership but otherwise there are no developments.

A presidential mandate pardons Mr. Eugene Chen and cancels the sentence. Nevertheless Mr. Chen has not been yet liberated.

Mr. Hsu En-yuan, Governor of the Bank of China, was arrested under instructions of minor officials of the Yei Yang party. When the President and Mr. Wang Shih-chen heard of it, they were indignant and ordered his immediate release.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, June 6.—Beginning with June 3, special troops have been sent to important points to guard the boundaries of Kwantung. Li Lieh-chun wired to Canton from Shanghai advising the despatch of troops against the rebels immediately, while Hu Han-min and Chen Chiung-ming have been invited to Canton where an organised effort may be made to protect the President and Parliament. The new Tuchun of Kwantung, Chen Pin-chun assumed office on June 1st, but the new Tuchun of Kwangsi did not go to Kwangsi until June 4. The Cantonese are urging Inspecter General Lu Yung-ting to go from Kwangsi to Canton immediately.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 6.—Civil Governor Chu Ching-lan of Chekiang has wired to Yang Shan-teh, the tuchun of Chekiang advising him to obey the President. All political parties have held meetings but have taken no action pending the arrival of prominent leaders. So far the press, officials and people are whole-heartedly supporting the Central Government, while there is talk of reviving the military council with the object of uniting the southern provinces against the rebellious tuchuns.

PLANS ALREADY MADE TO RESTORE FRANCE

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 2.—Two months have elapsed since the Germans were forced to abandon the French territory that they had laid waste before retreating.

It has been necessary to reorganise these regions completely as part of the population that has not been carried off by the enemy, that is to say old men, women and children were in the most pitiable plight.

For two months in this task of material and morale rescue the administration and military authorities have worked in close intimacy. By repairing roads and setting in order again all that could still be utilized, the sad aspect of the devastated country has been much modified.

In the same way the morale of the inhabiants has much progressed. Civil intercourse has become more general. Commerce has begun again, the agricultural and economic life of the country begins to show itself again, and the agricultural situation is considerably improved, owing to the arrival of grain which has made it possible to sow a great part of the already ploughed land.

The efforts of the army have been in constant request and a more considerable number of horses and teams have been placed at the disposal of the farmers.

PRESENT POLITICS IN CHINA

The political situation in China is becoming extremely dangerous, and the "Jiji" believes that unless President Li makes concessions to the Military governors, he will not be able to bring peace to the country. At present, only four provinces of China are supporting the Central government.

These provinces being Yunnan, Kweichow, Kwangtung and Kwangsi, the Government has the support only in the extreme south end of the country. The Province of Chihli in which Peking is situated is against the central government, and Shangtung, Honan, Shansi and Sheng Ging provinces which surround Chihli, are against the Peking Government cutting off Peking from all other provinces.

The situation being such the President had no other way but to ask the Vice-President and General Chang Hsun to mediate between the government and the provinces which declared independence. The "Jiji" does not know what terms General Chang will propose when he enters Peking, but considering the fact that recently in Tientsin, the headquarters of the anti-government movement, there is a scheme being considered to restore Hsuan Tung, the former boy Emperor of China, the future of the situation in China is dark.

The scheme of restoring the former Emperor has been always considered by the aristocratic Chinese, and have been waiting for an opportunity to destroy the republic and establish the monarchy again. It is not strange that when the military governors rose against the central government, the supporters of the former Emperor desire to start a movement. The "Jiji" believes that if the northern military power succeeds in suppressing the parliament, it may open a war against the Kuo-min party and the republican government to establish a monarchy. If the conflict begins between the present government and the supporters of the former Emperor, the situation will be far more difficult. The paper advises President Li, and the military governors to conclude peace on satisfactory terms and prevent the further disturbance in China.

The "Jiji" declares that the present points of disagreements between the President and the military governors are not strong enough to cause any serious disturbance. The Kuo-min party opposed the declaration of war against Germany, but the party did not aim to oppose the declaration of war under any circumstances. The Kuo-min party believed that if General Tuan is allowed to declare war, he will increase his power, to the disadvantage of the party. On the other hand, it has been wrong that General Tuan tried to oppress the members of the Senate and House of Representatives when he found that both Houses are against the declaration of war. Further General Tuan made the military governors demand the President to dissolve both houses. The dissolution of parliament happens in many other countries, but in China, the present law does not give any power to the President to dissolve parliament. It was the fault of General Tuan to ask the President to take such an illegal step. President Li was hasty in dismissing General Tuan, and did not realize that the dismissal would cause trouble. When legally considered, however, the military governors have nothing to attack the President for and the declaration of independence by several military governors is absurd. The "Jiji" says that to watch the further development of the Chinese political situation, it is necessary to remember the causes that brought about the present disturbance.

EXPECTS NO SERIOUS DISTURBANCES IN CHINA

The chaotic political situation still exists in China, but the "Jiji" does not believe that while the situation is chaotic and there is no one who is able to control the situation, there will be any serious disturbance in the near future. Hsu Shih-chang has established a Military Government at Tientsin, and named Military Governors as members of his cabinet and he is not recognizing the existence of the Central government nor President Li. President Li once desired to resign and gave his position to Vice-President Feng, but later he gave up his intention of resigning. On the other hand, the Military governors of the Southern Provinces are reported to be planning to oppose the Military Government established at Tientsin.

Under such conditions, it is difficult to predict the future development of the political situation of China. One report that has been surprising the public is that the Military Government of Tientsin is scheming the restoration of the former Emperor. It is doubtful, says the "Jiji" whether the Military Government and the Military Governors who are backing the Tientsin government, really desire the restoration of the former Emperor, or they are merely using the name of the former Emperor for their own political success.

While it is difficult to predict the future of China, the "Jiji" states that at present there is no party nor man who is controlling the political situation of China. Only the Military Government of Tientsin is comparatively more powerful than other parties. Hsu Shih-chang is the leader of the Military Government, but General Chang Hsun is equally powerful, and the Military Government of Tientsin is the Government of Hsu Shih-chang and Chang Hsun.

President Li is now existing nominally, and his plan of resignation was prevented by pressure from Tientsin, and also the American Minister at Peking advised President Li to remain as President of the Republic. However, at present President Li has no hope of regaining his power. Although in the southern provinces, there are some Governors who are supporting President Li, since Chili, Shantung, Honan, Shangsi and Shengking provinces opposed President Li, the Peking government is now isolated, and President Li is now surrounded by his enemies, being practically a prisoner in the hands of the Military Government. There will be no other way for the President but to obey the direction of the Military Government.

One rumour says that the Southern Military Governors will establish their own Government at Canton, but the plan has not yet been carried out. The "Jiji" believes that as there is no one who possessed superior power in China, at present, the future development will be difficult, but at the same time, the present chaotic condition may exist for some time and bring disturbance upon China.

SUBSIDIES TO STEAMSHIP LINE

The "Hochi" again discusses the subsidies to the steamship companies of Japan. In the past thirty years, the Japanese government has given subsidies to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha to the extent of 100,000,000 yen, and the company is still receiving the aid of the government. When the company declared a dividend of seventy per cent. the public opinion rose against the subsidies, and said that the subsidy to such profitable steamship companies should be stopped at once.

The steamship companies will be exceedingly happy, if they are given the freedom of running their lines as they please, without any subsidies from the government, as in that case, all steamship companies will only operate the profitable lines, and will suspend the losing lines. Now under the subsidies, the steamship companies are under the supervision of the government, and when the supervision is taken off, the companies will raise the freight rate as they please, and run their ships only to the profitable ports. The paper says that such a condition will be detrimental to the development of Japanese foreign trade.

The subsidies on certain lines which are profitably run by all steamship should be stopped, but the "Hochi" is against the policy of suspending all subsidies, as the paper believes that proper subsidies and supervision by the government is necessary for the development of the commerce of the nation. The paper hopes that the amount of subsidies will be restricted according to the earnings and standing of the steamship companies. The absolute suspension of subsidies will hinder the trade of the country.

FINE PENMANSHIP AND FAIR COUNTENANCE

In ancient times when Confucius was alive, beauty and obsequiousness to the great were considered as the two essential elements of one's rise in the world in China. Now-a-days the essential elements of success are fine penmanship and fair countenance, so declares Mr. Shimono, a professor of the Tokyo Higher Commercial College. Prof. Shimono clings to this view; he always says to his students in the class-rooms that if one is calligraphical and handsome one can succeed in life unless one is an idiot.

It must be remembered that none can be a better authority on the science of bookkeeping in Japan than Mr. Shimono at present, so that he cannot be expected to delude people with vague and erroneous statements so long as he does not keep cooked accounts. To endorse this cherished view of his, Prof. Shimono always declares that it is because his face lacks aesthetic value that he still remains a pedagogue on small pay. Supposing that Fukusuke, a charming actor in the Kabukiza theatre, and Mr. Kaiseki, a noted calligrapher, were combined into one, the individual should therefore be some day a minister of state, if Mr. Shimono's opinion is correct. Count Terauchi commands pretty fine penmanship, but it must be said then that he was born a little too handsome. Take then Marquis Okuma for instance to probe the credibility of Prof. Shimono's opinion. It is very well-known that the venerable sage of Waseda has never taken up a writing brush in his life; the Marquis is also said to have won his present eminent position in the world by virtue of the remarkably eloquent tongue he is blessed with. There are other instances betraying Mr. Shimono's views.

END OF WAR NOT IN SIGHT

The European war has been continuing now for over 1,030 days, and there remains only two months of the three years in which the late Lord Kitchener predicted that the war would be over. While there may be still hopes of the early ending of the war, says the "Yorozu", the end is not yet in sight.

Recently the opinion has been spreading that the war will continue for some time yet, and some say that the end will not come in one or even two years. The reasons that brought out these opinions of the longer continuation of the war are, firstly the recent proof that Germany will not starve, secondly, that German submarines will not be able to starve out England, thirdly the recent development of war has been very slow, and fourthly the United States in aiding the Entente is planning for the fighting of one or even two years more.

In the matter of food supplies, Germany has been in a difficult position these last two months, but in June, the new crop will be gathered, and then she will be again able to hold on. The submarine warfare has not been as successful as Germany expected, and it will be impossible to defeat England before this summer as was expected by Germany. Whenever the Entente forces plan an advance, Germany is retreating and recently there has been no active fighting, and it will take many a month before Germany will retreat to the Rhine. The United States is now planning for a long war, and is endeavouring to complete its preparation for two years' war and expects to send a large number of American troops to the European fronts after two years.

The "Yorozu" says that these facts caused the opinion of the continuation of the present conflict to spread in many countries.

INDEPENDENT MEMBERS

By the result of the recent election a large number of so called independent members of the House of Representatives were elected, but it is clear that the majority of these independent members are pro-government members, says the "Nichinichi." However these pro-government members are ashamed to declare themselves pro-government, and the government is hoping that they will organize themselves into a party.

In political circles there should not be any one who does not belong to any party and who is neutral in his policy. But there are many members at present who are declaring that they are absolutely neutral. It is only a mask they desire to wear to conceal the fact that they are pro-government, says the "Nichinichi."

Among the independent members, there are some who are opposing the government as well as all political parties. These men would oppose any cabinet and any party, and they will not co-operate with any one else. These men can not be called neutral or independent, and have no value whatever as members of the House of Representatives, as they oppose anything and any party.

The independent members dislike that the existing parties are not good enough for them, but the "Nichinichi" declares that when these members are carefully considered with others, they are no better than party members. The "Nichinichi" concludes that the existence of such "independent" members will hinder the development of the constitutional government in Japan, and it hopes that they will be soon wiped out of existence.

MR. INUKAI WILL GUIDE KOKUMINTO POLICIES

It is reported that Mr. Inukai, leader of the Kokuminto, will resign from the leadership of the party since he has been appointed a member of the new Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs.

But the Kokuminto denies the rumour, and yesterday published an announcement saying that under no circumstances will Mr. Inukai resign from the leadership of the party. The appointment of the leader of the party as a member of the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs, says the announcement, does not restrict the activity of Mr. Inukai as the leader of the Kokuminto. Mr. Inukai has the responsibility of guiding the party, and his appointment as a member of the new Board, will not cause any change in the policy of the party. A certain newspaper of Tokyo reported the resignation of Mr. Inukai, but such a thing will never occur.

His duty as a member of the Board and responsibility as the leader of the party, do not conflict, but in case the decision of the Board or the Cabinet should differ too widely from the policy of the Kokuminto, Mr. Inukai will resign from the Board. He will never resign from the leadership of the party. As Mr. Inukai consented to become a member of the Board, he will do his best for the Board and the country. The appointment of Mr. Inukai as a member of the Board, does not mean that the Kokuminto has become the Government party, and upon all the questions to be brought up in the Diet, the Kokuminto will give its judgement according to its established principle.

The false report reads: "It is reported that Mr. Inukai, the leader of the Kokuminto party, who was nominated member of the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs on Wednesday, intends resigning the leadership of the party in favour of Mr. Seki, the whip of the party. He is reported to be desirous of placing the affairs of his party under the charge of Mr. Seki and thus devoting himself to his duties in the Advisory Board in view of the significance of the responsibility devolved on his shoulders now. It is anticipated that if he resigns, the Kokuminto party will undergo some change in its staff. In this context it is also reported that Mr. Nozoe, of the Kokuminto, will be recommended to the post of Vice-President of the House of Representatives when the House meets for its extraordinary session in the latter part of this month, as the relations between the Seiyukai and the Kokuminto have been smoothed by Mr. Inukai's entry into the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs. The President of the Lower House will doubtlessly be elected from the Seiyukai."

MIYAZAKI MARU FALLS PREY TO HUN PIRATES

The report that the N.Y.K. liner Miyazaki Maru was sunk by a German submarine in the English Channel early in the morning of May 31st, reached the Navy Department from the Naval Attache to the Japanese Embassy at London, late in the evening of June first. A later report received from the same source, on June 2 states that the Miyazaki Maru was sunk at 10.45 o'clock on the morning of May 31st, and sixty five passengers including thirteen women and four children, and 121 members of the crew were saved by the British Coast Patrol. It is believed that the entire crew and passengers were saved. The rescue boat is heading for Falmouth and was expected to reach there at noon, June first. However the N.Y.K. head office in Tokyo had not received any news from the Captain of the steamer up to June 2.

The Miyazaki Maru was the first Japanese steamer to leave Japanese waters armed. The vessel left Yokohama for London on March 20 armed with a 6 inch gun of the latest type. She has six gunners on board. According to the N.Y.K., the steamer left Cape Town on May 8th and was scheduled to reach London on Wednesday, but no report of her safe arrival in London reached the company. It is believed that the steamer was torpedoed off Land's End.

The steamer was commanded by Captain Giichi Ohta, the Chief Engineer being Mr. T. Iwasaki, and the pursuer Mr. T. Fukui, the total crew being 134. It is reported that at the time of the disaster there were fifty-nine passengers including four Japanese and four children. The vessel was built at the Kawasaki Dock Yard, Kobe, in September, 1908, displacing 7,892 tons gross. She was on her 19th voyage to London when she was sunk.

She carried nine passengers from Japan, but all of them boarded the ship at Kobe, and were only booked to Colombo. The steamer did not carry any mail from Yokohama.

On her departure from Yokohama she carried 2,158 tons of cargo. The principle cargo was 100 tons of copper, 113 tons of barley, 136 tons of peas, 150 tons of beans, 125 tons of starch, 50 tons of fish-oil, 70 bales of raw silk and 18 bales of waste silk. Shippers of raw silk were Messrs. Jewett & Bent, 20 bales, Mitsui Bussan Kaisha, 30, Shinyei Koshi Kaisha, 10, and Kaneko Tushutu-ten 10. Waste silk was shipped by Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co.

The ship was insured for two million yen with the Tokyo Marine Insurance company, and her cargo was insured for 153,095 pounds sterling.

The report of the N.Y.K. office regarding the number of passengers and crew of the boat, and the report from the Naval Attache regarding the number of the rescued passengers and crew, do not agree, but comparing the two figures it seems that all on board were saved. The N.Y.K. report states that there were 134 in the crew and 59 passengers, making a total of 193, but the report received by the Navy office says that the crew was 121 with 65 passengers, total 186, all saved. Thus of the total number seven are unaccounted for, but until the further report is received, it cannot be stated whether any on board perished or not.

The report of the sinking of the Miyazaki Maru in the English Channel seems to have been confirmed by the naval department although as yet no message has been received from the Captain. The report did not work any havoc with the Stock Exchange shares although a slight slip resulted. The most serious gyration was felt in the Jiki end and for a moment the quotation looked as if it would be forced down about twenty yen; however, the situation gradually balanced itself and a fall of only ten yen was registered. In the time market the Nippon Yusen shares are said to have toppled slightly, though other shipping shares were in rather a strong groove.

According to other reports the amount of insurance for the shipments total about £153,095 contracted by the head office spread among the following companies.

Tokyo Marine	£75,000
Japan Marine	32,000
Teikoku Marine	22,700
Yokohama Fire	12,215
Osaka Marine	11,050

In addition other goods shipped from Japan are reported to have amounted to about 3,000,900 yen. The steamer itself was insured with the Tokyo Marine for 2,000,000 yen.

Eight men, one passenger and seven of the crew, lost their lives, in escaping from the N.Y.K. Liner Miyazaki Maru which was sunk off Land's End, England on May 31st by a German submarine.

The report despatched from London on the afternoon of June first stated that sixty-five passengers and 121 members of the crew safely reached Falmouth at noon, June first. Eight passengers, one officer and part of the crew who left the sinking boat in a separate boat were rescued by a British Coast Patrol, but did not reach Falmouth until noon, June 1.

The report received later by the Navy Department said that the missing boat reached Falmouth on the morning of June second with one passenger and seven of the crew dead.

The N. Y. K. office received on the 4th report from its London office that Mr. Lowe (?) a passenger who boarded the steamer at Singapore and three of the crew died in the boat before reaching Falmouth, and four others were washed overboard. The crew of the Miyazaki Maru will leave London for Japan on board the company's liner Iyo Maru, but the Captain, Chief Engineer and Purser will remain in London for some time.

The names of those who died in the escape to Falmouth are as follows:

Lowe (?) passenger, K. Unno, fireman, K. Suzuki, boy, T. Tanaka, boy, G. Inouye, sailor, G. Yamakoshi, oiler, N. Ichikawa, fireman, and Y. Takahashi assistant cook.

With the sinking of the Miyazaki Maru Japan has lost 15 steamers totalling 61,665 tons from the attacks of enemy submarines, the first victim being the Yasukuni Maru which was sunk in the Mediterranean sea on Nov. 3, 1915. The 14 steamers are as follows:

JAPAN LOSES FAITHFUL FOREIGN ADVISOR BY DEATH

Mr. William Henry Stone, for the last forty years adviser to the Department of Communications who had been in broken health for some time, died at his residence at Tamachi, Shiba, on June 2 at 11.30 a.m., the immediate cause of his death being inflammation of the lungs which his ripe age made the more acute. Mr. Stone came to Japan originally to undertake the work of constructing the telegraph system of this country and in that capacity he gave to the Japanese Government the best years of his life. In appreciation of his meritorious service in Japan's telegraphic administration of which he was regarded as a great benefactor, Mr. Stone was decorated with the first class Order of the "Sacred Treasure," the second class Order of the "Rising Sun" and other honours and was placed in the "Chokunin" rank by the Imperial order since March, 1891. Up to within the last few weeks Mr. Stone had been attending his office at the Department of Communications. A gentleman of the highest principle and character, Mr. Stone surrounded himself with warm and close friends not only among the people of his own nationality but representatives of all nations. Mr. Stone was a loyal Englishman and it is rather a striking fact that the sad event occurred on the day of the celebration of the birth of King George. He would have attained his 80th year on the 18th of this month.

His passing will be regretted by a large circle of close friends in Japan and elsewhere in whose hearts his memory will long be cherished. Mr. Fred Hill, his nephew, was at his bedside when he breathed his last. The funeral arrangements will be announced later and it is probable that the deceased gentleman will receive all the honours his long and faithful service deserves.

Upon learning of the serious condition of Mr. Stone, H.I.M. the Emperor conferred upon him the Grand Cordon of the First Order of the Rising Sun, in appreciation of his forty five years' service towards the development of the Japanese telegraph and telephone services.

The funeral services for Mr. William Henry Stone, foreign advisor to the Department of Communications, took place yesterday afternoon at St. Andrew's pro-Cathedral. Interment was at Aoyama Cemetery.

Few ceremonies of the kind have been held in Tokyo with more careful exhibition of the honour and respect in which the deceased was held in this community. A wreath from His Imperial Majesty the Emperor occupied conspicuous place among the great number of floral tributes sent by friends, Associations, Clubs and admirers. A Guard of Honour composed of a company of Infantry was in attendance and played a fanfare of trumpets on the arrival of the cortège at the Cathedral.

The arrangements for the funeral ceremonies were entirely in the hands of the Officials of the Department of Communications, Mr. Uchizawa being more particularly responsible for the carrying out of the admirable detail with which everything was done. The active pall-bearers were officials of the Department, all of them close friends and associates of Mr. Stone throughout his many years of service to the Government. Honourary pall bearers appointed by the Masonic Order of Japan and headed by the District Grand Master Mr. George H. Whymark, of Kobe, and the Deputy District Grand Master, Mr. S.E. Unite of Yokohama, were also in attendance. The local members being Messrs. W. S. Moss, J. Conder, E. W. James, V. R. Bowden and Dr. F. P. Parvis.

These conducted the casket to the Chancel steps and were followed by the chief mourners Mr. F. W. Hill and Mrs. Hill and Mr. C. R. Rice and Mrs Rice of Yokohama.

The British Ambassador was represented by Count C. H. Bentinck. The Foreign Office and Household Department by Mr. Yoshida and among the occupants of specially reserved seats were a number of high officials of the Government.

The Cathedral was filled when the officiating Clergy commenced the service. These were the Venerable Archdeacon A. F. King with the Reverends L. B. Cholmondeley, and W. C. Gemmill assisting. The Choir of St. Andrew's Church sang the music of the service with Mrs. J. T. Swift as Organist.

The Chancel steps and upper part of the nave were filled with wreaths and a very large number were placed at the West end.

In the Church the Hymns "Jesus Lives" and others from the Church of England Hymn Book with the "Psalm of Life" from the burial service were sung.

At the conclusion of the Church services, the funeral procession was formed and moved slowly through the streets to Aoyama cemetery; where in a quiet corner on the southern slope of the hill overlooking the city, the body was laid in its last resting place while the assemblage of mourners around the grave sang the beautiful hymn

"Abide with me. Fast falls the even' tide.

"The darkness deepens. Lord, with me abide."

And so a faithful servant and loyal friend was let to his reward, his memory garlanded with loving thoughts and pleasant memories.

BURNING SMARTING PIMPLES ON BABY'S

Face and Body. Crust Formed Disfiguring Badly. Could Not Sleep.

HEALED BY CUTICURA

"My baby's trouble started when he was three months old. Pimples which seemed full of water came on his face and lower parts of his body, then they burst and spread, a nasty crust forming on top disfiguring him badly. He could not sleep for the burning and smarting.

"I saw Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertised and sent for a free sample. After the first dressing he was relieved so I bought more and he was healed." (Signed) Mrs. E. Pickering, Court 4, Steelhouse Lane, Wolverhampton, Eng., July 29, 1915.

OLD SCHOOL OF ACTORS AT IMPERIAL THEATRE

After one month of performances by the actresses, the June bill of the Imperial Theatre, consisting of three old dramas played by the old school actors of the Theatre with the addition of Wuzayemon of the Kabuki Theatre, is heartily welcomed by the patronizers of the Imperial. The appearance of Wuzayemon is the feature of the June programme, and in all of the three plays, he takes the leading part. The success of this month's performance is entirely due to his appearance.

The three plays are "Mitokomon," "Inakagenji Tsuyuno Shinonome" and "Yedosodachi Omatsuri Sahichi." "Mitokomon" is a historical play of the Tokugawa period, "Inakagenji Tsuyuno Shinonome" is a dance play, and "Yedosodachi Omatsuri Sahichi" is a love story.

"Mitokomon" is a story of Lord Mitsukuni of Mito, who took a hand in punishing the officials who oppressed the people. Kyugoro, a fish dealer accidentally kills a dog which tried to steal one of his fish. The dog belonged to a high official, and he was to be sentenced to death, when the blind father of the fish dealer, appeals to Lord Mitsukuni who sympathises with the fish dealer, and in order to prevent the further occurrence of such merciless cases, orders one of his retainers to kill a dog, and reports to the officials that he killed a dog. Lord Mitsukuni advises the officials that it is absurd to kill a human being for the accidental killing of a dog, and not only Kyugoro, the fish dealer was released, but none suffered from that time for slaying dogs.

The accidental arrest of Kichigoro, a sailor, also reveals a plan of robbing the state by some officials and one of Lord Mitsukuni's own retainers. Mondayu, the retainer, was the favourite of Lord Mitsukuni, but when his guilt is proved, Lord Mitsukuni punishes him with death.

Throughout the play, the oppression of the people by the officials, and the haughty arrogance of officials is clearly given, Lord Mitsukuni being pictured as one of the brightest and kindest of rulers, who always thinks of the welfare of the people and is willing to affront any official for the sake of his people.

In this play, Wuzayemon plays Kichigoro, the sailor, and Matsusuke takes the part of the blind father of the fish dealer. These two actors are the main-stays of the play. Koshiro is also excellent in the part of Lord Mitsukuni.

Only four actors play in "Inakagenji," the second play. Sonosuke, Wuzayemon, Koshiro, Baiko and Sojuro, who are all master dancers and delight the audience with their artistic interpretation of the play. Mitsuuji, played by Wuzayemon, and Tasogare by Sonosuke, lose their way in a mountain and seek shelter at an old temple which is almost in ruins. While the priest goes down to the village, a mysterious woman suddenly jumps into the room, breaking through a wall, and terrifies the two travellers. The woman wears a mask of a She-Devil, and when finally she was unmasked by Mitsuuji and his servant who arrives on the scene, it was found that she was the mother of Tasogare, who at once kills herself. Realizing that her daughter has committed suicide the woman also kills herself. However before she dies she says that she had been seeking the life of Mitsuuji. Her daughter knew that her mother was after Mitsuuji and tried to save him.

The story is simple, and there is little plot in the play, though it is an attractive spectacle, consisting of many and varied dances.

The opening scene of "Omatsuri Sahichi" is gorgeous. There are over sixty people on the stage, and the scene pictures one of the festivals of which the old Yedo was famous. Koito, famous Geisha is in love with Sahichi, but her employer desires her to marry a rich Samurai. Koito is naturally against such marriage and escapes to the house of Sahichi. But by a trick and the scheming of the Samurai and her employers, she was lured back. By circulating the report that Koito is a daughter of the enemy of Sahichi, they try to separate them. Sahichi becomes angry with Koito when she tells him that she is the daughter of his enemy, and believes that it was a mere scheming of the Samurai and Koito, and determines to kill the latter.

Koito is finally killed by Sahichi, but she gives a letter to him before she expires. The letter tells of the faithfulness of the Geisha to Sahichi who regrets his hasty deed. Sahichi manages to kill the Samurai with the help of his friends.

Wuzayemon is at his best in this play, and he takes the part of Sahichi exceedingly well, it being a part that suits him absolutely. Baiko plays the Geisha, and there is no question that among the present actors who play female rôles, he is one of the best.

STEEL THAT WON'T RUST

Cutlery made of steel that neither rusts nor tarnishes is now being sold in all first class shops. "The new steel," says the Scientific American, "was discovered in England, but is now being made in the United States and sold as table cutlery. It is what is commonly called an alloy steel; that is, it differs from ordinary steel in that it contains a special element or metal. In this case it is chromium, which is mainly responsible for bestowing the stainless and rustless properties. By incorporating from twelve to thirteen per cent. of this metal in mild carbon steel the new properties are obtained. An English metallurgist, in gathering together some rods of steel which had lain a long time in his laboratory, noticed that while most of them were badly rusted or stained, a few were as bright as when originally made. This led to the present discovery and manufacture of the steel.

"The new steel is more expensive than the old which usually appears in the every-day table knife. Its advantages and lasting properties as well as its appearance and the convenience arising from its use more than offset the extra cost. The fact that it does not tarnish, stain or corrode augments its value decidedly. It is supplanting not only the old steel cutlery, but also the plated. Its possibilities, however, are by no means limited to cutlery. One can readily imagine to what countless uses a stainless and rustless metal can be put."

Quality.

With Lea & Perrins' sauce, a few drops sprinkled over the meat, fish or cheese, &c., are all that is required to impart the most delicious piquancy and flavour.

The QUALITY and concentration of its ingredients make a little of this sauce go a long way.

NEWS & NOTES

The latest report from Kagoshima, which was visited by an unlucky flood, says that many persons have been drowned in the recent disastrous inundation.

Subordinate members of the crew of N.Y.K. European liners have been drawing up demands, it is reported, in regard to their treatment and the relief of their families, in view of the frequent attacks by enemy submarines.

The City Council of Tokyo held a meeting on Monday evening when Mayor Dr. Okuda made a speech on the necessity of combining the three present rival electric companies in the city in order to regulate the lighting charges in future. The council hall was thoroughly packed by an eager audience.

In asking the harbour police of Yokohama and other places to search for the missing sailing ship Kotobuki Maru, Mr. S. Kato, of Hakodate, her owner, states that she might have been run down by a steamer, as it is a case which occurs more frequently now, as steamships proceed in haste in consequence of the scarcity of bottoms.

With the approach of the summer season the activities of pickpockets in Tokyo have become redoubled owing to the advantage which is offered to them by the light habiliments worn by the people. In view of this tendency the Metropolitan authorities have recently started a vigorous campaign against purse-snatchers.

The staff of the Mitsui Bank in Tokyo made a present of a marble bust of Baron Takayasu Mitsui recently in token of their grateful ackowledgements of the services rendered by the veteran Baron in the past to the bank he now represents. The unveiling ceremony was held on Sunday in the compound of the new residence of the Baron at Niban-cho, Kojimachi-ku, city.

An association has been organized by Japanese residents concerned in Yokohama in order to push on an agitation for the boring of a tunnel between Yokohama proper and Kitagata-cho, below the Bluff. Not a few Japanese and foreigners have already urged the construction of such tunnel, in order to facilitate traffic between the two places, but their efforts have hitherto been unsuccessful.

The Yokohama Chamber of Commerce has decided to furnish the local Post Office with a warehouse for keeping gratis parcel posts to Russia, in view of the congestion of such posts, after having had a certain contract signed by the local merchants concerned.

The Board of Government Railways will raise by 50 per cent. from July 1st the rates for the transportation by express trains of baggages, dead bodies, precious articles and small creatures.

The latin American society of which Prince Nijo is president, will hold an annual general meeting on the 19th instant at the Hoken Kiokai and afterwards a dinner will be given in honor of the Mexican and Chilian Ministers; the Brazilian Minister and Argentine Chargé d'Affaires, also several Cabinet Ministers will be honoured guests.

A plan is afoot to erect a bronze statue of Count Itagaki, the veteran statesman, in the municipal park of Gifu where an attempt was made on his life thirty-five years ago after his speech on democratic principles. The promoters have decided to raise the sum of 2,300 yen for the purpose. The statue will be named "statue of Democracy" in order to commemorate the Count's contribution to the progress of democracy in Japan.

As a result of recent efforts by many peers in this country the increase of the number of peers eligible as members of the House of Peers will be shortly made into a bill to be introduced probably in the present special session of the Diet. According to the proposal three more counts, as many viscounts and ten more barons will be given the chance in future to be nominated for the Upper House by virtue of the new bill.

The Nihon Bijutsu In (Japan Fine Arts Institute) will shortly obtain six or seven artists of note as its new members. The artists who are reported to probably join the Institute are Messrs. Kanae Yamamoto, Osen Ogawa, Tsunetomi Kitano, Shigeji Sakamoto, Kogan Tobari, Teijiro Nakahara and others. The names of the new members will be published as soon as they have been definitely secured. The coming exhibition of the works by the members of the Institute in next Autumn will therefore prove an excellent success as is every year the case with this kind of exhibition of the Institute.

The woman wears a mask of a She-Devil, and when finally she was unmasked by Mitsuuji and his servant who arrives on the scene, it was found that she was the mother of Tasogare, who at once kills herself. Realizing that her daughter has committed suicide the woman also kills herself. However before she dies she says that she had been seeking the life of Mitsuuji. Her daughter knew that her mother was after Mitsuuji and tried to save him.

The story is simple, and there is little plot in the play, though it is an attractive spectacle, consisting of many and varied dances.

The opening scene of "Omatsuri Sahichi" is gorgeous. There are over sixty people on the stage, and the scene pictures one of the festivals of which the old Yedo was famous. Koito, famous Geisha is in love with Sahichi, but her employer desires her to marry a rich Samurai. Koito is naturally against such marriage and escapes to the house of Sahichi. But by a trick and the scheming of the Samurai and her employers, she was lured back. By circulating the report that Koito is a daughter of the enemy of Sahichi, they try to separate them. Sahichi becomes angry with Koito when she tells him that she is the daughter of his enemy, and believes that it was a mere scheming of the Samurai and Koito, and determines to kill the latter.

Koito is finally killed by Sahichi, but she gives a letter to him before she expires. The letter tells of the faithfulness of the Geisha to Sahichi who regrets his hasty deed. Sahichi manages to kill the Samurai with the help of his friends.

Wuzayemon is at his best in this play, and he takes the part of Sahichi exceedingly well, it being a part that suits him absolutely. Baiko plays the Geisha, and there is no question that among the present actors who play female rôles, he is one of the best.

NEWS & NOTES

The latest report from Kagoshima, which was visited by an unlucky flood, says that many persons have been drowned in the recent disastrous inundation.

Subordinate members of the crew of N.Y.K. European liners have been drawing up demands, it is reported, in regard to their treatment and the relief of their families, in view of the frequent attacks by enemy submarines.

The City Council of Tokyo held a meeting on Monday evening when Mayor Dr. Okuda made a speech on the necessity of combining the three present rival electric companies in the city in order to regulate the lighting charges in future. The council hall was thoroughly packed by an eager audience.

In asking the harbour police of Yokohama and other places to search for the missing sailing ship Kotobuki Maru, Mr. S. Kato, of Hakodate, her owner, states that she might have been run down by a steamer, as it is a case which occurs more frequently now, as steamships proceed in haste in consequence of the scarcity of bottoms.

With the approach of the summer season the activities of pickpockets in Tokyo have become redoubled owing to the advantage which is offered to them by the light habiliments worn by the people. In view of this tendency the Metropolitan authorities have recently started a vigorous campaign against purse-snatchers.

The staff of the Mitsui Bank in Tokyo made a present of a marble bust of Baron Takayasu Mitsui recently in token of their grateful ackowledgements of the services rendered by the veteran Baron in the past to the bank he now represents. The unveiling ceremony was held on Sunday in the compound of the new residence of the Baron at Niban-cho, Kojimachi-ku, city.

An association has been organized by Japanese residents concerned in Yokohama in order to push on an agitation for the boring of a tunnel between Yokohama proper and Kitagata-cho, below the Bluff. Not a few Japanese and foreigners have already urged the construction of such tunnel, in order to facilitate traffic between the two places, but their efforts have hitherto been unsuccessful.

The Yokohama Chamber of Commerce has decided to furnish the local Post Office with a warehouse for keeping gratis parcel posts to Russia, in view of the congestion of such posts, after having had a certain contract signed by the local merchants concerned.

The Board of Government Railways will raise by 50 per cent. from July 1st the rates for the transportation by express trains of baggages, dead bodies, precious articles and small creatures.

The latin American society of which Prince Nijo is president, will hold an annual general meeting on the 19th instant at the Hoken Kiokai and afterwards a dinner will be given in honor of the Mexican and Chilian Ministers; the Brazilian Minister and Argentine Chargé d'Affaires, also several Cabinet Ministers will be honoured guests.

A plan is afoot to erect a bronze statue of Count Itagaki, the veteran statesman, in the municipal park of Gifu where an attempt was made on his life thirty-five years ago after his speech on democratic principles. The promoters have decided to raise the sum of 2,300 yen for the purpose. The statue will be named "statue of Democracy" in order to commemorate the Count's contribution to the progress of democracy in Japan.

As a result of recent efforts by many peers in this country the increase of the number of peers eligible as members of the House of Peers will be shortly made into a bill to be introduced probably in the present special session of the Diet. According to the proposal three more counts, as many viscounts and ten more barons will be given the chance in future to be nominated for the Upper House by virtue of the new bill.

The Nihon Bijutsu In (Japan Fine Arts Institute) will shortly obtain six or seven artists of note as its new members. The artists who are reported to probably join the Institute are Messrs. Kanae Yamamoto, Osen Ogawa, Tsunetomi Kitano, Shigeji Sakamoto, Kogan Tobari, Teijiro Nakahara and others. The names of the new members will be published as soon as they have been definitely secured. The coming exhibition of the works by the members of the Institute in next Autumn will therefore prove an excellent success as is every year the case with this kind of exhibition of the Institute.

SEIYU-KAI PRESIDENT ADDRESSES HIS PARTY

The Seiyukai held its mass meeting Tuesday afternoon at the party's headquarter and over three hundred members of the party were present. Prior to the opening of the Mass meeting, the leaders of the party held their conference in the morning and discussed the future policy of the party, and especially its attitude in the coming extra session of the Imperial Diet.

Mr. Hara, leader of the Party, opened the mass meeting by an address, and the appointment of the new officials of the party, followed. The following resolution was unanimously passed by all present, and the further details of the political activities of the party will be discussed by the Committee meetings.

The following is the gist of the resolution passed Tuesday by the Seiyukai.

The party has formerly announced impartial neutrality regarding the attitude towards the present cabinet, and declared that the party will give judgement on each question, and to support the right and attack the wrong. It has been the conviction of the party that to indulge in more political fights, does not prove the patriotism for the country. The European war is still in such a condition that no expectation can be made and the future development of the situation in the Far East, is also beyond our understanding. It is necessary that the effect of the ill administration of the former cabinet should be speedily removed, and we should endeavour to consider the development of industries and commerce, giving the proper and fair administration to the people. Regarding budget or such important problem, careful consideration should be given, so that the nation will be able to meet the present situation.

After the conclusion of the meeting, Mr. Hara, invited the entire members of the party to a banquet at the Sanyentei, Shiba.

Mr. Hara, President of the Seiyukai, declared that the party would follow the same attitude as in the previous session in the main, that is, the party would adhere to the policy of strict neutrality, which the president believed the best and most opportune and one faithful to state and nation, under the present circumstances. The Okuma Ministry was not free from many charges of mis-administration, which have left many evil effects in the smooth operation of the machinery of administration and retarded the progress of the work of the Government, so that there remain many things that call for reform and improvement.

Moreover the internal situation is in chaotic condition, while there is no prospect of the great war terminating in the near future, but on the contrary it threatens to further drag on now that almost all the Powers of the world are involved in the vortex of the titanic struggle. The situation in itself offers a very delicate and difficult position to this country in directing her diplomatic policy as a member of belligerent body. More difficult it is to this country to find proper measures and steer her diplomatic policy in such a manner as to fully protect and promote her rights and interests on the close of the war when the liquidation of international struggle will be commenced. Internal affairs of the country, also, require further improvement and readjustment, especially in administrative and financial affairs and the matters relating to national defence. Although the status of the country and nation has attained a remarkable development during the fifty years after the restoration of Meiji, the country should not rest satisfied at the present state of progress. Strenuous efforts must be made from the present moment for settling the measures of the country in connection with the post-bellum of international affairs and adjustment of internal affairs. It is a matter of impossibility, of course, to expect a solution of all these problems in the coming session of the Diet, which is of only short duration, still we must always bear in mind and pay keen attention to that grave question.

In the general election of 1915 the seats in the Lower House for the Seiyukai dropped to only a hundred and little more, but this decline in the following of our party does not signify any decrease of the nation's confidence in the party nor the wane of its influence. The falling off being accounted for by the interference of the Government then under Marquis Okuma, which is a fact well recognized and hardly needs mentioning. Also well known is the fact that the opposition party which secured a great majority by the Government interference deceived and disappointed the nation on account of its selfish attempt to abuse political power under the support of its large following in the Lower House. The nation is not to be long deceived by such insincere attitude of the opposition party, which in the last general election lost many of its seats in the House and once again returned to its former minority. This is a matter for congratulation to the Seiyukai as well as to state, but the party must not be content with such trifle success and it must abstain from indulging in such petty party strife and political campaign between parties, and strive for promoting the welfare and interests of the country and nation.

In concluding his speech, the Seiyukai President dwelt on the organization of the diplomatic advisory board and his relation with that special diplomatic organ. He said he had accepted the offer of Premier Count Terauchi to become a member of the advisory board from the motive of respecting the unity of national opinions in the affairs relative to diplomatic policy of the country, a principle agreed upon at the conference between Viscount Kato, the Kenseikai President, Mr. Inukai, the Kokuminto leader, and Mr. Hara himself last year. His joining the advisory board as a member of that institution was owing to his wish to devote his sincere efforts to diplomatic interests of the country by frankly exchanging views with other members of the board, declared Mr. Hara.

DIET CONVENED FOR A SPECIAL SESSION.

The special session of the Imperial Diet was convened Thursday as had been scheduled. The House of Peers completed its organization and the House of Representatives elected its President and Vice-President.

The House of Peers met at 9 o'clock, Prince Tokugawa, President of the House presiding. There were 282 members present when the meeting opened. After the election to assign the members to the various departments of the session, the meeting adjourned at 9.40 o'clock. When a recess of half an hour was over, the meeting was resumed and Mr. Yanagida, Chief Secretary of the House read reports on the result of the election of the chairmen of the different departments which took place during the recess. President Prince Tokugawa then announced that the organization of the Upper House was completed and a notification to that effect would be served on the Lower House, and the first day's session came to a close at 10.15.

From early in the morning the members of the Lower House made their way to Hibiya in twos and threes. In the chamber the temporary sections to the different parties were assigned as follows:

Center ..... the Seiyukai
Right wing..... the Kenseikai
Left wing ..... the Kokuminto, the Ishinkai, and the Independents.

At 10 o'clock the meeting was called to order. Mr. Terada, Chief Secretary of the House, occupied the chair of the temporary President in accordance with the Parliament act, and announced that the number of members reporting their presence on the day was 364. As this constituted a quorum, the Chief Secretary announced that the election of the candidates for the Presidency and Vice-Presidency would be held.

When the first ballot was opened Mr. O-oka of the Seiyukai, an erstwhile President, was elected with a majority vote of 243. The second ballot made two more candidates, Mr. Nakakura, 215 votes, and Mr. Amaharu, 206. The first ballot for the election of the Vice-President favoured Mr. Hamada of the Kokuminto with a majority vote of 236. Messrs. Uyeno and Sakakida were pushed forward by the second ballot with the votes of 201 and 196, respectively. Then the Chief Secretary read the result of the election and announced the names of the candidates-elect. The result of the election was reported to the Throne later and in the afternoon His Majesty appointed Mr. O-oka as President and Mr. Hamada as Vice-President as reported elsewhere.

After the Cabinet meeting Premier Count Terauchi proceeded to the Imperial Palace and recommended to the Throne Mr. I. O-oka of the Seiyukai as President of the House of Representatives and Mr. K. Hamada of the Kokuminto as Vice-President.

After obtaining Imperial sanction and under the commands of His Majesty, the Premier handed the Imperial order at the Palace at 4.30 o'clock to Messrs. O-oka and Hamada, appointing them President and Vice-President of the Lower House, respectively.

CREATE SPECIAL ORGAN TO CONTROL COLONIES

The government has had in view the creation or rather re-establishment of a special organ for colonial administration named the colonial department with a Minister at its head. This was established soon after the Japan-China war as the result of the cession of Formosa to this country, but the office was abolished after a few years' existence. The motive of the re-establishment of the office is to effect the unification of the administrative affairs of the colonies, covering Formosa, Chosen and Manchuria and Karafuto. The plan has however been finally dropped and in its stead the government has decided on the establishment of a special administrative office independent of all departments of the government, and probably attached to the cabinet and under direct control of the Prime Minister. Together with this, the government has under contemplation the abolition of the so-called triumvirate administrative system of Manchuria, and the carrying out of the unificaton of the administration of Manchuria and Chosen as well as of the railways in Manchuria and Chosen.

By the so-called triumvirate system of administration in Manchuria is meant the present system of the administration conducted at the hand of the Kwantung Government-General, the consular authorities in Manchuria and the South Manchuria Railway Company, which respectively yield their influence and exercise their administrative rights in the respective spheres of influence and jurisdiction. The system is all right as long as the principles of administrative policy go hand in hand, but not infrequently it occurs that the measures and steps taken by the three administrative organs in control of the localities within their respective jurisdiction are found contradictory and run counter to each other, to the great embarrassment and no small inconvenience of those living in Manchuria. This is owing to the difference of the character and significance of the rights and authority invested in them, the consular authorities being under control of the Foreign Office and the Government-General representing the interests of the War Office and the General Staff Office, while the South Manchurian Railway Company which, though originally a business concern, is authorised with special administrative rights in the railway concessions, has its own interest and definite principle relating to the administrative affairs in the districts within the railway zone. As a consequence not seldom it occurs that the rather reserved principle and measures followed by the Foreign Office run counter to radical and progressive policy of the government-general which operates under the direct command of the highest military headquarters. The Ministry, it is understood, attaches great importance to the improvement and reform of the current system of administration in Manchuria, which is productive of many evils and considerably menaces the smooth operation of administrative work in the region, and wants to effect a sweeping change and improvement in that line, such being the cherished wish of Premier Count Terauchi. The evils of the three different administrative organs in Manchuria have been the subject of much discussion in the press and among thinkers in the past, and if the plan contemplated by the Ministry is carried out successfully it goes without saying that the reform will go a long way improving the conditions obtaining in Manchuria and promoting the development of the region and welfare of the Japanese population there, in as much as the demerits of the existing system of administration is a well recognized fact.

At the same time the government is said to have also in view the establishment of another administrative organ to attend the administrative affairs common to Chosen and Manchuria with a view to effecting the unification of administration of the two colonies, for which the government has already a definite plan of ways and means for its execution. The plan is expected to be materialized after the conclusion of the coming special session of the Imperial Diet, and with the execution of the plan will take place a wholesale change in the posts of the Governor-General of Kwantung, the President of the South Manchuria Railway Company and other prominent officials in the Government-General and the railway company and other government offices in Manchuria and Chosen. As to the unification of the railway in Manchuria and Chosen, the plan was started by the former Ministry and the present Ministry is following the steps of its predecessor, for which a definite principle has already been settled at the recent conference of the Japan-China railway council.

The proposal of the unification of the Manchuria and Chosen railways is to be carried out immediately after the passage of the supplementary budget estimates in the forthcoming session of the Diet, in which is placed new claims for the construction of new lines and improvement of old lines amounting to something like 18,374,991 yen. On the passage of the claim the proposal will be submitted to the consideration of the Privy Council and the amalgamation of the two railways will be enforced perhaps from the beginning of August next.

According to information emanating from a most reliable source, the reform of the administrative system in Manchuria is to be effected in the form of an extension of the authority and rights of the Kwantung Government-General, which will have added to it almost all administrative rights of Manchuria besides the exclusive control of military affairs, and at the same time the rights hitherto exercised by the Foreign Office through consuls in Manchuria is to be transferred to the Government-General in future. The Manchurian Railway Company will also cease to yield sway over the administrative affairs in the districts within the railway concessions, which will also go to the jurisdiction of the Government-general. As the result of the extension of the authority of the Government-general, which will thus come to hold absolute control of military and administrative affairs in Manchuria, the consuls stationed in various important parts of Manchuria will have to be withdrawn and be replaced by military administrative officials of the Government-general. In this connection the Foreign Office has raised a strong opposition to the proposal, but it is understood the foreign office has finally yielded and conceded to the proposal. The South Manchurian Railway Company was also displeased with the proposal to hand over the administrative rights in the railway zone, but has given in to the proposal, satisfied with the transfer of the rights of the control of Chosen railways, which are to be amalgamated with the Manchurian railways.

DR. SOYEDA DECLINES TO ACCEPT NOMINATION

The complicated trouble the Tokyo Chamber of Commerce experienced for some time over the appointment of Dr. Soyeda as its new President came virtually to a close on Sunday evening, when Dr. Soyeda signified his intention to decline the appointment to both Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Nakano. While Mr. Nakashoji, the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, pronounces his disapproval of the appointment of Dr. Soyeda, it was expected that the Chamber would resist the authorities to the bitterest about the selection of Dr. Soyeda, but finding it against the interests of the Chamber to combat with Mr. Nakashoji whose attitude remains as firm as ever, Baron Shibusawa and Mr. Nakano, into whose hands the matter is entirely left for solution by the officials of the Chamber, decided to ask Dr. Soyeda to decline the selection.

Upon this decision the two leaders of the Chamber dispatched a letter to Dr. Soyeda on Sunday afternoon, explaining the inadvisability of applying for the approval of his appointment and courteously requesting him to accept their suggestion and decline the selection. "It is really unexpected," said the Baron and Mr. Nakano in the letter addressed to Dr. Soyeda "that the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce should so stubbornly disapprove of the selection of you simply because you are the proprietor of the 'Hochi,' a paper not independent of political lines. When the intention of the authorities are as clear as this, it will be really undesirable and harmful to the interests of the Chamber to apply for the approval of your appointment only to be rejected, and any step to injure the interest or impair the dignity of the Chamber we must not take. We therefore want to wash our hands of all share in the present affair and hope that you will refuse the appointment."

The reply of Dr. Soyeda to the letter was obtained the same afternoon, and he stated that he understands their difficult position clearly so that he is ready to follow their advice.

FIRE ENGINE AUTO FOR CITY

The first motor car fire engine will arrive at Tokyo within a month from the United States, and the arrival of the engine will be the beginning of the radical change of the fire-fighting system of Tokyo.

The Fire-Department of Tokyo has been considering various improvements of the present system, and had already started the system of notifying fire by telephone, and the fire-alarm system will be shortly installed, but the Department believes that the present horse-drawn engines are not sufficient, and decided to import one motor car fire engine as trial.

The new machine is five feet wide, fifteen feet long, and the pump is powerful enough to send the water to 130 feet high in the air. It will have a special steering device to enable it to go through narrow streets. If the car is found satisfactory, more of the similar type will be imported or made in Japan.

MEETING OF THE KOKUMINTO

The Kokuminto held meetings of its members Wednesday morning and afternoon. A conference of ex-parliamentary and new parliamentary members, directors, councillors and other leading members was held in the morning at the party headquarters. The meeting passed the declaration and a resolution. The meeting was followed by a general meeting of members, both parliamentary and non-parliamentary, as well as party leaders, officials and others. After the election of new general director which resulted in the re-election of Mr. K. Inukai, the new general director delivered a speech in which the speaker explained on his entry into the recently established Diplomatic Advisory Board, his explanation being almost on the same line as expressed in his statement published in the press at the time of the organization of the Advisory Board. In other words, he accepted the offer to become a member of the Advisory Board in view of the importance of the unification of the nation's views and opinions about diplomatic questions of the country and from the wish to stop the useless party strifes which was of no good to the welfare of state and nation to the smallest possible limit, for attaining the great and more important object of unifying and strengthening national opinions on diplomatic questions of state in view of the grave international situation. He declared he did not abandon his opposition and discredit of the present ministry, but on the contrary recognized the weakness and incapability of the ministry, but in view of the grave international situation he thought it unwise to indulge in a political campaign against the government, and thought it better and proper to support the weak government in directing the affairs of state and making its administration a success amid such difficult situation and circumstances. He attached greater importance to the welfare of state and nation than the petty strife with the government, and for that reason he decided to abandon the campaign against the ministry in spite of his opposition to the principle of the present ministry. Mr. Inukai did not establish the Kokuminto party for the sake of that party, but he did so for the welfare of state and nation, and for that purpose he pursued many years hard struggle and campaign in political interests of the country, and from this motive he joined the Advisory Board sacrificing the interests of the party which was mere nothing as compared with the welfare and interests of state and nation. Touching the Chinese affairs Mr. Inukai stated that though the situation obtaining in China deserved our profound sympathy the affairs of that country should be properly settled at her own hands and admitted no interference of outsiders. The promotion of good friendship between China and this country was a matter of imperative necessity for the maintenance of the peace in the Far East, and the first step for attaining that object was to remove the source of all misunderstandings and misconceptions that stand in the way of better understanding of mutual will and intentions. And for attaining that purpose it was most important to effect the unity of the measures toward China taken by various departments of the government and also the attitude of the nation toward China. In short, the improvement of the relationship and the establishment of better understanding between the two neighbour nations must be effected by means of national diplomacy which was of paramount necessity for attaining that object.

SUFFRAGE IN JAPAN NEEDS EXTENSION

Dr. Yoshiyuki Imai who is well-known for his having rendered assistance to the revolutionists during the first Chinese revolution and who is now in practise as a lawyer in Osaka contributes to the "Shin Nippon" for June an article on the urgent necessity of starting a movement for the extension of suffrage in this country.

What the doctor urges in favour of this problem no doubt is sufficient to convince many people of the need of a movement to secure the suffrage for a larger portion of the people than at present in order to better the administration of the country. One cannot but cavil, however, at the generalness of the author's remarks on this important question. He says:

Notwithstanding the evident fact tha the formation of the present Terauchi Cabinet was one of the most inexcusable proceedings in regard to the rules set down in the Japanese Constitution, this unwarrantable conduct seems to have been generally upheld by the people of Japan in view of the recent victory of the Government party in the general election. However unconstitutional the standing of the Cabinet may be or however incapable it may be, as it has since proved itself to be, it still, at first blush, has the country at its back. But there are, on the other hand, indications that this conjecture is unfounded for the invective speeches delivered by Opposition members in the different constituencies are received with equal approbation and enthusiasm by the people in general at present. These two facts are greatly puzzling to me. This, I think, admits of the fact, however, in one sense, that the will and longing of the general people of Japanese are not truly represented by the present franchise-holders in this country, which largely consist, truth to tell, of the wealthy people (not with regard to their intellects) though the country goes indeed under the name of a country blessed with a parliamentary system.

As I have said above, nowadays the richer classes of the country mostly constitute the number of franchiseholders so that we can not be sure of their real capacity to understand the working of that parliamentary system. And the result of this is that it too often occurs that the real central opinion of the people at large is never given a voice in the Diet. What passes in the Diet under pretence of being such is really nothing but the class of the rich who are endowed with the suffrage.

The fact that the number of franchise-holders is extremely few in comparison with those of countries in the West has greatly facilitated numerous mean practices in election campaigns. Candidates by means of money can buy votes and allure the ignorant or indiscreet franchise-holders with the promise of reward for voting for them or threaten the poor franchise-holders in case of their refusal to accede.

It is estimated that the population in the mainland of Japan is now 53,000,000, of which no more than 1,500,000 are franchise-holders. Against these figures England comes out with a population of 45,370,000 of which 8,060,000 are franchise-holders, while France with a population of 40,000,000 boasts of 10,900,000 franchise-holders, Germany with a population of 65,000,000 has 14,440,000 persons endowed with suffrage. Even Hungary, which is known to be very strict in limiting the number of franchise-holders shows superiority to Japan, having a population of 21,000,000, including 1,200,000 franchise-holders. So Japan at all events comes first in the smallness of the number of franchise-holders in comparison with any other great European country.

I myself would like to insist that ten times the number of present franchise-holders should be created in this country by extending the suffrage, and to thus attain the complete realization of the wish and ambition of the people far and wide. And to make my present proposal feasible it is necessary that the people themselves become more acquainted with the keen necessity of taking this step and try to put it in practice at the earliest opportunity. I do not mean, however, to incite the people to raise a revolution, or to make a riot, or take any disorderly action for the purpose of putting this plan in execution, but I advise them to strive from now onward to provide themselves with the knowledge of the operation of the parliamentary system and general politics before opening a movement for this end. Finally they should make a peaceful yet vigorous demand to the Government authorities to achieve their object.

PARCEL POST TO AMERICA

In consequence of an extraordinary increase in the volume of parcel posts to America, owing to the continued lack of shipping spaces available for traders, the postal authorities had to suspend temporarily the acceptance of such parcel posts. By the despatch of the Sado Maru on Tuesday for Seattle, the remnant of parcel posts already accepted were all taken away. The postal authorities may now again be able to accept such posts for America.

ONLY JAPANESE PRISONER OF WAR

The only Japanese prisoner of war now interned in Germany is Mr. Takichi Wakazawa, the captain of the ill-fated Kohinata Maru, 3,164 tons of the Murai S.S. Co. which was sunk by a German submarine in the Mediterranean last August. When the steamer was sunk, he was captured by the German who killed one stoker of the boat at the same time, and was brought to Germany. It is said that Captain Wakazawa is detained at a prisoners' camp in the neighbourhood of Berlin and reports reaching the Foreign Office from the Japanese Legation in Holland state that he is in the enjoyment of health and sometimes receives eatables from Switzerland.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, June 13.—Philip Gibbs, writing from British Headquarters in France says: The effect of the capture of Messines and Wytschaete, was so stunning to the enemy that he has not yet attempted counter-attacking on a big scale. Our men's rapid advance below the further slopes of the ridge and the rush forward of our guns made it impossible for him to rally the supporting troops quickly. As the hours pass it becomes more impossible for him to make his way back. His early attempts to assemble the troops in the Warneton neighbourhood were instantly annihilated by the enormous shellfire directed by the new observation gained at Messines. During the past twenty-four hours the enemy has not shown any further sign of asking for trouble, but obviously is engaged in reorganizing his demoralized forces. Many of his guns lie battered and buried about the battlefield. Some of his batteries put out of action by bombardment, remain between our new lines and his, but are so covered by our fire that he has small chance of getting them away. The enemy losses of guns, trenchmortars and machineguns must alarm him for I have no doubt at all, after seeing the frightful effect of our bombardment that these were destroyed on a grand scale so that the number of our trophies will not represent the actual enemy losses in weapons and war material.

More horrible to the unfortunate German soldiers is the devilish punishment inflicted on them in the past ten days, culminating on the day of battle when every weapon of revenge for men's slaughter, from heaviest high explosives to boiling oil gushes were unloosed upon them in the great tempest of destruction, blowing them out of and off the earth; frizzling, blinding, choking, mutilating and maddening them. A German boy not more than fifteen years of age was discovered yesterday lying in a shellhole beside a dead man shot through the temple. The boy was gibbering idiot driven insane by fear. He was not the only one.

The German officers say many of their men went raving mad under the strain of our bombardment and tried to kill their comrades or themselves or fell into an ague of terror with all the symptoms of the worst form of shellshock. Many German prisoners believe they were betrayed and sacrificed coldly and deliberately by their higher command.

Before the battle an order of the day was issued telling them to hold out if surrounded and fight their way back by bayonet, because behind them fresh divisions would be ready to support them by immediate counter-attack. Those fresh divisions never appeared. We know they had no chance of approaching our lines because of our far-reaching fire and all those found southward of St. Eloi were cut off or captured if not dead. After our first assaults the panic-stricken enemy was more concerned in removing his guns than protecting his troops. They were left at our mercy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 13.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Monday evening communique reports: "The British forces continue to make progress to the south-west of Messines. This morning, in the neighbourhood of the 'La Potterie Farm' front, they captured a mile of the enemy's trench system. During the day, we gained further ground in this area and captured seven field-guns and a number of prisoners."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 13.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, in his Tuesday evening communqué, says: "The British have gained further ground eastward and north-eastward of Messines. A front of nearly two miles has been occupied between Hamlet and Gapaard. The British have also advanced their line slightly astride the Souchez river."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—A French official communiqué reports that French cavalry entered La Bissa at 6 o'clock on Tuesday morning.

Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "The number of prisoners captured since June 7 now totals 7342, including 145 officers. We also have captured 47 guns, 242 machineguns and 60 trenchmortars."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, June 14.—It is officially announced that the Germans have abandoned important sections on the front between the Lys River and St. Yves. The British have followed and made progress considerably east of Ploegsteet Wood.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "The British made a further advance eastward of Messines front. Our attack compelled the enemy to abandon some important section between Lys River and St. Yves. We followed close upon the enemy, and made considerable progress eastward of Ploegsteet Wood; we also gained ground near Gapaard."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 15.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "The British made a successful operation on Thursday morning eastward of Monchy le Pleux and stormed hostile positions of considerable importance. On a frontage of three-quarters of a mile on the high ground of Infantry Hill, we have gained all objectives, taking prisoner 175 men."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 15.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: "We attacked on Thursday evening the enemy positions eastward and southward of Messines and astride the Ypres-Comines canal. Our troops quickly overcame the enemy resistance and gained their entire objective in both localities. We took prisoner over one hundred and fifty men and captured one howitzer and seven machine-guns. As the result of these operations of constant pressure since June 6, we now occupy the German front trenches from the Lys river to Warnave river, and have advanced our line five hundred to one thousand yards on the whole front from the Warnave river to Kleinzillebeke, a distance of seven miles."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 15.—Mr. Macpherson, Under Secretary to the War Office, stated in the House of Commons that up to the end of May the British had taken prisoner 76,007 officers and men on the west front, to which number at least 8,000 must be added for June. He also stated that since July 1 of last year we had captured 434 guns and had regained about 600 square miles of territory on the west front. The British had, he continued, taken prisoner 10,900 in Mesopotamia and 8,739 in Egypt, where they had captured 18 guns. Also since then they had captured 132 guns in Mesopotamia.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 16.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in his Friday evening communique says. "On Friday morning the British attacked and captured further positions in the sector of the Hindenburg line northwestward of Bullecourt. The hostile garrison resisted stubbornly and suffered heavily. We captured 43 prisoners."

London, June 16.—The British struck another blow at the enemy on the Messines front last night, advancing their lines five hundred to one thousand yards on a front of seven miles.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 17.—Marshal Haig reports; On Saturday last, fighting again took place in a sector of the Hindenburg line, northwestward of Bullecourt. We made some progress and captured prisoners. Many air fights took place in which we brought down six German aeroplanes while ten of them were driven down. One of ours is missing.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 19.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: Early on Monday morning, the enemy delivered a strong local attack against the positions we had captured on June 14 eastward of Monchyfreux. After severe fighting we were compelled to fall back from our advance posts and established before our main line a new position which we still hold. On infantry hill a reciprocal artillery firing is going on. Northward of the Scarpe, the enemy artillery is attacking us near Ypres.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 19.—The French on Monday evening have captured a system of trenches forming a salient in Champagne, on a front of five hundred metres. We have captured forty prisoners.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 11.—The Italian communiqué to-day reads as follows:

"Throughout the whole mountain zone there was more fighting than usual yesterday, especially between Adige and Brenta. On the night of the 10th the enemy were driven back and pursued at Tonale pass in the upper Chiesa Valley and on the slopes of Dosda Casina in Posita Valley.

"On the Asiago Plateau, our artillery destroyed the enemy's complex system of defences at several points.

"Our infantry attacking in a violent storm in the direction of Mounts Zebie Forno, carried Agnello Pass and captured nearly the whole of Mount Ortigara (6924 feet) east of Cima. Five hundred and twelve prisoners, including seven officers, were left in our hands.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

"Our aircraft, notwithstanding adverse atmospheric conditions, successfully bombed the enemy's rear and heavy artillery posts in the Upper Valleys of Astico and Assa. All our machines returned safely.

"On the remainder of the front, a desultory concentration of fire by the enemy was replied to.

"On the Carso, attacks on our lines, south of Castagnizza were completely repelled. We captured many prisoners."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 12.—The Italian official communiqué to-day reads:

"On the Asiago Plateau the artillery activity was hampered by adverse atmospheric conditions.

"On the Julian Front the enemy artillery has been particularly active against our positions in the Vodice and on the heights northeast of Gorizia but their fire was energetically returned."

Rome, June 14.—The Italian communiqué issued to-day reads:

On the Asiago plateau the enemy on the night of the 13th made a surprise attack on the positions recently taken by us on Mount Ortigara. The surprise attack failed, owing to the vigilance of our troops, and the enemy then attacked with extreme violence. The defenders, however, drove him back, and the enemy fled in disorder with heavy loss.

On the Julian front the enemy, ably supported by artillery, made several surprise attacks yesterday northeast of Gorizia and on the Carso south of Castagnevizza. Our artillery stopped these attacks and shelled and dispersed the enemy troops on march in the Bazza and Idria Valleys east of Lacia and blew up some ammunition dumps in the enemy's rear lines near Sello.

Rome, June 15.—The official report issued to-day says: "Over the whole front artillery actions were predominant yesterday. Our artillery bombarded the enemy convoys in close proximity to the station at Calliano in the Adige Valley, and also the columns which were marching on in the Terragnolo valley and Val Sugana. The attempts made by the enemy patrols against our line near the Masc Torrent completely failed.

"There has been intense aerial activity on the Trentino front. Two of the enemy aviators were brought down on the slope of Monte Verena and Valley Maggio Torrent. Two of the others were compelled to land on their line in Val Sugana, while the fifth machine was struck by our fire and fell to earth on the slope of Monte Zebio. One of our machines is missing."

Rome, June 17.—A communiqué issued to-day says: The artillery yesterday was more active than usual on the Carnia front where the enemy with his medium calibre batteries repeatedly shelled on our positions in Pal Pitncolo and Pal Grande. At various points on the front our reconnoitring parties inflicted losses on the enemy, bringing back some prisoners. This morning a hostile aircraft bombarded Gorizia and other places in the plain but it caused no damage and casualties.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 16.—The Italian communique issued on June 16 says; East of Adamello-massif, situated in the eastern Trentino, Alpine detachments of Volbatla battalion and Skirs advanced over very difficult ground, notwithstanding the furious enemy resistance. We attacked and carried strongly fortified positions of the enemy.

In the Corno-Cavento, we captured the remainder of the enemy garrison as well as two 75 millimetre guns, one trench mortar and four machine guns. A large quantity of supplies and munitions was also captured.

On Asiago plateau front, the enemy's artillery continued to show a great activity. Patrol attacks on our Mount Zebo positions were repulsed. On the Ortigarn, at dawn yesterday our positions on Hill 2101 were again attacked with extreme violence. The enemy continually reinforced and redoubled his efforts, but all attempts failed before our firm resistance. We inflicted severe losses on the enemy, repulsing him completely and capturing 52 prisoners including four officers.

In Santo Pellegrino valley, a hostile attack upon our advanced positions on Costabella massif was repelled.

On the southern slopes of Mount Rondon, we occupied by a surprise attack one of the enemy's advanced positions and maintained the same despite the enemy's concentrated fire.

On Julian front, the artillery fire was especially noticeable in Tolmino sector on the heights northeast of Gorizia. Columns of the enemy were dispersed and the troops assembled east of Castagnavizza were shelled by our artillery.

Our battleplanes, being supported by scout machines, dropped 1800 kilograms of explosives on the enemy at Hutmento, camps in Santa Lucia zone (Olmino), and Bazza valley. All of our machines have returned safely.

(Official Italian Communique)

Rome, June 19.—On the night of the 18th the enemy infantry attacks against our positions on Mount Mosoiagh on the Asiago plateau and on Hill 652 in the Vodice were broken up by our fire.

Yesterday the enemy troops in a movement in the Idria valley and Gargaro basin were again shelled and dispersed.

On the Carso plateau northeast of Jamiano by an advance we rectified a large portion of our front.

Two enemy air machines were brought down yesterday by our airmen above Gorizia. They fell east of Vertoiba and near Ranziano in the Frigido Valley.

During the night two of our airships successfully bombed the troops assembled round Tolmino and enemy batteries on Mt. Hormada.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTS

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June. 14.—Western front. A Russian scout party north-east of Smorgony under artillery support performed a daring reconnaissance. Getting through the wire entanglements they rushed into the enemy's trenches and annihilated a vanpost, putting to the sword those who offered resistance and taking prisoners. North-east of Rafalovka strong enemy scout parties tried to attack the Russian vanguards, but being repulsed by the Russian rifle-fire returned to their trenches.

Caucasus front. Strong Kurd parties attacked the Russian positions west of Belumer, but were driven back. Snowstorms are raging in the mountains north of Erzindjan.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 18.—Western Front. Firing is in progress south west of Stanislavov. The Russian scouts succeeded in overcoming the enemy's wire entanglements and penetrated into the rear of an enemy's protecting post, which they scattered. Bombs were dropped by the Russian aviators on some important points in the rear of the enemy's positions.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 18.—Rifle and artillery fir is in progress at different places of the western front. The Russian batteries fired in the night before June 15 on the enemy's reserves which were concentrated near Shelkow. An enemy detachment of 7 aeroplanes bombarded Dvinsk and its surroundings, but caused only a few losses and slight damages. The Russian artillery on the Stohod brought down one enemy aeroplane.

Firing and skirmishes of small parties are reported from the Caucasus front.

Petrograd, June 19.—Causasus Front. Russian scout parties pressed South West of Kalkit on a Turkish vanpost. The Kurdish advance 10 kilometers North of Ognat and 30 kilometers East of Senne has been repulsed by the Russians. A numerous Kurd party, which was attacking the rear of the Russian positions near Babagurgur was scattered by th Russian fire.

GERMAN AIR-RAID DOES DAMAGE IN LONDON

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London. June 13.—It is officially announced that about fifteen hostile aeroplanes were heard crossing the Essex coast and passing the vicinity of the Nore about eleven in the morning of Wednesday. Separating when they had covered half of the distance, they attacked and bombed the East End of London. Reports of casualties and damage have not yet been received. Anti-aircraft guns came into action and a large number of British aeroplanes are still pursuing the enemy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—In the House of Commons Mr. Bonar Law stated that, as far as he knew, twelve or fifteen enemy aeroplanes crossed the coast at the North Foreland and proceeded across Essex in a direct line toward London. Two bombs are reported to have been dropped near the North Foreland. Bombs began to drop on Eastern London at 11.24 on Wednesday morning, and thirteen bombs fell in the City. The casualties in the city hitherto known are 31 killed and 67 injured. All anti-aircraft guns in London were put into action, and a large number of aeroplanes are now in pursuit of the enemy. The casualties in the Metropolitan area are not yet known, but it is regretted that the Council School at the East End was hit and 11 children were killed and 50 injured. Hitherto it is only definitely known that one raider was brought down.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—It is officially announced that the casualties in the air raid now total 55 men, 16 women and 26 children killed and 223 men, 122 women

THESSALY OPERATIONS CONTINUE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 15.—A message from Salonika states that allied operations in Thessaly continue. It continues:

"On Monday night our troops occupied Elassona and Tirnovo quietly, and on Tuesday morning our cavalry surrounded Larissa. General Baivas, the Greek commandant, said that there would be no resistance. However a Colonel treacherously ordered his troops, posted behind the barracks, to fire. The French cavalry replied; the fusilade lasted till 10 o'clock in the morning. The French suffered 6 killed and 20 wounded, while the Greek casualties number sixty besides two colonels, 51 officers and 269 men captured by the French. General Baivas has been arrested.

ENEMY MUNITION DEPOTS EXPLODED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 19.—An explosion has destroyed three munition depots at Steinfeld. Six are killed, 330 injured and damage is extensive. It is significant that a Vienna communication denies any sabotage.

GHENT MUNITION WORKS DESTROYED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, via London, June 19.—After a tremendous aerial attack on Ghent on June 16, it became known that Carel Freres' great munition works had been entirely gutted with numerous casualties.

ZEPPELIN L. 42 DESTROYED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Bonar Law announced that the British navy has destroyed Zeppelin L-42 in the North Sea and that no survivors were seen.

and 94 children injured. No military or naval buildings suffered damage.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 16.—Sir George Cave, Home Secretary, speaking in the House of Commons, stated that the casualties resulting from the German air-raid on London, last Wednesday, were 104 killed, 154 seriously injured and 269 slightly injured. Included in these figures are casualties to 120 children.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 17.—A British official report says; Early Sunday morning, some enemy airships approached the east and southeast coast. Two airships came over the inland for a short distance, one crossing East Anglia and the other coming over Kent. The latter dropped bombs and some damage was done while a fire broke out at a coast town. One Zeppelin was brought down in flames.

MORE VICTIMS TO KULTUR

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 16.—The French steamer Sequana, 5,557, has been torpedoed and sunk in the Atlantic. The vessel carried 650 souls, of whom 190 are missing.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, June 16.—It is officially announced that the American oil tanker Moreni was set ablaze and sunk by a German submarine after a battle in which 300 shots were fired, of which the Moreni gunner fired 200. Four Americans were killed.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 16.—The transport Annam (6075 tons, built in 1899; Messageries Maritimes the owners) was torpedoed and sunk in the Ionian Sea on June 11. There were no casualties.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 19.—The Admiralty announces that an enemy submarine sank the British transport Cameronian on June 2 in the eastern Mediterranean with a small number of troops aboard. Fifty two troops and eleven of the crew including the captain are missing.

(The Cameronia, 10,963 tons, built 1911; Anchor Line, Ltd., the owners.)

ALLIED SHIPPING RETURNS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—The Admiralty statement reads: "Last week, the number of arrivals at ports in the United Kingdom was 2767; sailings numbered 2822; twenty-three vessels over, and ten under 600 tons were sunk. Twenty-three vessels were unsuccessfully attacked, and six fishing vessels sunk."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, June 14.—The Italian Naval report reads: "During the week ending June 10, 537 ships entered Italian ports, while the clearances numbered 498. Five Italian steamers and five small sailing vessels were sunk."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

FIFTY DEATHS IN EXPLOSION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—Mr. A. Bonar Law announced in the House of Commons today that 50 people have been killed and many injured by an explosion at a munitions factory at Ashton-under-Lyne, 6½ miles east of Manchester.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 16.—The Press Bureau announces that in the Ashton-under-Lyne explosion 41 were killed and 132 injured. A fire started, caused by the explosion. The majority of the workpeople escaped.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S REVIEW OF THE WEEK

[FROM THE BRITISH EMBASSY THROUGH THE KOKUSAI NEWS AGENCY]

London, June 16.—On the British fronts up to June 14 inclusive, in spite of the constantly repeated assurances by the German wireless and communiques that the British offensive on the western front had come to a standstill, the past week has witnessed one of the most successful operations on a large scale which had been undertaken during the war. This success is remarkable both for the gains themselves, which include the taking of some of the most important positions on the western front, with the capture of some 7,450 prisoners, 47 guns and 302 machineguns and trenchmortars. The slight cost to the attacking forces with which these successes were obtained is notable.

The total casualties were only about one fifth of the number it was estimated would be entailed by the capture of Messines Ridge. One contingent of Irishmen which was prepared for 3000 to 4000 casualties accomplished all it set out to do and gained every objective with the losses of just over 700 killed and wounded.

To compare the results obtained at Messines with Arras and the Somme battles the British gained in the first day at Messines, more than twice as much ground as in the first four days on the Somme and the casualties in the first four days at Messines were half of those at Arras in the first four days, and only just over a quarter of the first four days on the Somme.

Although mines with one million pounds of dynamite contributed very largely to the smoothness with which the operations were carried out, but its real success was due to a complete arrangement of the artillery fire and the mastery of the artillery over the enemy. Every single dugout, machinegun emplacement, observation post and trench were completely smashed, which makes it possible to estimate what heavy casualties the enemy must have suffered, whereas the British system of trenches from which troops issued for the attack was in absolutely perfect order. So effective was the reply to the enemy's artillery and so complete the British mastery of the air that the counter-attacks broke down at every point with heavy losses without succeeding in retaking even for a brief period, a single one of the lost positions.

The German defensive warfare has cost them during the two months fighting, an appalling casualty list including over 60,000 prisoners which the British and French have taken, the cession of hundreds of square miles of occupied territory and the surrender of positions deemed to be impregnable. This is not the end of the allies progressive success. The history of the British fighting at Neuve Chappelle, Loos, the Somme, Arras and Messines establishes the fact that every time a success is more easily obtained, owing to the greater superiority of their fire and better methods.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—The Board of Trade Returns during May this year, in comparison with a twelve month ago, show that imports increased by £3,827,726, while exports decreased by £3,587,155.

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

SITUATION IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 12.—The Provisional Government has given orders for the revision of the law in order to enlist all men, heretofore exempted from military service.

The commission charged with elaborating the law of the Constituent Assembly has voted a resolution fixing the lowest age of electors at 20 years, while all army men on active service are granted elective rights independent of age.

M. Shingaref, Minister of Finance, speaking to the press representatives said that the economical situation in Russia was very serious. He outlined the measures prepared by the Ministry in order to avoid a crisis; among others being, in the first place, a direct taxation of the wealthy classes and taxation on excess war profits. The question of monopolies requires careful preliminary work, he said. The cardinal measure, according to the Finance Minister's view, should be a general project for economical reforms subjected to examination by the Constituent Assembly, based on co-ordination of the domestic and foreign social polity.

The provisional government has resolved to entrust the Ministers of Agriculture, of Communications, of Finance and of Labour with the task of elaborating the project for the formation of a supreme state board which would regulate the economical life of the country.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 13.—The Provisional Government has published a decree in connection with breaches against military law. It is therein provided that all military crimes such as insubordination, mutiny, desertion, refusal to fight and the instigation of these acts, will be punishable by hard labour and the forfeiture of all civil rights including the right to own property.

The Congress of the councils of soldiers' and workmen's delegates of all the Russias will be opened shortly.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 13.—In compliance with Government orders, a number of trading ships and a naval squadron, which have been at anchor off Cronstadt, have sailed for Bjorke Transund. The remaining vessels will follow when ready to put to sea.

According to the preliminary results of elections of the district and municipal councils of Petrograd, with the application of universal suffrage, most votes have been received by the group composed of socialists, democratic revolutionary socialists and the labour party. The second place was taken by the constitutional democrats.

The French Minister of Supply, M. Thomas, speaking at the sitting of the executive committee of the Council of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, said that the French Socialists had fulfilled their obligations. He pointed out that the resolution of the French Chamber of Deputies contained the refusal of all Imperialistic war aims. Referring to Alsace and Lorraine, he said the French Socialists had a long time ago expressed an opinion by labour plebiscite.

The famous Russian emigrant Kropatkin has arrived at Petrograd.

London, June 14.—Mr. Nobokoff, Russian Charge d'Affaires, speaking at a luncheon given in his honour by the British Empire Producers' Association, said:

"At present, owing to the tremendous upheaval in Russia and the necessity of rebuilding the country, it would be impossible to expect Russia uninterruptedly to play a proportionately active part in the prosecution of the war. The Allies take it for granted that they will win, and I ask you to take it for granted that Russia will dispel clouds of darkness and will prove that the Russian army is alive to its duties towards the friends and allies of Russia and to humanity.

"In addressing you I am appearing before the representative portion of the British people, who will, after the war, help Russia to rebuild her industrial fabric. I venture to say that of all the peoples allied for the purpose of exterminating the poisonous gas of Prussianism, I do not think any two have manifested in clearer and more striking manner their deep-rooted desire for permanent national friendship than Great Britain and Russia.

"Owing to the revolution, Russia is now compelled to introduce political, social and economic changes which have taken the democracies of the West a century to carry out. As the result of this state of affairs the entire economic structure of Russia is now in a state of flux. The armies in the field are fighting for the future of the freedom of humanity. We must also fight by all peaceful means at our disposal to apply our resources and British genius to the work of building up the future prosperity of the human race."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 15.—A Petrograd message states that the Russian Cabinet has discussed the Note which will be sent to the allied governments at once regarding the calling of an inter-allied conference for examining co-jointly the various inter-allied treaties.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 15.—According to the definite result of elections of the municipal and district councils of Petrograd, the bloc of socialists has received 507,982 votes, the parties of bourgeoisie 166,309, and the maximalist socialists 117,760. The socialist papers attribute the highest importance to the Congress of the Councils of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates of all Russia which is to be opened shortly.

The Chancellery of Credit of the Ministry of Finances has established its exchange rate for June as follows: One pound sterling for sixteen rubles; one yen for one ruble and seventy three copecks; one dollar for three rubles and thirty six copecks.

The Commission for the Constituent Assembly decided on a proportional system of elections.

The Lithuanian Diet is discussing the question of the autonomy of Lithuania.

The conference of the representatives of industrial and commercial organisations of Petrograd, Moscow and the Ural has adopted a resolution for establishing a powerful organisation in which all the concerns are represented in order to defend the interests of the industrial and commercial classes.

The newspapers report the resignation of General Dragomiroff, Commander-in-Chief on the northern front who has been replaced by General Klembovsky, Assistant Chief of the Headquarters Staff. The resignation is also reported of General Judenitch, Commander-in-Chief on the Caucasian Front.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 15.—General Prjevalsky has been appointed temporary Commander-in-Chief on the Caucasian Front.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 16.—M. Tereschenko, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has handed to M. Thomas, French Minister of Supply, a note which repeats the terms of the declaration of the Russian Government of war aims and expresses the hope of an agreement with the allies on the principles which had inspired the Russian revolution. The note welcomes the decision by the allies to revise the treaties and suggests to summon in the near future a conference of the representatives of the allied Powers in order to revise the treaties on the final war aims.

The conference is not to discuss the already divulged London treaty of September 5,1914 which excludes the possibility of conclusion of a separate peace by one of the allied powers.

The American Mission, headed by Senator Elihu Root, was received last evening at a full sitting of the government members.

The first meeting of the Pan-Russian Councils of the Soldiers and Workmen's delegates will be held to-day. More than 1,000 delegates have arrived here.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, June 17.—Duma has resolutioned that a separate peace and the prolonged inactivity on the fronts would be ignoble treason to her allies. The maintenance of Russia's safety and liberties depend upon immediate resumption of the offensive.

The general congress of the Soldiers' and workmen' Delegates of all Russia has been opened. M. Cheidze, the President of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates in Petrograd, has been elected as the President of the congress. The congress has approved the expulsion of Mr. Robert Grimm by a vote of 640 against 121, opining that the expulsion is essential in the interests of Russian revolution and international socialism.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, via London.—Hoffmann, a member of Swiss Federal Council, has requested the Swiss Minister here to communicate an offer through Robert Grimm, a Swiss citizen who came to Petrograd in the middle of May. Grimm has been ostensibly acting as guide for returning Russian refugees. It is announced that the provisional Government has ordered the expulsion of the German agent. Grimm has already left Russia.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 18.—At the Pan-Russian Congress of the Soldiers' and Workmen's delegates Minister Tzeretelli, giving an account of policy of the Provisional Government, said:

"In foreign policy, we desire to accelerate the conclusion of new treaties in which the principles proclaimed by the Russian democracy would be recognized as the foundation of the international policy of the Allies. Toward such aims we are going to employ all means to make our programme acceptable to all Allied Powers. We consider the worst result of our fight for universal peace would be a separate peace with Germany which would be fatal for the cause of the Russian revolution and of international democracy. A separate peace is not only undesirable but actually impossible as it would plunge Russia into a new war on the side of the German coalition which would mean our stepping out of one coalition to enter another, not to strengthen the revolution but to weaken it."

Referring to the forthcoming reforms, the Minister said that it is the intention of the Provisional Government to undertake some prompt action to regulate all industry with the establishment of a board of general control which will have the confidence of all classes of the population. A general plan of financial measures, he said, consists of reaching all profits coming under the maximum taxation which however, should not destroy the source. As to the land question the Minister said that the task of the Government consisted of preparing the means of an equitable settlement of the question at the Constituent Assembly. He emphasised that the Government should have a full power to liquidate any experiments constituting danger of revolution.

Mr. Kerensky, Minister of War, reported that the first impressions he received at the front were very favorable. He made a speech in which he defended his acts as the War Minister and received an ovation from the whole House except a group of Maximalists.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 19.—At the All Russian Congress of the Councils of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, Minister of Agriculture Peshechonoff has declared that the question of supply is uncertain until about August. The question, however, is not critical. The prospects of the harvest are favourable except in Turkestan. The quantity of bread will be sufficient next year. The consumption of other articles of food shall be reduced. The most urgent task for the Government consists of the establishment of equal distribution of supply and the increase of productivity. One of the reasons for the decrease of productivity is that in the past the salary-working classes did no corresponding work and since the revolution the range of the labour movement has been widened beyond the limits of the economical condition of the country. Only the mutual efforts of all classes will help to avoid further calamities.

The Lithuanian Congress has passed by a vote of 146 against 128 a resolution requesting the territorial and domestic independence of Lithuania. The Lithuanian Socialists, protesting against the resolution on the ground that it does not accord with the tendencies of democracy, have called back their representatives from the Congress.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 19.—General Polovtsef, commander of the Petrograd Garrison, has passed in review the first detachment of women volunteers which, he has recognized, are perfectly capable to fight together with the ranks of the Russian army. The detachment will soon be sent to the front.

Miss Pankhurst, the leader of the women movement in England, has arrived at Petrograd.

Mr. Stevens and party, the American Railroad commission, who are now staying in Petrograd, have already conferred with the authorities of the Railroad Department and started active work.

A commission of financiers and experts which has been invited by the Minister of Finance has discussed under the presidency of Minister Shingaref the programme of reforms in the financial measures aiming at the increase of the resources of the state and decided to increase the income tax by 12 to 30 per cent. and to impose taxation of 70 to 90 per cent. on excess war profit and 40 to 50 per cent. on successions to over ten million roubles.

Petrograd, June 14.—The American mission to Russia, under the leadership of Elihu Root, arrived here on Wednesday evening.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 14.—When interviewed by a correspondent of the "Bourze Gazette," Senator Root, American Commissioner, said; "We have arrived here with the warmest and heartiest feeling to establish a durable connection between Russia and America, both having a common aim for the establishment of democratic aspiration and love of freedom." Answering the questions whether America intends to send troops to the Russian front, and what will be the assistance of the United States to the Russian people in their vital difficulties, Senator Root said that this fully depends upon negotiations with the Russian Government.

As the result of negotiations between the representatives of the Provisional Government and members of the Council of the Soldiers' and Workmen's delegates with the strike committee of the railway workmen, the question of the anticipated railway strike has been definitely suppressed. The salary of railway workmen will be increased.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 18.—The American Root Mission, after having been received by the Government, is now engaged in direct negotiations with the different Ministerial Departments, especially with the War and Marine Departments in order to make arrangements for the supply of articles to Russia by the United States.

RUSSIAN COMMISSION IN U.S.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Washington, June 14.—It is announced that the Russian commission to America, headed by M. Bakhmetieff has arrived at a Pacific port. The commission will proceed immediately to Washington.

AUSTRIANS FIND PEACE IN PRISON

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 13.—Regarding the supposed Austrian peace delegates to Russia, it is now clear that these delegates have been made prisoners and have never reached Petrograd. The mission is not regarded seriously.

SWITZERLAND'S STRANGE CONDUCT

London, June 16.—A German semi-official statement says that Russia has communicated its wishes to conclude peace without annexations and indemnities. This formula forms no hindrance for peace of Russia with the Central powers who have never demanded annexations or indemnities from Russia.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 17.—It is significant that simultaneously with the publication of Hoffmann's communication a statement appears in a German official organ, "Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung," that Russia's formula of peace with "no annexations and no indemnities" would be acceptable to Germany.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Stockholm via London, June 17.—Facts have come to light showing that the Swiss Government has been acting as an intermediary between Germany and Russia in promoting aims of peace. A telegram despatched from Berne on June 6 in cypher of the Swiss Federal Council to the Swiss Minister at Petrograd says: "Hoffmann, member Swiss federal council authorizes following communication; Germany undertakes no offensive while an arrangment with Russia is possible. I am convinced after conversations with an important personage Germany aims at a peace with Russia honorable to both, with intimate economic and commercial relations and financial support to rehabilitate Russia, and no interference with the internal affairs of Russia and in entente cordiale regarding Poland, Lithania, Courland, and the restoration of the occupied provinces including Austrian territory in possession of Russia."

GERMAN SOCIALISTS NAME INTERESTING PEACE AIMS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 16.—Of a full report of the statement, which is now published in Stockholm, made by the German majority of the Socialist delegations, its peace aims are the most interesting in view of their probably having been inspired. After re-affirming "no annexations" and "no indemnities," it says that the rejection of annexation implies the demand for restitution of the conquered Colonies, and hopes in this connection that the Socialists will urge "the liberation of Ireland, Egypt, Tripoli, Morocco, India, Tibet and Korea." The report repudiates the idea of compensation for the damaged territory and proposes that Alsace-Lorraine should be made an independent member of the German Empire. The statement favours a restriction of armaments, an obligatory international arbitration, also no commercial war after the war, and finally urges open door colonies with abolition of colonial protective duties.

WAR CABINET AND GEN. SMUTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 19.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Bonar Law has stated that the War Cabinet, in order to avail itself of the special knowledge and experience of General Smuts, has invited him to attend its meeting during his stay in this country.

SITUATION IN GREECE

Athens, June 12.—His Majesty King Constantine of Greece has abdicated in favour of his second son Prince Alexander, born August 1, 1893.

Three or four days ago, Mr. Niko P. Miliaressy, Greek Consul in Japan, called at this office and informed us that he was in receipt of information that King Constantine intended to abdicate, but naturally we could not make use of the information until he gave us permission. When seen o nthe 14th, Mr. Miliaressy was of the opinion that there was no reason to doubt the news, in spite of the wild telegrams on the subject received last autumn when Reuter messages stated that the monarch had vacated the throne in favour of the Crown Prince. Kokusai sent out the message at 12.05 a.m. on the 14th.

The Foreign Office here had received no news up to the time we went to press and gave an emphatic denial to the report that the Japanese Government had recognized the Venizelos Government as announced by a Kokusai message reaching Tokyo on the 14th. The despatch in question was supposed to come from Cairo, which, to say the least of it, is a curious origin for the news to spring from.

Athens, June 13.—King Constantine has abdicated as the result of the demand made by the Entente. The King and the Crown Prince have decided to leave the country.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Athens, June 13.—The demand for the abdication of King Constantine was presented on Monday through the French Deputy M. Jonnart, acting as representative for the Entente with plenary powers. After a Cabinet Council, the Greek Premier handed a Note to M. Jonnart on Tuesday, saying that "King Constantine is ever solicitous of the interests of Greece and has decided to leave the country with Prince Royal." Deputy Jonnart requested that Prince Royal be made King, but the King has nominated Prince Alexander instead. All efforts of agitators to start a manifestation have failed. Athens remains calm.

"Prince Alexander in whose favour King Constantine of Greece is reported to have abdicated, is pro-Ally and his accession to the throne of the Hellenic kingdom will be heartily welcomed by his people who are for France on the whole." This is the firm opinion of Mr. Miliaressy, expressed without hesitation when he discussed the news of the Greek monarch's abdication. There is every reason to assert that the new monarch of Greece is sympathetically inclined towards the Allies and that he is much liked by the nation because Prince Alexander is a Greek to the backbone, having never been influenced by German ideas. He has received a genuine national education under Greek tutors and instructors, unlike his father or his elder brother Prince George, who were brought up under either German or Danish tutors. King George I, the father of King Constantine, made it imperative that all the young Princes and Princesses should be educated by German and Danish instructors instead of Greek ones, and Prince George received a thorough German and Danish education. When Prince Alexander was born, however, some of the State Ministers insisted that he should receive a national education under Greek tutors alone. Mr. Delyannis, the then Premier, strongly urged King George to adopt the suggestion and the King was finally obliged to comply with the request and to let his grand-son, Prince Alexander, receive a true Hellenic education. No German or Danish tutors have taught Prince Alexander. Under these circumstances, and because he is Hellenic in learning and sentiment he is much liked by his people.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens, June 13.—M. Jonnart, Allied high commissioner, had an interview with the Premier M. Zaimis and demanded, on behalf of the protecting powers, the abdication of King Constantine and the resignation of any successor other than the Crown Prince. M. Zaimis replied that he recognised the disinterstedness of the allied powers whose sole aim was to reconstitute the unity in Greece under the aegis of constitution. M. Zaimis promised to convey to the Allied commissioner, King Constantine's decision after holding a meeting of the Crown Council consisting of the former Premiers of Greece.

The Allied troops had been placed at the disposal of M. Jonnart with orders not to land them until the King announced his decision. After the meeting of the Crown Council had taken place, M. Zaimis announced that King Constantine had decided to abdicate.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 13.—Despatches from Athens report that the French troops have disembarked at Corinth, while a column of French and British troops is entering Thessaly. King Constantine is going to Switzerland via Italy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 14.—The allied troops have landed and encamped at the Piraeus by agreement between M. Jonnart, the Entente representative, and the Greek Government. There was no incident.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 14.—In the House of Commons to-day Mr. Bonar Law announced the abdication of King Constantine of Greece (loud cheers) in favour of his second son Alexander who has taken oath as King.

Mr. A. Lynch, Nationalist, questioned: What does the Government expect to gain by the abdication of the King when the same abuses are perpetuated under another name.

Mr. Bonar Law replied: We hope to gain a restored Constitutional Government which is representative of the whole of Greece.

Mr. Swift MacNeill protested that King Constantine was allowed to nominate his successor. Mr. Bonar Law replied that it was wrong to say that King Constantine had nominated his successor.

[OFFICIAL TO THE FRENCH EMBASSY]

Paris, June 14.—"King Constantine, his family and suite are embarking on a French torpedo destroyer which is to convey them to Italy, whence they will reach Switzerland.

"In Thessaly, the occupation has been continued; our troops, yesterday morning, occupied Elassona and Tirnovo, without incident. At Larissa, our cavalry surrounded the town from the early hours of the morning and established themselves in the station and at the prefect's office.

"General Baivas, who is in command of the Greek troops, declared that he will not offer any resistance. However details of Greek troops, under command of Colonel Grivas a little later opened fire on our soldiers. There was an exchange of shots; two of our officers and 4 soldiers have been killed and about 20 wounded. All was over about 10 a.m. the Greeks have lost about 60 men. Two colonels, 51 officers of lower rank and 269 soldiers have been made prisoner. On account of the manifest treason of General Baivas, he himself has been placed under arrest."

The Foreign Office here yesterday received from Rome the following:

According to the official communiqué issued here on the 13th the Greek King Constantine abdicated on June 12. In this connection the Greek Premier, M. Zaimis communicated to M. Jonnart, the representative of the Allies in Athens the following official notification:

Your Excellency, as Chairman of the Representatives of Great Britain, France and Russia, had served an official Note demanding the abdication of the King of Greece in favour of a successor. I now have the honour to notify you that the King, who always has the best interest of his country at heart, has decided to abdicate in favour of his second son, Prince Alexander, and to leave the country with the Crown Prince.

AMERICAN LIBERTY LOAN, TRIUMPH OF DEMOCRACY

[OFFICIAL TO AMERICAN EMBASSY]

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo announces that the two billion dollar Liberty Loan has been over-subscribed. The exact figure will be issued later. Mr. McAdoo stated "The success of this loan is a genuine triumph of democracy. It is an unmistakable expression of America's determination to carry this war for the protection of American rights and the reestablishment of peace and liberty throughout the world to a swift and successful conclusion."

The first German war loan was only one billion one hundred and fifteen million dollars and the first Austrian loan only six hundred and seventy-five millions.

The Liberty Loan does not include eight hundred and sixty-eight million dollars of short term Treasury notes which have been issued since the loan was launched.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Washington, June 15.—The Liberty Loan had been over-subscribed by many hundreds of millions of dollars an hour before the books were closed. The Treasury officials estimated the total subscriptions at nearly two billion five hundred million dollars.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, June 16.—Mr. W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, has published a statement saying that the result of the Liberty Loan is an unmistakable expression of America's determination to carry this war to a successful conclusion for the protection of American rights and for the reestablishment of peace and liberty throughout the world.

PRESIDENT WILSON ON GERMAN AGGRESSION

Washington, June 15.—President Wilson addressing a huge assemblage celebrating Flag day recited again the German aggressions leading to the participation of the United States in the great war, and said that the purposes for which the American soldiers now carry the American Flag for the first time in history are not new to the American traditions because the realization of Germany's war aims must eventually mean the undoing of the world. In this connection, the President took the occasion to review Germany's propaganda which is maintained not only in Russia but throughout the world, including the United States. He said:

"Peace! Peace talk in the German Foreign Office is now a year and more old. Most of it has been private. It has come to me through all sorts of channels, but never with terms which Germany is willing to accept. The military masters of Germany see very clearly to what point fate has brought them. If they fall back or are forced back an inch their power both abroad and at home will fall to pieces like a house of cards. It is their power at home that they are thinking about now more than their power abroad. It is that power which is trembling under their feet, and deep fear has entered their hearts. They have but one chance to perpetuate their military power or even their controlling political influence. If they can secure peace now with the immense advantages still in their hands, which they up to this point have gained, they will have justified themselves before the German people. They will have gained by force what they promised to gain—the immense expansion of German power and the enlargement of German industrial and commercial opportunities. Their prestige will be secure and with it their political power. If they succeed they are safe and Germany and the world will be undone. If they fail Germany will be saved and the world will be at peace. If they succeed America will fall within menace. We and all the rest of the world must remain armed as they will remain armed and must make ready for the next step of their aggression."

President Wilson predicted that Germany's attempt to deceive the nations would fail. "The false," he said, "will betray themselves always. With us rests the choice to break through all these hypocrasies, patent cheats and masks of brute force and to help to set the world free, or else stand aside and let it be dominated for a long age through sheer weight of arms."

The President declared that there could be but one choice that can be made by America and "woe to any man or to any group of men who stand in the way of this high resolution."

ANXIETY ABOUT SPAIN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 16.—The dearth of news from Spain is exciting comment. Statements published in London declare that discontent in the Spanish Army has led to the formation of committees to demand reforms in pay and treatment and that the success of this military strike has resulted in increased pro-German reactionary intrigues which are taking anti-dynastic form. The situation, however, is obscure and its elucidation is anxiously awaited.

FRANCE DESIRES TO ROB NO ENEMY OF TERRITORY

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 14.—The following is an extract from the French Government's reply to the Russian Provisional Government's proclamation.

"France does not desire to crush any nationality not even that of its enemy's of today, but it is resolved that the oppression under which the world has suffered so long shall finally be destroyed and that the author of the crimes committed in this war and which will forever dishonour our enemies shall be punished, leaving to our enemies the spirit of conquest which inspires their policy both in peace and in war.

France will never show any desire to tear territory from its legitimate owners. With her allies, France will fight till victory, for the full restoration of territorial rights and their political and economic independence; for indemnities for inhuman and unjustified ravages, and for indispensable guarantees against the return of the war caused by the unceasing provocation of our enemies.

The French government like the Russian nation is convinced that by acting on these principles Russia will realize the aims of a people which loves justice and liberty and that after their victorious struggle the allies will be able to enjoy a strong and lasting peace based on the right."

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 13.—The French Government's declaration to the Allies and neutrals regarding the illegal confiscation of French property by the German Government is considered as of wide-reaching importance. France points out that German property in France was not put in legal sequestration. No sales were effected except in pursuance of the orders of the Courts of Law for recovery of debts. The German Government, on the contrary, ordered liquidation for purely political purposes. Such liquidations were simply spoliation.

The French Government warns all would-be purchasers that, on the signature of peace, all such purchases will be null and void and France will take proceedings accordingly.

Most of the so-called liquidations, which are simply robbery, are being carried out in Alsace and Lorraine. Germany hopes to keep the whole of Alsace and Lorraine and to that end is seizing all French property. It is believed that in such case Lorraine will be incorporated with Prussia and Alsace with Bavaria but the German Government has already foreseen the possibility of having a debate on the question of Alsace-Lorraine at the peace conference. To this end a referendum is now being taken in both provinces by the military authorities, requiring everyone to state whether he wishes to be incorporated with Prussia, Bavaria or Baden. No fourth choice is allowed.

Germany is already preparing for a campaign to require, should Alsace and Lorraine have to be given back to France, an immense compensation outside of Europe, that is to say, the restitution of the German Colonial Empire.

SITUATION IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 13 (9.20 a.m.)—The following is a translation of the Presidential mandate dissolving Parliament:

"In the sixth month of last year I promulgated a mandate stating that in order to draw up the Constitution it was imperative that Parliament should be convened for a republic which had been established five years, should have a fundamental law for the nation. Therefore, it was ordered that Parliamen be reconvened to draw up a Constitution, and so forth immediately. The main object of the reconvocation of Parliament was to make a permanent Constitution for the country. Recently a petition was received from Meng En-yuan, Tuchun of Kirin to the effect that in the articles passed in the Constitution Conference there were several points as follows; namely, 1st "When the House of Representatives shall have passed a note of no confidence in the Cabinet the President may dismiss the Cabinet or dissolve the House of Representatives, but the dissolution of the Representatives' must have the approval of the Senate.

"When the President dismisses the Premier it is not necessary to secure the counter-signature of the Cabinet Ministers.

"Also when bills are passed by both Houses it shall have the force of law."

"We are surprised to read the above provisions.

"According to the precedents in other nations the Constitution has never been made by Parliament. If we desire a good workable Constitution we should seek a fundamental solution. Indeed Parliament is more important than any other organ in the country, but when the national welfare is imperilled we must take action.

"As the present Parliament does not care for the national welfare it is requested in view of the critical condition of the country that drastic measures be taken and both Houses be dissolved so that they may be re-organized and the Constitution made without further delay. Thus the form of Republican Government will be preserved."

"Of late, petitions and telegrams have been received from the military and civil officials, merchants, scholars, etc., containing similar demands. The Senate and House of Representatives have held a Constitution Conference for about a year, yet the Constitution has not been completed. Moreover, at this critical time most of the members of both Houses have tendered their resignation, hence it is impossible to secure a quorum to discuss business. There is, therefore, no opportunity to revise the article already passed and unless means be devised to hasten the making of the Constitution the hearts of the people will never be satisfied.

"I, the President, who desire to comply with the will of the people and to consolidate the foundation of the nation, grant the requests of the Tuchuns and people. It is hereby ordered that the Senate and House of Representatives be dissolved and another election be held immediately. Thus Constitutional Government can be maintained. It must be also pointed out that the object of the re-organization of Parliament is to hasten the making of the Constitution and not to abolish the legislative organ of the Republic. I hope all citizens of the Republic will understand my motives."

The above mandate is countersigned by Chiang Chao-chung.

Dr. Wu Ting-fang's resignation has been accepted and General Chiang Chao-chung, Commander-in-Chief of Gendarmerie, has been appointed the acting Premier until Mr. Li Ching-hsi assumes office.

The substance of President Li Yuan hung's mandate dissolving Parliament was received in official quarters here on the 14th and follows:

I had looked to Parliament for drafting the Constitution and the present session of Parliament met primarily for that purpose. The Military Governors object to a series of articles adopted by the Constitutional Convention among which are when the House of Representatives has passed the resolution of a lack of confidence in the Council of State the President shall dismiss the members of the Council; the Senate's concurrence is required when the House of Representatives is to be dissolved; no counter-signature is required when the President appoints or dismisses the members of the Council of State; and the resolutions of both Houses will be effective equally with the laws. When the precedents of other countries are considered, they complain that the Constitution is not a thing to be formulated by Parliament. They insist that if we are to adopt a Constitution best suited to our country, a fundamental reformation is necessary, and demand that Parliament be dissolved at once to be newly organized. Telegrams and letters to the same effect representing every call and occupation throughout the country still pour in.

Since the Constitutional Convention was organized by Parliament nearly a year has elapsed, but the Constitution is far from being completed. The situation has been now aggravated to a crisis, member after member resigning. The Convention has met several times without being able to obtain a quorum. This makes the drafting and revising of the Constitution impossible. Therefore, it seems to me necessary to resort to some other means to satisfy the people's desire to establish the Constitution. Following, therefore, public opinion and acting upon the memorial of the Military Governors, the President today dissolves both Houses of Parliament, and will hold an election later to maintain a civil government. The present object of reorganizing Parliament is to secure the early completion of the Constitution and is not to revoke the legislative organ of the people.

On the same day, President Li telegraphed to high officials of the various departments of government and the newspapers a statement in which he reviews the critical situation in which the country is now involved. He states that although he is ready to resign from the Presidency in favour of some one more fitted for the position he cannot do so for it would only aggravate the situation. Fearing foreign intervention and that the country might run to the verge of a miserable disaster, and inspired by the ardent desire to preserve the republican form of government by bringing about the unity of the North and South, he has decided to remain in the position against his wish. He urges the executive heads of the different departments to come to his assistance in restoring order in the country with a united heart, and promises to retire from the Presidency as soon as order and normal conditions are resumed.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 14.—The whole tone of the President's message to the Provinces shows that he was much misinformed and completely terrorised by the Tuchuns' threats which, many close observers believe, would not have been carried into effect It is even thought that if the President throughout had shown courage and steadfastness he might successfully have defied the rebels. It is now anticipated that General Chang Hsun will come up to Peking with the remainder of his troops, bringing up a total to the capital of five thousand, accompanied by Mr. Li Ching-hsi, whom General Chang Hsun is supporting, though it is thought the other Tuchuns will not welcome General Chang Hsun's continued domination.

The followers of General Tuan Chi-jui are working for the latter's reinstatement or the appointment of Hsu Shih-chang to the Premiership, but Hsu Shih-chang is not willing to accept.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

[Delayed in Transmission]

Peking, June 13.—The President in a telegram to the Provinces explaining the dissolution of Parliament, discusses the events leading up to the outbreak of the Tuchuns. The telegram says as the President failed to reconcile the conflicting parties he first thought of resigning but troops were marched in the direction of the capital from various directions and rumours of the organisation of a Provisional Government and the restoration of the Manchus unsettled the minds of the people.

The Tuchun of Anhui then undertook to mediate but demanded the immediate dissolution of Parliament as a condition, otherwise he would relieve himself of the responsibility, and allow the Tuchuns freedom of action. The President says he felt that if he resigned a civil war would result. Not only would the form of Government be altered but the people would suffer greatly. The capital would be endangered and foreigners would be obliged to take steps to protect themselves. Destruction would follow.

The President says he carefully considered the matter and arrived at the conclusion that he must act discreetly to save the situation. He did not care to gain reputation by scrupulously adhering to the Provisional Constitution at the expense of the people and the nation. He was obliged to promulgate a mandate dissolving Parliament in order to preserve the Republican form of Government also the lives and property of the inhabitants of the capital and the unity of the north and south.

The President concludes: "I acted so as temporarily to maintain the situation but my conscience has not been at ease. It is my sincere hope that the chiefs of the Provinces, who revolted, will appreciate my difficulties and will not cause trouble.

"We should unite together in one accord to bridge over the present difficulties.

"As soon as a normal condition has been restored I will resign and I can call upon the Sun in Heaven to witness the sincerity of my words."

A report has reached Peking that a counter-revolution has begun in Shensi against Tuchun Chen Shu-fan. The native troops attacked and defeated the Tuchun's men and occupied Sian-fu. The Tuchun fled.

General Tanaka left Peking this morning after a week's stay. He was much entertained during his stay. He has gone to Tientsin.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 14.—General Chang Hsun arrived in Peking on a special train from Tientsin at 2.50 this afternoon.

General Chang Hsun was accorded an elaborate reception by a large gathering of officials, especially the military element. During his stay he will reside in the northern part of the Tartar City.

The route from the station was lined with Peking troops and police, also by Chang Hsun's soldiers in about equal numbers.

The Chang Hsun men appeared to have taken complete control of the traffic before the General's arrival. No crowds were permitted. The populace appeared to be completely overawed, though the behaviour of Chang Hsun's troops was fairly good.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 18.—The situation is still practically at a standstill. There is no indication at present as to who will eventually form a new Cabinet. Reports are most conflicting, but it is understood that Li Ching-hsi, realising the opposition against his appointment to the premiership, is increasing, has declined to assume the office.

It is reported that General Chang Hsun has proposed to call a conference of provisional representatives at Tientsin in order to discuss the means and measures for the settlement of the existing crisis. This proposal would be taken to indicate that General Chang Hsun is finding himself unable to arrange the settlement and is most anxious to remove the responsibility from his shoulders.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 19.—At a meeting at the presidential office which was attended by Chang Hsun, Li Cheng-hsi, Wang Shih-chen, Chiang Chao-tsung and Chang Kwei-ti, it was agreed to recommend the acceptance of the following demands submitted by Chang Hsun:

1. Organization of a responsible cabinet with whose powers the president shall not interfere.
2. Amendment of the constitution so as to satisfy the demands of Tuchuns; also to provide a single house system of parliament with reduced membership.
3. Inclusion of an agreement in the constitution to give a favourable treatment to the Manchu family.
4. The convocation of a new parliament.

THE POLITICAL HORIZON IN CHINA

The "Jiji" does not believe that the dissolution of parliament will settle the political disturbance of China, and says that the future prospect of Chinese politics is still doubtful. General Chang Hsun entered Peking together with Li Ching-i, on the 14th and immediately held a conference with President Li. On the fifteenth, another conference was held at Peking by General Chang Hsun and President Li. It is reported that General Chang Hsun intends to force Li Ching-i, the new Premier, to make the Military Governors withdraw their declaration of independence and call back ther armies, and try to bring peace in the north, while preventing the attack of the south.

President Li has requested General Chang Hsun to come and settle the present disturbance, and General Chang Hsun was the only one who undertook the difficult task, and the actual power of the government is now in the hands of the General, who bears great responsibility. The plan of General Chang Hsun may bring temporary peace in northern China, but regarding the appointment of Li Ching-i as Premier, there are various opinions and objections, and it may be difficult for the General to carry out his scheme.

In Tientsin, the appointment of Li Ching-i is strongly opposed, and there are also many who are hoping for the re-appointment of General Tuan, and the appointment of the new Premier cannot be carried out very easily. Furthermore, General Chang Hsun has been declaring that when peace is again brought in China, he will return to Hsuchow, but the "Jiji" declares that when he possesses the power of the government, it will be difficult for him to return to Hsuchow and let others run the country.

A report from Peking says that when General Chang Hsun fails in his attempt to bring about a satisfactory settlement of the political disturbance, he will utilize the opportunity to restore the young Emperor of China. Considering all these situations in China, the "Jiji" does not believe that the mere dissolution of Parliament will solve the present difficulty.

The Kuomin party under the leadership of Liu Jung-ting is planning to do something, gathering the support of Szechwan, Hunan, Yunnan, Kweichow, Kwangsi and Kwangtung provinces, while the Vice-President is taking a neutral position with the support of Hupeh, Kiangsi, Kiangsu and Chekiang. If the South rises, China will be divided into three factions.

Such a chaotic condition was caused by the problem of entering the European war, and it has been an unexpected development, but the "Jiji" says that the political situation of China is beyond the understanding of outsiders, and Japan which has so close relations with China, should be careful in dealing with her. The Japanese in the past have been giving too much importance to the central power of China, and thought that by supporting the central government the peace of China can be maintained. The present situation proves that the so-called central power cannot be depended upon. The weakening of President Li, did not see the re-appearance of General Tuan, but General Chang Hsun came forward to control the situation. However it is difficult to say how long General Chang Hsun will be able to maintain his present power and influence.

The paper advises the Japanese not to regard China as a special nation any more. Since the first revolution in China, the upper classes have made rapid progress both in spiritual and material civilization, and it is not advisable to regard Chinese as barbarous and uncivilized people.

THE KENSEIKAI AND THE KOKUMINTO

The Kenseikai approached the Kokuminto regarding the bill of lack of confidence in the Terauchi cabinet to be brought out in the 39th session of the Imperial Diet, and it is natural for the Kenseikai to bring out the bill again in the Diet regardless of its prospect, says the "Chugai Shogyo." What reply the Kokuminto will give to the Kenseikai is not known, but it is believed that if the Kokuminto refuses to consider the bill of lack of confidence, the refusal will be used as a weapon of attack on the Kokuminto.

The reason why the Kokuminto which brought out the bill of lack of confidence in the last session of the Diet, will not bring out a similar bill in the coming session, can not be learned as yet. But as the reason of the bill of lack of confidence brought out by the Kokuminto in the last session was the feebleness of the Terauchi cabinet and its lack of support in the House of Representatives, the Kokuminto may have proper grounds for refusing to join the movement against the Terauchi cabinet at the coming session of the Diet. By the result of the General election held in April, the Terauchi cabinet now enjoys the support of the majority members of the House of Representatives, and recently the cabinet established the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs, including heads of political parties as its members, and it can not longer be said of the present cabinet that it is weak and without the support of the House of Representatives.

Judging from another point of view, the paper says that the tenure of the Terauchi cabinet might be long. Just before the general election it was thought that the reorganization of the cabinet will take place before the opening of the coming session of the Diet. Not only is the cabinet not reorganized but it has established the Advisory Board of diplomatic affairs. It is likely that the present cabinet will maintain the present position for some years and will see the conclusion of the European conflict.

At the recent conference of prefectural governors, Baron Goto declared that the cabinet would maintain an impartial policy. The "Chugai" believes that although the cabinet obtained many supporters in the House of Representatives it is not relying upon the political parties, and it is a non-party cabinet as it had been before the general election.

FLOTATION OF FRENCH LOAN

A group of Japanese Bankers agreed to float French Bonds to the extent of fifty million yen, but the "Nichinichi" declares that while the flotation of the French bonds is to be heartily welcomed, the amount is not sufficiently large. It is reported that the French Government at first asked for the flotation of one hundred million yen, but the Japanese bankers cut the amount in half.

The purpose of floating French bonds in Japan is to create credit for purchases in Japan and to pay for the supplies already sent from Japan. Before the present war started, France invested a large amount of money in all foreign countries, and Japan still owes France more than two hundred million yen. Under such conditions, Japan cannot be proud of the flotation of so small an amount of French bonds, as the French Government has a right to demand the payment of our debt to France.

Since the beginning of the war, Japan has purchased or floated foreign bonds to the extent of 338,000,000 yen, and on the other hand foreign investments and loans to Japanese private concerns and enterprises have been paid back to the extent of 215,000,000 yen in the same time. Adding to the above two items, 25,000,000 yen invested in China in the past three years, the total investments made by Japan in foreign countries will amount to 600,000,000 yen. While Japan has invested so large an amount in foreign countries in the past three years, the total gold in the country is now over 840,000,000 yen, showing an increase of 500,000,000 yen over the figure at the end of 1914.

As long as the war continues, the present prosperity will be maintained, but on account of the one-sided trade with foreign countries, the traders are confronting the difficulty of the higher exchange rate. To remedy this situation, it is necessary to invest the surplus capital in foreign countries.

The "Nichinichi" is glad that French bonds are going to be floated in Japan, as it will tend to lower the exchange rate, but at the same time the paper regrets that the amount is so small that it will not benefit the traders to any extent. The paper hopes that the Government officials and bankers will consider the future of the development of the trade of Japan, and invest the surplus capital in foreign countries as much as possible.

ELECTRIC LIGHT BILL

The bill of adjusting the electric light rate of the Tokyo City Electric Bureau, will be brought up in the City Council on the 18th, by Mayor Okuda, and for the sake of the welfare of the people, the "Yorozu" hopes that the new bill will not be passed, and the paper feels happy to note that voices are being raised against the bill.

The Tokyo City Electric Bureau is losing about 200,000 yen a year, and it seems to be the intention of the city to increase the electric light rate to obtain more revenue. There are many improvements that should be made in the Bureau itself, by trying to improve the systems and make changes in the Bureau, but the City is trying to make the public pay more for the light. Even at present the rate of the city electric light is higher than the light supplied by the Nippon Electric Light Company, and it is natural that at so high a rate, the city cannot obtain as much business as the Nippon Electric Light Company.

The City ought to consider the welfare of the people always, but to try to make them pay more for the electric light so that the city will be able to make a profit out of the electric bureau, is outrageous.

U.S. ADVICE TO CHINA

The recent advice given to China by Dr. Paul Reinsch, the American Minister to China, had taken Japan by surprise, but the "Kokumin" says that it was only misunderstanding of formalities, and there exists no doubt as to the policy of the United States towards China. A thorough understanding has been reached among Japan, England, France and the United States, and especially the United States intends to consult Japan on the political and financial problems of China.

According to a current report, Dr. Paul Reinsch always supported the southern Koumin party and endeavoured to ruin the northern bureaucrats and military party, and it was due to the influence of Dr. Reinsch that President Li dismissed General Tuan from the position of Premiership. While the "Kokumin" does not know whether the report is true or not, judging from the actual happenings, after the dismissal of General Tuan, President Li found himself in a very difficult position, and the parliament was dissolved and the entire government is now under the control of General Chang Hsun, and there is no indication of the support of the Koumin party by the American government. It proves, says the "Kokumin," that the Washington government had no intention to interfere with the internal political affairs of China, although it is difficult to say what the personal opinion and idea of Dr. Reinsch is.

Recent cable reports from the United States are severely attacking a certain Japanese newspaper for transmitting the false report regarding the American advice to China, on the ground that it was intended to separate Japan and the United States The "Kokumin" says that the carelessness of the newspaper can not be overlooked, but it does not believe that the report was transmitted with the intention of separating the Americans and Japanese, and create the fear of the Japanese among the Russians and Chinese.

The paper strongly declares that the relation between Japan and the United States is so firmly established that a single false report will never affect the relation.

NEW TELEPHONES

The number of applications for telephone installation is rapidly increasing, but only a few telephones are installed every year, and a telephone is now valued at one thousand yen. The Government is controlling the telephone system, but it is unable to install a sufficient number of telephones to meet the demand of the people, and the "Asahi" says that this shows a great failure on the part of the Government.

Now, however, the present government is suddenly planning to satisfy the demand of the people, by floating 100,000,000 yen, in bonds redeemable in eight years. It is absolutely necessary that more telephones should be immediately installed, but it is doubtful whether the plan of obtaining the necessary funds by floating bonds will succeed.

Japan is very prosperous at present and the surplus gold is increasing immensely, and it may be a good plan to float bonds and obtain funds for the telephone extension. But it should be also considered that while all private concerns are reaping large profits the Government is also increasing its revenue. The tax income of 1916 amounted to 348,000,000 yen, more than 35,000,000 yen above the expected amount, and in all it is believed that in 1916 about 70,000,000 yen unexpected revenue entered the national treasury. The revenue of the Government is increasing at such a rapid rate, and unless the Government undertakes some profitable enterprises or spends the money extravagantly, there will be no use for the extra income. Under such a prosperous condition, it is not necessary to float bonds for the telephone extension, while there is sufficient extra income to be used for the purpose.

The "Asahi" desires that the Government extend the telephone service at once, and give the benefit to the general public, but the paper does not believe that it is necessary that funds be obtained by flotation of bonds.

EXAMINATION OF EXPORTS

The "Hochi" welcomes the plan of the Japanese government to give compulsory examination to all products to be exported to foreign countries. While the establishment of such a system may mean official recognition of the inferiority of the Japanese products, under the present circumstances the attempt of the government should be heartily welcomed. Since the outbreak of the European conflict, the export trade of Japan has made rapid progress, but at the same time, the Japanese articles have been criticised everywhere as being miserably inferior.

The government as well as the public earnestly advised the manufacturers and traders to advance the standard of their products so that the reputation of the Japanese article could be maintained. To the great disappointment of all concerned the manufacturers and others did not give any attention to the criticism and kept on shipping inferior and worthless articles to foreign markets. At last it became necessary for the government to establish a system of examining all articles for export.

While the "Hochi" feels that the establishment of the system should have been made many months before, the system will prevent the further practice of sending out inferior articles. The government intends to begin the examination with matches, glass wares, braids, and hosiery, and gradually extend the system to shell buttons, crêpe, soap, brushes and cotton flannel. The government authorities are now consulting as to the actual method of examining these products. The paper considers it necessary that other products should be also examined before being permitted to be shipped to foreign markets. Cement and lead pencils also should be examined, as many of these shipments are found to be useless and valueless, and among bottled beers shipped, there are some which contain nothing but water. The paper hopes that the government will extend the examination to all products, as the articles named by the government are only a small part of the inferior products which are hurting the reputation of the Japanese products as well as the Japanese themselves.

ADVISORY BOARD MEETS FOR FIRST TIME

The first meeting of the advisory board on diplomatic affairs recently organized was held at a room in the Imperial palace Monday morning. President Count Terauchi and all other members were present. The President made an opening address and Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister in his capacity as director of the board, announced reports on diplomatic affairs. Subsequently the meeting consulted about the order of the proceeding of the conference of the board and after settling a definite programme of its business the meeting dispersed at 11. Premier Count Terauchi was received in audience after the meeting and reported on the day's proceedings of the conference. As the meeting was an inaugural session no discussion took place on any definite subject.

At the outset of the meeting President Count Terauchi made an address. After a brief preliminary remark the Count stated that it was a great regret to him that he was unable to see Viscount Kato among the members of the advisory board owing to the decline of the Viscount of the offer made by the Count, who invited the Viscount in most obliging and courteous manner to join the board. The President stated that there have been recently much misunderstanding and misleading reports about the aspect of the conference between the Premier and the leaders of the three political parties and the circumstances of the decline of the offer made to Viscount Kato, by the Premier, but the President thought it inopportune to refer to that matter and explain on the true aspect of the situation at the present moment. The President thought it unnecessary to particularly dwell on the matter and reserved the explanation on the true aspect of the incident to some future time when an opportunity presents itself for compelling him to make clear the circumstances that brought about the regrettable exclusion of the Kenseikai president from the present advisory board. Referring to the press comments and the views of the public opinion about the organization of the advisory board, which are inclined to criticize the creation of the advisory board as inconsistent or contradicting with the spirit of the constitution, the Count remarked that such comments lacked sound principle and were not based on any substantial reasonings, but were meant for the purpose of merely attacking the government and its measures. Among the rest there was one thing which deserved listening to and that was the doubt whether the establishment of the present advisory board could attain the object aimed at. The President said that the doubt raised by the press and public opinion was not absolutely unreasonable, still it could not make the base for the attack on the establishment of the special organ just formulated, because whether or not it could attain the object for which it was established entirely depended upon the sincere efforts and devotion of the members of the board, though he had no doubt that the members who are all men of profound knowledge on political and diplomatic affairs and men of experience would do their best and contribute to the successful operation of the machinery of the special organ of which they were members, and bring the work of the board to an unqualified success. The President called the special attention of the members to the grave importance of the duty the present board was

HOLLAND AND DEFENCE OF THE EAST INDIES

"It is not the fear of Japan or any other particular nation that the Dutch Government recently voted to increase its naval forces for the protection of Holland's possessions in the Orient; Holland is bound by the universal code of ethics and political honour to do everything at her disposal to safeguard the interests of those territories which are of great value to all countries of the world," declared Mr. J. B. Hubrecht, the newly appointed diplomatic attaché to the Dutch Legation in Tokyo, who arrived here by the Empress of Russia on Tuesday. Mr. Hubrecht, leaving Holland on May 15, has come to Japan to take the place of Mr. Thurkow who will soon sail for home.

"I can assure you," said Mr. Hubrecht when interviewed yesterday, "that the popular sentiment of my country toward Japan is genuinely friendly, and the desire is strong to see the economic and commercial relationship between Japan and the Dutch East Indies become tighter. The open door is the policy of Holland in developing those possessions and Japanese capital is welcomed just as equally as French, British, American, or any other. Unquestionably, the East Indies now are a source of great revenue for Holland, but by no means every thing that should be done is done. With very fertile and productive soil they are only waiting for development.

"It is not the fear of Japan or any other nation that our Government recently voted to augment our naval force for the protection of the Dutch East Indies. With the tremendous commercial interests and enormous amount of capital invested by, not only Holland, but other countries as well, those islands call for sufficient protection. The present war has taught a lesson that even a small country needs to show that it is 'prepared.' Holland feels that she is bound by the universal code of ethics and political honour to do all she can to safeguard the interests of those possessions which are of great worth to all the countries of the world, and to help on the Javanese to develop into a strong and capable nation."

Mr. Hubrecht said since Germany declared the ruthless submarine warfare Holland suffered the loss of seven big liners and three small crafts at the hand of U-boats. But no life being lost, except in one case when four were killed when a fishing boat was sunk, the Dutch-German relations have gone no further than the exchanging of notes, says Mr. Hubrecht.

"That makes a quite different thing," he continued. "Shipping companies in Holland are reaping enormous profits out of the present condition. What if some of their vessels were sunk? The Dutch people are sobre and know how to calculate calmly.

"The Government, of course, sent note after note to Germany protesting against the submarinism of our vessels. Each time Germany, in her reply, promises compensation. At one time she offered to replace those victims of the U-boats by German vessels, proposing to sell them to the Dutch companies at the close of the war. Of course such an offer could not be entertained by our Government, but as the sinking of our vessels were occassioned by no loss of life, except in one case, the popular feeling is quite calm in the midst of the terrible scenes on all sides. The Government and people of Holland are only doing their utmost to maintain their neutrality."

Mr. Hubrecht says that among the industries of Holland which saw an unprecedented prosperity, ship building, textile, and chemical industries flourished most. But owing to the lack of coal supply from Germany and raw materials from other countries, the industries in his country are beginning to fall off. He says he knows the food condition in Germany is very serious, but has heard nothing about strikes in that country.

called upon to perform and its bearings upon the welfare and interests of the nation, and wished the members present to bear this in their mind and attend the task with sincere devotion.

SORACHI'S EXPERIENCE AT NANKING, CHINA.

The crew of the Japanese steamer Sorachi Maru returning to Nagasaki from Shanghai on Sunday afternoon tell the correspondent of the "Jiji" of their disgustful collisions with soldiers under General Chang Hsun, which as reported some time ago, occurred in Tukow, opposite Nanking. Stories told by the mariners in Nagasaki throw some light on the brevity of the cable dispatch then received from China with regard to the nasty incident in Tukow, and they accuse General Chang's soldiers of their wanton attacks on the Japanese seamen.

On the night the Sorachi Maru reached Tukow, tell the crew, 8 Japanese seamen went ashore for a walk through the city of Tukow. At a tobacco store they visited, however, a slight dispute arose between them and some Chinese, when General Chang's soldiers lounging about the place soon congregated and made unaccountable attacks on the Japanese sailors. They finally captured one Yano, an oiler of the Scrachi Maru, and took him with them to their barracks. Some sailors who learned this hastened to the scene without permission of the captain, but the soldiers seeing them coming to the scene now fired upon them, whereupon the sailors were obliged to show a clean pair of heels. These Chinese soldiers however chased the Japanese mariners, shooting their rifles at random. Kawabe, the boatswain of the steamer, was shot in the thigh and shoulder and fell in a pool of blood, while Sato and Kawamoto, sailors, were also hit by bullets and together with two other seamen they were finally captured by the soldiers. Chief Engineer Hosoya who learned the desperate aspect of the collisions immediately left the ship for the purpose of clearing up the matter, but at the wharf he was suddenly assailed by a Chinese soldier lying in ambush. He attacked the Chief Engineer with the butt of his rifle, so that he was compelled to return to the ship and let an alarm sounded. A British customs official soon came and Mr. Takawo, the Japanese Consul in Nanking, paid a visit to General Feng Kou-chang, the Vice-President of China, and conferred with him about the disturbance, as the result of which the captain of the Sorachi Maru accompanied by a Japanese police sergeant proceeded to the barracks at midnight to demand the transfer of the five seamen the soldiers had captured and taken thereto. Meanwhile the boatswain who had been lying neglected on the road with serious wounds for several hours, was found to have been stripped naked and all his possessions stolen by licentious soldiers and also that they had inflicted as many blows and cuts as they could give all over the body of the injured boatswain so shockingly. In the barracks the captain discovered his men tied up all over and hung upside down from trees in agonies, for they had been inflicted many blows by clubs and sticks. These five seamen were handed over to the captain, who brought them to the steamer. General Chang Hsun, when he heard of what was going on, sent his messenger to the Sorachi Maru to apologize for the incidents. The poor boatswain, the crew say in conclusion, is now at a certain hospital in China, but he is so seriously wounded that his recovery is despaired of.

The Japanese steamer Sorachi Maru, which has incidentally given rise to a diplomatic affair while in Nanking, arrived at Yokohama Monday. Members of her crew had affrays with Chinese coolies and soldiers, and some of the former were badly injured. Consequently, the Chinese authorities concerned apologized, and often enquire after the condition of those injured. According to the latest advice, the ringleaders of the said raids have been sentenced to death.

SUFFERED 3 YEARS WITH ECZEMA

On Hand. Very Inflamed. Got So Could Not Use It.

HEALED BY CUTICURA

"For over three years I suffered very much from eczema on my right hand. It started with little red pimples and then got very inflamed and spread and discharged till my hand was covered and I couldn't use it at all. I frequently got no sleep at night, and I was not able to do my own work.

"The doctor ordered me to bathe with Cuticura Soap so I thought I would also use the Cuticura Ointment. I am now thankful to say I am able to do my own work and my hand is perfectly healed." (Signed) Mrs. J. Clack, 20, Vineyard, Abingdon, Berks, Eng., July 28, 1915.

THE SINKING OF U-BOAT BY ADMIRAL SATO'S SQUADRON

The official report of the 15th claiming the sinking of a German submarine by a Japanese destroyer flotilla in the Mediterranean has greatly relieved the general public of despondency over the disastrous loss of lives on board the destroyer Sakaki on June 11. The glad tidings of a victory over an enemy diver came following close on the news of sorrow, and the Japanese press all pay tribute to the sailors under Rear-Admiral Sato in the Mediterranean for their speedy revenge of the glorious death of their hero comrades, whose spirits, they say, will now sleep in peace.

It must be noted, however, that these tidings, one joyful and the other lamentable, refer to two separate events, having virtually little connection with each other. Nevertheless we notice a contemporary mixes them up. It is plain however, that each of the two is independent. As already reported, the Sakaki encountered the enemy diver when returning with her consorts from a certain port on the Greek coast where she had escorted an allied transport. The time is given as about half-past one on the afternoon of June 11, but the sinking of a German submarine took place, as the Naval Department announced, in the evening not in the morning as the "Advertiser" erroneously put it—of June 12 and moreover the Japanese destroyer flotilla was then actually engaged in convoying allied transports. There is an evident difference between the circumstances under which the two events took place, and there is no denying the fact that they occurred on consecutive days.

It is reported that German submarines on account of the lessons learnt from their inhuman experiences have recently grown very active in their operations and even the combined squadrons of Britain and France numbering about 500 destroyers have had their hands full in coping with the menace. The Japanese destroyer flotilla in the Mediterranean is not a strong one, and the authorities believed, it is said, that it would perchance be next door to an impossibility for the Japanese destroyer flotilla to wreck or sink enemy submarines, except by good fortune. The joyful tidings published on Friday, therefore, was more than the authorities had anticipated. The authorities are well aware that sacrifices must be made and take the disaster to the Sakaki under the impression as an unavoidable happening in the prosecution of the grave responsibility of the Imperial Navy in co-operation with the Allies. Details of the movements of the Japanese squadrons now engaged in co-operation with the fleets of the Allies cannot be published beyond saying that the Squadron under command of Rear-Admiral Sato in the Mediterranean appears to consist of about ten powerful destroyers.

OPEN RACE TO CLIMB MT. FUJI

The "Jiji Shimpo" will hold an open race to climb Mt. Fuji in the latter part of July, the date to be fixed later according to the weather condition. The race is open to all, men and women, Japanese and foreigner, above the age of eighteen.

The course of the race is from Tarobo, Gotemba to the top of Mt. Fuji, and for the first arrival the prize of three hundred yen will be given, for the second seventy yen and for the third thirty yen. All expenses of the participants from Tokyo to Mt. Fuji and back, and during the race will be borne by the newspaper.

The "Jiji" held this race once before and the record of the former race is two hours and thirty eight minutes made by Mr. Jintaro Date. The first prize of three hundred yen will be given when the former record was broken, and if not, only two hundred yen will be given to the winner.

As mountain climbing is a favourite pastime among foreigners, the newspaper desires the participation of many foreigners in the race, and all applications should be made before July 5th. The applicants will be examined physically to see whether they are fit for the race, and twenty participants will be selected from among the general applicants.

YOKOHAMA TOWN HALL

In connection with the opening of the Yokohama Town Hall on July 1st, it may be noted that foreign firms in Yokohama have contributed 16,350 yen toward the building expenses. Those who have contributed the biggest sum, 500 yen, are the American Trading Co., Chartered Bank, China and Japan Trading Co., H. Ahrens & Co., Standard Oil Co., Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, Jardine, Matheson & Co., Messageries Maritimes S.S. Co., Sale & Frazar and Otto Reimers.

FRESCOES AND THEIR PRESERVATION

Dr. Masumi Chikashige, professor of the College of Science, Kyoto Imperial University, has recently found a means to keep the oldest frescoes of historical value in this country in good condition through the agency of some chemical production. Let it be said in this connection that the Doctor has also made a very valuable discovery in the direction of the archaeological study, which is that he proved the truth of the assertion made sometime ago by Dr. Seiichi Taki in regard to the date of a portion of the collection of the frescoes in the Horyuji temple, at Nara, which the latter doubted as belonging to a more recent date than the rest of the collection which is traceable to the so-called Nara era. The manner in which Dr. Chikashige confirmed this assertion of Dr. Taki was that Dr. Chikashige made a chemical analysis of the two kinds of whit pigment used in the two sections of the collection and found the difference of quality in them by comparing the two pigments with the powder of a chip of the stone-vault recently discovered, which was of the shape peculiar to the Nara era, and arrived at the above-mentioned conclusion.

NEWS & NOTES

A scheme has been launched to build a dockyard in Ototo, Hiroshima prefecture with a capital of 3,000,000 yen, the promoters being Mr. Katsuta, of Kobe, Mr. Kishimoto, of Osaka, Mr. Masuda, of Yokohama, and others. The dockyard will employ 2,000 workers.

There were forty-one slight rumblings in Hakone and the vicinity on the 21st and 22nd inst. As may be remembered, there were rather severe rumblings there last spring. Small rumblings commonly take place after strong shocks, and the latest roars are said to warrant no apprehension.

The new pier in Yokohama will be completed toward the end of August or early in September. The completion of this extensive pier, in addition to the new customs quays, already in use, marks an epoch in the improvement of Yokohama harbour, but the dredging of the inner harbour and some other works remain to be done.

In the new big pier to be completed after two months or so in Yokohama, a bar and branch post office are to be established. Seven persons have sent applications to undertake the bar, where bevereages and refreshments are to be sold. Applications were also made for the opening of a shoe maker's shop and exchange. Upon the completion of the pier, rikisha men are to be allowed to station within the customs gate close to the Harbour Office.

The Chikamatsu Kai, a society which was organized last year with the object of devoting itself to the study of Chikamatsu Monzaemon, one of the greatest dramatists that Japan has ever produced, by a part of the students of the Waseda University at the time when it celebrated the tricentenary of Shakespeare, to whom Chikamatsu is often likened, held its first meeting at the University on Sunday when Dr. Yuzo Tsubouchi, a well-known Shakespearian of recognized authority, gave an interesting lecture on the puppet-show which was used in representing the works of the great Japanese dramatist, not neglecting the opportunity to explain the difference of the modus operandi of the machinery in the puppet show in the case of Chikamatsu and in general use in the West.

According to the statistical returns published by the Metropolitan Police, there is a tendency towards a steady increase in the number of suicides in Tokyo and its suburbs. The authorities say that the figures for last year are 960 in round numbers, of which women are 135. As to the method of self-destruction, drowning leads with 317, followed by hanging which accounts for 240. The number of people who died unnatural deaths in Tokyo last year are reported to reach 803.

As has been reported already, the management of the South Manchuria Railway and the Chosen Government Railways will be shortly put under the same control and the establishment of the Colonization Bureau in the Central Government will be shortly effected. As a result of this change in the system of colonial administration Governor-General Baron Satoru Nakamura of Kwantung will be, it is rumoured, replaced by Lieut.-General Baron Yujiro Nakamura, the President of the South Manchuria Railway, who will also retain his present post.

The bribery and fraud case committed by Masajiro Yamaguchi, Eiji Konishi, both being formerly building experts in the service of the Tokyo Metropolitan Police Bureau, and others, promises developments in the Tokyo law courts. These culprits demanded bribes from many proprietors of bawdy-houses, cinema-houses, factories, restaurants in the city last year who applied for permission to build these houses on the promise that permission would be granted. It has been revealed again that these rogues made profits out of the money they got from some of the keepers of public bath-houses in the city in concert with some of the latter profession on the pretext that they would use the money for starting a movement to raise the bath rates, which they actually squandered for licentious purposes.

A new lucrative work has been introduced at Musa-maru, Samo-gori, Shiga prefecture, and money is easily gained by the capture of snakes. The "Osaka Mainichi" states that snakes burnt to cinder are believed to be specially efficacious for lung troubles in that locality and one Okazo Sato there is buying up snakes for 8 sen apiece. About a score of villagers, it is reported, are now devoting their time to the catching of snakes, by which money is gained more easily. Snakes captured are burnt to cinder and those charred snakes are sold among superstitious villagers.

DOCTOR CHIGA ON GERMAN AFTER WAR

The "Taiyo," the leading monthly magazine, has just published a voluminous Extra number, entitled "Japan and the World," and having over 690 pages, the special number contains opinion of leading Japanese on the present situation of Japan, the after-the-war relation between Japan and the world powers, and the future policies of Japan.

Among the numerous articles, one of the most interesting is an article written by Dr. Tsurutaro Chiga, on the subject of "Germany after the war, and the new relation between Germany and Japan."

It has been repeatedly discussed since the beginning of the war, whether Germany will win or the Entente will ruin Germany, says Dr. Chiga. There have been miscalculations on both sides, and the Entente never thought that the war will continue more than one year or six months, and it was the reason why England joined the war, and if the British Government knew that the war will take several years, it might not have entered the war. On the other hand, Germany also miscalculated, and she did not think that England would rise against Germany, and she expected that within a year, she would be able to conquer France and Russia. Because both Germany and England made miscalculations, the present war broke out. At the time of the Russo-Japanese war, Russia underestimated Japan, and China did not know the true strength of Japan when the war between the two nations broke out. All wars broke out from the miscalculation of one side or on both sides. If two nations knew that the war between them will continue indefinitely, they will never begin the war. War will not occur merely from the legal or political causes, and because each nation believe that she will easily beat the other, the war is started. At present all nations engaged in the present war are repenting, but at present they can not withdraw from the war.

Which side will win? It is impossible for Germany to win the absolute victory, as she has not sufficient men. Germany may wish to take Paris and conquer France, and take possession of Petrograd, but her army is not sufficiently large enough to attempt such a plan. The question to be considered is whether Germany will be totally defeated or the war will end in mutual agreement. Germany is no longer able to take aggressive step, but she can last long when she takes the defensive attitude, and for the Entente powers it is a question whether they can drive back the German forces into their own territory.

On the sea, the British fleets are blockading the North Sea to prevent intercourse with Germany, and on the other hand, Germany is trying to prevent any supply coming to England and France by the submarine warfare. However it is impossible to starve out Germany by the North Sea blockade, and it is equally difficult for Germany to starve England by the activity of submarines. Under the present condition, both sides will suffer, but it can not be foretold whether Germany will be defeated or the war will end in mutual agreement.

The problem should be divided into two. One discussing the future when Germany is totally defeated, and another when mutual agreement ends the war. If the war ends in mutual agreements, the territorial condition of the European nations will not show much change. Perhaps it will be possible to have Alsace Lorraine returned to France, and make the Russian Poland an independent nation. Belgium will be restored to the former position, but besides these there will not be much territorial change. Germany may consent to join German Poland with Russian Poland and make them one independent nation. The future of Greece, Bulgaria, Servia, Roumania and Montenegro is a problem, but if the war ends in mutual agreement, there will not be much change in these countries. Only Turkey will find itself in a pitiful condition. Germany has no sympathy towards Turkey, and she will sacrifice Turkey for the sake of giving the favourable condition to the Entente. Consequently Constantinople will become a Russian possession and Egypt will be placed under the control of England. Germany will give such concessions in order to regain her lost colonies.

When the war ends in mutual agreement, Dr. Chiga believes that all nations will endeavor to enlarge their army and navy, being impossible to destroy the Prussian militarism. The restriction of military preparation will not be discussed in future. The United States always advocated the restriction of the military forces of all nations, because the United States did not have the proper military force. England voiced the plan to destroy the Prussian militarism, because England has no strong army. Russia proposed to restrict the military forces of all powers, because she enlarged her army to the utmost limit, and it became impossible to expand her army, and did not wish to have other nations increase their army. All opinions voicing the restriction of military forces were given in order to prevent the military expansion of other nations. If the military force is limited by the area and population of each nation, Russia, England and the United States (excepting China) will have the largest army in the world, and such a restriction is unjust to smaller nations. When the present war ends in mutual agreement, all nations will immediately plan the increase of their military forces, and England and the United States will particularly endeavor to have a much larger Navy and Army than they have at present. France and Russia can not remain quiet and will also increase their army, and all the powers will suffer from the military expansion.

When these military expansions are made, it will be a question which nation will obtain the controlling power by the diplomatic success. If Germany finds a diplomatic genius as the late Bismarck, she will be able to become the controller of the world's situation. In the present war, Germany fought against the whole of Europe, the United States and Japan, and if it ends in mutual agreement, it proves that when Germany fights against one or two nations of the whole combination, she will easily win the victory. With the knowledge that Germany is the strongest nation in the world, she will become exceedingly proud. If she fights against either France or Russia, the victory will be easily on the side of Germany, and even against these two nations, Germany will take advantage. With a diplomatic genius in Germany, she will be able to control the world's situation in future.

But when Germany is defeated in the present war, the German militarism will be destroyed. Her army and navy will be restricted, and not only Alsace Lorraine will be returned to France, but German Poland will be either made an independent country or given to Russia. Russia, besides, will take possession of the several important German forts in the north. Probably Hanover will be made independent, and the entire German States will be divided up into several countries. The Prussian State, now the central power of the German States, will be reduced to a second rate country.

Thus Germany will lose her political position in the world, but it is the belief of Dr. Chiga, that commercially and industrially there will be no effect upon the German activity. The entente powers can not restrict the industrial and commercial activity of Germany, and while for a short time German industries and trade may suffer, with the strong individual energy, the German trade and industries will again develop. The markets for the German products will be America and China in future.

In science Germany will again lead the world, as the Germans are naturally fitted for the scientific study, and the German importance in the world's science will not be diminished by the defeat of Germany in the present war.

However the German defeat in the war, will not benefit Japan at all. Japan may obtain Tsingtao and some islands in the South Seas, but financially these acquisitions will no benefit Japan. On the contrary, England will profit greatly by the defeat of Germany. The German Colonies near Australia will be the possession of England, and the German colonies in Africa will be divided between England and France, and Egypt will also go to England. Not only that, but by the defeat of Germany, England will possess the ruling power both in Europe and Asia. If the present war was only fought by France and Russia, Germany would have easily won, and only because England joined the war, Germany was defeated, and it will give England the privilege to rule the whole Europe, and also the British influence will be extended to the orient. Formerly England had Germany to deal with in the orient, but in such a case, she will monopolize the orient, and Japan may suffer from the British expansion in the orient, politically and financially.

France can not regain her former power as her area and population is limited, but Russia, with her unlimited resources and people, will become a strong nation to stand

SOCIETY FOR SOCIAL RELIEF

The Society for the promotion of social relief works in Osaka has recently lodged an appeal with the city authorities of Osaka requesting that some regulations to control the workmen of the lower class of the city should be enacted in order to deal out a proper help to such poor workmen. According to the authorities of the Metropolitan Police Board in Tokyo, the city of Tokyo has never been less solicitous about the welfare of such working people and has already taken a step in this direction by establishing an asylum for homeless at the village of Komazawa, in the suburbs of Tokyo which gave shelter to the poor workmen as well as chance for better kind of work to them. But this charity house, owing to the lack of maintenance funds, was obliged to stop its charitable mission. It is, however, reported that some of the keepers of lodging-houses for the poor in Tomikawa-cho, which is remarkable as the quarter inhabited by poverty-stricken work people, in Fukagawa-ku, city organized a society with the view to giving work to the unemployed or relieve them of the heavy cost of living by causing the charges for laundry and hairdressing to be reduced. This magnanimous institution, be it said to its credit, is doing good to the working poor by this means gradually, and is expected to become a powerfully helpful organ to the working poor class in future. The authorities of the Metropolitan police are pursuing their efforts to make some arrrangements to give aid and succour to such indigent workmen, in view of the steady increase, for instance, of the number of lodgers in the lowest-class taverns in the city, which is composed of such poor workmen, as shown by the following figures:

Year	No.
1912	34,750
1913	369,550
1914	375,731
1915	381,201

BASEBALL GAME ON JULY 4

The Fourth of July Baseball Game between the Tokyo Americans and the Y.C. and A.C. will be played on the Y.C. and A.C. Grounds at three o'clock. Last year the Tokyo Americans won easily by a score of 19 to 1.

against England. It will be a future problem whether Japan should side with Russia or England.

Regarding the terms of peace, Dr. Chiga says that even though peace may be concluded by mutual agreement, Japan should not return Tsingtao to Germany. Germany obtained Tsingtao to oppress Japan, and she was instrumental in preventing Japan from acquiring the territory after the Chino-Japanese war. In order to make Germany respect Japan, it is necessary that Tsingtao should not be returned to Germany under any condition. If England, France and Russia, will agree to return the German colonies to Germany, Japan can not object to return the South Sea islands, but in giving back these islands, Japan should propose that no naval bases nor forts be built on these islands.

HOW HARD TIMES ARE AFFECTING MANY

Since the price of rice commands the happiness of the lower classes of society in Japan, their hardships are apparently growing extraordinary at present owing to the soaring tendency now in evidence in the rice market. Rice was quoted at the highest price ever recorded in Japan's commercial annals on Tuesday and though a slump was witnessed in the rice market of Tokyo yesterday the price is generally anticipated to make advances in rapid succession. Such would add to the prosperity of "nouveaux riches" of which there are now many in Japan thanks to the industrial boom arising from the war, but the ever-increasing heavy cost of living following on the heels of the high price of rice is bitterly affecting the life of those who subsist on pittances, complaints being raised of the hard times now. The "Yorodzu" says that besides those lower-class labourers, police constables and petty officials in the employ of the Government offices whom the rules and traditions in Japan bid to sternly uphold the honour of the service are intensely feeling the stings of the hard times at this time of the general increase in prices of staple commodities. Mr. Noguchi, director of the police bureau in the Metropolitan Police Board seems to yield to no one in his sympathy with the hard lot of police constables who work for a mere pittance, but greatly regrets the present inability of the Government to give them better treatment, which they certainly deserve, for financial reasons and according to him two thirds of petty guardians of public peace in Tokyo whose monthly salary averages some 20 yen, allowances all included, are married men. Governor Inouye of Tokyo says that salaries of government officials in the hannin rank remain on the same standard as eight years ago whereas some daily necessaries have now become ten fold in price compared with eight years ago, but anticipates that they will perhaps receive better treatment from the central and local treasuries from next year now that the problem of enriching petty government officials is under consideration among the authorities concerned.

The lot of tramway men in Tokyo is less hard than police constables but they are said to be suffering from the high cost of living, especially the soaring price of rice. The wages of tram conductors and drivers average 60 sen or so per day inclusive of allowances and bonus.

The present high cost of living has not affected the sphere of man alone but that of the denizens of the "Zoo." This has caused much hardships among the zoological gardens of the country. A report on the Zoological Garden at Tennoji Park, Osaka states that the outlay of 8,500 yen per year is by far insufficient. The above sum will be paid out before the end of September and in order to hold out through the year another supplementary estimate of 2,000 yen needs be asked of the Municipality otherwise those inmates of the iron cages will have to be starved.

Rice and other grains for the elephant, boar, bear, fox, badger, porcupine and others have bolstered about 20 per cent. Within ten days these consume about 8 bushels. Even the less ravenous cranes and other fowls devour about 10 bushels within a similar time of which the prices for these have risen by about 50 per cent. Meats for the "king of animals," the captives from the jungles, leopard, wolf, the crocodile and others cost 10 sen per pound but lately the price has swelled to 17 sen. The daily consumption is given at over 5 kwamme or about 45 pounds. Fishes for the cormorant, pelican and such like has risen by 20 per cent. also.

Accordingly to give a few daily account bills of the occupants, 7 sho, about a third of a bushel, of rice and cereals, 30 kwamme of fodder, 8 kwamme of straw, 6 kwamme of potato and 2 go, about ½ pound, of salt costing three yen for the elephant, 7 pounds of meat, one live rabbit, and about a quart of milk at 3.50 yen for the lion which far surpasses the daily expenses of an average Japanese. Such tenants as the red sparrow which suffices about 2 rins worth of millet and the boa which swallows 3 pounds of meat, two live hares, sixty eggs costing about 7.50 yen but will not ask for anything to eat or drink for a whole month turn out rather economical.

FEARED SPLIT IN THE KENSEIKAI HELP

Messrs. Kenjiro Kinoshita and Ryosuke Tsuzuye, members of Parliament from the Oita Prefecture, yesterday left the Kenseikai, and now it is feared that more members of the party will follow their step and leave the party. The resignation of the two members had been rumoured for some time, and it was said that there was a certain ill feeling between them and Viscount Kato, and Mr. K. Minoura tried to mediate between them. But finally yesterday Messrs. Kinoshita and Tsuzuye tendered their resignation from the membership of the party.

The two members made public a strong declaration yesterday giving their reasons for severing their political relations with the Kenseikai. The declaration says in part that since the organization of the Rikken Doshikai in 1911 under Prince Katsura, the party proceeded with an aim to develop the country, but when Prince Katsura died, the internal disagreement began to occur in the party, and the power of the party went to the hands of those who do not understand the principle of the party. The internal disturbance caused the resignation of Baron Goto and others, and following them Messrs. Sakamoto and Oishi, the leading members resigned. Furthermore the party dismissed Mr. Akiyama from the party without any proper reason. The policy of the party after the resignation of the Okuma cabinet, has been often wrong, being contrary to the principle of the party. The Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs recently established is an important institution, necessary to formulate the national policy on diplomatic affairs, but from mere sentimental reasons the party opposed the establishment of the Board. The idea of the party has been entirely lost recently, and if they stay with the party, they will also lose their principle, and decided to leave the party.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE IMPERIAL DIET

The first day of the 39th session of the Imperial Diet was opened Tuesday and Count Terauchi, the Premier addressed the House of Peers at ten o'clock in the morning, and gave the outline of the policy of the present Cabinet. The address of the Premier was much shorter than the former speeches on the similar occasions. Count Terauchi was followed by Viscount Motono, who spoke on diplomatic affairs.

The House of Peers met at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning. As the speeches of the Premier and the Foreign Minister were on the order of the day the house was unusually crowded, there being in evidence many members of the Lower House in the gallery reserved for them. President Prince Tokugawa reported on his audience with the Emperor on the previous day when he presented the House's Reply to the Speech from the Throne. The President announced the Imperial message appreciating the respect of the Peers to the Imperial speech. Premier Count Terauchi then took the rostrum and delivered a speech on the government administrative policy, which was almost on the same line as his speech made before the recent gubernatorial conference. The Premier's speech was given in yesterday's issue.

Gentlemen,—I consider it a great honour to have this opportunity, at the opening of the 39th session of the Imperial Diet, of meeting you once more and laying before you the views entertained by my Government.

In January last I had the pleasure of submitting to you a general outline of the administrative policies of the Government, and I do not consider it necessary to repeat here what I said on that occasion. I need only state that the Government has since endeavoured and is actually endeavouring to carry out those policies. Abroad, for instance, the Government has so directed its course of action as, on the one hand, to preserve intact the general position of affairs in the Far East, and, on the other, to promote the attainment of the objects of the war in harmony with the Allied Powers. Of the more important events affecting the war situation, that have happened since we met here last, I may mention the political revolution in Russia and the coming into the war of the United States. The latter event has been a source of sincere gratification to Japan and all the rest of the Allied Powers. As for the factional trouble in China, I am sorry to say that the settlement still remains to be effected. In view of the intimate and neighbourly relations between the two countries, and out of our sincere solicitude to see China settle down under permanent peace to her lasting advantage and also to the advantage of this country, we have always paid our closest attention to the course of events in that country, and I am gratified to say that our relations with China continue to be cordial and intimate.

Considering the extreme gravity of the present condition of international affairs, I recommended to the Throne the advisability of establishing a special organ for conducting investigations in matters of diplomacy, at the same time submitting for Imperial choice the names of a number of men of experience and ability. The result has been the recent appointment by His Imperial Majesty of the Temporary Diplomatic Investigation Council, which has already begun to exercise its deliberative functions.

The General Budget for the sixth fiscal year of Taisho introduced in the last session of the Diet unfortunately failed to come into existence. The Government was, consequently, obliged to compile a working Budget on the basis of the Budget for the past fiscal year. With regard to special disbursements rendered necessary by the established policies of government and expenditures called for by the war or by undertakings of urgent importance, they have been embodied in Supplementary Budgets which will be laid before you together with various drafts of laws. All these measures are urgently demanded by the best interests of the country and admit of no procrastination. It is, therefore, my earnest hope that, in candid recognition of the Government's intentions and in view of the requirements of the present situation, you will bestow your careful consideration upon these measures and see your way to approving them.

The Premier's speech over, Baron Takagi took the platform and interpellated the Premier about the health condition of the nation. Pointing out the gradual physical degeneration of the young men of this country the Baron regretted the discouraging tendency of the health of the nation, which he said was a question of grave bearings to the state and asked whether the Government had no intention to consider measures for the improvement of the nation's health conditions. The Premier replied that the Government was never satisfied with the present hygiene and sanitary administration and arrangements but was well aware of the matter pointed out by the member, and the Government would take proper measures for the improvement of the nation's health condition.

Mr. Egi was the next interpellator. The member's interpellation was connected with the administrative policy of the Government, but before taking up the main question, the member wanted to hear the explanation of the Premier about his declaration at the time of the dissolution of the Lower House in that the Premier explaining the reason for the dissolution of the Diet stated that the attitude of the Lower House in introducing the vote of the want of confidence in the Cabinet constituted the trespass on the prerogatives of His Majesty the Emperor. The Premier replied that the reason for his calling the attitude of the Lower House a trespass on the prerogatives of the Emperor was clear in his speech before the Lower House on the last day of the last session of that House, without satisfying the member's request. Dissatisfied with the reply of the Premier, the member argued that if the introduction of the vote of want of confidence in the ministry was a case of trespass on the supreme right of the Emperor all scholars and educationists of the country, who at universities and schools taught their students that the legislative was justified in introducing and passing a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry ought to be regarded as inspiring and inciting students with a violation of the constitution, as especially such principle was being taught by the professors of the Imperial University. The member asked the reason why the Government overlooked this notable fact whereas it took such rigorous measures in dealing with the legislative and dissolved it because of its trespassing on the supreme rights of the Emperor. The Premier refused to reply to the member's interpellation as it was not an interpellation but was to be regarded as an argument, to which he was not bound to make any reply. Mr. Egi stated his was not an argument but he only pointed out the fact in the way of supporting his interpellation with facts, and continued his interpellation pointing out the inconsistency of the statement of the Premier referring to the contents of the school text books and seeking examples in the current educational principle followed at the normal schools and the measures for the control of newspapers and other publications. The members strongly accused the Government of lenient steps in controlling the newspapers and other publications which indulged in vehement attacks on the Government and voiced the want of confidence in the Ministry with impunity, whilst the Government recognized the trespass on the supreme right of the Emperor only in the case of the Lower House. The Premier made no satisfactory reply but repeating that the member's statement was an argument declined to give explanation on the matter pointed out by the member.

Baron Goto, Home Minister, ran to the Premier's rescue and replied in his capacity as Home Minister that the authorities were taking proper measures for the control of the press and the like publications. Being asked by the Home Minister to show instances about the matter contained in the school text books referred to by Mr. Egi, the member mentioned the treatise on the Imperial Constitution written by Dr. Shimizu, an authority on Constitution, in which the author recognized the right of the legislative to pass a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry. The member further attacked the Government measures in an energetic manner and dwelling upon the relation between the Imperial House and the thoughts of the nation, remarked that the attitude of the Government towards the legislative might be justly regarded as an action of resorting to the cover of the supreme right of the Emperor for attacking the attitude of the legislative. The member concluded by warning the Government that the recent attitude of the Government could not be eyed as walking on the right track. The member's interpellation lasted for full one hour and a half.

After the interpellation of Mr. Egi, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, appeared on the rostrum and delivered the following speech.

I had the honour to put forth in detail before you in the name of the Government the policy which we decided to follow concerning our foreign policy in the 38th session of the diet. No new event having

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 20.—Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in his Tuesday evening communiqué reports: The British have advanced slightly southward of the Cozeul river and northward of the Souchez river. We have captured thirty five prisoners and four field guns eastward of Messines on Thursday night in addition to those already reported.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports that the British have captured posts eastward of Monchylepreux from which the enemy drove us on Monday.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—After an artillery bombardment, the Germans most violtntly attacked the French positions on a front of one kilometre, and the large forces succeeded in gaining a footing on a part of the first line of trench east of Vauaillon. Another attempt south of Filain was without result.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—The German attack on Wednesday east of Vauxaillon was carried out most violently by special assaulting troops belonging to a division recently brought from Russia. Our troops obstinately resisted and all the enemy's efforts to develop a few advantages which had been acquired in the first shock, were smashed up by our fire and counterattacks. Finally, the Germans only penetrated into the first line at two places, namely, south of Contieninges on a front of four hundred metres, and north of Moisy farm on a front of two hundred metres. Energetic counteroffensive carried out on Thursday morning enabled us to recapture the former positions.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—The fignting yesterday continued to the advantage of the French east of Vauxaillon. A French counter-attack on the enemy trench in the sector of Moisy farm has given the French important results. So far the French have recaptured all positions except the salient for 400 meters.

In Champagne the French advance northeast of Montcernillet was accomplished in a particularly brilliant manner. The enemy attempted to recapture their positions which had been wrested by the French on June 18. The enemy was repulsed by the French bombers who then assumed the offensive and pursued them into their own trench and captured them. The French thus far have advanced 300 meters deep on a 600-meter front.

The enemy bombardment on the French positions south of Filain and the region of Brayeen Laonnois, was continued until Friday morning. A series of most violent attacks followed, and the Germans launched large forces composed of special troops on a front of over two kilometers. The attack was most stubborn despite the heavy losses inflicted. The enemy efforts were broken in the greater part and waves of assault were driven back to the Startengoff trenches. The French hold the positions except the center, where the enemy penetrated after several attempts, into a salient on the French line.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—The French communiqué this afternoon says: The artillery struggle which had been continued east of Vauxaillon, extended in the night time to the region from south of Filain to north of Brayeen Laonnois, where the bombardment is most violent. The Germans, on Thursday evening, attacked the crest of Teton, Champagne, and its eastward on a front of 400 meters. They penetrated into the advanced elements, but were driven out after lively fighting. The French army has entirely re-established its line.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 24.—The Germans have renewed their attempts in the region from Vauxaillon to south and southeast of Filain, but all the attacks were repulsed with serious losses, the enemy without gaining any advantage. The Germans who extended their attacking front east of Epinesechevrigny as far as north of Froidment farm have multiplied their efforts to carry the positions whence they were beaten back yesterday, but the French fire broke up the assaulting waves of the enemy which were unable to reach the French lines.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, June 25.—Reuter's correspondent at the British Headquarters, in a despatch dated June 25, says; During the past twenty four hours, our troops made an advance directly east of Boisderiaumont and occupied about a quarter of a mile of the German front line. This means a direct frontal progress toward Cite de Moulin which is practically the southwestern fringe of Lens, lying in a triangle formed by junction of the trunk lines from Bethune and Arras. Apparently a very little fighting took place, the Germans falling back before our men who found both trenches and dugouts deserted. The unceasing pressure which we have been maintaining upon Lens defences, is proving very trying. The tactical value of Lens would scarcely justify a costly operation of assault in mass. The Germans, however, have to keep very large forces in and around the town in order to ensure against surprise attacks. We are having the command of the high ground and thus enabling us to dominate the place with our artillery fire, it is manifestly not very comfortable tenure to the Huns. Meanwhile, we are quietly drawing our salient closer round the town as in the case of yesterday's advance.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 26.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig in his Monday communique reports:

Following up the successful minor operation of the Sunday night southwest of Lens, the British have substantially progressed astride the Souchez river on a front of more than one and a half mile long.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 20.—An Italian communiqué says; On Monday night the enemy succeeded in penetrating one of our minor advanced posts on the southeastern slopes on the Monte Reoben position. The enemy was immediately placed and kept under effective fire of our batteries. Some of the enemy detachments on the same night made a surprise attack on our positions on Hill 219 northeast of Jamiano, and were repulsed with severe losses. They left ten prisoners in our hands. The hostile artillery yesterday showed great activity on the Asiago plateau and was desultory on the Carnia front.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 20.—To-day's Italian communique says: On the Asiago plateau we carried out a violent offensive action yesterday and damaged the enemy's defences. We made progress in many parts of the front and inflicted severe losses on the enemy. The gallant troops of the fifty second division overcame a furious resistance by the enemy and by advancing over a very difficult ground, carried formidable positions in the Monte Ortigara area including the summit of Hill 2105. We captured 936 prisoners including 74 officers.

Numerous air squadrons have dropped a large number of bombs in the immediate rear of the enemy's lines, and all machines returned safely. A desultory artillery activity has taken place on the remainder of the front.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome via London, June 21.—An official report says that we have carried out a violent offensive on the Asiago plateau, damaged the defences at many points and progressed by inflicting severe losses upon the enemy. We advanced over a difficult ground and carried formidable positions on Mount Ortigara including the summit of Hill 2105. We have taken 936 prisoners including 74 officers.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 21.—The Italian communiqué issued on June 21 says: Yesterday evening in Valcanteana in Ampozzano sector, we exploded a powerful mine under the spur of Picoolo Lagazuos. The explosion blew up the enemy position, destroying the garrison therein. Following the explosion, our Alpine detachments, with the support of the artillery, carried the summit of Hill 2669, establishing themselves firmly there.

On the Julian front, enemy attacks on the Vodice and southwest of Jamiano were repulsed. A violent enemy fire south of Versic was promptly silenced. In the same area, a surprise attack of the Italians carried our advanced line some distance forward.

Rome, June 23.—The enemy reconnoitring parties were repulsed at Tonale Pass to-day. The enemy yesterday concentrated a brisk fire on our new position on Mount Ordgara in the Asiago. Considerable material was captured in this position on the 19th. So far we have counted four guns, including one of medium calibre, fourteen machine-guns, 1,000 rifles, a large quantity of ammunition, and war and mining material.

On the Julian front our batteries effectively shelled the railway at the station of Santa Lucia in Tolmino while the enemy continued the aimless destruction of buildings in Gorizia.

Digitized by the INTERNET ARCHIVE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

On the Carso our guns repeatedly harassed the movement in the enemy's lines and supported the work of our patrols.

On the 19th an enemy aeroplane was forced to descend near Aeto Vizza. Another machine was brought down yesterday evening on reverse of Mount Santo Marco.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 24.—During the night of June 23, says an Italian official communique, one of our patrols reconnoitring east of Laght (Possina) encountered a big enemy detachment at Balassi, and compelled it to retreat. The enemy artillery was particularly active yesterday on the Asiago plateau. Another enemy gun on Mount Ortiga was knocked out of action on the upper Riodi Andran (Cordevolo). Early yesterday morning the enemy, after intense artillery preparation, attacked our advanced positions in front of Monte Settass. The attack was promptly arrested, and our counterattack quickly drove the enemy back with considerable losses. In air fight, an enemy aeroplane was forced to land in his own lines near Monto Armentera. (Val Sugana).

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 26.—The Italian communiqué issued on June 25 says; Yesterday the artillery fire was generally weak. Reconnoitring parties had a few small encounters. The enemy attack in Bacher valley (Sixteen valley) was easily repulsed.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTS

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 20.—Caucasus front. Russian scout parties crossed the river South West of Kalkit and passing the wire entanglements they performed a bayonet attack against the Turks throwing bombs at them. The Turks took to flight leaving killed and wounded on the field.

In the Baltic Sea 5 enemy hydroaeroplanes performed flights on the base of the fleet in the Riga Bay and dropped 40 bombs on the vessels there and on the hangar of the batteries. Not all of the bombs exploded and only one sailor was wounded by splinters. Energetic fire was directed against these machines from the Russian men of war and the coast batteries In spite of the continuous attacks of the enemy machines and the great number of bombs daily lavished by him he has obtained no results so far thanks to the skilful action of the Russian marine and coast artillery.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 21.—Western front. One German aeroplane was knocked down by a Russan aviator and descended near Podgaici. The aviators, one officer and one soldier were taken prisoner.

Caucasus front. The Kurds assumed South of Erzindjan the offensive and pressed upon the Russian troops, but by the counterattack of the Russian reserves the Kurds were dislodged by bayonets and turned into flight, the situation being reestablished.

Petrograd, June 22.—Caucasus front. West of Kalkit, on the northern heights of the Aimur mountains, the Russians attacked the Turks putting to the sword and dislodging the enemy from his positions. North of Serdesht, the Russians after a fight with the Kurds occupied the mountain ridge and are now continuing their advance.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 24.—Western Front. On the river Stohod near Dostchev the Russian scouts organized an ambush and having surrounded the approaching Germans, they bombarded them with handgrenades. In the bayonet fight, which followed, a part of the Germans was put to the sword. As the Germans were receiving reinforcements the Russian scouts returned to their trenches. Intense firing is in progress North of Krevo. Near Crabkove (Galicia) a numerous enemy's scout party tried to surround the Russian vanposts, but were scattered by a Russian detachment. An Austrian company surrounded near Presovce a Russian scout party but these scouts succeeded with bayonets and handgrenades in forcing their way through to their trenches, suffering no losses.

Six enemy hydroplanes performed a raid on the southern extremity of the island Oesol dropping 33 bombs on the man of war there and the coast batteries, but caused no damage or losses.

Caucasus front. The Turks in the Rayat region retreated under the pressure of the Russian troops for 4 kilometers. In the Sakkis region the Russian scouts advanced as far as the river Abishirvan exchanging fire with the Turks on the Bistamach hill positions.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 25.—No change is reported from the western and the Rumanian fronts.

Caucasus front. The Russian troops occupied a range of heights 45 kilometers South West of Ushne. The Turks tried to advance in the Rayat direction, but were repulsed by the Russian fire. The Russian troops dislodged West of Senne the Kurds from their positions West of the Ashkan mountain ridge.

SUPERIORITY OF ALLIES NOW ESTABLISHED

[BRITISH EMBASSY DESPATCH THROUGH KOKUSAI]

London, June 23.—During the past week the main interest of the war has been confined to the western front, the fighting being intense on both fronts but chiefly in the nature of local operations. The superiority of our artillery continues to be maintained and the enemy is subjected to a ceaseless bombardment daily.

On the 15th our line was again advanced near Messines, the enemy's resistance being quickly overcome and the ground gained extended to the latitude of Armentieres. As a result of these operations and of the constant pressure maintained by our troops since June 7th, we now occupy the German front trenches from the river Lys. These positions were attacked by the enemy after heavy artillery preparation and a few Germans succeeded in reaching our trenches. They were at once killed or driven out and the attack was completely repulsed.

It is said the Germans are forming new regiments of war worn men from the front who are collected in Belgium.

The British airmen have established definite superiority over their rivals. Within a period of one week the enemy has sustained heavy losses. Two Zeppelins have been destroyed and about fifty aeroplanes brought or driven down. The British losses for the same period have been small. Whilst the Germans are making air raids to England, killing women and children, their soldiers in the trenches complain bitterly of the inefficiency of their air service. They say the British airmen do what they like. They are always behind the German lines while the German aeroplanes hardly even show themselves.

The Portuguese troops also successfully repelled several German raids. We captured numerous prisoners, several machine guns and four German field guns. The Germans have frequently stated that our offensive in the west has come to a standstill. All the objectives of General Plumer's attack on June 7th were taken exactly at the time he ordered and on the first day the whole of first day's objectives were gained except one point on the north and one on the Messines Ridge which soon afterwards was taken. There was no intention of going further than that and General Plumer took exactly what he wanted and exactly in the time. However after a very great offensive movement for positions there must come a period of comparative lull in operations to allow the captured ground to be consolidated and preparations made for the next advance.

After General Plumer's troops had carried all their objectives they were given thirty six hours to make good the ground before the enemy's first counterattack was launched. The enemy had neither men nor munitions at his disposal and when the counterattack did come it failed and the Germans were content to leave our troops in undisputed possession of positions that are almost vital. We thus were able to appreciate the growth of partial paralysis which had its beginning the moment Allies had become definitely superior in men and munitions.

LIVELY FIGHTING IN SMORGON

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—A German official report states that lively fighting is going on in the areas of Smorgon, west of Lutzk, Zloczow, Tarnopol Railway and Narajowka, while the extension toward the northward of the British line in Belgium, is indicated in Marshal Haig's dispatch of last night, which reveals that the British now hold the extreme northern point of the line from Lombartzyde to the sea coast.

GERMAN PLANES DROP MESSAGE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—On the north Russian front German aeroplanes yesterday dropped messages thanking the Russians for fraternisation which has enabled the Germans to transfer their troops toward the west front in order to check the Anglo-French attack. In conclusion, the messages say: "Now we have had enough. We are going to fight and will fire on the fraternisation."

GERMANS AWAKENING FROM THEIR DELUSIONS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—Reuter's correspondent with the British Headquarters reports: The German soldiers are in depression. Prisoners are quite specific and their information appears to be pretty up-to-date. They say that the German army now realises that submarinism is not succeeding, that Russia is not making a separate peace and that America means business. They are also under no illusion of the significance of our victory on the Messines front.

Captured Bavarians declare that nothing but iron discipline can hold the forces together and even this may not always prove infallible. The Bavarians also admit that when ordered to launch a counterattack recently, they showed such disinclination that they had to be stiffened by extraordinary measures.

Among the troops of the different states, the Prussians are almost openly hated. The "man power" problem is acute. There are many boys of eighteen years old in several divisions. Moreover, the officers have recently received definite orders to husband the resources. When it is realised that men are aware of the sufferings of the people at home, it is easy to believe dry-rot is really sapping the enemy to a degree.

AUSTRIAN PRESS CHIMES IN WITH GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam, via London, June 19.—The Austrian newspapers welcome the statement made by the "Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung" to the effect that Russia's formula of peace with "no annexations and no indemnities" would be acceptable to Gemany as final evidence of similarity to the Austro-German peace aims. It seems a matter of general recognition that Germany has made advances, in the direction of accepting the formula of "no annexations and no indemnities," but it is not certain whether it is applicable only to Russia. Meanwhile the Russian Government's dismissal of Grimm, the Swiss Socialist, and the approval thereof by the Council of the Soldiers' and Workmen's delegates, have greatly renewed the confidence in London and Paris.

THE WEEK'S SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—The Admiralty announces that 2897 vessels entered British ports during last week while the clearances numbered 2993. Five steamers under twenty seven over sixteen hundred tons were sunk, and thirty one steamers were unsuccessfully attacked.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, June 23.—It is announced in the Chamber of Deputies that the French mercantile marine has lost 560,000 tons in the war, but steamers with the total tonnage of 680,000 tons have since been built or purchased, and steamers the total tonnage of which is 140,000, will be completed shortly. Whereas, Germany has lost 2½ million tons, a half of the whole of her fleet.

HUNGER RIOTS IN GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—A telegram from Amsterdam says that in Germany hunger riots are being quelled by the troops which threaten to use machineguns.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Malmo, Sweden, June 23.—Travellers coming from Stettin, Prussia, report that hunger riots occurred there, the rioters being mainly women and children. Troops were called out to quell the riots.

RUSSIA DISAPPOINTS SCHEIDEMANN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, June 25.—Writing in the "Vorwaerts," Socialist leader Scheidemann is greatly disappointed at the non-success of the German manoeuvres in Russia. He fears that there will come the fourth winter of the war and recommends the democratisation of Germany as a means of preventing this.

STRIKE OF GERMAN NAVAL WORKERS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, June 24.—Owing to the strike of the naval workers on Tuesday, the military authorities have assumed control of the Vulcan and two other works. The authorities have issued a proclamation ordering the strikers to resume work, and declaring that eligibles refusing to obey the order would be sent to the army at once.

GERMAN LEGATION INSPIRED HOFFMAN-GRIMM INTRIGUE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, June 24.—M. Ribot, Premier, has communicated to the Committee of the Chamber of Deputies that the documents have been found proving that the German Legation in Berne had inspired the Hofmann-Grimm intrigue, and that it had also promoted an anarchist campaign in Russia.

STETTIN FOOD RIOT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, June 24.—The "Stettiner Abendpost" reports that serious disturbances due to food scandals have occurred in Stettin. A crowd of women and boys attacked the shops and troops were employed to restore order.

SWISS COUNCIL DISOWNS HOFFMAN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Berne via London, June 20.—M. Hoffman has resigned his membership of the Federal Council. The Federal Council has informed the Swiss National Council that the Federal Council was ignorant of Hoffman's action wiring to the Swiss Minister at Petrograd.

EXPLOSION CASUALTIES IN AUSTRIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 24.—In the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath, the Minister of Defence stated that 170 are missing and 625 have been killed, 170 are missing and 625 have been injured in an explosion at the munition works at Blowitz. The disaster is probably due to carelessness.

A FRENCH GENERAL ON GERMANY'S MAN POWER

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 24.—General Delacroix in an interview with a representative of the "Le Temps" has given out statements on Germany's man-power and reserves. On June 1 the total of the German forces, said the General, was 5,435,000 men. By a most convincing calculation, the General estimates that Germany possesses 755,000 men prepared in reserve to supplement its army at the front. Of these, 230,000 are in the depots at the front, 355,000 in those at home and 180,000 make up of new divisions. The Alsatians and Poles of the class 1919 who have been incorporated are not counted in this number. The rest of the class 1919 numbering about 450,000 men cannot be ready for service before November. Until that time, Germany, in order to fill up its losses, will have to use those 575,000 men at the front and at home, that is 115,000 a month, and there are about 850,000 wounded men fit for active service again. Each month they will be able to send, therefore, only 200,000 men up to the front and this is not enough. In fact, from June 1 to November 1, 1916, the German losses were not less than 300,000 men a month. During April and May, this year, they have certainly exceeded the number that should be sent to the front, for the Germans have been forced to dissolve many regiments in the making to fill up the gaps. The steady decline in the prepared man-power of Germany is shown by the shortening of the front, by smaller extension of partial attacks and, in short, by their anxiety to economize their forces. General Delacroix ends by saying:

"So we must by patience and careful distribution of our own forces attempt to wear down the enemy who will end by doing away with reserves and will give us opportunity to make use of this success."

VENIZELOS RETURNING TO POWER

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens via London, June 25.—M. Jonnart, the French Deputy and the Entente representative, accompanied by M. Zaimis, went to the Palace where he conversed lengthily with the King. It is reported that the Cabinet has resigned, and M. Venezelos will join the new Ministry.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Athens via New York, June 26.—The Zaimis Cabinet has resigned. The king has requested M. Venizelos to form a Cabinet.

EX-KING CONSTANTINE IS HOOTED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich via London, June 21.—After his arrival at Lugano, Switzerland, Constantine, abdicated King of Greece, was hooted when he was walking about the lake front. A mob was so threatening that the king fled in the direction of the hotel, but he was forced to take refuge in a cafe en route. Later, an automobile escorted by the police conveyed him to the hotel.

SITUATION IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, June 19.—The Provisional Government has published a note to her Allies, suggesting to hold an allied conference with the object of revising the war aim agreements, excluding the London Agreement the signatories of which have agreed not to conclude a separate peace.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 20.—In an interview with the representatives of the press, Minister of Foreign Affairs Terestchenko, speaking of the attitude of the Allies towards the inactivity of the Russian front, said: "The Allies fully appreciate the work of the Provisional Government for the re-establishment of the combativity of the Russian army. The Allies are showing us a noble attitude in understanding the difficulties of our country and expressing readiness to await the results of our domestic work. No pressure of any kind has been brought to bear upon us. All rumours that an agreement has been concluded by the Allies especially with Japan in order to bring such pressure upon us, are erroneous."

The Minister of War, Kerensky, has ordered to return to their regiments all mobilized reservists temporarily released for agricultural work.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 21.—The general congress of delegates of the Cossacks and the troops has been opened. Mr. Goutchkoff, ex-Minister of War, in welcoming the delegates, said it was sure that the congress would play its part at this turning point of social tendencies now dominating over Russia. He called upon the Cossacks to bring into the state organization and social life of Russia the principles and spirit of the war, namely, iron discipline and firm determination to prosecute the war to a victorious end, which have always characterised the Cossacks.

After Mr. Goutchkoff, the Minister of War Kerensky delivered a speech. He said: "The free Cossacks will go side by side with Russian democracy. We are aspiring for the prompt restoration of our domestic organisation, but we will not lay down our arms. We are sure the Cossacks will stand the first among the ranks of the armies for the defence of our country and will not lay obstacles in the way of the difficult task of re-building." According to the latest information, various conflicts are all on the way to settlement.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 22. (via Chosen).—The Pan-Russian Congress of the Soldiers' and the Workmen's delegates carried a resolution by 543 votes against 214, which, approving the formation of the coalition cabinet, recognizes that the policy of the Provisional Government corresponds to the spirit of the revolution. The resolution summons the Provisional Government to more determinate action in carrying out the democratical platform; particularly, to exert its efforts for a most prompt attainment of universal peace without the annexations or contributions on the basis of the rights of nations to decide their own destiny.

It urges the Government to continue its energetic work of democratisation and reinforcement of the military power. It calls all revolutionary democracy to rally to the Councils of the Soldiers' and the Workmen's delegates and the Council of the Peasants' delegates in order to support the Provisional Government.

The Congress considers, says the resolution, the Socialistic Ministers should be responsible before all the revolutionary democracy represented by the authorized body of the Councils of the Soldiers' and the Workmen's delegates. While these Socialistic Ministers remain on the staff of the Government, this Government should have all the assistance of the revolutionary democracy and be invested with the full power.

A second resolution which was passed, referring to the Duma, considers the revolution has annulled it, therefore the public activity of members of the Duma should be considered as the activity of individuals, not acting on special authorization of State.

According to information, the Provisional Government has decided that the Duma should not be dissolved.

Correspondence between the Provisional Government and the commanding staff at Sebastopol on the recently occurred events has been published, and it shows the conflict has been liquidated. Admiral Koltchac has been recalled to Petrograd.

In the district of Viborg in Petrograd where the last elections of the district and municipal councils took place, the Maximalists obtained 34,305 votes, the Socialistic block 19,701, and the Constitutional Democrats 4,071.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, June 22.—Martial law has been proclaimed at Tomsk, owing to wholesale murders and robberies by the criminals who have been set free by amnesty and called to colours and also by anarchists. 2300 men have been arrested. Twenty who resisted were killed and a number of men were wounded.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 23.—Maximalists decided to organise on June 23 armed street demonstrations of workmen and soldiers against the Provisional Government. Thereupon, the Duma and Council of State required of the All-Russian Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates to take power. After the Provisional Government published an announcement that all attempts of violent actions would be immediately suppressed, the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates issued an appeal to soldiers and workmen not to take part in those demonstrations, calling the appeal of the extremists to such demonstrations as provocational, leading to the disorganisation of democracy. In the morning of the fixed day, no demonstrations of any kind took place on the streets of Petrograd.

At the All Russian Congress of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, War Minister Kerensky, referring to the war aims of Russia, says that Russia is quite independent in working out these aims and trying to make the Governments of other countries join our position. Passive defence, he says, according to the views of experts voluntary agreement to the destruction of the country. Referring to the question of Greece, the minister says that the Provisional Government has ordered that the Russian troops should not be landed at Athens.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 24.—All day of June 10th and the morning of the 11th perfect calm reigned in the capital and no manifestations took place.

In the sitting of the All Russian Congress of the councils of soldiers' and workmen's delegates a discussion on the question of their attitude towards the war has proceeded. All speeches delivered by the Mixmalists in the meet have been strongly opposed by the majority of the delegates.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, June 25.—Admiral Koltchak, former Commander of the Black Sea Fleet, states that when the crew of his flagship demanded the surrender of his sword he threw it into the sea saying that the Japanese left him his sword when he capitulated at Port Arthur. He would not give it to the mutineers.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 25.—At yesterday's session of the All Russian Congress of the Councils of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, the Belgian Minister, M. Vindervelde, Socialist, made a speech. After greeting the Russian revolution, the Belgian Minister summoned all Socialists to unite for the end of their work. With regard to the question whether the whole world will accept the Russian war aims, difference exists, he said, as to the methods of achieving those war aims. The practical work and energy of the Russian democracy and of the revolutionary Government have given a favourable impression upon the Russian people. He expressed his hope that the Russian revolutionary democracy would save the whole world.

President of the Congress, Tcheidze, in expressing his thanks to M. Vandervelde, said that freedom was as dear to the interests of the Russian revolutionary democracy as it was dear to Belgium. All Russia was imbued with one feeling to achieve a speedy peace on the platform she had declared. Russia would determinately reject any other peace not based on the principles she had declared.

FIGHT GERMAN AUTOCRACY TO END

New York, June 21.—A despatch from Washington says that M. Bakhmetieff, Russian special commissioner, has been formally presented to President Wilson and cordially received.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, June 22.—Mr. Boris Bakhmetieff, the Russian special commissioner to the United States, has published a statement avowing Russia's consecration to war with German autocracy to the end. Only through victory could the stable hold of peace and the fruits of the Russian revolution be secured. "The Russian people," says he, "are fully convinced that it is absolutely necessary to root out the autocratic principles which underlie German militarism which is threatening the peace, freedom and happiness of the world."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Washington via New York, June 25.—M. Bakhmetieff, Russian special envoy, has addressed a joint session of Congress to-day. He declared emphatically that the Russian people are opposed to a separate peace with Germany on the pretext of "national salvation." The middle classes in Russia he said combining with the Populists, labour elements and Socialists are supporting the Provisional Government, for they realize that in order to preserve freedom they must adhere to the purpose of war. Russia is for a permanent peace. This will be impossible should German autocracy triumph.

A remarkable demonstration was given to the Russian Mission with cheers, shouts and waving of handkerchiefs.

Washington via New York, June 26.—The Russian mission was received at the Senate. There was a scene of great enthusiasm. M. Bakhmetieff delivered a speech pledging the unfaltering adherence of Russia to the alliance against German autocracy and the unqualified rejection of a separate peace.

THE U.S. ADMINISTRATION'S FOOD CONTROL BILL

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 24.—A despatch from New York, says that the House of Representatives has passed the Food Control Bill. The bill empowers the President to control the distribution of food and feed, to forbid the use of foodstuffs for making intoxicants and authorizes to take over all distilled liquors.

Washington via New York, June 25.—The House of Representatives passed last night by a vote of 365 to five the administration's Food Control Bill. The Bill gives the President the control of the distribution of food, feed and fuel, includes a drastic amendment prohibiting the use of food-stuffs in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages and authorizes the President to take over the existing stocks of liquors for war purposes.

ENROLMENT IN AMERICA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington via London June 23.—Nearly ten million men aged between 21 and 30 have been enrolled into war service.

TWO BILLION LIBERTY LOAN OVERSUBSCRIBED 50 P.C.

[OFFICIAL FROM THE AMERICAN EMBASSY]

The official tabulation of the Liberty Loan now completed, shows that the subscriptions to the Two Billion Dollar Loan amount to $3,035,226,850, or more than 50 per cent. over the amount offered. More than four million men and women of the country subscribed for the bonds; it is estimated that of these 3,960,000, or 99 per cent., subscribed in amounts from Fifty Dollars to Ten Thousand Dollars. There were 21 individual subscribers to five millions and over, their total subscriptions equalling about $190,000,000.

One of the chief purposes of the loan campaign was to distribute the bonds widely because the strength of government finance, like the strength of government policies, rests upon the support of the people.

The large number of small subscribers shows the loan to have been a great success from this viewpoint. In an official statement, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo says:

> "The widespread distribution of the bonds and the great amount of the oversubscription constitute an eloquent and conclusive reply to the enemies of our country who claimed that the heart of America was not in the war. The result reflected the patriotism and determination of the American people to fight for the vindication of outraged American rights, the speedy restoration of peace and the establishment of liberty throughout the world. Congress pledged all the resources of America to bring the war to a successful termination. The issue just closed will serve as an indication of the temper and purpose of the American people and of the manner in which they may be expected to respond to future calls of their country for necessary credits to carry on the war."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington, June 23.—It is officially announced that the total of the subscriptions of the Liberty Loan is 3,035,226,850 dollars, the over-subscription being nearly 52 per cent.

AMERICAN RED CROSS CAMPAIGN

Washington, June 24.—A nation-wide Red Cross campaign to collect one hundred million dollars has resulted in contributions of eighty millions in six days. Many cities are rivalling to oversubscribe their allotments. The final amount will probably exceed the expectations.

U.S. PLANS TO CONTROL EXPORTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington via London, June 19.—The Government has elaborated plans to control the exports firstly of coal and secondly of wheat. It is believed that no coal will be exportable to any neutral country which refuses to furnish Great Britain with ore, while the control over the export of coal is intended to regulate shipments of food from neutral countries to Germany. It is stated that the Government is refusing to permit cargoes to leave American ports for neutral countries which may retain ships in their harbours.

LANCASHIRE COTTON TRADE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—The convulsion of Lancashire cotton trade which has resulted from the prohibition of transactions in futures at Liverpool owing to the extraordinary rise of prices due to speculative dealing, is attributed by the "Times" to the lack of shipping accentuated by submarinism. The "Times" adds: "It is most obvious that the remedy is in the limitation of output, but the manufacturers would be unable to agree thereon. Therefore, there is growing demand for the Government's intervention including possible rationing of the supplies."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—The high prices of cotton have paralysed the business of Manchester exchange. The news that futures market has been closed, is heartily welcomed, the members being of opinion that the step would check speculation. The proposal that the Government shall control the whole cotton imports is being considered. It is pointed out that the Government is the far biggest purchasers of cotton goods.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 21.—The Liverpool cotton market will be closed, owing to the recent sensational movement.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Liverpool via London, June 21.—Futures market of cotton, both American and Egyptian, is going to be closed temporarily in accordance with the wishes of Sir Albert Henry Stanley, President of the Board of Trade. The directors will have a consultation with the President to-morrow.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 23.—It is understood most unlikely that the Government will assume the control over cotton trade, but it is thought likely that the Government will formulate a scheme by which it may ration the supplies to the cotton spinners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 24.—Sir Albert Henry Stanley, the President of the Board of Trade, conferred on June 22 with the representatives of cotton trade from Liverpool, Manchester and Nottingham. Owing to the shortness of notice the representatives of the principal trade unions were unable to be present, but they will fully be represented at the conference between Sir Albert and the representatives of all cotton trade interests on June 27 when it is expected that decision will be reached regarding the best means of dealing. Meanwhile the futures market at Liverpool will remain closed.

SITUATION IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 20.—Lu Yung-ting, Inspector-General of Kwantung and Kwangsi, whose attitude hitherto has been uncertain, has replied to the circular telegram of the President concerning the dissolution of Parliament.

The General, in the reply, says that he appreciates the difficulties which the President is confronted with, but, at the same time, he would insist that the Tuchuns should make no further demands and immediately withdraw their troops. Otherwise, the General says he will be compelled to make an appeal to citizens.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 20.—The Tuchuns of Chihli, Shantung, Honan and Fengtien have telegraphed to the Government, agreeing to withdraw the respective troops and cancel their independence.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Shanghai, June 21.—A despatch from Peking to the "China Press" says that the Presidential rescript was sent on June 20 to the acting Premier, sanctioning the demands contained in General Chang Hsun's memorial, namely, the establishment of a responsible Cabinet, the formation of the constitution conference for drafting a permanent constitution, amendment to Parliament organisation law for convening a new Parliament with single House and reduced membership, the amnesty of the monarchical offenders and the dismissal of the President's military secretaries who have caused the present political crisis without punishment. In view of preventing the southern opposition, the provisional constitution and the provincial assemblies are left untouched.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 21.—The provinces of Shensi and Anhui have also cancelled their declaration of independence. It is expected that the remaining provinces will follow them at once. The cancellations which have resulted from the circular telegram from General Chang Hsun have relieved the situation but the solution of the important questions of organizing a Cabinet and of satisfying the Southern Provinces are not yet in sight.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, June 22.—The Governors here still refuse indirectly to take action against the North, pointing out the lack of funds as the excuse. It is believed that the attempt to avoid trouble will be successful, in view of the facts that Tuchuns are yielding and the people do not desire the outbreak of another civil war. Foreign friends in Canton are urging the necessity of moderation.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 22.—Notwithstanding the opposition, Mr. Li Ching-hsi again appears most anxious to assume the Premiership. He has been staying at the Presidential Palace. If he succeeds it is certain that his Ministry will not last long, as all the prominent persons refuse to serve with him. Therefore he is bound to nominate secondary officials.

Chekiang and Shansi have cancelled their independence.

General Chang Hsun has begun a round of calls on the Legations. This morning he called on the Japanese Legation. He arrived there in a motor-car escorted by three others containing bodyguard soldiers. Wherever he goes General Chang Hsun is always accompanied by a bodyguard.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 25.—Li Ching-hsi assumed office yesterday. The question of the formation of a council of elders similar to the Japanese Genro is being discussed. A majority of the northern party leaders appear to favour the scheme but the Government is anxious to secure the approval of all the provinces before it proceeds to the organisation of a council.

The Tuchuns of Kwangtung and Kwangsi demanded the restoration of the old Parliament or the election of a new one in accordance with the existing election law. Meanwhile they refuse to recognise the new Cabinet which they consider illegal and will carry on the administration of the two provinces independently.

In case of necessity they will communicate with the President direct.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, June 23.—Li Ching-hsi in a lengthy telegram to the provinces explains that circumstances are compelling him to assume the premiership which, he says, he will do on June 25. He adds that in a few months he will resign and recommend an able statesman to succeed him.

In the meanwhile he appeals to the provincial authorities for support.

The personnel of the cabinet has not yet been settled.

Li Ching-hsi's decision to assume the premiership was arrived at after a conference at the Presidential office attended by Chiang Chao-chung, Wang Shih-chen, Chiang Kwei-ti and Li Ching-hsi, at which Li Ching-hsi was strongly urged to assume office immediately in view of the chaotic condition of affairs.

Li Ching-hsi then consulted Chang Hsun and finally despatched the telegram announcing his decision.

It is expected that much difficulty will be experienced in forming a cabinet which the majority of politicians are unwilling to enter as it is certain to be shortlived.

It is stated that Wang Tah-sieh, Yang Shih-chi and others already have declined posts.

The new cabinet, it is said, will not include members of the Chinputang and Chiao Tung cliques. Tang Hua-lung and Hsiung Hsi-ling were mentioned for posts but both refused.

The attitude of the navy is causing anxiety. Reports from the South indicate that a revolt against the Government, under the direct instigation of ex-Minister Chen Pi-kwang, is imminent.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 23.—According to a local report the warships in the vicinity of Shanghai yesterday definitely threw in their lot with the South. Six warships at Woosung left, for the South to join the attack against the Tuchun of Fukien. The second squadron has declared its independence of orders from Peking. Admiral Chen Pi-kwang is reported to be directing the Southerners completely.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, June 24.—A special despatch from Hongkong dated June 23 says that the following is the concluding paragraph of a lengthy proclamation by the Tuchuns of Kwangtung and Kwangsi:

All military and civil affairs of the two Provinces of Kwangtung and Kwangsi will be placed under the self-Government of the Provinces. As to important matters we will act according to the President's direct instructions and will not accept the interference of any illegally constituted Cabinet until the complete solution of the outstanding questions has been reached. If we fail to effect the peaceful settlement of the questions according to law, we will sacrifice peace and resort to ultimate resource for settlement.

Official circles here yesterday were advised of the inauguration of Mr. Li Ching-hsi as Premier of China on the 24th. The Council of State notice to this effect was published at Peking.

The members of the new Chinese Cabinet appointed up to the day of Mr. Li's taking office were:

Premier and Finance Minister—Li Ching-hsi.
War Minister and Chief, General Staff—Wang Sieh-cheng.
Navy Minister—Sah Chin-ping.
Commander-in-Chief, Navy—Ch'eng Pi-kuang.

GREAT BRITAIN AND U.S. CHINA NOTE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 20.—A telegram received in London announces that the incident connected with the American Note to China has closed. The facts are that when the Note was sent to the Allies on June 6, similar communication, probably owing to misunderstanding, was delivered to the Peking Government without other Powers being informed. After consultation, the British, French and Japanese Governments have replied to the Note. Great Britain agreed in principle to the views of the United States but intimated that owing to her position she could not take the steps proposed. The reply added that the British Government shared the views of the United States regarding the desirability of tranquillity in China.

NEW CHINESE BANK AT HONGKONG

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Hongkong, June 26.—The Industrial and Commercial Bank with a million dollars of capital was formally opened yesterday. The American Consul-General made a speech. He said he took great interest in the bank for two reasons; first, because the capital was largely subscribed by Americans and other overseas Chinese and secondly it is a native bank.

The most of the promoters had been trained in foreign countries and had at one time or another studied American banking methods. He was firmly convinced that the first great need of China was an adequate banking system properly supervised by a responsible government.

NO INSTRUCTION TO REINSCH

Peking, June 20.—The American legation here has received no instruction to withdraw the Note which America had previously presented to China.

U.S. PRESS STILL ON CHINA NOTE INCIDENT

New York, June 19.—The "New York Times" publishes the following Washington special in to-day's issue:

It is officially announced that the Japanese government has informed the American Government to the effect that the censure of the public opinion in Japan on American Note to China was the result of misunderstanding. It is learned that Secretary Lansing regards the affairs as having been smoothly settled, though the official statement has nothing to say in that respect.

The true aspect of the affair is that the American Government sent a note to Japan trying to induce the Japanese Government to take the same measure as America toward China at the same time when America sent a Note to China with a view to urging various political parties in China to stop strifes and consider measures to accelerate the pacification of the disturbances. Japan did not think that America would have sent the Note to China at the same time with the presentation of the Note to the Japanese Government, so that when it was known that America had sent the Note to China before Japan made any reply to the American proposal, the public opinion in Japan took it for granted that the American Government had made a scoup on Japan in her dealings with China and attacked the American Government as having disregarded and trespassed upon Japan's special position and relationship with China. Japan's predominant position and interests in China have been recognized by Britain by virtue of conventions, while France also recognized them as a matter of practice though not in the form of any convention. That Japan possesses peculiar relationship and special interests in China, historically and geographically, quite different to those of all other powers, is well known and these can be well compared with the special rights and peculiar interests the United States have in Mexico and other Central American states. There is indeed no difference between Japan's special relation with China and America's relation with those Central American states. Inasmuch America claims her special superior rights and interests in those countries, Japan is justified in making a similar claim in China.

Such is the theory advanced by Japanese especially by those who insist on making China enter into the war on the side of the Entente Allies, but what will be the result of China's participating in the war? Because the Chinese Government attaches more importance to the advice of Japan rather than of America, the declaration of war against Germany by China may lead to the possible conclusion of an alliance between Japan and China which will bring about a serious turn of the situation. A Japanese-Chinese alliance, if concluded, may possibly result in placing the control of the Chinese army in the hands of Japan. This is what especially worries the minds of the authorities of the Washington Government. According to information emanating from official source, whereas the political change in Russia has affected in the least the Russo-Japanese alliance, the Japanese Government has withheld giving its recognition of the Russian Provisional Government until the Provisional Government issues a formal declaration that it will respect all treaties concluded by the former Imperial Government of Russia. Such is the attitude of Japan. Perhaps, the Japanese envoy who is expected to come over here shortly, will, after doing respect to America in congratulating on her entry into the war with Germany, start the negotiations on various questions relative to the persecution of the war. Among other things, Japan will, through the special envoy, approach America with the proposal to make the American warships in the Pacific take up the task of maintaining guard against the enemy ships in the Atlantic and Europe, reserving the task of guarding the Pacific and Far Eastern waters exclusively to the hands of the Japanese fleet. The State Department, however, has given out no statement about the Mission of the Ishii commission as yet.—"Asahi."

San Francisco, June 20.—The "San Francisco Chronicle" commenting on the Americo-Japanese question for the third time says that the views of that paper on the Japanese-American question has been endorsed by the Washington Government. It says, "what policy America should take toward the development of Japanese influence in China? As the development of Japan's influence in China is quite unavoidable it is the best policy for America to give recognition to Japan's superior position in China. By Japan's guidance China may attain industrial development and progress, which will not only benefit Chinese but also bring an immense benefit to the world's nations equally. It is absolutely impossible under the obtaining circumstances that China by herself will make any remarkable industrial development to benefit herself and the world's nations."

The "Los Angeles Times" also commenting on the same subject says:

"The American people should recognize and bear in mind that Japan will never change her mind once she decided her diplomatic policy and principle and that for the pursuance of that object Japan always entertains a dissatisfaction towards America's attitude. It should be remembered that this state of things will continue as long as America strives to secure her rights and interests in the Far East and the Pacific Ocean by means of her strong force. The best way for America is to abandon her aspiration to extend her influence to China and leave the task to the hands of Japan. This is the wisest and safest policy for America."—"Asahi."

STAR AND STRIPES AT QUEENSTOWN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Queenstown via London, June 26.—American Admiral Sims has temporarily taken over the Irish naval command during the absence on leave of Vice-Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly on account of the severe strain of his duties since the outbreak of the war. The stars and stripes is now floating at the naval headquarters.

taken place to modify our general policy, I do not believe it necessary to reconsider it before you. I shall content myself with putting forth before you some important facts which have taken place recently.

What I ought at first to speak to you about is the state of war which took place between the United States and Germany. Germany having without any mercy continued the unrestricted submarine warfare, against all the hostile and neutral ships, without any distinction, in defiance of all the rules of international law, there were, as you know, violent discussions between the Government of the United States and Germany. But being unable to obtain any satisfactory result, the United States Government broke off diplomatic relations with Germany on February 3rd. Later, in conformity with the vote of Congress, the President of the United States, on April 6th, declared the existence of a state of war between the United States and Germany. The Imperial Government of Japan was informed of the declaration on April 7th.

Gentlemen, we have welcomed with the greatest satisfaction, the entry of the United States in the war. His Majesty the Emperor, in learning the declaration of war by the United States, was eager to send a telegram of felicitation to President Wilson, who responded immediately to His Majesty in impressive terms of the most sincere cordiality.

I have the profound conviction that the entry in war of the United States with the resolute intention of defeating Germany, with her entire forces, will contribute greatly towards the realisation of the aims pursued by our Allied Powers.

I am very glad for the sake of Japan as well as of the United States that the entry of the United States, our great neighbour in the war, an event without precedent in the annals of history, and the close collaboration of the two nations against our common enemies, have a marked tendency of making the cordial relations now existing between the two countries more closer, and uniting all our efforts with the greatest sincerity.

The rupture of the diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany had been the prelude to the similar ruptures between a great number of neutral states and Germany. What interests us most, has been the rupture of the diplomatic relations between China and Germany. I believe I have to give you some explanations on the attitude the Imperial Japanese Government had taken in the matter, which, it is needless for me to say, is a question of great importance to us.

The United States, having broken off relations with Germany, declared the existence of a state of war between the United States and Germany to other nations, and at the same time invited the neutral powers to act in the same manner.

Recognizing the existence of the relation of close intimacy between China and Japan, the Chinese Government demanded us to give our opinion on the subject. We investigated the question with a due and serious consideration, and replied to China that it would be of advantage to China to follow the advice of the United States Government.

Germany having trodden the right of neutral powers under her feet, the United States found herself under the obligation of breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany. From the very moment when China could not obtain a satisfactory assurance from Germany, it was quite natural for the Chinese Government to break off diplomatic relations with Germany, even for no other reason but for safeguarding her right of independence. If we consider the question from the Japanese point of view, the fact being undisputable that Germany had begun dangerous machinations against Japan and other Entente powers, in political and other fields, and proceeded actively to the preparation for future for the same aim, it was to our wish that China should sever her diplomatic relations with Germany at all events.

That is why, judging the problem from both the Japanese and Chinese point of view, I have frankly stated to the Chinese Government, the opinion of the Japanese government on the question.

On March 14th, we received an official communication from the Chinese government notifying us of the rupture of diplomatic relations with Germany. In making the communication, the Chinese Government declared that the motives which compelled China to break with Germany were based upon the principle of humanity and the law of nations, and that she desired no conditions from the Entente powers for her rupture with Germany She desired, however, that the Imperial Government of Japan would take into consideration her desiderata on the questions of the tariff revision, the postponement of payment of the Boxer indemnity and the modifications of certain despositions made after the Boxer trouble.

The note received the most serious consideration of the Imperial Government of Japan, but no response could be given to China on the note without previously consulting with the powers interested.

Consequently views had been exchanged by the powers interested in China on the subject, and on March 31st, the foreign Ministers at Peking arrived at a decision to follow a joint course in the matter. The negotiations with the Chinese Government as well as with the Allied powers are still pending, I entreat you, Gentlemen, to note what had taken place, even if I can not give you at present more of the details on the question.

After breaking her diplomatic relations with Germany, ought China have pushed her action against Germany further and declared war against her? It was up to the Chinese Government to decide whether it ought to have taken that step or not. I regret infinitely that China had not yet been able to arrive at any decision on the matter, on account of the political dissensions on purely internal problems. This question has a great importance from the Japanese and Chinese viewpoints as much as from the standpoint of all the Allied powers of the Entente. It is the matter of destroying the foundation of the chief cause of dangers in the Far East, and of destroying our common enemy to bring peace and tranquillity in the Far East. I desire sincerely that the men of our neighbouring state could succeed in settling the internal disturbances as soon as possible and decide the question of entering in the war. In resolving to enter the war, and in openly associating with the Entente Powers to defend the most sacred right of humanity, I am firmly convinced that China will obtain the esteem and sympathy of all the powers fighting for the triumph of the great common cause.

What I desire to speak to you next, is the change of Government in Russia. The event took place suddenly on March 8 and was accomplished with an extraordinary rapidity as we all know. The revolutionary movement having started in so rapid a manner, the Emperor Nicholas II abdicated in favour of his brother the Grand Duke Michel Alexandrovitch on March 15th. The latter had renounced to assume the supreme power only up to the moment when a constituent Assembly organized on the basis of the universal suffrage would have established the form of the Government and the new fundamental laws of Russia.

After the events I have just related, a Provisional Government was formed in Petrograd under the presidency of Prince Lvoff, President of the Committee of the Zemstvos and with Mr. Miliukoff, Chief of the Constitutional and Democratic Party, as Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Imperal Government was informed officially of the change of the political regime in Russia by a communication from the Russian Ambassador to Japan on March 20th, the communication giving me the information contained in a telegram from the Foreign Minister of Russia sent on March 17th. The new Foreign Minister of Russia in acquainting us with the events which had put an end to the ancient regime and caused the formation of the Provisional Government, assured us that the new Government would remain respectful of the international obligations taken by the former regime and would keep the words of Russia. He assured us that the new Government would carefully cultivate the friendship which united Russia with the other allied nations, and that Russia, faithful to the pact, which united her indissolubly to her glorious allies, would combat by their sides against the common enemy with more vigour.

After deliberately considering the new situation in Russia, the Cabinet decided without any hesitation, to recognize the Russian Provisional Government in due time, and on March 28th, we sent an instruction to Viscount Uchida, Japanese Ambassador at Petrograd to that effect.

We acknowledge, Gentlemen, the particularly cordial relations which have never ceased to exist for past ten years between Japan and Russia. The great common interests which the two countries have in the Far East have been the base of that cordial entente.

Whatever form of government the great Russian nation may adopt, the permanent mutual interest which served as the bases of the treaties signed with Russia, will never disappear. We have the greatest desire and firm conviction that the sincere and amicable relations which have developed between the two countries in past years and in particular since the commencement of the great war, will not cease to become closer and closer.

I am profoundly happy to prove that the relations between Japan and the other Entente powers are cordial and being cemented day by day in a firmer amity.

As I have had the occasion of declaring it before the Parliament in the 38th session, Japan, faithful to her policy towards the allies, continues to collaborate with the Entente powers to the utmost with a resolute perseverance for the great common work.

Without speaking about the measures against the commerce with the enemies and the supply of war materials to the Allies, and also without speaking about the financial arrangements we have made in favour of the Allies, we have, as you know, Gentlemen, sent a part of our fleets to the Mediterranean waters. Let me tender, with you, a homage and admiration to our brave mariners who fought so gloriously in the Mediterranean for the honour of our country.

Gentlemen, we can not yet forsee when the end of this struggle raging over the world for almost three years, will come. Don't believe, Gentlemen, that all the difficulties will cease to exist when the end of the war arrives.

I can say to you, that it will be after the war when the greatest difficulties will arrive. It will be after the war when all our forces and all our energies are required for establishing a durable peace in the world as well as for defending our rights and interests. This is the point to which I beg you to give your particular attention, in ending this address.

Mr. Sugita, interpellated about the proceedings relative to the recent Chinese affairs and the question of China's entry into the war. Viscount Motono replied that the Government being asked its opinion by China as to her diplomatic rupture with Germany expressed its views, which was in perfect consonance with the Government principle declared at the last session of the diet, adding that in response to China's request the Government expressed its wish about her proposal to participate in the war, which was also in consonance with the principle pursued by the Government.

Baron Takahashi interpellated why Japan did not declare her object of the war whilst all other Powers had declared their respective objects of the war, and so forth. To this, the Foreign Minister replied that as far as his knowledge was concerned, no Powers had yet declared its object of the war so far, and though some countries published part of their views on the subject, Japan saw no necessity of following their example. He further stated that he was convinced that the powers would not raise any objection to the position Japan was going to take on the occasion of the peace conference.

The House then took up the day's order. Seven Government Bills on the order were explained by the Ministers of various Departments and committeed. The House rose at 11.30 a.m.

The House of Representatives met at 1 p.m. The announcement that the Premier, Foreign Minister and Finance Minister would deliver speeches respectively on the Government's administrative policy, diplomatic policy and financial policy, attracted a large number of audience. The galleries were packed to overflowing. The ladies quarters, diplomats quarters and the Peers quarters had also full attendance. After President Mr. Ooka reported on the presentation of the House's Reply to the Speech from the Throne and announced the Imperial message accepting the respect of the House, Premier Count Terauchi appeared on the rostrum and spoke on the government administrative policy, which was the exact replica of the speech before the Upper House in the morning.

The Premier's speech over, Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, took the platform and made a speech explaining on the supplementary budget estimates submitted to the House on Saturday last and summarising the recent situation of economic circles, also touching the bills providing for the creation of a special law pertaining to war time savings bonds and the revisions of the regulations for the control of the industrial guilds, hypothec bank, farmers and mechanics banks, and industrial bank. The Minister further dwelt on the future plan of the Government for the improvement of monetary facilities for the benefit of Japanese emigrants in foreign lands, Japanese residens in Chosen and Manchuria, and those engaged in the trade between Russia and Japan.

The Finance Minister was followed by Viscount Motono who spoke on the Government diplomatic principle and reported on the late diplomatic proceedings, in the same line as his utterance before the Upper House in the morning. Immediately the Foreign Minister finished his speech Mr. Shimada taking the rostrum interpellated the reason for the establishment of the diplomatic advisory board, the dispatch of the Japanese destroyer flotilla to the Mediterranean and the diplomatic proceedings toward China. Premier Count Terauchi made some reply, which did not come to the point raised by the member. The opposition members made a roar and the Premier's statement was hardly audible. Being dissatisfied with the Premier's reply Mr. Shimada turned his interpellation to the Navy Minister and asked whether the dispatch of the destroyers to the Mediterranean was an action taken in response to the request of Great Britain and what was the description of the warcraft detailed to the Mediterranean. Admiral Kato, Navy Minister, replied that the dispatch of the warships was decided on by the request of the British Government, which applied to the Japanese Government for the dispatch of warships to the direction in view of the ravage of the German submarines in the Mediterranean. As to the description of the warships detailed there the Minister regretted that he could not satisfy the member's request at the present meeting. The Minister asked the member to ask the Foreign Minister as to the motive of the Government having consented with the request of the British Government. Being asked by Mr. Shimada, the Navy Minister replied that the dispatch of the Japanese warships to the Mediterranean was not only for the purpose of protecting the Japanese merchantmen in that sea, but also was the result of an arrangement of joint military operations with the allies navies. Viscount Motono taking the rostrum stated that though the dispatch of the Japanese warships to the Mediterranean was decided on by the necessity of joint military operations with the allies navies, the chief end and object was the protection of the Japanese merchantmen.

Mr. Shimada then interpellated about the truth of the press report that a certain Nishihara went to China as an emissary and negotiated with the ex-Premier of China on certain important diplomatic affairs. The Foreign Minister denied the report referred to by the member as a pure unfounded report.

Mr. Kotaro Mochizuki interpellated about the declaration of the Foreign Minister regarding the retention of Japan's rights in Shantung and the former German south sea islands and other diplomatic matters in connection with the war. The Foreign Minister replied that in order to secure Japan's rights in Shantung and the southern islands the Government had taken proper measures to assure the retention of Japan's proper rights and interest and the minister had a strong conviction that measures taken by the Government in that connection would bring highly satisfactory results after the termination and restoration of peace. Further interpellations were raised by Messrs. Oshikawa, Saito and Seki, respecting to diplomatic and military affairs, to which the Foreign Minister and Navy Minister replied. Interpellations over the House took up the day's order and listening to the ministerial explanations on eight government bills which were committeed subsequently, the House rose at 5.30 p.m.

ITALY AGAINST RUSSIAN PROPOSAL

Italy denies through the plain spoken words of her Foreign Minister that the Russian proposal for a peace on the principle of non-annexation and no indemnity would make the world any the better.

The Italian Foreign Minister, in his address at the opening of a session of Parliament on the 20th, says a report received in Tokyo Monday, after going over the world situation, declared that should the Russian proposal be acted upon the world would go back to the anti-bellum state of affairs and would perpetuate the brute force.

In view of the existing heterogenity, the Italian Minister is reported to have declared, of races, civilizations, geography and customs among the belligerents, to seek peace with such phraseology as non-annexation or no indemnity as Russia proposes will only take the world back to the ante-bellum state of affairs and perpetuate the brute force.

Reiterating the object for which Italy entered the war, the Minister said that his country cast in its lot with the Allies to secure lasting peace, the security of the border lines, the unification of races and their independence.

The Foreign Minister's address is reported to have been received with great enthusiasm throughout Italy.

MR. HOLSTEIN'S APPEAL CASE

Hearing in an appeal case involving Mr. Christian Holstein in connection with the alleged abduction of a Japanese, Kanekichi Tsukamoto, before the outbreak of the war, for an extended cruise into the South Seas, via Tsingtao, was concluded on Tuesday in the Osaka Appeal Court, and judgement is expected to be rendered soon. Tsukamoto was employed as a swineherd on the North German Lloyd steamer Mark, and on returning home brought an action against Mr. Holstein, Manager of Messrs. Nickel & Lyons, Kobe. The Mark has since been interned in Manila, and recently passed through Nagasaki for the States to be utilized where most needed.

RECENT CANCELLATION OF INDEPENDENCE IN CHINA

[FROM OUR CHINESE CORRESPONDENT]

Peking, June 21.—Up to the time of writing, the provinces of Chihli, Honan Shenhsi, Shanhsi, Anhui, Chekiang, Fukien, Fengtien, and Heilungkiang have formally cancelled their recent declarations of "severance of political relations with Peking" and restored normal conditions within their respective jurisdictions. Generals Tuao Kun, Chang Tso-lin, Yen Hsi-chan, Chang Shufan and Yang Shan-teh have asked the Chief Executive to pardon them for their military intervention in the present political crisis between the Cabinet and the Parliament and that as their real objects are for the interests of the Republic of China in accordance with the existing circumstances, they should be permitted to proceed to Peking to offer their personal apologies to him. Gen. Nih Shih-chung says that as he was the starter of this "constitution revolution" and he has now secured his objects, viz: The establishment of a real, responsible Cabinet, The re-drafting of the uncompleted Constitution by popular representatives from the various Provinces. The amendment of the organization law of the Parliament so that a new Parliament may be established as soon as possible. The abolition of the military secretariat of the Presidential Office and an amnesty to all political refugees, which, he says, if actually carried out by the coming Cabinet, the country will derive great benefits therefrom, thus he intends to resign his post as civil governor of Anhui and commander of the "Anwuchun" force after the present political situation is definitely settled. In conclusion, General Nih asked the Ministry of Communications to provide cars for the transportation of his troops back to Anhui from the vicinity of Tientsin. General Tsao Kun, Chao Tih and Chang Chin-yao report the withdrawal of their troops to their original positions in Chihli and Honan and that hereafter they will obey orders of the central Government as previously. The speedy response of the Military Governors and Generals to Chang Hsun's request for the cancellation of the independence and the withdrawal of their troops from the vicinity of Peking and Tientsin is partially due to the receipt of a telegram from Gen. Lu Yung-ting, inspecting commissioner of Kuangtung and Kuanghsi, to the effect that as Parliament has been dissolved by the President the northern leaders should restore normal conditions and that if any body dares to do harm to republic or President, he will oppose it with all his might.

NEW JUJITSU CLUB FOR OSAKA

Osaka will soon have a club for the practice of jujitsu, or the manly art of self-defence peculiar in this country. Popular subscriptions made by Osaka citizens for the erection of the club are reported to have amounted to several scores of thousand yen. Mr. Kano, the inventor of the new style of jujitsu, went to Osaka the other day to consider the matter with the promoters there. The club will be styled "Kodokwan."

MR. INUKAI AND HIS PRINCIPLE

The "Tokyo Asahi" is not satisfied with the address Mr. Inukai made at the mass meeting of the Kokuminto, and believed that the recent movement of Mr. Inukai is contrary to the principles he had been preaching in the past. In the address he made before the meeting of the Kokuminto, he said that he consented to become a member of the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs, because the purpose of the Board is to unify the national opinion on diplomatic affairs. Formerly Mr. Inukai attacked the Elder Statesmen and went so far as to oppose the existence of the Privy Council, but now he supports the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs, and becomes a member of the Board. It is clear that the principle of Mr. Inukai underwent a change recently.

In this connection, the "Asahi" desires to discuss the fact that the Kokuminto refused to join in the movement against the Terauchi Cabinet in the 39th session of the Imperial Diet. The Kokuminto opened the fight against the Terauchi Cabinet in the 38th session of the Diet, as the non-party cabinet of Count Terauchi was against the principle of the party. Believing that as long as the principles differ, it is not necessary to discuss the administration of the Terauchi cabinet, the Kokuminto brought out the bill of lack of confidence in the Terauchi cabinet at the beginning of the 38th session of the Diet, and it caused the dissolution of the 38th session of the Diet. Consequently it is proper for the Kokuminto to bring out the bill of lack of confidence again in the 39th session of the Diet against the Terauchi cabinet. Even though the Terauchi administration improved slightly recently, as the Kokuminto does not approve the principle of non-party cabinet, the party should open the fight again in the coming session. The public who voted for the Kokuminto candidates at the general election held in April, did so believing that the party will again oppose the Terauchi cabinet.

But suddenly at the establishment of the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs Mr. Inukai consented to become a member of the Board, and was given the privilege of a cabinet Minister, and it became the turning point of the principle of Mr. Inukai, and throwing away the former principle and relation, he is now going to support the Terauchi cabinet. The "Asahi" says that his sudden change in principle has surprised the public of Japan.

Mr. Inukai, in his speech before the meeting of the Kokuminto held on June 20th, said that the Kokuminto did not throw away its principle of party-politics, and had merely "postponed" the problem in view of the more important national question. The paper desires to ask Mr. Inukai what he meant by the more important national question. If he means the European war, it has been continuing since 1914, and if he means the Chinese question, the political disturbance of China has been in evidence for many years. Mr. Inukai had never changed his principle on account of such problems, and until this spring he ideas, he opened the fight against the Terauchi cabinet in January. The "Asahi" followed his former ideas, and upon his does not agree with Mr. Inukai and the Kokuminto that these special important problems had recently arose.

In conclusion the paper declares that the necessity of the unification of the national opinion on diplomatic affairs, which Mr. Inukai is recently saying, is only his pretext and he has taken it up only because it has been favourable for him. When the situation changes, and the unification of the public opinion becomes unfavourable, he will again return to his former stand, and attack the bureaucratic government, and declare that all cabinet members should be party men.

APPOINTMENT OF LI CHING-I AS NEW PREMIER

Despite the opposition of politicians and military men at Tientsin, it is reported that Li Ching-i will be appointed as the Premier of the Chinese Republic, and his appointment will be one step towards the settlement of the political disturbance, and it should be welcomed with approval, says the "Jiji."

But the appointment of Li Ching-i does not mean the establishment of the new cabinet, and the members of the cabinet have to be selected, and although the first step has been taken toward the peaceful settlement of the internal trouble, General Chang Hsun has not yet fulfilled his duty with the appointment of Li Ching-i, and there are various other problems which have to be attended to by the General. The fact that General Chang Hsun appointed Li Ching-i despite the opposition of Tientsin, may lead to another conflict with Tientsin. General Chang Hsun might have made some negotiation with the Tientsin politicians regarding the appointment of Li Ching-i, but dissatisfaction is likely to be felt among those who desired to appoint as the new Premier, General Tuan, Hsu Shih-chang, or Wang Shih-chen.

At present the Tientsin faction under the leadership of General Tuan and Hsu Shih-chang, will not be satisfied with what General Chang Hsun undertakes and three or four provinces along the Yangtse river, with Vice-President Feng as their leader, are endeavouring to occupy a special position, independent of the political conflict. Also there are rumours that the Southern provinces are keenly watching for an opportunity for political gain. It will be, consequently difficult to settle the political disturbance, and the future prospect of the political situation of China is very doubtful.

It will be necessary for General Chang Hsun to give his best efforts for the further settlement, not being satisfied with the appointment of Li Ching-i as the Premier. According to a Peking telegram the General has begun to negotiate with the south as soon as he decided on the appointment of Li Ching-i, and has already requested Vice-President Feng to mediate with the South. The "Jiji" thinks that if the Vice-President desires to assist the General, the negotiation with the south will be successful, and that in including the representatives of the south as well as the Tientsin factions in the cabinet, the peaceful settlement can be obtained, if General Chang Hsun bears the responsibility of assisting the new cabinet. It is the belief of the paper that by establishing such a coalition cabinet there is a way to obtain a satisfactory settlement of the present disturbance.

FATE OF THE NEW CHINESE CABINET

The "Nichinichi" welcomes the establishment of the Chinese cabinet under Li Ching-hsi, and while the members of the cabinet are not yet appointed a report says that Wang Shih-chen and Sa Chen-ping have been selected for Ministers of Army and Navy. For one month since the resignation of General Tuan from the Premiership, the political situation of China has been extremely chaotic, and the establishment of the succeeding cabinet is indeed welcome news.

However the establishment of the Li cabinet is not welcomed by General Tuan, Hsu Chih-chang and others of the Tientsin faction, and it is opposed by I Ssu-chung, Chang Huai-chih and other Military governors, and furthermore the Koumin party is not satisfied with the recent movement of Li Ching-hsi. Thus, the new cabinet is not only opposed by the Northern military party but is not welcomed by the Koumin party, and from these circumstances it could be thought that the establishment of the new cabinet is extremely strange. But the "Nichinichi" says that it is impossible to organize a military cabinet at this moment as the Tuchuns desire, as the establishment of a military cabinet will cause the opposition of the south, and the new cabinet was organized just to bridge over the time until the condition becomes favourable for the establishment of a military cabinet.

Li Ching-hsi carefully watched the surrounding conditions and found that the establishment of his cabinet will not be welcomed, and consequently he hesitated in accepting the appointment as the Premier. The appointment of Li Ching-hsi became a necessity, and finally he consented to accept the position. But Li Ching-hsi himself realizes that his cabinet will not last long. In his announcement of his acceptance of the position he stated that he sacrificed himself to bear the responsibility of running the government, but he intended to keep the position only for three months, and if the political situation is settled within the period, he would resign at the end of three months.

The statement shows that he accepted to organize only a temporary cabinet, and will resign as soon as it becomes favourable for the establisnment of a more permanent cabinet. The fate of the new cabinet being so short, it will be difficult to obtain proper persons to fill the posts as ministers, and it is reported that several have already declined invitations to become cabinet Ministers. Wang Shih-chen, accepted the portfolio of Army, but it is said that he entered the new cabinet with the understanding that he will remain even after the resignation of Li Ching-hsi, and the establishment of the permanent cabinet.

The Military Governors of Kwangsi and Kwangtung declared as soon as the report of the establishment of the new cabinet reached them, that whenever important problems arise, they will directly consult with the President and will not accept the interference of the cabinet. Also the Navy declared that it will not obey the orders of the illegal cabinet.

On the whole, the opposition against the new cabinet has been already shown, and it is doubtful that the new cabinet will be able to handle the situation. The "Nichinichi" says that before three months are over, the Military Governors may request the resignation of Li Ching-hsi, and the future of the Chinese political situation is still doubtful despite the establishment of the new cabinet.

NEGOTIATIONS OVER U.S. PROPOSAL

The "Chugai Shogyo" is glad that the negotiation over the proposal of the United States to address an advice to China, is satisfactorily progressing, and the paper believes that the problem will be smoothly solved before long.

The proposition of the United States to address an advice to China is not a question in which only Japan is concerned, but it is a subject that concerns all the powers of the world. The proposal was rejected by Japan, and it is reported that England also refused to join the United States. If Japan and England are against the proposal, France and Italy will not join the United States. It is not clear what attitude Russia will take in the matter, but considering the policy Russia took on the question of independence of Manchuria, it is expected that Russia will be also against the proposition made by the United States.

The question will be what attitude will the United States take towards China in future. The political situation of China is still chaotic and nothing can be said about the future of China, and the American attitude will be also undecided. Reports says that the United States gave up the intention of giving China an advice, and as the purpose of the United States in making such an advice is to bring peace to China, when the situation in China is peaceful, there will be no more advice from the United States. But the Southern party of China is still dissatisfied with the power of the military party of the north, and when the south begins a military movement against the north China will be again placed in a chaotic condition. In such a case the United States will not calmly watch the disturbance, especially as South China is pro-American. The paper does not believe that any difficulty will rise between Japan and the United States on account of the American attitude towards China, but there is a third nation which is desiring to cause trouble between Japan and the United States. Germany already said that the American advice to China will eventually bring on war between Japan and the United States. The paper hopes that the matter will be smoothly solved so that no third nation will have an opportunity to take advantage of the situation.

POLITICAL PARTIES IN JAPAN

In looking over the principles and policies of all political parties now existing in Japan, one will be surprised to find that all parties aim to respect the Imperial Family, to develop the constitutional government, and aid the development of the nation, and there is no difference in their fundamental principles, but still they are always regarding one another as political enemies, says the "Hochi."

Only from the sentimental differences, and personal point of view, the parties are fighting among themselves all the time. In their principles and opinions there are slight differences in minor points, but on the whole they are all identical. The paper hopes that all parties will consider the welfare of the nation, and put aside their petty sentimental and personal differences, and establish their fundamental policies. At present all parties lack the proper courage to make such revolutionary improvement, and it is necessary that the public should urge and stimulate the parties to realize their important mission and despise petty fights.

LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE AT ROSI'S OPERA COMIQUE

An unusual interest is caused by the announcement that Signor G. V. Rosi will appear as Gaspard the Miser in Les Cloches de Corneville, an opera by Planquette, which is to be staged at the Rosi's Opera Comique from July first.

Recently the music lovers of Tokyo did not have any opportunity to hear Mr. Rosi on any stage, and the announcement has been received with welcome. Gaspard the Miser is the important and difficult part in the famous opera, and the success of the piece depends entirely upon the singer who takes the part of the Miser, and Signor Rosi taking the part, the July bill of the Opera Comique is certain to be a great success.

Signor Rosi sang the part of Gaspard in His Majesty's Theater, London, for many seasons, and his ability to perform the difficult part is well established. His appearance on the stage will have a strong influence on all members of the company.

Any one who knows the story of Les Cloches de Corneville will realize the importance of the part of Gaspard, and the Tokyo public will have a treat next month in hearing Signor Rosi in the principal part in the opera.

For the benefit of those who are not acquainted with the synopsis of Les Cloches de Corneville, the outline of the opera is given below.

Henri, Marquis of Corneville who has been since childhood, owing to civil war, an exile, returns to his ancestral home on the occasion of the great annual fair, which is being celebrated in the village that receives its name from his chateau. It is one of the old fashioned Norman villages of the seventeenth century.

In the First Act, the curtain rises on an assemblage of village gossips, discussing scandal and small talk. Serpolette, a cross between Foucheon and Boulotte, is the topic of conversation among the belles of Corneville. She comes in just in time to turn the table on the others, and changes their taunts into expressions of rage. Gaspard, an old Miser, wishes to marry his niece, Germaine, to the principal magistrate of the district, the Bailli. This arrangement does not suit Germaine, nor the young fisherman named Jean Greincheux, who pretends that he has saved her life from drowning on a certain occasion. To escape from the power of old Gaspard, Germaine takes advantage of the privileges of the fair (a similar scene to that in the first act of "Martha"), and becomes the servant of the Marquis. Her example is followed by Grenicheux and Serpolette.

The Second Act is taken up with the supernatural visitors who have made the castle of Corneville so long an object of dread. Henri determines to find out the real character of these ghostly appearances, and discovers that it is all the work of the old Miser, who has concealed his treasures in the chateau. The discovery drives Gaspard crazy, especially when he hears the bells of the chateau ringing for the old Marquis.

The Third Act represents the grand fete given in honour of the return of Henri to his ancestral home. Serpolette arrives as a Marchioness, as some papers, found in the chateau, indicate that she is the lost heiress. The Miser, however, recovers his reason, and shows that Germaine is the true Marchioness. A love duet between her and Henri and the reconciliation of all the parties bring the romantic story to a close.

FOOD QUESTION IN GERMANY

The Food Authorities of Germany issued the following statement on June 16, reads a report received at the Foreign Office on the 21st:

"Now that the planting has come to an end, that the quantity of cereals left has become known, and that the calculation can be made as to the quantity that can be imported from Rumania, it has become definitely clear that the distribution of bread at the ratio obtaining up to present can be maintained till the next crop season. However, owing to the damage wraught by frost, potatoes can not be distributed in many districts at the previously promised ratio of five pounds a week. It is difficult to fill this lack of potato with flour."

The report further states that the Socialist newspapers are attacking the authorities for their failure to live up to the promise they have made relative to the distribution of food, and that it is a general observation that the food question in Germany will become seriously difficult.

COMING JULY 4 CELEBRATION

The Fourth of July will be celebrated in Yokohama by the American community. A programme, which will include sports, dances, and other entertainments, is now being planned.

A great deal of interest is being shown over the two baseball games which will be played on the Y. C. and A. C. grounds in the afternoon. The first game will be between the Tokyo Americans and the Y. C. and A. C. team. This contest will be followed by a struggle between the Yokohama Americans and the crew from the U. S. S. Buffalo. A band will lend encouragement to the players during the afternoon, and American ladies will serve tea.

Yacht races will take place in the bay in the afternoon and some good racing is anticipated.

In the evening a dinner and dance will be given at the Grand hotel. As has been the rule since the war started there will be no display of fireworks.

MONGOLIA SINKS OFF BOMBAY

A telegram from Bombay received at the Nippon Yusen Kaisha yesterday reports the sinking of the P.O. liner Mongolia (9,905 tons), the cause of the disaster being unknown. A telegram also from Bombay received at the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha yesterday reports that the Mongolia was sunk off Bombay through contact with a floating mine.

There are three steamers bearing the name "Mongolia" or "Mongolian" which are plying on the Oriental route. The Mongolia belonging to the Pacific Mail line is a 13,639 tons vessel and boasts of a brilliant record of having the first shot against the German U-boat as the first armed merchantman of the American merchant marine fleet, sending to the bottom the said German submarine. Besides this steamer, there is the Mongolian plying between England and India, which was built at Glasgow in 1891 and has a displacement of 4,800 tons. The Mongolia of the P.O. line which is reported by the telegram as the vessel sunk by the mine or some other origin has a displacement of 9,905 tons as stated and was built at Greenock in 1903. They are all cargo boats plying on the Far Eastern route. No confirmatory reports have, however, been received at the Yokohama branch of the P.O. or P.M. companies up to late last night.

Another report also received here yesterday afternoon and emanating from India says that a Japanese steamer named Mogami Maru whose owner and capacity and other details are unknown has been sunk about the same time as the disaster that befell the Mongolia. The report, however, lacks confirmation.

The Dutch steamer Hellmuth sailing from America for Hakodate, Hokkaido, is reported to have run on a sunken rock off Erimosaki, Hokkaido, on Tuesday and foundered. The steamer is a small vessel of only 774 tons and was built at Stettin, Germany, in 1899.

About the Mogami Maru

Regarding the steamer Mogami Maru, which is reported to have sunk off Bombay, the Murao Shoten of Kobe which is the agent of the steamer was yesterday morning in receipt of a telegraphic message from a certain place in India advising that she left that place for Rangoon on Tuesday, and the company believes that the steamer is continuing her voyage in safety. The Navy Department has received no advice confirming the report referred to until last evening, but Adjutant Captain Osumi hesitates to deny the report as a mere groundless rumour in view of the recent sinking of the Unkai Maru, which has been confirmed as having sunk through contact with a mechanical mine probably laid by German agents in the vicinity of Bombay.

BARON SHIBUSAWA OPENS EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN

Baron Shibusawa, who retired last year from the business world and announced to devote his retired life for the improvement of commercial morals and education, has opened the educational campaign by accepting a new chair of practical ethics as honorary special lecturer to the Tokyo Higher Commercial School at Kanda. His first lecture on "Harmony between Morals and Commerce" was given on last Saturday afternoon at the auditorium of the school. The audience of a thousand students and the faculty were moved in many respects by his aspiring speech. He spoke for full two hours. In this long course of the speech Baron Shibusawa, to start with, spoke about his career up to to-day and his resolutions for the future, and then convinced the Japanese public that people are prone to consider money-making as inconsistent with morality, but both of these should be at accord. He quoted many times the teachings of Confucius and Mencius.

It is announced that his lectures will be given more than ten times in one academic year on Saturday afternoons, and his second lecture will be given in September after the vacation.

HELP FOR MANY STRUGGLING PEERS

Considering the fact that recently some of the 1,255 noble men in Japan are suffering from the financial difficulties, a meeting was held on June 21st to discuss the proper means of helping them, and those who attend the meeting were Prince Takatsukasa, Prince Ichijo, Marquis Kuga, Count Ogimachi, Count Shimizudera, Viscount Fujinami, Viscount Takatsuji, and Mr. Ishihara, Vice-Minister of the Department of Imperial Household.

Among the nobiemen of Japan, there are a large number of those who have only the family wealth to support them, but on account of the increased cost of living, many of them found it difficult to keep up their appearance, and it is reported that some Peers have only the income of about fifty yen a month. On the other hand, there are many who lost their properties due to their own mismanagement and extravagant living. There is a special fund to aid Peers in their financial difficulties, but the fund being small, the aid from the fund is not sufficient to help some Peers from disgrace and poverty. The meeting recently held was to consider a new and more practical means of aiding the unfortunate Peers.

TROUBLE IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

About five hundred members of the young men's co-operative society of the village of Sunamura in the suburbs of Tokyo passed a resolution on Monday to cause their children or younger brothers not to attend the Sunamura elementary school in that village on the ground that they can have no confidence in the person and character of the present master of the school. It is learned that the cause of this affair had its origin in the dismissal of the former principal of the school Mr. Bumpei Hagihara, who was regarded as a well-reputed teacher, much in the favour of the local people, but had suffered such a disgrace through the slanders of some malicious people. As the attitude of the promoters of the present cause is firm and uncompromising, together with the declaration made recently by the school board of the village announcing its unwillingness to believe in the present principal of the school as well as demanding that the head school-master be appointed as acting principal pending the settlement of this affair, the prefectural authorities of Tokyo are making serious investigations into the matter.

NEWS & NOTES

In place of comfort bags hitherto often sent to the Japanese expeditionary forces, Baron Kondo, President of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, has requested the Naval Office to distribute 5,000 yen among such bodies, now operating in foreign waters.

Owing to a heavy downpour of rain since Monday night several sections of the Hokuroku railway line in Toyama and Ishikawa prefectures were damaged by a flood and in consequence the train service was dislocated.

The Denki-kwan, a popular cinema theatre in Asakusa park, is now devoting its weekly programme to several comic films representing "Charlie Chaplin." These pictures produced by the Mutual Co. of America are being screened for the first time in this country.

Six cases of para typhus have broken out in the dormitory of the Gumma Girls' Normal School, Maebashi. The patients have been immediately isolated, a thorough disinfection being carried out in the school buildings.

A young girl aged eleven in the village of Itake, Aichi-gun, Aichi prefecture killed her own younger sister four years old, on Monday by throwing her into a river, in the hope of thus getting rid of the trouble of looking after the infant, with which task the young miscreant was always entrusted after school was over by her parents.

About two or three hundred employés of the Tokyo or Uyeno station are reported to be resigning daily on account of their low wages. The authorities of the Imperial Railway Board are much concerned and are taking steps to try and remedy the situation but it is said that unless a rise of two yen per month is allotted to each man more resignations will follow.

The warship Adzuma, which recently conveyed the remains of the late U.S. Ambassador Mr. Guthrie to San Francisco, will return to Yokosuka sometime after the 10th inst., instead of Tuesday, owing to repairs required at sea for her steering gear.

The Osaka Shosen Kaisha will declare a dividend of 40 per cent per annum, against 30 per cent for the preceding half year, at a general meeting of shareholders on July 23rd. Profits for the last half year are put at nearly 14 million yen, including over 4 million yen set aside as reserves.

Re the stabbing affray on board the French mail Porthos on June 24th, while the steamer was on her way to Kobe from Shanghai, it is understood that it will be referred to the French Consulate in Yokohama. It occurred outside Japan's territorial waters, and the Japanese blacksmith, who was injured by a drunken French sailor, has no intention of resorting to legal procedure.

Hundreds of thousands of venomous moths have recently appeared in the military parade ground at Sekiyama village, Kubiki-gori, Niigata prefecture, and about 150 soldiers of the 50th infantry regiment which arrived there for manœuvres the other day are reported to have been bitten by these poisonous moths. The poison of the insects is said to take effect so soon that the skin immediately swells up when touched by them. The appearance of venomous moths is creating sensation in the locality.

The Asano Cement Works, built near Kawasaki, have applied to the authorities concerned for their formal opening to business, though part of their premises are not yet finished. Two-hundred workmen are already employed for experimental operations. When their arrangements are completed, they will be the best factory of the kind in the Orient. A branch line between the Government Railway and the said works will be shortly finished, Mr. S. Asano, President of the Works, contributing 400,000 yen for that purpose. The Works will be able to turn out 2,000 barrels of cement daily.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE IMPERIAL DIET

Following the excited wordy battle between the Ministers and the opposition members at Tuesday's session of the Lower House, another keen interpellation campaign took place at yesterday's meeting of the Budget Committee of the House. The meeting began at 10.20 a.m. all ministers, except Viscount Motono and Government delegates being present. The first shot of interpellations was fired by Mr. Mitsuchi who asked the Navy Minister whether the Navy programme introduced in the House had any change as compared with the previous plan, a change necessitated in view of the experience of the European war especially the submarine warfare pursued by Germany, whether the appreciation of prices did not necessitate an increase in the estimates of the cost of construction of new warships and whether the outlay for the Navy will be appropriated from the national debt redemption funds as was declared by ex-Finance Minister Mr. Taketomi at the time of the Okuma Ministry. Admiral Kato, Navy Minister, replied that there was change in the plan submitted to the House, and though the naval authorities were making investigations in that direction taking into consideration the experience of the war they had not yet arrived at any conclusion. The Minister further stated that the cost of construction materials had since remarkably advanced, in some cases the advance showing an increase of 15 times as compared with the former rates, so that the navy estimates totalling over 26,000,000 yen showed a deficit of over 10,000,000 yen for the outlay of the present year, and the navy might be necessitated to introduce a claim to meet this deficit resulting from the advance of prices in the next regular session of the Diet.

General Oshima, War Minister, replying to an interpellation raised by the same member regarding the ordnance manufacture, stated that the authorities were devoting themselves to the study of aeroplanes and automobiles for military purpose, and declared that in respect of the manufacture of arms and other weapons of war and ammunitions this country was not inferior to any other powers. In the course of his explanation the War Minister declared that according to the development of the situation it might be possible that the authorities will introduce a claim for the increase of army divisions beyond the limit of 25 army divisions. The member further interpellated about the extension of the Government iron foundry and subsidiary grant to useful scientific researches, to which the Ministers of Agriculture and Commerce and of Education respectively replied.

In the afternoon session, Mr. Yukio Ozaki, Kenseikai leader, opened interpellations on the contents of the Government plan of unifying the administrative system in Chosen and Manchuria. Premier Count Terauchi replied that the Government intended to introduce a change in the official control of the consular authorities in Manchuria and at the same time to transfer the control of the business of the Chosen railways to the hands of the Manchurian railway. Mr. Ozaki then turned the point of his interpellations to the question of the establishment of the diplomatic Advisory Board and other matters pertaining to the administrative principle of the present Ministry, stating that the establishment of the Advisory Board was an attempt of the Ministry to evade its responsibilities. In reply, the Premier said that the establishment of the Advisory Board had no concern with constitution, it having been opened by Imperial order at the Imperial Court, and there was no significance in its having been established in the Imperial Court. In this connection the Premier reserved a full explanation which he declared would be made in the form of a written reply to the House. Mr. Ozaki next attacked the Government attitude in the last general election, in which the government interfered using its influence, pointing to the instance of the Minister of Education who is said to have given supoprt to a certain candidate of a party friendly to the Government. Mr. Okada, Minister of Education, denied the fact pointed out by the member which the Minister declared a pure unfounded fabrication.

The Opposition leader thereon pressed the Premier asking whether the Premier admitted the existence of a Minister in his Ministry who would dare to deceive the nation at the meeting of the representatives of the nation. The Premier being silent the member continued his interpellations and attacked the government measures vis-à-vis China, saying that whilst the government declared the policy of non-interference toward China it was in practice giving support to the northerners or militarist party or at least was taking such measures as to make the southerners entertain such conception, and if it was a mere prejudiced notion of the southerners the Government ought to have taken a step to make clear to the world the true aspect of the situation and remove such misconception on the part of the southerners as well as of the world at large.

After interpellations on the relation between the Premier and a certain Nishihara, alleged to have been dispatched to Peking as an emissary of the Premier on some important diplomatic mission, and other matters, Mr. Ozaki asked the Premier whether the Government believed China's participation in the war was advantageous to this country and the Allies, to which the Premier replied that he thought her entry into the war would bring some benefit in future to Japan and the allies though he did not believe it would bring any immediate or direct advantage to Japan or to the Allies, and from this belief the Government had approved the proposal of the Chinese Government which asked Japan's view about her participation in the war. Mr. Ozaki further asked why then did the government not take the lead in inducing China to participate in the war and for what reason the government recognized China's rupture with Germany and her participation in the war were productive of any advantage. The Premier refused to reply to the member's question saying there was no necessity of replying to that question because the Premier had already stated the reason asked by the member in his previous statement before the house.

After a few more interpellations on other matters, asked by the same member and replied by Baron Goto, Home Minister, Mr. Umeshiro Suzuki, a Kokuminto member, interpellated on the question of national defense. He desired to know the views of the Navy Minister whether in view of the expansion of the world's navies there was not a necessity of a fundamental change in the national defense programme of this country in order to keep pace with the progress and the aggrandisement in the strength of the world's navies. Admiral Kato, Navy Minister replied that considering the experience of the war the navy had decided on mounting all battleships in future with 12 14-inch guns and 8 16-inch guns and as regards the submarines the navy had a plan to build middle size submarines of latest type, but the Minister declined to give their number, as the matter belonged to naval secrets.

Replying to an interpellation of the same member who asked about the views of the War Minister on the question of the national defense, General Oshima stated that the Minister could not say the present condition of the national defense of the country was in a state of ideal perfection. After several interpellations were asked by Mr. Suzuki and replied by the Communications Minister on the question of shipping subsidies, the meeting closed at 4.20 p.m.

The committees on various government bills, of the two houses, met yesterday and after electing chairman and directors and listening to the official explanations on the bills submitted dispersed.

Second Day's Session of Budget Committee

The second day's session of the Committee on Budget of the Lower House presented again some lively verbal battle between the Government and the Opposition party. The session opened at 9.40 in the morning and the first member to take the floor was Mr. Suzuki of the Kokuminto.

Mr. Suzuki said he believed that it was an urgent need of the time to dispose wisely of the specie of the country which had increased tremendously, and asked whether the Government had any constructive programme along this line. Finance Minister Mr. Shoda replied to this interpellation stating that the Government had not been slow to study some methods of properly disposing of the surplus specie of the country and that among the bills presented to the Diet by the Government there could be found a number of measures designed for that purpose. After one or two other interpellations by the same member and the replies to them by the competent Ministers, Mr. Suzuki asked what the Government thought of formulating a wartime income tax. The Minister of Finance replied that the Government was giving due attention to the matter, but that the importance of the question did not allow the Government to introduce any measure in this connection at such a short session like the present. Mr. Shoda said that if the present world situation continued long the Government was ready to give special consideration to the matter.

The next interpellation was by Mr. Muto of the Seiyukai concerning the raising of America's customs tariff rates, to which the Foreign Minister answered. Mr. Muto further asked that, in view of the obsoleteness of the tariff rates of Japan, whether the Government had any plan to revise them. The Minister of Finance replied to this question saying that the Government was contemplating a tariff revision to be adopted at a proper time and that investigations were under way with that object. After a dialect between Mr. Muto and the Premier concerning the Government's industrial policy Mr. Muto turned to the Minister of Communications to explain about what the Government was doing with regards to the development of wireless telegraphy and telephone Baron Den, Minister of Communications replied that wireless telegraph was being applied to the communications between vessels and comparatively short distant places, and the proposed establishment of wireless communication between Japan and Canada was under investigation. That of wireless telephone, said Baron Den, was still in the stage of trial.

Mr. Shimada, leader of the Kenseikai, the Opposition party, was next allowed the floor. Mr. Shimada's rapid-fire-gun like eloquence, coupled with his antagonistic tone, constituted the most lively feature of the day's session. After demanding the presence of the Premier and showing his determination to exact replies from no other Minister but the Premier himself, the Opposition leader pressed for answer to his interpellation over the limitation of power vested with the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs. The Premier was more or less evasive when Mr. Shimada deplored that the Preimer should resort to such a means as writing to him in reply instead of verbally giving his answer, and the Premier concluded his reply stating that there was no more need of answering.

Mr. Shimada then turned to the Ministers of the Navy and of Foreign Affairs and demanded their explanations regarding the dispatch of the navy to the European scene of the War. Vice-Admiral Kato, the Minister of the Navy, replied that the Government dispatched a portion of the Imperial navy, not only to protect our own shipping, but also to participate in the general war programme of the Allies, and this, of course, so far as the national defence of the Empire permitted. The Foreign Minister's reply was that since Japan entered the war against Germany under the obligations of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance, it was only too proper that this country should give all the support at its command to its Ally in attaining the common and final end. He said he could assert that Japan, however, had made no promise of any kind with the Entente Allies in dispatching the fleet to the Mediterranean. In replying to the further interpellations by Mr. Shimada, the Minister of the Navy declared that the motive from which Japan sent her navy to Europe was the fact that the activity of the enemy submarines became so serious that the danger to our shipping in the Mediterranean became very grave. This situation demanded the presence of our navy there. Naturally, said the Naval Minister, it became the object of the activity of our navy there to co-operate to the fullest extent possible with the Allies in coping with the enemy in that section of the war theater.

At 12.15 the session took a recess and resumed the meeting at 1.45. Mr. Shimada continued his interpellation, now shifting his subject to the Government's policy towards China, which he said was responsible for the present confused situation in that country, and the alleged activity of a certain Nishihara at Peking, around whom some mysterious rumours have woven. Mr. Shimada accused the Terauchi Government for secretly aiding the Tuan Chi-jui party of China by going the length of sending a secret agent, arming him with a letter of introduction from Count Terauchi, and letting him influence the Chinese to decide to participate in the war by exhibiting Japan's willingness to give consent to China's proposals for her tariff reform and other things. When China was on the verge of declaring war against Germany the Terauchi Government retracted the word it had given to the Tuan Government owing to the strong opposition raised in this country against consenting to the increase of the Chinese customs tariff. This was responsible, declared Mr. Shimada, for the downfall of Tuan Chi-jui and its aftermath—the present grave situation of China. Mr. Shimada asked whether the Government was aware of the activity of this man Nishihara and if it knew what it was going to do with him. The Nishihara story was again emphatically denied by both the Premier and the Minister of Foreign Affairs as having nothing to do with the Government. As to the alleged responsibility of the Terauchi Government for bringing about the present situation of China Viscount Motono, the Foreign Minister replied that there were many causes which went towards making the condition in China such as it was to-day, but Japan had not lost the world's confidence with the present Government's China policy.

Mr. Shimada was followed by Mr. Arimori of the Kokuminto, who asked the Government what it was going to do with one of the principles of his party's platform, namely to transfer the government-monopolized industries to the people. Mr. Arimori made a number of other interpellations of lesser significance and received cordial and satisfying replies from the different Ministers. The last to take the floor was Mr. Shimizu of the Seiyukai. His interpellations were in connection with the advisability of establishing maritime banks and the need of far more adequate encouragement to the iron manufacturing industries of the country. The session came to a close at 4 o'clock.

Lower House Budget Committee Meeting

The outstanding features of the morning session of the Budget Committee meeting of the House of Representatives on June 29 were the sacrasic criticism by Mr. Machida of the Kenseikai of the Government's financial and economic programme and the announcement by Mr. Yamamoto, Chairman of the Budget Committee, to the effect that the Committee meeting would make it a principle to follow the rule that all the replies by the Government and its committee men must be given verbally and directly, and the writing of replies would be permitted only when the interpellator desired and consented, or when the reply was to take unreasonably much time should it be given verbally. This announcement by the Chairman was received with applause by the Kenseikai members, apparently considering it a censorious warning to the Premier whose refusal to give any verbal answer to Mr. Shimada's interpellation on Tuesday and Thursday about the limitation of power vested with the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs, was responsible for Chairman Yamamoto's making such announcement.

The session opened at 9.50 in the morning. Mr. Shimizu of the Seiyukai continued his interpellation about the Government's plan to encourage the iron manufacturing industry of the country. After giving expression to his belief that in order to encourage the iron manufacturing industry a protective tariff policy must be adopted, Mr. Shimizu wanted to know whether the present Government contemplates putting into practice the theory he had explained. This query was replied by the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce who said the production of iron in Japan was so small that a large portion of the iron the country needs must be imported from foreign countries and therefore that the protective tariff, if adopted, would only be harmful to the country's industries which need iron as material. After exacting a reply from the Minister of Foreign Affairs for his last interpellation, Mr. Shimizu exhibited his satisfaction.

Then Mr. Machida of the Opposition Party began to assail the Government for its financial policy, by first demanding explanation why the Government had introduced such an enormous sum of supplementary budget at the special session which gave an appearance of a hastily patched-up work. To this Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, replied that the extraordinary situation which confronted the country demanded the introduction of the supplementary budget and that the Government exercised all the care at its command in preparing the budget. The next point made the target of attack by Mr. Machida was the Government's proposal to increase the sinking fund for the national debts by 20,000,000 yen while at the same time floating various kinds of bonds. This was a flagrant inconsistency in the Government's financial policy. Moreover, continued Mr. Machida, while it might be true that the national revenue had so increased that the Government thought it a wise policy to redeem the foreign debts, what plan did the Government have for such urgent needs as the expenditures for the national defence and the national education. The Finance Minister's reply to this interpellation was that examples could be cited from history as well as from the prevailing practice of other countries to dissipate the anxiety as to the wisdom of redeeming the nation's foreign debts while at the same time floating bonds in the country. The bonds the Government had issued, however, was not to be utilized in redeeming the foreign debts, but they were for the enterprises, for examples, for the improvements in the railways and the telephone service of the country. In reply to Mr. Machida's accusation that the Government lacked definite plan in its financial policy, Mr. Shoda said that the present situation of financial world made it impossible for any government to make any definite programme and the only way left was to adapt its policy to the ever-changing needs of times.

When Mr. Machida's interpellation was over the question was raised by Mr. Nomura of the Kokuminto whether it was not contradictory to the spirit of the Constitution when the Premier refused to reply verbally to Mr. Shimada's interpellation at the previous session, and the establishment of such a precedent in the procedure of the meeting might make it a rule for the Government to evade direct reply. The Premier's reply to this question was that he thought it within the bounds of propriety as there were some precedents for doing so. This opinion of the Premier was reversed by Chairman Mr. Yamamoto's rule that while the Government might deem it convenient to give a written reply when that reply was complicated or took unreasonably much time if given verbally, but as a principle, replies to interpellations should be given verbally as far as possible unless the interpellator would be satisfied with a written reply.

The next interpellator was Mr. Takagi of the Kokuminto who asked the Government why it was averse to utilize the Government property, especially the public lands which were lying idle throughout the country. If those lands, according to Mr. Takagi, were properly and wisely utilized the country would be able to make an annual saving of about 1,440,000,000 yen.

After the luncheon recess, the afternoon session was opened at 2.10. Before taking up business the Chairman warned the Government and its committee men for being twenty minutes behind the time, eliciting an applause from the Opposition members. Mr. Takagi was allowed to continue his interpellation and put a number of questions. Mr. Takagi deplored the congestion of freights and asked Baron Goto, President of the Government Railways, what it was going to do. Baron Goto's reply was that the congested freights reached to 580,000 tons at its height, but since it has decreased by about 30,000 tons, showing the Government's efforts to solve the difficult. Among other interpellations put up by Mr. Takagi, there was one in connection with the scarcity of ship spaces for the exportation of goods from this country. Mr. Takagi did not understand why the Government allowed the ship- owners to charter or sell their vessels while the export goods were rotting at the ports on account of the lack of ship space. The Minister of Communications replied to this question by stating that the shipping companies which were subsidized by the Government never sold or chartered their vessels, but the Government was not entitled to interfere with the private firms having no connection with the Government.

The next member allowed the floor was Mr. Akita of the Ishin-kai, who was followed by Mr. Tanaka of the Seiyukai with the interpellation as to whether the Government knew the existing unfair apportionment of land tax to the different prefectures. Mr. Tanaka was satisfied with the reply by Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister.

The last member of the day to interpellate was Mr. Mochizuki of the Kenseikai, the Opposition Party. Mr. Mochizuki expressed his dissatisfation with the replies by the Government at the first day's session of the Diet when he made a series of interpellations in connection with the nation's foreign affairs. After requesting the Premier and the Foreign Minister to be prefectly frank Mr. Mochizuki exacted a number of replies from the Premier concerning the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs. Then he turned his topic to the Japanese-American relations as affected by the United States' recent advice to China. He said that in spite of the declaration made by Viscount Motono to the contrary, there existed grave misunderstanding between Japan and America, owing, Mr. Mochizuki said, to the ambiguity of the Japanese Government's China policy. A portion of the American people are, said he, in deep doubt as to the true intention of Japan towards China. The Foreign Minister retorted to this accusation by again declaring that the relations between Japan and America had never been friendlier. As to the recent incident arising out of America's advice to China, the Japanese Government approached the Washington Government with perfect frankness and as a result there now existed a most cordial understanding between the two Governments. The Foreign Minister declared that when a proper time came all would be made public, but that that time had not come yet.

Mr. Mochizuki believed that in order to promote and cement the friendly relations between the United States and Japan two things were especially necessary. They were the economic co-operation of the two countries in China and Japan's frank declaration to guarantee the independence and freedom of the Philippines which the American Government was contemplating to grant. The Foreign Minister, in replying, said that the Government was sparing no effort to bring about the first proposal of Mr. Mochizuki and asked the second to be left to the competent authorities. Mr. Mochizuki then turned his attack on the Government's China policy which he characterized as one-sided. He accused the Terauchi Government of aiding the Northern Militarist party at the expense of incurring the ill feeling of the Southern Democrats. Viscount Motono's reply was that the Japanese Government had to be strictly neutral with regard to the internal strife of China and treated the Tuan Cabinet only as the proper seat of authority of China. The session came to a close at 5 o'clock.

The full house mteting of June 28 the House of Representatives was attended by a fair-sized audience as on the previous session despite the unusual oppressive heat The House sat at 1.15 p.m. Usual reports over, the House proceeded with the day's order. Eight financial bills and three Education Department bills were explained on by the Ministers of Finance and Education respectively, and all were committeed. The bill relating to the agricultural warehouse was explained on by Mr. Nakashoji and referred to a committee of 18. The bills proposing partial revision of the regulations for the control of sericultural industry, and relating to the encouragement of iron founding industry, war time reinsurance and the suspension of the grant of shipbuilding encouragement subsidy as well as three resolutions proposing the grant of state subsidiary aid on municipal, town and village educational organs, compulsory education works and a speedy completion of irrigation works, which were all introduced by members, were explained on and referred to respective committee after a few interpellations. The House rose at 3.15 p.m.

The upper house committee on settled account and special committees on the bills for the revision of the hypothec bank, industrial bank and farmers' and Mechanics' banks regulations, the bill relating to the control of industrial property in war time, and the bill relating to the control of the industrial guilds met Thursday morning at the respective rooms and after listening to official explanations on those bills dispersed.

The lower house committees on the bills providing for a partial revision of the regulations pertaining to the Oriental Development Company, the establishment of law courts and other affairs met also on June 28 at the committee rooms of the House. After listening to the explanation of government delegates and asking a few interpellations the meeting dispersed before noon.

The Kenseikai members on June 28 introduced in the Lower House a vote of want of confidence in the ministry. The reasons for the resolution are (1) the present ministry is lacking in the support of any political party representing nation's will and wish in the House, and therefore its existence is against the spirit of constitutional government: (2) the ministry oppressed the speech of the parliamentary members, abused its power to dissolve the legislative and furthermore interfered in the general election: (3) the ministry achieved nothing contributing to the welfare of the state and nation during the past ten months since its coming into existence, but on the contrary prejudiced the national dignity and interests of the country by its diplomatic failures and other misguided administrative measures; (4) the ministry furthermore tried to evade its responsibilities for important diplomatic affairs of state by creating a special super-cabinet advisory board on diplomatic affairs against the principle of responsible cabinet. For the above enumerated reasons the Kenseikai members urge the members of the present ministry to hold themselves responsible for the violation of the spirit and principle of constitutional government and take a proper step. The resolution is signed by Messrs. Ozaki, Taketomi, Kono, Minoura, Kataoka, Sengoku, Shimada and Adachi, all Kenseikai leaders. The resolution was staged on the House's order on June 29.

The session of the Lower House on June 30 witnessed a very animated scene as the vote of want of confidence brought by the Opposition party was on the day's Order. The House was crowded with a horde of audience to overflowing. As soon as the Chair announced the opening of the session Mr. Taketomi, the leader of the Opposition, moved for a change in the Order of the Day and to take up the vote of want of confidence first, the motion being seconded by Mr. Mosuke Kawahara. The change in the Order of the Day being duly reported to the Government, Premier Count Terauchi and all other Ministers came in and took their seats in the Ministerial quarters. Mr. Taketomi taking the rostrum spoke on the resolution. The member began his speech by denouncing the present Ministry which, he said, lacked the support of any political party representing the nation in the legislature and therefore was against the spirit of constitutional government. Not only that, but such Ministry could not be expected to achieve anything to contribute to the welfare of the state and nation. From this standpoint the Kenseikai members in the last session of the Diet introduced a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry, but no sooner a member of the opposition party took the platform and proceeded to speak on the resolution than the Ministry took recourse to the dissolution of the House by asking an Imperial Rescript ordering the

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—Interest is increasingly being directed to the Allied front in Belgium. Both the Belgian and the German communiques speak of a violent artillerying there, while a French semi-official report says that the British, French and Belgian artilleries have seriously damaged the German defences from the sea to the Somme.

London, June 27.—Reuter's correspondent at the British headquarters telegraphing on June 26 says:

The effect of our long sustained pressure around Lens has become still more marked. Indeed, we are now fighting hard into the inner defences of that town. During yesterday, we advanced and occupied German trenches on the Hill 65 which became very uncomfortable since our capture of Fosse at 3 on Sunday night. The enemy fell back without offering much opposition. This movement has uncovered the enemy front trenches on the south side of the Souchez river and to avoid being enfiladed we retired from these points. Our infantry, following hard upon the heels of the Germans promptly occupied this bit of line. There is no doubt that the German confidence has received a rude shock at Messines. I have just seen a copy of order issued by General von Reiser to troops ten days before the battle which concludes as follows:

"All preparations for defence must be tested again by all troops. Every man should know of the impending British attack and must also be firmly convinced that we shall emerge victorious and are superior to the British in every way."

Symptoms of disposition to resume retreat in Lens sector does not suggest that the Hun officers are finding it very easy to convince their men firmly that they are on the points of victory, or of their superiority to the British troops.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—The French, after short artillery preparations, brilliantly attacked on Monday evening a strongly fortified crest northwest of Hurstebiso. They reached all their objectives in a few moments and captured the German first line. The French fire smashed up a German counterattack. The enemy whom the French surprised with their swiftness of attack, has sustained serious losses. The French have captured over three hundred prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, June 28.—"Le Gaulois" estimates that fifty one German divisions oppose the British on the front of one hundred and forty kilometres while 102 divisions face the French on the front of 570 kilometres. Thus the Germans are twice as strong against the British.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 28.—Reporting recent operations on the French front, Gerald Campbell telegraphs of the signs in various parts that the Germans are either nervous concerning the intentions of the French command or else are preparing to launch a large scale offensive.

A whole series of "feelers" have been extended recently by Hindenburg at various points, principally around the Laon plateau. A big effort was made to break through at Vauxaillan and it temporarily ousted the French from their short trench system on the slopes of Monkey Mountain on which it was important to both armies to possess observatories.

The French counterattacks immediately regained all the ground lost except a salient measuring a few yards.

On this occasion the German troops advanced in their shirt-sleeves and without their packs, after a terrible bombardment in which every yard of the ground had been swept. In a determined effort the "Shockers" gained the trenches which were then turned over to the seventy-eighth German infantry division, who failed when called upon for a defensive effort and were promptly ousted by the French.

Another lively affair occurred near Mont Cornillet where the Germans and French attacked almost simultaneously.

A detachment consisting of only sixty two French grenadiers and portable machinegun bearers occupied a position attacked by the Germans and not only drove off the assailants but pursued them and captured considerable length of the German trenches, in doing so killing more than 200 Germans.

Campbell concludes: "As for the difference between the French and the German systems it seems to me the French plan of having no shock troops but of training all the regiments to act in that capacity when the effort is demanded of them is decidedly better than the German method of creating special corps for special occasions."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 28.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports: All the objectives in the operations on Monday night northwestward of Foutainelexcrosedle have been attained. Our losses are slight. We drove off two strong counterattacks. We extended the gains southward of Lens and captured the positions astride the Souchez river on a front of two miles and to the depth of one thousand yards. We also occupied the village of Lacoulotte.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, June 29.—An official report says that the British have captured a German position on a front of two thousand yards in the Arras sector and have also gained south of the Souchez river, entering Avion.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, June 29.—In their brilliant victory in the Hurtebise sector of Chemin des Dames, reported yesterday, the French troops took a strong position known as the dragon's cavern. It comprised a formidable and mysterious combination of trenches with deep underground galleries reaching along the whole plateau. Numerous entrances and exits permitted the enemy to prepare counterattacks and from tunnels which reached the surface, they were able to keep up murderous machinegun fire. The infantry rivaled in courage with the chasseurs after they received an order to take the German trenches encircling the system known as "the finger of Hurtebise." The base of this system was the dragon's cavern.

As the French troops advanced they were held up a little on the left, but the opposition was soon overcome and all their objectives were obtained and held. The exits of the galleries had been practically demolished by the French artillery shells and were surrounded by the French grenadiers. The garrison, threatened by asphyxiation and by the falling in of the roof, were forced to come out with their officer leading. The men happy at their escape cried that the battle was finished and threw their caps in the air with unconcealed joy. When the French General in command saw from his observation post the men of his regiments leaping out of the trenches in fine order he cried "as brave men who are always the same as on the first day of their battle."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reports; We have made further progress southward of the Souchez river, and captured a number of prisoners. In this area, we have again advanced on a front of two miles, reaching the outskirts of Avion.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 30.—The British attacked and captured Thursday evening a forward position on a front of 2,000 yards south and west of Oppy, reports Marshal Haig. The whole objectives were gained and a number of prisoners and machine-guns taken.

"We continue to gain ground on a wide front south of the Souchez River," says the Communiqué. "We entered Avion and captured more prisoners and six machine-guns. We repulsed an enemy raid north of Cher-isy and successfully raided the enemy positions southeast of Loos."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, June 30.—Following up a violent bombardment by most lively attacks in the region of Cerny, southeast of Corbeny and northeast of Rheims, the Germans were most active at night time on the Aisne front. "All attempts were shattered by our fire," says a communiqué, "or thrown back by our counter-attacks, and our positions were maintained." The official report continues:

"After fierce bombardment Thursday evening, the Germans powerfully attacked our front two kilometres west of Hill 304 on the left bank of the Meuse. Our fire disorganized the attacks, which gained footing at some points in our first line. Another enemy attempt east of Hill 304 Friday morning was completely repulsed."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—Marshal Haig in an additional information confirms our success in the neighbourhood of Lens. We have made an important advance on a front of four miles to a depth of over one mile and captured series of strong defensive positions on both banks of the Souchez River covering Lens. We gained the whole objectives and inflicted considerable casualties upon the enemy. Our losses were slight. The enemy's positions of great sternght and of tactical and strategic importance are now in our hands.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—Marshal Haig reports that we have captured two hundred and forty seven prisoners and twelve machine-guns in the operations in the neighbourhood of Oppy southward of the Souchez River.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 1.—After a bloody defeat was inflicted upon him on Thursday evening in the region of Cerny, the enemy further attacked the positions northeast of the village, and after several fruitless attempts costing him heavily, the enemy succeeded in re-penetrating the first line of positions from which we had driven him. Southeast of Carbeny the Germans have launched a particularly violent attack on the same night and made several attempts to carry the salient of our line on both sides of the Laon-Rheims road. Waves of the assault were broken by our fire and rolled back with heavy losses.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, July 1.—It is officially announced that the British have captured a series of strongly organized defensive systems on both banks of the Souchez river covering Lens.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, July 2.—It is officially announced that continuing to encircle Lens, the British have captured the defences on the north bank of the Souchez River.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 3.—Marshal Haig in his Sunday evening communique reports that there has been considerable activity by the enemy artillery in the Scarpe valley, in the neighbourhood of Lens and north of Lys river. During the month of June we have captured 8686 Germans including 175 officers, sixty seven guns including two heavy guns, 102 trench mortars, 345 machineguns, and great quantities of other materials.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 3.—In the Cerny-Ailles sector a big-calibre shell bombardment was redoubled in its intensity towards the end of the night. Shortly afterwards a violent enemy attack was made east of Cerny on a front of five hundred metres on both sides of the Ailles-Passy road. The enemy has occupied a line of trenches levelled by shells and evacuated by the French. The concentrated artillery of the French has greatly havocked the enemy, who despite of all their efforts, are unable to push their attack further.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 3.—On Saturday northeast of Cerny the enemy renewed strong attacks, launching two attacks on Labovelle supported by a stream of liquid fire. After a violent fire the enemy gained a foothold at a salient which had been completely flattened out by bombardment. An artillery struggle continued in extreme violence throughout the Avocourt and Morthomme regions. The French counterattacked west of Hill 304, regaining a portion of the trenches previously occupied by the enemy. Simultaneously the Germans undertook a violent offensive west of Morthomme on a front of more than two kilometres. The enemy at first penetrated the first line along the whole length of the front but was repulsed in the greater part by energetic counterattacks except the western slopes of Morthomme Hill where the enemy has retained his footing.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 3.—The French briskly counterattacked on Sunday evening both sides of Ailles-Paissy road and threw back the Germans beyond the trench line which they had occupied yesterday.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 26.—On the Asiago plateau fighting was resumed yesterday. Since the night of June 15 our troops have opposed desperate efforts of the enemy who, notwithstanding heavy losses, is attempting to retake the positions recently lost.

Attacks and counterattacks are being made on the contested positions and diversions carried out at the same time by the enemy on other positions of the front, were completely stopped.

On the Carso last night we rectified somewhat the advance of our front line in the south of Versio.

The aircraft were very active yesterday. One enemy machine was brought down, falling within its own lines.

North of Asiago during the night our aircraft bombed the military works of Nebrahina and Prosece. All the machines returned safely.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 27.—The Italian communiqué issued to-day says: On the Asiago plateau in the Mount Ortigara sector, the enemy's efforts slackened yesterday. Some parts of the position on the summit which were completely destroyed and offered no shelter from the murderous enemy fire, were not reoccupied by us. We captured 47 prisoners including one officer. In the Mount Zebio sector, the activity of our patrols gave rise to short and sharp engagements in the neighbourhood of St. Lucea (Tolmino) and on the Carso and disturbed the traffic on the Brestovizza-Mohorini road.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, June 28.—Fighting yesterday was confined mainly to artillery activity, says a communique issued to-day. The bombardment was particularly intense in the Colbricon area, in Garnia, east of Gorizia, and in the Mount Faiti area. During the night of the 27th the enemy attack on Agnella pass, recently captured by the Italians on Asiago plateau, but was immediately repulsed.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 29.—The artillery struggle was fairly active on the whole front yesterday in reply to the enemy fire. We repeatedly shelled the railway station Callieo. On the Asiago Plateau the enemy concentrated a violent fire on Ognella Pass near Santa Lucia. Traffic was repeatedly interrupted by our fire. Enemy aviators displayed grea activity during the evening. They were effectively engaged by our antiaircraft batteries.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, June 30.—During the night of June 29, on Asiago plateau our advanced posts were withdrawn from Agnella pass owing to a prolonged and violent bombardment by the enemy. We occupy the eastern end of the pass. On the same night the enemy attack on our position on Piccolo, Colbricon failed completely despite a careful artillery preparation. The artillery was active yesterday on the Carso south of Versic. During the day one of our aeroplanes east of Gorizia brought down an enemy machine and forced down another. Our air squadrons effectively bombed the enemy hutments in the Monte Hermada region. During the night enemy machines dropped bombs on our lines of communication on the lower Isonzo and various localities on the northern Adriatic coast. No victims and only very slight damage was done. As a reprisal our machines bombed the enemy aviation grounds at Prescocco.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 1.—An Italian communique says: On the fronts of Centino and Carnia, the fighting yesterday was confined to the artillery. The artillery duel was more active on Asiago plateau and in the Julian front. Last night the enemy made a surprise attack southeast of Wertoiba and penetrated into one of our trenches. After a sharp fight the enemy was driven back with severe losses, on the arrival of our reinforcements. An attempted assault on our advanced post south of Versio was completely stopped.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—An Italian communique says: Our advanced posts were withdrawn yesterday from Agnella pass on the Asiago plateau, owing to a prolonged violent bombardment. We occupy the eastern end of the pass. The enemy attack at Picgolo Colbricon ended in failure.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTS

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, June 27.—Caucasus front. North West of Serdesht the Russian vanguards seized Nanila and Molialoh. In the Vistan region the Turks were driven into the mountains. The Russian advance in the Pendjivin direction is in progress, the trenches on the Abishirvanriver, South of Bana being seized. South East of Erzindjan near the Akbaba mountain the Kurds attacked the Russian positions, but were repulsed by rifle fire.

Black Sea. The cruiser "Breslau" which had not been seen on the Black Sea during 11 months, bombarded on June 25 the Russian radio station on the Fidonisi island landing there a detachment, which destroyed some of the constructions on the island. She left being pursued by the Russian men of war.

Western front. In the Zolochov direction a strong enemy party tried under artillery support to approach the Russian trenches, but was repulsed by rifle fire. South of Brzozany near Svistelniki the enemy's infantry reached after a strong artillery fire the advanced trenches of three Russian companies. They succeeded for a time in entering these trenches, but were by a counterattack soon repulsed. The enemy's heavy artillery is developing a strong fire in the Kotov region.

London, June 29.—There is reason to believe that the Russians have begun offensive at two points.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—An Austrian communique says: Russian artillerying increased in the past few days, became most intense on Friday at Koniuchy. The enemy infantry attack launched near Koniuchy was broken down.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—Apart from vague references made by the German and Austrian communiques to a renewed activity in Galicia, nothing further is reported from the Russian front.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 2.—M. Kerensky, the Minister of War, has telegraphed to Prince Lvoff, the Premier, that the Russian revolutionary army resumed the offensive on July 1.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 2.—An official report says that the Russian troops have captured Koniuchy on the Galician front taking one hundred and sixty four officers and eighty four hundred men.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 2.—A despatch from Berlin reports that the Russians have stormed the German positions eighteen miles from the Stryj front after a destructive bombardment. The Berlin despatch alleges that the Russians have been forced to return.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 3—A despatch from Petrograd says that the Russian advance continues in the direction of Zlochoff and that the prisoners now total more than sixteen thousand.

VICTORIOUS AIR FIGHT ON MONDAY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—An official statement published by the Admiralty says: Three patrolling aeroplanes engaged with ten machines of the enemy in the vicinity of Roulers on Monday. The air fight lasted for sixteen minutes, and we brought down one of the enemy planes in flames. It is believed that two others were driven down or made uncontrollable, though clouds interrupted view. Our machines returned safely.

FRENCH CRUISER KLEBER STRIKES MINE AND SINKS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, via London, July 1.—The French cruiser Kleber (7,578 tons) which was on her way to Brest from Dakar, struck a mine and sank near Brest. Thirty eight men, including three officers, are missing.

London, July 2.—A Paris dispatch says that the French cruiser Kleber, has been blown up by a mine and sunk off St. Martin on the northern coast of France. The crew numbering 308 have perished.—"Asahi."

POLITICAL TROUBLES IN AUSTRIA GROWING ACUTE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 30.—News from Austria indicates that the political and racial troubles are becoming more acute. The Czech and Slav deputies in the Reichsrath continue to bitterly attack the government and condemn the war. They demand the establishment of separate states in both halves of the monarchy as the only solution of the racial tangle. The Austrian censorship is suppressing more violent anti-government speeches and also further news of the revolutionary movement in Bohemia.

MESOPOTAMIA EXPEDITION WAS JUSTIFIABLE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 28.—The report of the Mesopotamia Campaign Investigation Commission finds that the expedition was justifiable in military enterprise, but the responsibility should be shared between the India Office and the Indian Government in connection therewith. The unworkable scope of the objective of the expedition, the report says, was never sufficiently defined in advance. The advance toward Bagdad in October, 1915, was the offensive based upon political and military miscalculations, being attempted with tired and insufficient forces and inadequate preparation which resulted in that disaster.

The weightiest share of responsibility lies with Sir John Nixon whose confident optimism was the main cause of the disaster. The others responsible were Viceroy of India Baron Charles Hardinge, Commander-in-Chief in India General Sir Beauchamp Duff, Military Secretary of the India Office General Sir Edmund George Barrow, and Rt. Hon. Joseph Austen Chamberlain, member of the War Committee of the Cabinet. The Commission point out that the last two were responsible as political heads who cannot secure complete immunity through adopting expert subordinates' wrong advice. General armament and equipment were quite insufficient. The whole system of the commissariat was badly organised. The authorities at Simla bestowed meagre attention, and illiberal treatment on the expeditions' wants during the years 1914 and 1915.

The supply of reinforcements was insufficient not only in connection with the advance on Bagdad but also in connection with relief operations. The Indian military authorities insufficiently realised from the first the paramount importance of the river and railway transport in Mesopotamia. Their responsibility was grave. Viceroy Hardinge was generally responsible by virtue of his position.

The Commissioners proceed to say that severer censure must be passed upon the Commander-in-Chief in India who not only failed to closely superintend the adequacy of medical provision but until the Viceroy's authority forced him, he declined to notice the rumours which were true.

The final conclusion of the report seriously censures the Indian Government for the lack of knowledge and foresight shown in the inadequacy of preparations and for the lack of readiness to recognise supply deficiencies.

ITALY WILL ASSIST IN PALESTINE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—A despatch to the "Daily Mail" says that Baron S. Sonnino, the Italian Foreign Minister, speaking at the Italian Chamber of Deputies, has stated that the Italian troops will participate in the now vigorous British offensive in Palestine.

GEN. ALLENBY IN EGYPT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—General Allenby has arrived in Egypt and has taken over the command of the British army in Egypt.

THE UNITED STATES TROOPS HAVE LANDED IN FRANCE

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Washington via New York, June 28.—While the epochal landing of the American troops in France was made, it can not be discussed fully. At present it is only permissible to say that the troops are a part of the regulars under the command of General Pershing, which President Wilson has directed to go to France "at the earliest possible time." As soon as the given period of training behind the front is over they will take their part on the battle front.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 28.—Reuter's correspondent telegraphing "somewhere in France," describes the arrival of the first United States contingents on French soil. Huge transports escorted by destroyers were sighted at six o'clock in the morning. Great crowds assembled as the vessels were slowly brought alongside. Troops came to salute at eight and raised cheers to which the populace heartily responded. The German prisoners who were working at the breakwater gazed astonishingly at the spectacle of the American General who is a Cuban, Philippine and Mexican veteran. He was received by the French officers in the most friendly manner, and proceeded to inspect his encampments. Stores were quickly landed. Men will land presently.

SERVICE MERCHANTMEN OF UNITED STATES

Washington, July 2.—President Wilson has delivered to the Shipping Board four service merchantmen which were seized when the war was declared. The remaining fourteen vessels are already in possession of the Navy Department.

GERMANY AGREES TO CEDE STEAMERS TO HOLLAND

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Hague via London, June 28.—An official statement of the Dutch Government says that Germany has agreed to cede a certain number of steamers now in Dutch East Indies. The value of the vessels is equivalent to that of the seven vessels which were torpedoed by German submarines on February 23. Germany also makes compensation for the crews of the lost ships.

SUBMARINES FOR HOLLAND

KOKUSAI-REUTER

The Hague via London, June 30.—The Dutch Navy Department has signed a contract with the Schedule Company, Flushing, for the construction of three submarines for the Dutch Indies.

THE LOSS OF THE MONGOLIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—The steamship Mongolia (9505 tons, built in 1903) of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Navigation Co. was sunk on June 23 as a result of striking a mine. It is stated that four British engineers and ten Lascars were killed by the explosion. Two Europeans and one Parsee passenger are missing.

RELATIONS BETWEEN NORWAY AND GERMANY STIFFENING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—The French newspapers speak of the possibility of a rupture between Norway and Germany and mentions the report that Admiral von Hintze has newly been appointed German Minister to Norway, but the Norwegian Government has not yet consented to his appointment. Therefore, Admiral von Hintze is only going to Christiana to deliver certain demands. These demands are apparently connected with the opening of a German official mail, by which a German plot against Norway has been defeated.

BRAZIL NO LONGER NEUTRAL

New York, June 29.—Brazil has revoked the decree declaring her neutrality toward the war between the Entente Powers and Germany.

SWISS AGENT OF GERMAN INTRIGUE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Berne via London, June 30.—In a debate at the National Council on the Hoffmann affair, an Italian deputy accused Croulich, a socialist deputy for Zurich, of his visiting Italy with the object of offering money to Italian socialists to oppose the war. Croulich admitted that he went to Milan and Bologna on behalf of a third party who asked him to transmit the offer of money by a person whose economic interests in Italy were endangered by the war but "the affair went no further."

WAR WILL END WHEN ALLIES HAVE ATTAINED OBJECTS

Glasgow, June 30.—The war will end when the Allies have attained their object, Premier Lloyd George declared in an address here to-day.

"We have set out in accepting Germany's challenge against civilization," he said. "If the end comes a single hour before, it would be the greatest disaster that ever befell mankind."

THE WEEK'S SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—The Admiralty announces that during the last week 2816 vessels arrived at and 2923 vessels sailed from, British ports. Twenty one steamers over 1600 tons and seven under the same tonnage have been sunk and twenty two unsuccessfully attacked.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome via London, June 29.—Shipping returns show that during the week ending June 24 583 ships arrived at and 536 ships departed from Italian ports. One steamer and two sailing vessels have been sunk.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London July 1.—During the week ending on June 24, 1088 vessels arrived at French ports, 969 sailed, and 2 steamers over and 3 steamers under 1600 tons were sunk, while three steamers were unsuccessfully attacked.

POSITION OF NEUTRAL STATES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—The position of the neutral states which is daily becoming more difficult is the chief topic at this moment. The introduction of martial law was the first indication in London that the situation has become so serious a fact which shows the rigorousness of the Spanish censorship. There is a disposition to regard as incomplete the official Spanish reasons for the suspension of the Constitution. While many other local factors have doubtless contributed toward the crisis, undoubtedly three outstanding factors are; first, the semi-rebellion among the army officers against the alleged court favoritism in the matter of promotion, and so forth; second, the political movement of the left parties which are said to be in favour of a republic and third, the extreme Socialist movement; especially in Barcelona and Bilbao which have long been the hotbeds of anarchism.

Meanwhile, Switzerland is still convulsed by the Hoffmann affair and reorganizing the department of foreign affairs regarding Germany. Norway is an object of pressure similarly like the rest of the Scandinavian states. Germany is apparently suffering, through the continued observance by the neutrals of the agreements with the allies in the matter of exports to Germany; hence the renewed pressure by Germany with the view to inspiring the neutrals with sense of fear. The submarinism having failed to intimidate, it is now resorting to terrorism by means of bombs.

The revelation that the Kaiser's couriers carry these bombs in their valises shows to what length the campaign was being carried on. The explosives discovered in Christiania show a great variety including round and rectangular bombs, firebombs, ordinary infernal machines, bombs looking like pieces of coal, fountain pens, with electric batteries attached and acid piece of explosive substance on pens, evidently intended to set things afire; also rolls and twist of tobacco, bundles of cigarettes containing pulverised carborudum which, if exploded, would ruin all machinery.

This discovery and the report that Germany intends to demand something like an apology from Norway for opening the German official mail by which the discovery was made, has created a strong resentment in Norway. Meanwhile the French newspapers call attention to the immense amount of money Germany is spending for its propaganda in neutral countries. Germany is spending more than two million francs a month. In Spain alone altogether 16 millions sterling have been spent yearly.

ITALY DENOUNCES TREATIES FRANCE TO FOLLOW

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Bonar Law has announced that the Italian Government has denounced all the commercial treaties, excepting two, under which the Italian tariff rates and duty are fixed. The French Government has intimated its intention of taking similar action without exception. The British Government is considering the subject. This action will enable the Governments to be free to make new treaties after the war.

SPAIN SUSPENDS CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Madrid via London, June 27.—The Council of Ministers has decided to suspend the constitutional guarantees. The Premier has gone to the Palace to ask the King for a decree. It is officially stated that the suspension of the constitutional guarantees is more necessary than at any time since 1873, owing to nortorious persons provoking disorders and a section of the press attacking the foundations of social order, attempting to destroy military discipline and representing Spain as if ripe for a revolution. A censorship is going to be established.

DIOSY ON JAPAN'S PART IN WAR

London, June 28.—Arthur Diosy, Vice-President of the Japan Society of London, in a lecture before the Japan Society yesterday said it is unfortunate that the press and public knew so little of the tremendous work Japan is doing in the war. The fact that there is at times a certain amount of mistrust in the minds of the people of this country as to the part that their Far Eastern ally is playing was entirely due to the machinations of the German emissaries who had carried on the work of sowing suspicion in all the far corners of the globe. Apart from the enormous importance of the capture of Kiaochow, the Japanese army by the very fact of its existence had been of the greatest imaginable service to the Allies.

In the matter of providing munitions the Japanese had saved the situation for Russia earlier in the war. Our Far Eastern ally has been like a conjuror who produces anything that the audience likes to name and she had performed the unique act in returning to Russia in her time of need nine hundred thousand rifles and bayonets captured by the Japanese army during the Russo-Japanese war. These rifles and other material were sent to Russia in a battleship and two cruisers which had previously been part of the Russian fleet and which the Japanese Government intimated need not be returned. A Russian officer had told the speaker that the rifles after eleven years of stay in Japan were cleaner and in better condition than they had ever been before. Colonel Sir William Murray who presided expressed the opinion that more should be made known of the really magnificent work that is being done by Japan.

KING GEORGE CONGRATULATES BEATTY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London June 28.—The Press Bureau announces that the King has sent a message to Admiral Beatty congratulating the Grand Fleet upon its high standard of preparedness. The Navy, says the King, has never stood in higher estimation of friend and foe before. Admiral Beatty has replied assuring their unswerring loyalty and devotion.

MUNITION MINISTER ON WORK OF DEPARTMENT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Christopher Addison, Minister of Munitions, strikingly reviewed the work of the Ministry of Munitions since it was started two years ago. The Minister paid a tribute to the courage and uncanny insight of Mr. Lloyd George, and to the unique and splendid efforts of the men and women employed, providing an imperishable memorial of the British genius and resource. The magnitude of production of explosives is instanced by the fact that Great Britain's capacity, of production in March, 1917 was four times the capacity in March, 1916 and twenty-eight times the capacity in March, 1915. The Minister mentioned that the large quantity of explosive of new kind proved most valuable, facilitating the spring offensive and saving life. A large reserve of fieldguns and ammunitions is provided and the arrangements are now working so smoothly that despite the enormous expenditure in the front, the stock of shells only decreased by seven centum after the first nine weeks of the offensive.

Regarding the supply of railway material for the Army, Mr. Addison said that altogether over two thousand miles of tracks have already been supplied while the number of the locomotives supplied is over one thousand.

The Imperial Munitions Board is now the greatest business organization in Canada, employing over 200,000 workers. The Minister further stated that Britain's output of steel which was seven million tons before the war, now is ten millions. He hoped it would reach twelve millions by the end of 1917. Steel plates of Britain cost less than a half of the cost in America and shell steel cost thirty centum less. We are now producing all tungsten we need and also supplying much toward the Allies. The reduction of the cost of shell components in comparison with last year, would be represented by the fact that we can save forty three millions sterling this year.

VALUE OF WAR PURCHASES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 30.—The value of war purchases has exceeded 700,000,000 pounds, including 200,000,000 on behalf of the Allies, according to the memorandum of Mr. Ulick Fitzgerald Wintour, the Director of Army Contracts at the War Office, on provision supplies to the army.

The present annual value of purchases is about 350,000,000 including 100,000,000 for the Allies. The purchases of the war have included 500,000,000 rations of preserved meat; 260,000,000 tins of jam; 167,000,000 pounds of cheese; 115,000,000 yards of flannel; 105,000,000 yards of cloth. It has cost six million and a half pounds sterling to purchase home woolclip and thirty-five million to purchase Australian woolclip. The control of wool has resulted in great economies to the State, estimated at thirteen millions. An instance of other economies is British hides, bought at five pence per pound below the world prices. It is estimated that the control of Indian kips has resulted in an economy of 1,125,000, and the control of jute in an economy of six and a half million.

THE COTTON CONTROL BOARD

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—A despatch from Manchester to the "Morning Post" says that the importance of the Cotton Conference to be held on June 27 cannot be exaggerated. The Lancashire cotton trade has reached its crisis. It is comparable with the great cotton famine in the American civil war. How best and equitably to distribute the small available supply of cotton in England at a reasonable price and keep mills running to alleviate as far as possible the threatened widespread of distress until new supplies can be shipped are the questions of primary importance, which demand undivided attention of employers. Operations of 400,000 bales will not keep the machinery running until the crop is available, for the average consumption of mills is from 150 to 200 bales weekly.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—It has been officially confirmed that the Liverpool Exchange will re-open on Friday under the conditions framed by the directors of the Liverpool Cotton Association with the view to avoiding all further speculations. A Board of Control will be established at once which will include the representatives of spinners, manufacturers, importers, distributors, of principal operatives' associations, and also representatives of the Board of Trade.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 29.—It is expected that the Liverpool Exchange will re-open on Friday. According to both official and private statements, the Cotton Conference has decided to form a Board of Control for raw cotton.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 30.—The features of Liverpool Cotton Futures Regulations are as follows: Firstly; trading in futures is confined to buying by spinners in the United Kingdom to cover the sales of yarn, to buying by importers against the sales of actual cotton to spinners in the United Kingdom, and to selling of hedges by importers and spinners against the purchased actual cotton for shipment to or in the United Kingdom.

London, June 30.—No transfer of open contracts to other positions is permitted except hedges by importers against actual cotton shipped to the United Kingdom and purchases by spinners against the sales of yarns. Secondly, the prices of features will be advanced or reduced time by time by the committee who use as the basis the prices prevailing in the southern states in America for American futures, and in Alexandria for Egyptian.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1.—The Board of Trade has prohibited the dealings in raw cotton except under licensewise. The conditions under which licences are granted may include the conditions regarding the maximum price, but the maximum price does not apply to the sale of the parcels of cotton, the purchase of which has previously been contracted for, so as to reduce the selling price thereof below the amount necessary to give reasonable profit. All importers and dealers in raw cotton and cotton spinners must comply with any direction of the Board of Trade regarding the sale, disposal, delivery or use of raw cotton. The rationing of raw cotton and the reduction of the output of yarn and cloth are regarded practically certain. Probably a census on the stocks of cotton yarn and cloth will be one of the first steps to be taken for control by the Board of Trade.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 1 (Delayed in transmission).—The Cotton Control Board announces that the cotton associations of Liverpool and Manchester may purchase cotton abroad without licence. The board is prepared to consider applications for licences to purchase cotton abroad, filed by spinners and others who have habitually imported cotton direct from foreign countries. Cotton spinners requiring licenses to purchase spot cotton to meet immediate requirement, must state their weekly requirements and a week's supply they held. Licences will be granted, for the present, for no more than a week's supply at one time. The Board is about to take a census of the supplies of cotton.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Liverpool, via London, July 1.—The cotton market is pessimistic. A number of prominent houses threaten to retire from trade. It is declared that if the restrictions be enforced during the period of war the market may cease to exist.

BRITISH WAR MINISTER ON QUESTION OF REPRISALS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 27.—In the House of Lords, Lord Derby, the Minister of War, dealing with the question of reprisals, has emphasized that our aircraft is daily bombing the enemy's rear. He declared on the authority of the head of our aircraft in France that he would be well within the mark if he said that for every bomb of the Germans dropped behind our line we dropped a hundred bombs behind the German lines and that our bombing was done with military object. Lord Derby thought that the whole country should associate itself with the suggestion that we should not try to imitate the German brutality. The idea of eye for eye and tooth for tooth in massacring women and children was absolutely repulsive to the British nation. Reprisals must have a definite military objective.

URGES TO ADOPT METRIC SYSTEM

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, June 27.—The general assembly of French chambers of commerce has expressed a hope to Great Britain, Japan and Russia to adopt metric system in order to promote closer economic approachment with France.

OPIUM TRAFFIC RESTRICTION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 28.—Replying in the House of Commons to a question whether communications were exchanged between Great Britain and Japan concerning the restriction of opium traffic to China through Japan, Mr. Balfour, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, stated that Sir Conyngham Greene, Ambassador to Japan, has been consulted but Japan has not yet been actually approached on the question. Other Departments concerned are presently considering proper steps to restrict the traffic in morphia.

SITUATION IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 26.—The All-Russian Congress of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, by an enormous majority of votes, has passed a resolution of war which was proposed by the block of the Revolutionary Socialists, the minority Socialists and Democrats. The resolution declares that to fight for a speedy termination of war constitutes a most important problem of the Revolutionary Democrats. The All-Russian Congress of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates recognizes, it says, that the termination of the war by defeat of one of the belligerent parties would leave intact the source for new wars; that it observes that a separate peace would reinforce one of the belligerent parties, giving her the possibility of gaining victory over other party and would not liberate Russia from the yoke of the hold of Imperialism. Consequently the All-Russian Congress blames any policy which practically directs to the conclusion of a separate peace or its prelude an armistice. The Congress also recognizes that Russian Revolutionary Democracy must by all means co-operate to increase its fighting power of the army in active and defensive action. At the same time, the resolution summons the Provisional Government to take determinate steps in order to review treaties and secure an agreement with the Allied Powers to the Russian platform of peace.

At the sitting of June 25 the All-Russian Congress of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates decided to lay wreaths on the tombs of the victims of the revolution, and to organize for this purpose a general manifestation on July 1 with the participation of all the revolutionary parties and organizations. On the same day similar demonstrations will be organized in Moscow, Kief and other large centers.

At the same sitting, the Congress voted a resolution blaming in most severe terms the action of the Maximalists planning secret preparations for demonstrations on June 11, and it was decided to institute a special committee in order to investigate such actions.

The Central Food Committee has issued a decree prescribing a requisition for rye, wheat, beans, peas and other products; also sugar and salt in all stations on the main railway to Petrograd, at wharves, gates and causeways leading to the capital.

The Ministry of Home Affairs has elaborated a project for the freedom of conscience.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 27.—The Provisional Government has published a decree abolishing the field court-martial, transferring all the military affairs to permanent military district and army corps for the prompt trial of urgent cases by a jury consisting of officers and soldiers.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, June 27.—In an interview with representatives of the press, M. Shipoff, the manager of the State Bank, declares that though he considers the situation of the State Bank to be serious, yet he can state that the present condition of bank operations is comparatively normal. The best proof of that is the present rate of discount which the bank has no intention to increase. It has also no intention to undertake any extraordinary measures.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, June 30.—It was decided at a private meeting of the Duma to-day to decline to comply with the demand for its dissolution made by the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 1.—In order to economise fuel the Government has resolved to advance by one hour normal time in all Russia from July 13.

In view of the grave crisis in Russia which needs all the moral and physical forces of the country, an order of the Minister of War prescribes summoning a special commission in order to draft a law for the mobilisation of women for the civil work connected with the war.

SITUATION IN GREECE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens via London, June 27.—The Zaimis Cabinet has resigned. The King told M. Jonnart, the Allied representative at Athens, that he agreed on Venizelos' forming a new Cabinet. M. Venizelos has arrived at Athens.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens, via London June 28.—A new Cabinet has been formed with following personnel; Premier and Minister of War, M. Venizelos; Minister of Foreign Affairs, Repoulis; Minister of Marine, Condouritis.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, via New York, June 29.—The Associated Press correspondent at Athens telegraphs that although war has not yet been declared, the Greek Government considers that a state of war exists since its advent to power yesterday. The recall of the Greek representatives from the Central Powers is imminent.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens via London, June 30.—A decree is about to be published convoking Parliament elected on March 31 last year. In Parliament the Venizelists had a large majority, and it was arbitrarily dissolved by Constantine.

Athens, June 30.—Greece to-day severed relations with Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey.

The new Greek Government, under M. Venezelos as Premier and Minister of War, has considered a state of war existed with the Central Powers since its advent to power. Venezelos had practically joined the Allies during his early skirmish with King Constantine, so an actual war declaration against Germany and her allies may now be expected. A Reuter dispatch announced last Friday that a decree was about to be issued convoking Parliament, which on account of the support it gave M. Venezelos, was arbitrarily dissolved by Constantine.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Athens via London, July 1.—The Greek Ministers at Berlin, Vienna, Constantinople and Sofia have been recalled. A state of war virtually exists between Greece and the Central Powers. It is expected that Germany will declare war against Greece.

COUP D'ETAT AT PEKING TO REVIVE IMPERIAL REGIME

Peking, July 1.—General Chang Hsun went to see the President at three o'clock this morning and informed the President that the latter must retire and that Emperor Hsuan Fung is restored to the throne.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Peking, July 1.—Much interest is aroused by the arrival at Peking of a wellknown monarchist Kang Yu-wei. He first stayed a Chang Hsun's residence but later removed to a small temple in the northern part of the city. It is stated at some quarters that his visit is connected with the movement to restore the monarchy but Kang Yu-wei declares his trip to the capital has nothing to do with political affairs.

Shanghai, June 30.—A special despatch from Canton says:

The leading Republicans who have arrived here, when interviewed, strongly condemned Feng Kuo-chang of his unwillingness to support President Li Yuan-hung and allowing Chang Hsun and other militarists to coerce the President. Former Tutuh Hu Han-min has returned from Kwangsi. Many former revolutionarists have come to Canton.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Peking, June 30.—The President's mandates accepting the resignation of Chang Yueh-tseng, Minister of Justice, and also of Ku Chung-hsia, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and appointing Chiang Yung, Li Sheng-to, and Lung Chien-chang the acting Ministers of Justice, of Agriculture and Commerce, and of Communications respectively have been issued. It is understood that the new Ministers were somewhat disinclined for being appointed merely in acting capacity whereas Wang Shih-chen has been appointed a full Minister.

Chang Yueh-tseng and Ku Chung-hsia departed toward south sometime ago. Lung Chien-chang was formerly the Director-General of Telegraphs.

Press dispatches from Peking received Sunday report a sudden change in the political situation in China and the resumption of the movement for the restoration of monarchy. According to those reports General Chang Hsun, supported by Hu Chao-tsung, Kang Yu-wei, Liang Ting-fen and other compatriots, after holding conferences among themselves on Saturday night decided to carry out their premeditated intrigue aiming at the overthrow of the Republic and the revival of the Imperial Government and the reinstation of the ex-Emperor Pu I. Early Sunday morning Liang Ting-fen repaired to the residence of President Li Yuan-hung and demanded his retirement from the Presidency. Soon after, at 4 o'clock in the morning ex-Emperor Pu I ascended the throne as Emperor of China, the restoration of the Imperial Government and the ascension of the young Emperor being formally announced at the same time. The whole city of Peking has been placed under the guard of the garrison and the troops belonging to General Chang Hsun. So far the press reports handed here Sunday evening. No report confirming the above press messages has, however, been received in official quarters up to Sunday night.

According to further press dispatches, Kang Yu-wei who is a great sympathiser of General Chang Hsun and the leader of the Conservative party, arrived in Peking on Saturday evening and seeing Chang Hsun was occupied in secret conferences with him. Immediately the restoration of the Imperial Government was decided upon General Chang Hsun, summoning all important civil and military officials of the Peking Government, at 3 o'clock Sunday morning proclaimed the revival of the monarchical government and the reinstation of the ex-Emperor Pu I. At the same time two battalions of troops under Chang Hsun were detailed to the Palace of the young Emperor at 4 o'clock in the morning and took up the duty of guarding the palace and the person of the Emperor. Subsequently an Imperial edict proclaiming the revival of the Imperial regime and the re-enthronement of the Emperor, countersigned by Chang Hsun, in his capacity as the Prime Minister of the Cabinet, was issued under date of the 9th year of Hsuan Tung. A detachment of the troops under Chang Hsun occupied the Government printing bureau and ordered the officials to print the Imperial rescript proclaiming the restoration of the Imperial dynasty and Government. Already the whole of the Guard Division and the troops of the 13th Division have joined the cause of the new Imperial Government.

The whole city is in a state of siege being strictly guarded by the troops of the new government. The traffic in the neighbourhood of the Imperial palace has been strictly prohibited and the Government telegraph office has been occupied by the troops under Chang Hsun. An envoy from Chang Hsun called on the Japanese Legation on Sunday morning and seeing Baron Hayashi, announced to him the restoration of the monarchical government and stated that the new Government will make it a policy to nurture a better relationship between Japan and China, and will also make endeavours for perfect peace and the restoration of good order in China.

The representatives of the Entente Powers in Peking pay little attention to the new turn of political affairs in China. The British authorities take an indifferent attitude toward the situation and are of the opinion that any form of government is welcome if China can maintain a perfect peace and keep up a good order. Baron Hayashi, being asked his views about the new turn of situation by the British Minister, replied to the effect that there will be no fear of any further disturbance to crop up as the result of the new development.

The sudden resumption of the monarchical government restoration movement which has been carried out with such alacrity has taken by storm the officials of the presidential office, who have been seized with a great consternation. Liang Ting-fen, who is the tutor to the Emperor, is in the presidential office and insists on the retirement of the President from his post in favour of the Emperor. President Li Yuan-hung is determined to defend the cause of the Republican Government with his life, while Wang Shi-chen, the lieutenant of the President, is powerless and remains silent apparently being at a loss what to do. The President, taken aback at the unexpected development summoned a ministerial council, to consider measures to take with regard to the situation on Sunday morning, but none responded to the call of the President. The President is in a sorry plight being practically isolated with no supporter to defend his cause.

The Imperial Government under Chang Hsun, who will assume the post of Premier, will appoint Liang Tung-yen Foreign Minister, Chang Cheng-fang Minister of Finance, Lei Chen-chung Minister of War, Wang Shi-chen Chief of General Staff, and Chu Chia-pao Minister of Interior. The appointment of these ministers have been already announced, according to later report. An address urging the resteration of the Imperial regime has been presented to the President, it being signed by Chang Hsun, Feng Kuo-chang (Vice-President), Liu Jung-ting and others. On the establishment of the new Imperial Government Emperor Pu will formally appoint Chang Hsun, Feng Kuo-chang and Liu Jung-ting Grand Councillors of State and entrust them with important affairs of state with a view to achieving the wishes entertained by the late Emperor Kuang Hsu in faithful observance of his will. The Emperor will soon issue a proclamation promising the nation a perfect constitutional government.

Chang Hsun is well known as a warm advocate of the restoration of the Imperial regime and the present movement started by him is nothing but the execution of a premeditated scheme, though it seems to have come very suddenly and taken the public quite unawares. When President Li Yuan-hung dismissed Premier Tuan Chi-jui some time ago, the Military Governors approached Chang Hsun and planned to bring a pressure upon the President by dissolving Parliament with the assistance of Chang Hsun, who seeing a fine opportunity for carrying out his cherished idea of the revival of the Imperial regime secretly conspired with Hsu Shi-chang, Tuan Chih-kuei, Tuan Chi-jui and other compatriots for the realization of the restoration of the Imperial Government, and has been since watching and waiting for the arrival of a mature opportunity.

Official reports reached here Monday confirming the earlier press dispatches that a sudden movement had been started in China to restore the monarchical form of government by bringing the former Emperor back to the throne.

These official reports say that General Chang Hsun, who is leading the movement, entered the Palace where the former Emperor, eleven years old, is living at 4 o'clock Sunday morning with two battalions of troops behind him. The general, obtaining an audience with the dethroned Emperor, urged him to consent to return to the sovereign rulership of the nation as the only way to work out the national salvation. On the other hand, a body of leading statesmen, including such men as Wang Sieh-cheng, Chiang Chao-yuang, and Li Cheng-hsi, called at about the same time on President Li Yuan-hung and counselled him to retire from the presidency. So far the President remains undecided.

Another report states that Kang Yu-wei, the scholar statesman who has been unfiringly advocating constitutional monarchy as the best suited form of government for China, arrived in Peking Sunday and appears to be secretly engaged in the activity to back the monarchical movement.

Judged from these official reports from Peking and other information received from various sources, an authority keeping in close touch with the situation in China was of the opinion yesterday that the restoration movement did not look like a well calculated scheme. Neither was this authority inclined to believe that the young ex-Emperor's ambitious will was responsible for giving life to such movement. The reason put forward by the monarchists is that no Premier can form a Cabinet able to pull the nation together under the republican form of government, and therefore the restoration of monarchy now alone will be able to save the country from endless and calamitous disorder. Whatever might be the phraseology of the contention of the leaders and backers of the movement, the authority referred to said that it was the sense of self-interest or the desire of power which actuated them to conjure up such a wild movement.

Up to yesterday afternoon no report was received in official circles as to the attitude of the Southerners. However, it is no hard task to forecast what they may do if this movement gives sign of its ever succeeding. It is being feared here that this movement may give rise to the last decisive struggle, between the incorrigible North and the South which may at last divide China into two states,—the North and the South—or more than two. The disastrous disorder that must attend such a tremendous event will be appalling.

There is, however, one thing which China cannot put out from her consideration, and that is, "what will foreign countries interested in China do?" So far the Allied Ministers in Peking are reported to be quietly watching the movement just started.

The Japanese Government is standing on the principle of strict non-interference policy toward China; because it is convinced that this policy is one of the best means of cultivating a closer relationship between Japan and China. However, the Imperial Government is receiving for some time many complaints from throughout the country for the losses and damages suffered by the continuing disorder in the continental neighbour. It is not unlikely that, should China become involved in such calamitous upheaval as feared, the Allied Governments, including of course the Japanese Government, would find it impossible to remain mere lookers-on as heretofore.

Further dispatches from Peking report the restoration of the Imperial regime has been carried out absolutely at the hands of the Imperialists belonging to Chang Hsun and his sympathisers, none of the Northern leaders having anything to do with the movement. Only they were informed by the Imperialists of their resolution to carry out the scheme. The sudden upheaval has taken aback all Chinese and foreign communities in Peking, and a great uneasiness and consternation reigns throughout the city. The Imperial palace and neighbourhood are strongly guarded by the troops whose number is being increased gradually, troops of the former guard division having joined the troops under Chang Hsun. Wang Shi-cheng is making endeavours for the maintenance of order in Peking. Chang Hsun has intimated the restoration of the Imperial regime to President Li and demanded his recognition. The President does not, however, yield to his demand but is determined to strongly oppose it. If threatened with force, the President will take refuge outside Peking.

Another Peking message says that the personal safety of President Li is endangered, but he is strongly determined not to hand over the seal of state and recognize the enthronement of Emperor Pu I at all hazards. The President has now made up his mind to stick to his post with his life which he will sacrifice for the cause of the republican government. He has issued orders to his men and instructed them to treat Japanese with respect and cordiality, declaring that he wanted to save the situation by relying upon the assistance of Japanese. Lieutenant General Aoki, military advisor to the President went to the President's office early on Sunday morning in response to the call of the President, and is still staying there with the President.

A Tienstin dispatch says that eighty Japanese troops of the Japanese garrison at Tientsin hastily left for Peking early Sunday morning, for the purpose of providing against any serious turn of the situation and to attend the protection of the Japanese interests in Peking as the greater force of the Japanese garrison there are absent from the capital having gone to Shanhaikwan for manoeuvres. In this connection, however, no report has been received by the military authorities in Tokyo up to yesterday evening, and the report lacks official confirmation.

Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister, was in receipt of a notification from Chang Hsun on Sunday morning about the restoration of the Imperial regime, but the Japanese Minister is inclined, it is reported, to observe the attitude of "watch and see" for the present. It is said the Minister has instructed his juniors to take an indifferent attitude about the situation and closely watch the further development of the situation.

Another Peking dispatch reports that the Allied Ministers held a conference on Sunday afternoon and exchanged views on the situation. The "Peking Gazette" commenting on the new state of affairs remarks that the departure made by Chang Hsun is a prelude to the split of China into two divisions, the South and North, and the country will be soon involved in a most serious disturbance.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 2.—The restoration movement, the object of which is to establish a Constitutional monarchy, is apparently by the entire military in Peking and a majority of the Northern Governors. It is understood that General Chang Hsun will be appointed Commander-in-Chief in North China and General Feng Kuo-chang, Commander-in-Chief in South China.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 1.—While it was known that a movement to restore the monarchy was afloat and Kang Yu-wei's arrival was regarded in some quarters as an indication that a coup d'etat might be attempted in the near future, the suddenness of the event has caused a sensation in Peking. The first indication that something important had occurred was the increased number of troops and gendarmerie in the streets and a strong guard was posted at the telegraph and post offices consisting mainly of General Chang Hsun's men. Moreover, the road through the northern part of the Imperial City which the late Yuan Shi-kai opened as public thoroughfare, was closed. The Emperor Hsuan Tung was placed on the Throne this morning at three o'clock. A deputation consisting of Liang Ting-fen, tutor to the Emperor, Chiang Chao-chung, Commander-in-Chief of the Troops in Peking, Wang Shih-chen, Chief of the Staff, Chen Kuan-yuan, Commander of the Twelfth Division, and Li Ching-chang, was then received in audience by the President and requested him to retire from the Presidency.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 2.—The announcement of the accession to the Throne of Hsuan Tung, though frequently prophesied recently, nevertheless come as a bolt from the blue. The censorship in Peking is holding up Reuter's telegrams, but reliable reports reaching other quarters state that the restoration of the monarchy has been planned by General Chang Hsun, the famous constitutional monarchist Kang Yu-wei, and the late acting Premier Chao-chung, who is the Commander of the Peking Gendarmerie.

Undoubtedly the lower classes and also a large majority of older officials welcome the restoration while Dr. Sun Yat-sen is said to prefer monarchy to a dubious Republic as affording a favourable opportunity to re-galvanize pure republicanism.

The attitude of Feng Kuo-chang will probably depend upon the monarchists' offers. It is noteworthy that the Southwestern Provinces, especially Canton, will raise hullaballoo, but Lu Yung-ting, the Inspector-General of Kwangtang and Kwangsi, who is believed to be a strong restorationist, will probably maintain order.

Peking, July 1.—This afternoon at 2 o'clock the boy Emperor Pu I or Hsuan Tung by his era issued an Imperial edict accepting President Li Yuan-hung's offer to restore the political power of China to the throne. Shortly after 3 o'clock another Imperial proclamation announcing the restoration of the monarchical form of government in China was issued. The proclamation taking the form of an oath was composed of the following 11 articles.

(1) The establishment of a constitutional monarchy in accordance with the will of the late Emperor Kuang Hsu.

(2) Parliament will be called and all state affairs will be decided by public opinion.

(3) There shall be no discrimination between the Manchu and Han peoples.

(4) Members of the Imperial family will not participate in political affairs.

(5) The abolition of all obnoxious taxes.

(6) Political offenders will all be pardoned.

(7) Treaties and agreements with foreign countries will be strictly observed in continuation and friendly relations with the Powers will be fostered.

(8) National institution conflicting with civilized ideas will not be adopted.

(9) The adoption of the criminal code promulgated in the third year of Hsuan-t'ung.

(10) Perfect freedom as to wearing or not wearing the cue.

(11) All officials civil and military, shall remain in their respective posts pending the promulgation of the new government organization.—"Jiji."

The Imperial mandate further promises the nation a perfect constitutional government under monarchical system and to respect the opinion of nation in carrying out all administrative affairs of state as well as the abolition of the distinction between the Manchus and Hans, the maintenance of all treaties and agreements arranged or concluded with various foreign powers by China, the abolition of stamp duty and the adjustment of all bad taxes, the repealment of the republican criminal code and its replacement by the old criminal code enacted by the former Imperial government, and other matters. At the same time, the Imperial mandate appreciates the distinguished services rendered to the state by President Li Yuan-hung and grants him a special honour by installing him as First Marquis.

A dispatch from Peking reports that on Sunday morning Liang Ting-feng interviewed President Li Yuan-hung and transmitting him the wish of the Emperor intimated the President re accomplishment of the restoration of the monarchical government, demanding in consequence the President to resign his post. President Li sternly refused the request and replied that such great matter should not be settled by a decision of a few persons and he could not comply with such request because he held the presidency of the state as the sole chief representative of Chinese Republic, hence he could not entertain the wish of the Emperor though he was always ready to quit the post any time the country and nation required his retirement.

According to later dispatches from Peking and elsewhere the personal safety of President Li Yuan-hung is ensured and there is no fear of danger to his person, perhaps as the result of the warning by the allies ministers, who after consultations about the measures to take towards the new situation have decided to give a warning to the new Government of China calling its attention not to take any action as to imperil the person of the President.

It is reported from Peking that ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui is opposed to the present restoration movement. The Chinese press observes strict reticency on the situation, making no comments nor expressing congratulation on the revival of the Imperial regime. Only the papers of the opposition group take rather pessimistic views of the situation. There is a sure indication of Feng Kuo-chang, Lu Jun tieng, and the military governors of 13 provinces to support and join the restoration movement. It is generally observed that Hsu Shih-chang will also support the restoration movement in view of his especial relation with the ex-Imperial house of the Manchus, to which he served with the spirit of sincere loyalty. But another version opines that because Chang Hsun had excluded Hsu Shih-chang and Tuan Chi-jui from his present scheme breaking his promise for the postponement of the execution of the monarchical movement made to them some time ago, the two will probably oppose his movement, should some of the military governors in the southern provinces join the southern leaders against the Imperialists, which is not altogether impossible, serious consequences are sure to follow. A perfect order and quietude prevail in Peking in spite of a temporary confusion and uneasiness felt during the excitement consequent on the outbreak of the upheaval.

dissolution of the Diet, thus muzzling the speech of the parliamentary members representing the nation. Furthermore the Ministry interfered in the last general election to bring pressure upon the opposition party, persecuting those who in public utterances denounced the Ministry with the charge of their having trespassed upon the dignity of the Imperial House.

Contrary to its fine proclamation professing to satisfy the nation with good administration declared at the beginning of its inception, went on Mr. Taketomi, the Ministry failed to do anything to contribute to the welfare and happiness of the nation during its tenure of office of full nine months. The incompetence of the Ministry is well illustrated in its failure to devise proper budget estimates for the current fiscal year, destroying the distinction between the administrative and political affairs of all departments of the Government, and making Prefectural Governors involve themselves in the current of political strife. Not only in internal affairs but also in international affairs the Ministry committed many serious blunders, especially interfering with the internal affairs of China, notwithstanding its declaration professing non-interference and improvement of relations between that country and Japan. The misguided diplomatic policy toward China has brought about a serious disturbance in China which is still going on in that country. Having found itself in an awkward situation the Ministry devised a plan to establish a special advisory organ outside the Ministry for the purpose of discussing important diplomatic affairs of state and to evade its own responsibilities. These measures of the present Ministry are absolutely against the spirit of constitutional government and responsible cabinet, but are liable to make the responsibilities of the Ministers to the state very ambiguous.

Perhaps the Ministers of the present Government are too eager to have their posts assured by resorting to such measures and evading their responsibilities for the failure of its diplomatic policy. No Ministry which was truly loyal to state and nation could be expected to take recourse to such measures. The member concluded his speech by urging the Ministers to reflect on this and answer for their responsibilities.

Mr. Naohiko Seki, a Kokuminto member, spoke against the resolution, and stated to the effect that though the Kokuminto party did not approve in principle the system of the present Ministry which lacked in the spirit of constitutional government as the Kenseikai member pointed out, his party thought it unwise to wage a political war on the Government and waste the precious time of the moment in idle discussions over the want of confidence in the Ministry. He stated that the present grave situation of the world did not allow the country to indulge in such petty questions, but the nation required to act in perfect harmony for the furtherance of the welfare of state and country by giving whole-hearted support to the Ministry, lest it should take a wrong step in the management of state affairs in connection with the situation. The member declared that the Kokuminto party had decided to support the Government as against the present resolution introduced by the Kenseikai on account of the above stated reason, and especially as it found the diplomatic policy of the Ministry quite in accord with the policy of the party. The member concluded by stating that although the Kokuminto party did not place full confidence in the present Ministry it must make efforts to avoid further political strife at the expense of the nation's welfare and for that reason the party did not approve the idea of the resolution.

The speeches of Mr. Taketomi and Mr. Seki were subject to an occasional uproar started by the members of the contending parties.

Mr. Yukio Ozaki, a Kenseikai leader, then took the rostrum and delivered a lengthy animated oration, vehemently attacking the Government amidst constant uproars of his political opponents and deafening cheers of his fellow partisans. In his usual strong and impressive oration the member denounced the Government for its diplomatic failures, its interference with Chinese domestic affairs, its intervention in the last general election, its abuse of power and violation of official discipline, and other administrative mismanagements. Mr. Ozaki attacked Baron Goto, Home Minister, in connection with the publication and circulation of secret pamphlets regarding the activities of the Japanese in Manchuria and other parts of China, which was alleged to have been published by Baron Goto at the time of the previous Ministry with a view to wrecking the good relations between Japan and China.

Referring to the dispatch of the Japanese squadron to the Mediterranean, the member denounced the measures taken by the Government, which he said would bring no good to the country and nation but sacrificing many brave men of the Japanese navy and also no insignificant expenditure. He insisted that the activities of the Japanese navy should be limited to the east of India, because the motive of Japan for declaring war against Germany originated in her duty toward her ally, Great Britain, bound by the Anglo-Japanese alliance. As the Mediterranean was outside of the zone stipulated for the protection by the Japanese navy in the provisions of the treaty of alliance, the result of Japan's activities in the Mediterranean would be only to give benefit to the Allies and bring no good to the interests of this country nor would it attain the object of protecting Japan's shipping interests in that part of the world's sea route. The Kenseikai leader spoke for about nearly 2 hours blandishing the edge of his weapon of speech on the Premier, Foreign Minister, and Home Minister. The House presented a disorderly scene during the member's speech owing to constant uproar made by the Seiyukai and Kokuminto members, which together with the loud cheers of the Kenseikai members almost deafened the audience. Still the Kenseikai leader finished his long speech undaunted and successfully with his usual eloquence and strong oratorial capacity.

Mr. Ozaki was followed by Mr. Kinya Sakamoto, of the Ishinkai, who spoke in defence of the Government opposing the Kenseikai resolution. Mr. Masayoshi Oshikawa was next speaker on the side of the opposition party, who made his maiden speech in the diet as a newly returned member, but there was nothing remarkable and impressive in the member's utterance, which only brought ejaculations and ridicule from the pro-Government camp. Dr. Uzawa followed Mr. Oshikawa and detailed the reason for his opposition to the resolution brought by the Kenseikai, mainly insisting on the necessity of harmonious co-operation of the nation for promoting the welfare of the nation in view of the grave international situation. Mr. Shimada, another Kenseikai leader, next took the rostrum and spoke in support of the resolution and denounced the measures of the present Government pointing out its unconstitutional attitude and its oppressive measures toward the freedom of speech guaranteed to the nation by the constitution. When Mr. Shimada finished his speech the clock struck six and the chair with the consent of the house extended the regulation time limit to proceed with further discussions.

Mr. Matsumuro, Minister of Justice, was then given the platform and replied to Mr. Shimada's accusation charactering it as too romantic. The Minister declared that not once since he had taken office was he obliged by any Genro or the Premier to surrender the independence of his department. Then Mr. Nakamura of the Seiyukai spoke in opposition to the resolution. He went over the records of the Okuma Cabinet with regard to the China policy and supported the present Government by asserting that it was only endeavouring to reconstruct what the previous adminisitration had destroyed. As to the accusation that the Government interfered with the election Mr. Nakamura said it was insignificant when compared with what the former Government had done. Mr. Nakamura was followed by Mr. Shimooka of the Opposition Party who denounced the creation of the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs as unconstitutional.

Foreign Minister Viscount Motono then rose and again emphatically denied that Japan was responsible for the present state of affairs in China. The Foreign Minister defended the establishment of the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs as necessited by the extraordinary situation of the time and said he believed the Board would be conducive to the better execution of the nation's foreign policy.

After Mr. Hayashi, an Independent, took the platform and denounced the Kenseikai for insulting the national will by introducing the Want-of-Confidence resolution despite the nation's verdict which was shown in the result of the election, the Premier was allowed to speak in behalf of the Government on the resolution. The Premier briefly reviewed the points upon which the resolution was based. He refuted the points of attack by the Opposition Party as far-fetched and inspired by party prejudices. In view of the gravest world situation ever confronted the nation, the Premier regretted that the Kenseikai should continue to indulge in unnecessary political disturbances by again introducing the resolution of want of confidence, and expressed his belief that any member who had the best interest of the nation at heart would never support such measure.

RESTORATION OF MONARCHY IN CHINA

Although the ex-Emperor Pu I of China has been restored to the throne by General Chang Hsun and compatriots, the "Tokyo Nichinichi" does not believe that the restoration of monarchy can be smoothly carried out, as not only the southern people, but many of the bureaucrats of the north are opposed to the restoration.

However this attempt to restore the former Emperor is a serious problem for China, and should not be treated as a mere passing event. The plan to restore monarchy has been considered by the supporters of the ex-Emperor Pu I for many years, but as they did not possess the proper power to launch the plan, the attempt was confined to rumours. But General Chang Hsun was different from other supporters of the ex-Emperor, and not only he possesses a power, but his recent political attitude made the people think that when the proper time arrives, the restoration of monarchy may be possible under the leadership of the General.

At the recent political disturbance, General Chang Hsun tried to mediate between President Li and the Tuchuns, and dissolving the Diet, oppressed the Koumin party. As the succeeding Premier he recommended Li Ching-hsi, with whom he had a very close relation, but the establishment of the cabinet under Li Ching-hsi was unexpectedly opposed by various factions, and it became almost impossible to organize the Li cabinet. In the meanwhile the President Li became only a normal president, and he lost all his power and influence, and even the southern party that supported the President began to attack him for his weak policy. The Tuchuns and the northern party were also divided into many factions, and the present condition of China became so chaotic that the whole country is separated into several different political factions.

General Chang Hsun realized that it was the most opportune moment to attempt the restoration of the ex-Emperor Pu I. The restoration has been planned by the supporters for many years and it was not attempted suddenly, and since the time General Chang Hsun arrived at Tientsin, the plan was seriously considered. Also the fact that the declaration made to announce the restoration of the ex-Emperor was signed by General Chang Hsun, Vice-President Feng, and Liu Jung-ting, proves that before making the declaration a thorough campaign was made.

However, the "Nichinichi" doubts the success of the restoration, as not only the Koumin party is against it, but even among the northern Tuchuns and bureaucrats there are many who strongly oppose the restoration of monarchy. The national tendency is not for the restoration of the ex-Emperor, but for the establishment of a sound republican government. The attempt at restoration may score a temporary success, but the paper does not believe that it will be able for the ex-Emperor and supporters to establish the monarchy on a sound basis.

INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE AND JAPAN'S EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

It has been decided that the Educational Investigation Committee will be placed under the direct supervision of the cabinet, and slight changes in the organization of the Committee will be effected. The "Tokyo Asahi." says that the Educational Investigation Committee has been regarded as a trouble-some organization. It sounds strange that an institution for the educational investigation is regarded as troublesome and useless, but the "Asahi" declares that such a tendency is natural in Japan where the Minister of Education is always an insignificant member of the Cabinet.

Under Mr. Takata, former Minister of Education, many changes and discussions were brought out for the Educational Investigation Committee. Mr. Okada, present Minister of Education, is opposed to the plan of his predecessor, and consequently, Mr. Okada found it necessary to plan some changes in the Investigation Committee.

At this moment, Mr. Okada found that Count Terauchi, the Premier, is advocating the policy of placing everything under the direct supervision of the cabinet, and the Minister of Education brought out the plan of putting the Educational Investigation Committee under the direct supervision of the cabinet. Count Terauchi who believes in the military system of education, willingly consented to the plan of Mr. Okada.

In making the change, Mr. Okada declared that in order to plan for the education after the war, it is necessary to undertake the educational investigation on a larger scale. He further states that the change of the educational policy is necessary after the war. The "Asahi" points out that the educational policy of one nation should not be changed whenever a war takes places. While the present war is causing changes and influencing every form of human activity, and there is a certain point in education which has been effected by the war it is not necessary to change the general educational policy of a nation. In England, Mr. Lloyd George is planning the improvement of the educational system. Such improvements according to the progress and changes of the world are necessary, but Mr. Okada does not think of such improvements. The change of the Educational Investigation consists of only the following three items, (1) It is to be placed under the direct supervision of the cabinet, (2) its name will be changed to Special Educational Investigation Committee, (3) the number of the members will be increased to thirty five.

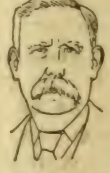
The "Asahi" says that such a plan is utterly meaningless. The educational system of the country is under the control of the Minister of Education, and what benefit can be obtained by placing it under the direct supervision of the Cabinet? Such a plan shows the insincerity of the officials of the Department of Education to faithfully consider the improvement and development of the present educational systems of the country.

TO IMPROVE RAILWAY SYSTEM OF MANCHURIA AND CHOSEN

The plan of the Government to place the Chosen Railway under the control of the South Manchuria Railway, says the "Jiji" will facilitate the better railway administration, but the paper states that to improve the railway system of Chosen and Manchuria, it would be much better to sell the Chosen railway to the South Manchuria Railway, and place the whole system of railways under purely business administration. The "Jiji" is opposed to the plan of making the Governor-General, a military officer, head of the railway system.

The Government plans the changes of the administrative system of Chosen and Manchuria, and it is reported that the Government intends to put the Japanese Consuls stationed in Manchuria out of the influence of the Foreign Office, and place them under the direct supervision of the Governor-General. If the Government really plans such a change, the paper can not understand the reasons for making such a change.

In the past the Government policy towards China has been always characterised by disagreement between the diplomatic officials and military officers. There has been the tendency that the diplomatic officials have been always oppressed by the military power. The failure of the Government in dealing with China, has been always caused by disagreement in the Government, and the constant friction between the diplomatic officials and military officers.



The military officials are enjoying enormous influence in the Japanese Government, and almost all cabinet Ministers in the past suffered from the oppression from the military influence. Count Terauchi, the present Premier being a military officer, the "Jiji" hopes that he would be able to control the military officials and bring harmony in the Government.

But according to the reported change the Government intends to make in the administrative system of Chosen and Manchuria, it is evident that the diplomatic affairs will be placed in the hands of the Governor-General, an army officer, who will also control the railways.

Manchuria is Chinese territory, and diplomatic affairs arising in the territory should be handled by the Foreign Office, and to attempt to make the Governor-General supervise the diplomatic affairs of the territory is absurd. The "Jiji" says that such an attempt will not only hurt the feeling of the Chinese, but will also cause fear and doubt in the mind of the people of a third nation.

NEW TOWN HALL OF YOKOHAMA

Favoured by fine weather, the ceremony of opening the new Town Hall of Yokohama built in commemoration of the opening of the port to foreign trade fifty-nine years ago came off without any hitch on July 1st. There were over one-thousand persons present in a splendid and spacious auditorium. Shortly before 2 o'clock the ceremony was opened by Mayor Ando, and the assemblage rose on its feet as the band struck up the national anthem, Kimiga-yo.

Chief Engineer Yamada, who reported on the work of construction was followed by Mayor Ando, who said, when one thinks of fifty-nine years ago, one seems to belong to another world. But in order to make Yokohama really adapted to the world's traffic, many years of common efforts should be required.

Premier Count Terauchi was unable to be present, but his address was read by Governor Ariyoshi. He fervently hoped the citizens of Yokohama would unite their efforts for the maintenance of the prestige of Yokohama in the world's commercial warfare.

Marquis Okuma, ex-Premier, rising amidst prolonged cheers, told the audience that being able to be present at the ceremony, his heart was filled with varied emotions. Personally, he had close connections with Yokohama. Five years after the appearance of Commodore Perry's squadron in Yedo Bay, treaties with five Powers were concluded in 1859, and four years later the Imperial regime was restored. When the American warships appeared off Yokohama for the first time, the Marquis, then Mr. Okuma was only fifteen years old. Then Yokohama was only a small fishing village. Nobody could prophesy the wonderful progress it was destined to make in a little over a half-century. At the time of opening Yokohama to foreign trade, samurai were not allowed to bear swords within its gates. But English and French garrisons were present there, ostensibly for the protection of their own nationals. While the entire Europe is embroiled in the present gigantic war, Yokohama is able to enjoy unprecedented activity in trade, inasmuch as Yokohama has hitherto greatly contributed to the development of Japan's foreign commerce. One thing specially noticeable is the introduction of western civilization through Yokohama. Acting as a grateway for such introduction, Yokohama had done meritorious services for the improvement of national institutions and productive industries. The position of the Japanese at large and citizens of Yokohama in particular via-a-vis foreign representatives and merchants has since greatly risen up. As he has been interested in Yokohama, he was doubly gratified with the completion of the new commemoration Hall, and wished Yokohama every success in the future.

Prince Tokugawa, President of the Upper House and legitimate successor to the Shogunate, remarked in his congratulatory address that the new Town Hall was a very suitable memorial of the opening of Yokohama to foreign trade, while adding another ornament to the City.

Governor Ariyoshi of Kanagawa Ken had no doubt that the new Town Hall would not only give substantial convenience, but also furnish the citizens of Yokohama with spiritual benefits. Yokohama had been opened to trade, in order to have intercourse with foreign Powers, and the new structure implies Japan's earnest desire to enter into still closer trade relations with them.

Sir Conyngham Greene, British Ambassador, sent a congratulatory address, which was read by Mayor Ando. Great Britain is not behind other Powers in having keen interest in the progressive development of Yokohama. In the name of His Britannic Majesty's Government, the Ambassador was pleased to extend his heartiest congratulations to the Mayor of Yokohama on the occasion of the opening of the Yokohama commemoration Hall and also wish the City of Yokohama continued prosperity. Mr. Chas Bastin, doyen of the Consular body, declared the Commemoration Hall would serve as a stimulus for the conviction in Yokohama's future, while signifying its splendid development in the past. Descendants of Japanese and foreign residents of Yokohama will see therein a reminder of the services rendered by their ancestors for the progress of Yokohama. On behalf of his colleagues, Mr. Bastin hoped the opening ceremony on Sunday would mark another epoch in Yokohama's progress and development. Mr. Alex. Cumming, Chairman of the Yokohama and Tokyo Foreign Board of Trade, said that extensive trade arrangements in Yokohama, regarded as rather too much some years ago, would be felt insufficient before long, even without the great war, and asserted from geographical and natural conditions that the entire frontage between Sugita and Kawasaki ensured sufficient qualities to maintain Yokohama's position as a great trade port.

Mr. M. Ono, representing the contributors to the construction fund, looked forward to a centenary celebration on a larger scale. Mr. C. Ohama, President of the Yokohama City Assembly, insisted Yokohama should not be content with the existing arrangements, but ought to strive for further progress and development, in view of the immense situation at stake. Mr. K. Otani, President of the Yokohama Chamber of Commerce, predicted the prosperity of Yokohama as a leading port of the world could not but imply that of Japan in general, and Yokohama should consequently spare no effort for its steady development.

A grand civic dinner took place at the Grand Hotel 6 p.m., when about 60 Japanese and foreign notables were present as guests and over 140 residents as hosts. In response to Mayor Ando, Marquis Okuma and Prince Tokugawa spoke in appropriate terms. The night portion of fireworks was given at the front of this assemblage, and the Bund and neighbourhood were thronged by spectators from other parts of the town and adjacent districts.

Besides exhibitions of products made in Yokohama on view in the Memorial Hall and historical documents and articles in the old Y.C. and A.C. house, baseball games in the Yokohama Park under auspices of the "Yokohama Boyeki Shimpo" was a prominent feature of the day. In a match with the First Kanagawa Ken Middle School, the Yokohama Commercial

SIGNOR ROSI SCORES AS GASPARD THE MISER

A tremendous success was scored by Signor G. V. Rosi in the part of Gaspard the Miser in Les Cloches de Corneville, three-act comic opera by Planquette, which is now being staged at the Rosi's Opera Comique, Akasaka Mitsuke. It is to be remembered that Signor Rosi made a reputation in London as Gaspard the Miser almost ten years ago. At the Alhambra Theatre, Signor Rosi played Gaspard more than six months continuously, and he was the mainstay of th excellent company. While Mr. Rosi has not played the part for almost ten years, in taking the part again, he found himself still able to perform the part just as well as ten years ago. In his part he is so above the others, that in some scenes he predominates others on the stage who become mere backgrounds for Gaspard the Miser.

However in Les Cloches de Corneville he has the excellent support of Miss Hara, Mr. Taya, the new tenor of the company, and Mr. T. Ishikawa, the Musical Director, whose skilful interpretation of the music made the success possible. It is not necessary to say anything about Miss Nobu Hara who is well known to the music lovers of the country. Mr. Taya appeared on the stage only one month ago, but his natural clear voice, and musical talent have shown a wonderful development under the direction of Signor Rosi, and he is one of the main features in the present opera. Mr. Ishikawa, who recently succeeded Mr. Takeuchi as the Musical Director has begun to learn the delightful art of directing an opera company, and in Les Cloches de Corneville, he directs so well and so accurately that the whole company is made to give their best all through the four scenes.

In Les Cloches de Corneville, Mr. Shimizu takes the part of Marquis Henry of Corneville, but the part does not suit him, although his singing is excellent, Mr. Shimizu is a comedian, and when he takes a comic part like General Boom, he is at his best, but when he plays a serious part, he seems to be out of his elements. However his good voice and singing are always appreciated by the audience. Miss Hara, while she has not proved well in the present piece, is an extraordinary good actress when she, as Serpolette finds herself as a Marchioness. The sudden rise of a village maiden to the position of Marchioness is well pictured by her. Mrs. Shimizu plays the part of Germaine, and except when she does not force her voice too much, she carried herself excellently well, and especially in the Third Act, she is exceptionally good.

The principal casts of the opera are as follows:

Serpolette ..... Miss Nobu Hara.
Germaine ..... Mrs. S. Shimizu.
Henri (Marquis of Corneville) .....
..... Mr. K. Shimizu.
Grenicheux ..... Mr. R. Taya.
Bailli ..... Mr. K. Hotta.
Gaspard (Miser) ..... Mr. G. V. Rosi.
Notary ..... Mr. S. Moghi.

The first Act is pretty, and in the opening Miss Hara sings a lovely solo, and she is followed by another by Taya. The sudden appearance of Henry, Marquis of Corneville and the surprise of villagers in finding a stranger, hold the attention of the audience in the first scene of the First Act. The scene at the Fair where Serpolette, Germaine and Grenicheux become the servants of Marquis Henry is beautiful.

The Second Scene is the feature of the whole opera. The stage scenery pictures the abandoned castle of Corneville, into which Marquis Henry enters with his servants to find out the origin of the ghostly appearance in the castle which made the people afraid to enter the castle for many years. In the castle, Henry finds that Germaine was the girl he saved from the sea some years ago, but Grenicheux the fisher-boy pretended that he saved Germaine, and also that Serpolette is the Marchioness who was placed under the charge of Gaspard the Miser.

The mystic entrance of Gaspard into the castle in the dark of night, and his skilful manoeuvre to make the people believe that some ghostly things are inhabiting the castle, are excellently done by Mr. Rosi and the electrical arrangements. Gaspard counts his horded gold in the seclusion of the castle, but he was startled by the sounding of the Castle bell which announces the return of Marquis of Corneville The sudden discovery drives Gaspard insane. Mr. Rosi proves in this part that he had rightly won the reputation in London as Gaspard.

In the Second Act, Mr. and Mrs. Shimizu sings several lovely duets which were repeatedly applauded by the audience.

The Third Act is the festival in honour of the return of the Marquis of Corneville, and Serpolette appears as Marchioness. But Gaspard comes out bringing a document which proves that Germaine is the Marchioness instead of Serpolette. Germaine also learns that it was not Grenicheux who saved her from drowning but it was Henry the Marquis. Serpolette again becomes a common village maid. Marquis Henry and Marchioness Germaine agree to marry when the bell of the Castle rings to welcome the owner of the castle.

In the Third Act, Mrs. Shimizu and Miss Hara are excellent, and many pretty voices are heard in the act.

On the whole the present bill at the Rosi's Opera Comique is one of the greatest success of the company, and the beautiful music which characterizes the opera is well rendered by the orchestra under the direction of Mr. Ishikawa. However the first honour of the success of Les Cloches de Corneville rightly belongs to Signor Rosi who so skilfully takes the part of the Miser.

School was victorious by 13 to 3. A contest between picked Yokohama men and those from Kobe, specially coming for the occasion, was most exciting. Players on both sides were largely old Keio and Waseda stars, Ishikawa, formerly of Keio pitching for Kobe, and Kato, late Captain of Waseda, acting as its short stop. Fortune at first favoured Kobe, but Sugase and Higo of Yokohama turned the table by big hits, the result being 6 to 5.

JULY'S BILL AT THE IMPERIAL THEATRE

The Imperial Theatre offers three one-act and one two-act plays for the first half of July, and in all four plays, the actresses of the Theatre take the leading parts, with only the assistance of a few old school actors.

In criticising the bill at the Imperial Theatre during the months when the actresses take the principle parts, allowance should be given, as it is almost an impossibility to select three or four different plays, in which leading parts could be taken by the actresses.

The three one-act plays are "Kokorono nazo Chugino yeawase," "Gi-o", and "Udewa" (translation of Bracelette by Swatow). The "Kokorono nazo Chugino-yeawase" is a play of a familiar plot woven around the loyalty to the Feudal Lord, and there is nothing remarkable in the plot, and the play was fairly well performed, thanks to Tozo, an old school actor of the Imperial who takes the leading man part.

"Gio" is a beautiful tale of women's jealousy, but to the actresses who took the leading parts, the piece was a little too difficult, and in places, the piece became dull and uninteresting. "Gi-o" and her sister "Gijo" become Buddhist nuns and instead of praying for their own salvation, they pray for revenge upon "Hotoke-gozen" whom they believe to be their rival who stole the affection of Kiyomori. One evening, "Hotoke-gozen" visits the two sisters at their secluded house in the mountain, and begs to be allowed to become also a nun. Touched by the sincerity of her wish, "Gi-o" confesses her ill-feeling against "Hotoke-gozen." Soldiers of Kiyomori arrive to bring back "Hotoke-gozen" and as she leaves with the soldiers, the two sisters doubt the true heart of "Hotoke-gozen." But suddenly the soldiers again return to the hut and inform the sisters that "Hotoke-gozen" cut her hair in the "Kago" in which she left the hut for the palace of Kiyomori.

Namiko, Hideko and Fusako play well in their respective parts, but they are not yet experienced in the art and they are unable to keep the interest of the audience. The stage settings, however, are excellent, and the dreamy and fairy characteristics of the piece are well reproduced on the stage.

"Udewa" is a kind of comedy, success of which entirely depends upon the clever and comic actings of those taking part in the piece, and while they did their best, the actresses and actors failed to bring out the principal points of the comedy. Their failure, to some extent, may be due to the faults of translation. It is regrettable that this excellent comedy was not properly interpreted by the actors and actresses.

The comic feature of the play lies in the peculiar and forward nature of Alice, and the comic circumstances her husband puts himself to by his own well intended overtures to the Governess.

The last of the bill "Meisaku Kirikomeno Akebono," is the principal play of the entire bill, and is a story of complicated love affairs, in which two girls are persuaded to marry men other than of their own choice. In this play Miss Ritsu Mori takes the part of "Osen" the leading woman, and she and Tozo carries the play well throughout the two acts. However the two lacked the necessary supports from other actresses, and dull moments were felt by the audience.

As a whole, the present bill may not be a great success, but without the help of the experienced old school actors, it is too much to expect a brilliant success from the actresses of the Theatre. As a summer bill, the variety of plays, and the fact that three of the plays are one-act affairs, are delightful.

NEWS & NOTES

Mr. Kamesaburo Yamashita, president of the Yamashita Steamship Company, has offered the sum of 5,000 yen to the Naval Department to be distributed among the officers and seamen on board the Japanese squadron on active service in the Mediterranean.

The authorities of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha are now conferring on the application from the seamen for the same protection and treatment as are given in the case of a wartime charter of the Government, in consideration of the increasing danger in the European line.

The holding of dog shows is prohibited by regulations recently published in the "London Gazette." Anybody who finds a stray dog must immediately hand it over to the police or return it to the owner. It is an offence to keep it. If the dog is not claimed within three days the police may destroy it.

The increased tariff of commutation tickets of the Yokohama Tramways came into force Tuesday. During four days since the announcement of the new tariff over 410,000 commutation tickets were sold until midnight on Monday. These and other old commutation tickets will be effective until October 15th, and thereafter the balance must be paid.

Mr. D. E. Douty, General Manager of the U. S. Conditioning and Testing Co., New York, who has been touring through China, is expected at Yokohama toward the end of July. Prior to his departure for home, he will be given a farewell by Mr. Shido, Chief of the Yokohama Silk Conditioning House, and local silk merchants.

It is reported that the Yamanashi Prefectural Office's Sanitary Bureau has decided to establish a nursery for fire-worms. This strange but scientific scheme is expected to have a preventive effect against the epidemic malady in Yamanashi prefecture, 'Schistosomiasis japonica'. The germs are, according to Dr. Miyajima's special investigation, developed in the interior of a shellfish, 'Miyairi'; whose flesh serves as good nourishment for the larvæ of fire-worms.

In view of the unusual frequency of suicide of late committed by young people in this country on the volcano Asamayama in Nagano prefecture which is the favourite resort for the love-sick or the people who have lost interest in life, the prefectural authorities concerned are reported to be contemplating to post a police force on this dreary mountain in the near future to prevent further incidents.

A hall for "No" performances will be erected in Uwosaki town in Hyogo prefecture for the benefit of Mr. Tsunenori Hattori, a master "No" performer, as well as for the purpose of encouraging this unique, noble play, by Mr. Kentaro Kawachi, a war millionaire of the locality, at the cost of 20,000 yen. The construction work of the proposed building is expected to be started from September next.

The Kanagawa Kencho has been approaching the Government Railway Board for the establishment of a small park in front of the Sakuragi-cho Station. The Yokohama authorities propose to erect a fountain there, besides planting trees. If their plan be approved by the Railway Board, a few houses on the river-side opposite the Station will be ordered off. The reconstruction of old station premises are now going on with despatch.

The Nagoya Municipality's health-board bought the other day 43,544 rats for microscopic examination at one yen per head from Tajiro Tanaka and Ichimatsu Tanaka, citizens of Nagoya; but it was discovered on Monday that the rats were brought from Tokyo by the above said two men and some others, who are said to have begun to collect them since last February, and the guilty jobbers were soon arrested by the police.

The Scientific Laboratory has decided to send Dr. M. Nishikawa, of the Tokyo Imperial University, and Mr. G. Asabara to America in order to prosecute their studies and it is expected that some more scholars will be sent abroad next year. The officials of the Laboratory held a conference on Tuesday, when the meeting formally decided to purchase a part of the ground owned by the Sugamo Insane Asylum as the site for its buildings.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE IMPERIAL DIET

Tuesday's session of the House of Representatives was no exception in presenting a series of loudly animated scenes during the debates on a number of motions introduced by both the Seiyukai and the Kenseikai. On the motion by Mr. Yokota of the Seiyukai, Mr. Ozaki, leader of the Opposition Party, was demanded to retract some of his utterances of an extreme nature which he poured out in speaking in support of the resolution of want of confidence in the Terauchi Government at Saturday's session. Mr. Ozaki's refutation against this motion and refusal to retract what he had declared on technical ground aroused the contending parties to an angry excitement and no less energetical uproaring from the Kenseikai, at last forcing the Speaker of the House Mr. O-oka to anounce a recess to facilitate the settlement of the dispute out of the House. Another vociferous scene was the debate on the motion demanding that the interpellation by Mr. Higuchi of the Kenseikai and placed on the day's order concerning the secret meeting at the previous session be withdrawn. In both cases the Opposition Party lost the day.

The session opened at 1.20 p.m. The first motion was put by Mr. Yokota of the Seiyukai. Taking the platform, Mr. Yokota criticized some of the hot words uttered by Mr. Ozaki of the Opposition Party against Baron Goto, Minister of Home Affairs, last week, such as "an agent of German spies." Mr. Yokota declared that such utterances, especially by the leader of a party, was a disgrace to the dignity of the Imperial Diet, as well as an abuse of the freedom of speech and demanded that Mr. Ozaki retract what he had said. Mr. Ozaki, also from the platform refused to comply with the demand by explaining that, though he might have been indiscrete in his phraseology, the charge he made against the Home Minister was true, basing his contention on the false stories of German invention contained in the secret pamphlets which the Minister circulated with a malicious intent to wreck the former Administration. During the speeches by Mr. Yokota and Mr. Ozaki, the contending parties to the motion strived to drown each other by making louder hues and cries against the opponent speakers.

At last when a vote was taken the motion was won by 192 against 92. This result of the vote did not succeed in bringing Mr. Ozaki to his knees. The Kenseikai leader refused to comply with the motion on a technical ground, demanding that, though he had always respected the verdict of the House in his twenty years' parliamentary life, a legal prescription for the House taking such measure against him be pointed out. This stubborn attitude of Mr. Ozaki further exasperated the Seiyukai and other pro-Government parties and one of the most vociferous scenes since the opening of the present session ensued. Mr O-oka, the Speaker, told Mr. Ozaki that the motion was put to the vote in accordance with the Article 78 of the Parliamentary Rules and ordered the latter to respect the resolution of the House. Coming out in aid of Mr. Ozaki, more than a half dozen of members of the Kenseikai emulated with one another in defending their leader and denouncing the Speaker for his unfair attitude. During this deafening disorder, Mr. Ozaki, seeing his hopeless straits, announced that he retracted his words as the motion demanded.

Mr. Ozaki's announcement, however, was hardly audible to the majority of the members in the hall as it was made amid the dinning disorder. The Speaker and the members of the hostile parties, dissatisfied with this announcement of Mr. Ozaki, demanded that he take the platform and retract formally what he had said from there. This demand against Mr. Ozaki again caused a riotous scene, several members taking part in the ensuing hot and excited debate for and against the demand. At length the Speaker saw the wisdom of settling the dispute out of the House and announced that the House would go on a recess for a few minutes.

When the session was resumed at 3.35 after a recess of about an hour Mr. Ozaki took the platform and formally retracted his utterances. Then another motion was introduced by Mr. Morita of the Kenseikai demanding that Baron Goto, Minister of Home Affairs, also retract the words the Minister had employed in replying to the charges made against him by Mr. Ozaki. When the motion was seconded and passed, the Home Minister did not hesitate a moment and frankly declared from the platform that he was more than willing to comply with it and retracted what he had said.

The next motion was introduced by Mr. Uzawa, leader of the Seiyukai. Mr. Uzawa moved that Mr. Higuchi of the Kenseikai withdraw the interpellation introduced by him and which had been placed on the day's order. Mr. Uzawa was against allowing the interpellation on the ground that what the Opposition member was going to question was connected with the diplomatic secret of the country and that it was not proper for any member to indulge in such queries for partizan purposes. After Mr. Higuchi's refutation of the Uzawa motion a number of members from the contending parties spoke in favour of and against the motion. When finally pros and cons were counted, Mr. Uzawa's motion carried the floor, and Mr. Higuchi expressed his consent to comply with the verdict of the House.

Mr. Mochizuki of the Opposition Party was then given the platform. The Kenseikai member made a lengthy interpellation with regard to the Government's diplomatic failure, as he alleged it to be, in connection with the settlement of the Chang-chiatung affair. Mr. Mochizuki was replied to by the Foreign Minister Viscount Motono who declared that he was sorry that Mr. Mochizuki could not reconcile his view with that of the Government's which the whole nation, the Minister was convinced, approved. Mr. Koyama of the same party next took the platform and put an interpellation on the Government's suppression of the freedom of speech. He was replied to by the Premier in an usual manner. The last member to interpellate was Mr. Nemoto of the Seiyukai who asked the Minister of Education about the aid and support that ought to be accorded to primary school teachers. The session came to a close at 6 o'clock.

The Sectional Committees of the Lower House on the supplementary budget estimates for the Foreign Office, the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, the Home Department and the Communications Department and Railway met Tuesday morning and resumed interpellations on various subjects, carried forward from the previous day's meetings. Interpellations pertained mainly to subjects concerning administration in Chosen, the proposed purchase of the Yokohama-Hachioji Railway, the amalgamation of the Chosen Railway with the South Manchuria Railway, etc. Replies to the interpellations were given by the Ministers of Home Affairs and Communications. The meetings came to a close about noon.

The Special Committees of the same House on Bills relating to the flotation of telephone work loan and Chosen enterprise loan, the revision of the Oriental Development Company regulations, the war time reinsurance law, the law for the encouragement of iron industry and other Government Bills held their meetings yesterday morning. After interpellations and replies by the Government Delegates the meetings dispersed about noon.

At the meeting of the Lower House Sectional Committee on the supplementary budget estimate for the Foreign Office held Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock during the recess of the session of the Lower House. Mr. Shidehara, Vice-Foreign Minister spoke in detail on the items for which votes were asked for the department. The official explanations over, Mr. Kotaro Mochizuki, of the Kenseikai, raised an interpellation about the revival of the monarchical movement in China. Replying to the member's query, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, stated that the resumption of the monarchical movement was an event which attracted a keen attention of the public at large, especially on account of its unexpected suddenness, but because the affair was, after all, an internal question and pertained to only domestic interests of China, the Japanese Government had nothing to do with the matter and had to take an observing attitude. The meeting was brought to an abrupt close owing to the resumption of the business of the house.

The interpellation stage of the general meeting of the Lower House Committee on the Supplementary Budget was closed with the Saturday session of the Committee when further questions were asked by the Opposition members, Mr. Mochizuki again dwelling on the dispatch of the Japanese warships to the Mediterranean.

At the meeting of the sectional committee for the Army and the Navy Departments, the Ministers of the Army and the Navy explained on the items of claims of the respective Departments placed in the supplementary budget. Mr. Mochizuki, of the Kenseikai, asked the War Minister whether the Government was going to abolish the system of military administration in Tsingtao. The War Minister replied that as the place was still under military occupation it was placed under the military administration for the time being, but though military in name it was practically the same as civil administration, and that the Minister expected the time would come soon when the present system will be abolished and be replaced by pure civil administration. Mr. Mochizuki, turning to the Minister of Navy, asked whether the construction of six destroyers placed in the estimates for the Navy Department was for the purpose of repletion of the warships in connection with the dispatch of the destroyers to the Mediterranean. The Navy Minister replied that the construction of those new destroyers was partly intended for that purpose, in supposition of some damage or loss accruing, but there was no fear of the dispatch of those destroyers to the Mediterranean causing any deficit in the strength of the coast defense of the country. The Kenseikai member again asked whether the dispatch of the destroyers to the Mediterranean was not inconsistent with the spirit of the Imperial Rescript of the declaration of war against Germany. Replying to this Admiral Kato stated that he did not think the dispatch of the destroyers to the Mediterranean was in any way contradictory to the spirit of the declaration of war on Germany, which in the Minister's opinion was not of so narrow a comprehension. He said that the sphere of joint operation of Japan and Great Britain in the present war has assumed a remarkable change since the declaration of war on Germany. Consequent on the extension of the sphere of co-operation and its significance since the warships of the Imperial Navy were engaged in active movement not only in the Far Eastern waters but also in the North and South American waters, the North and South Indian Ocean and the Australian waters, and in future they would be detailed even in the direction of the Atlantic Ocean when such necessity occurred.

At the meeting of the sectional committee on the Supplementary Budget for the Finance Department, Mr. Seinen Takagi, of the Kenseikai, questioned the Finance Minister about the measures for the disposal of the surplus funds of the previous fiscal year, the compilation of the general budget for the next fiscal year, the apportionment of the naval repletion funds for the next and the subsequent financial years, and the Government loan policy. Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, replied to the member's interpellations in detail and stated that the Government was making efforts for making investment in foreign markets as a means of disposing of the accumulating specie which was gradually increasing, this of course being a temporary phenomenon brought about by the abnormal situation consequent upon the war in Europe, and that the Government considered it the best and wisest way to employ the accumulating funds for the redemption of the foreign loans. Replying to the question of Mr. Kakugoro Inouye, who asked the Government's views on the subject of the regulation of the money situation in the provinces and the financial policy in war time, the Finance Minister said that the Government was paying a keen attention to the improvement of the monetary facilities for the benefit of agricultural community and as a means for relieving monetary difficulties in the provinces the Government was contemplating the establishment of special banks for giving money facilities to merchant, farming and industrial, communities in the provinces, in addition to the improvement of the existing system of monetary organs and the industrial guilds. As regards the establishment of a definite financial policy to meet the need of war time the Government was, said the Minister, engaged in investigations for the creation of a new legislation concerning the holding of the extraordinary receipts accruing from the active commercial and industrial situation through the war and for that purpose the Government had decided on the creation of a tax on the war profit which proposal, however, being a matter of grave bearing upon the interests of the nation the Government was not going to introduce in the present session of the Diet but wanted to make further deliberate researches on the subject.

Special committees of the Lower House on various Government bills including those relating to the issue of temporary treasury bills, war time reinsurance, the purchase of light railways and others, also held their meetings and devoted the session to interpellations.

The Lower House will meet this afternoon at 1 o'clock. Before taking up the day's order which includes no bills of very important significance, Mr. Mochizuki (Kenseikai) will make an interpellation regarding the Government diplomatic dealings with China re Chengchiatung affair; Mr. Koyama also on the question of the Government oppression on the freedom of public speech; Mr. Higuchi will also bring about interpellations addressed to the Premier and Foreign Minister.

The House of Peers met at the usual time Monday morning and after listening to various reports took up the day's order. The committee reports on the bill for partial revision of the regulations pertaining to the control of the sale of opium and three other government bills were announced by the chairmen of the respective committees and carried as submitted. Count Okudaira, the chairman of the committee on the Government bill for the revision of the regulations pertaining to the control of industrial guilds, reported on the results of the committee investigations into the bill. Mr. Seitaro Kimura proposed an amendment to the original draft and wished for the postponement of the discussion on the bill. Interpellations on the bill were raised by Mr. Sannosuke and Viscount Hirata, to which Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, and Chairman Count Okudaira replied. Seconded by Dr. Yamawaki, Mr Kimura's motion was put to vote but was dropped as the result of the voting. Put to the third reading, the bill was passed as submitted. The House rose at 11.25 a.m.

The Lower House Committee on the Supplementary Budget Estimates held a general meeting on the 6th at 9.30 o'clock. Prior to the opening of the discussions on the Budget Bills, Mr. H. Ogawa, of the Seiyukai, asked an interpellation regarding Japan's diplomatic measures in connection with the situation in China. The Seiyukai member attached great importance to the allegation that the present Ministry had supported those Chinese belonging to the northern party and demanded to have a clear statement of the Government about the matter. He said, whereas the Government declared it had nothing to do with the Northerners the Kenseikai leaders, Messrs. Ozaki and Shimada, asserted that the Government had given a support to the Northerners, and the alleged unscrupulous doings of certain Kamekichi Nishihara in China and the measures taken by the Japanese military authorities in China made the member entertain a certain amount of doubts as to the policy of the Ministry toward China. Not only that, but some of the politicians of China and some of the Chinese friends of the member harbour suspicions that the Japanese Government had given support to the northern party, a telegram from Shanghai received by the members only a few days ago stating that the revolutionists in Shanghai suspect Japan's support of General Chang Hsun in connection with the present monarchy restoration movement. The member further alluding to the declaration of a certain Chinese politician who declared himself to be in possession of strong evidence testifying the fact that the Japanese Government was supporting General Chang Hsun, asked the Government what step it intended to take in order to clear all such doubts as stated above.

In the absence of Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, Premier Count Terauchi replied to the member's query and stated that the Government had never supported either notherners or southerners. The Government was pursuing the same diplomatic policy toward China as decided upon last spring, which made it a principle not to interfere with China's internal affairs. In these circumstances the Government had never taken such a measure as to support the northerners in whatever connection. As to the various rumours that the Japanese Government had given or was giving support to the Northerners they are all mere rumours circulated by some of the southern partisans. The Government had been taking measures to remove all those unfounded rumours when available opportunity arises. The Premier declared that "Stand out of China's sunshine and let China manage her own affairs!" was Japan's motto.

Mr. Ozaki of the Kenseikai, also put an interpellation to the Premier and stated that though the Government denied that it had assisted the Northerners the loan which the Japanese Government had recently advanced to China was not appropriated for the use of an administrative organ but was accommodated to the communications organs, which was a veritable monetary organ to the Northerners, and the consequence was that the Japanese Government had practically given monetary facilities to the northern partisans. The Kenseikai leader further suggested to the Premier that in order to clear the doubts entertained by the Southerners the Government had better publish the telegrams exchanged between the Government and Kamekichi Nishihara if it did not inconvenience the Government to do so, adding that the Government must be in possession of such telegrams unless the authorities committed the destruction of official documents. Mr. Ozaki also suggested that the Government had better make public official reports about the situation in China before the Diet, as he thought the Government must be in constant receipt of latest information about the trend of affairs in China.

Premier Count Terauchi replying to Mr. Ozaki said that Government would acquaint the Diet with such information regarding the situation in China as will be considered to be of very important character, but at present the Government had not received any report of grave importance on the subject. Regarding Kamekichi Nishihara the Premier declared that the Government had no business nor whatever concern with the man.

After a few more interpellations by other members, the meeting listened to the reports of the Chairman of Sectional Committees on the results of the committee investigations into the Bills submitted. Subsequently the supplementary budget bills were put to debate in a group. Mr. Suzuki, a Kokuminto member, representing the party, proposed an amendment to the Government proposal with a view to curtail a sum of 23,900,000 yen in the expenditure estimates. Mr. Kato, of the Kenseikai, representing the party enumerated the items to be amended, stating the reasons for the curtailment. Mr. Mitsuchi, of the Seiyukai, opposed and attacked the reasons advanced by the Kokuminto and the Kenseikai for their opposition to the original proposal, Mr. Tsukuda, of the Ishinkai, also supporting the original proposal. Put to vote, the amendment proposed by the Kokuminto and the Kenseikai was rejected and the Supplementary Budget Estimates were passed by a majority without amendment. The meeting came to a close at 11.30 a.m.

The Lower House will meet at 10 a.m. to-day and discuss various Bills bearing upon the Supplementary Budget Estimates in the morning and the Supplementary Budget Estimates in the afternoon.

The Session on the 7th of the Lower House attracted a large audience though nothing important was on the day's order, except the Supplementary Budget Estimates which is, however, the most important Bill of the present session. The House sat at 10 a.m. and continued business till nearly 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The morning session was devoted to the discussion on various Bills providing for the new undertaking bearing upon the Supplementary Budget Estimates and the afternoon session to a debate on the Budget Bills. Every Bill was carried smoothly and without a hitch and the Supplementary Budget also passed with no amendment as in the same way as at the general meeting of the Budget Committee on the previous day. Nor any interesting discussion occurred throughout the day's sitting.

Various reports over several Government Bills were submitted and explained on by the Government delegates, these consisting of three financial Bills and seven other Bills including one providing for the enactment of special regulations for the control of industrial properties in war time. After a few interpellations the Bills were all referred to Special Committees.

The reports on the committee investigations pertaining to the grant of state subsidy on light railways, and pension on army and navy officers, and others were announced by the chairmen of the respective Committees and adopted as reported omitting second and third readings.

Mr. Shiraishi, chairman of the special committee on the Bill providing for the issue of a loan intended for telephone extension works, reported on the results of the committee investigations into the Bill. Mr. Hayami raised opposition to the proposal, and Mr. Tetsuta Kawakami spoke in support of the Government proposal. Put to vote the Bill was passed as reported, omitting further readings.

After taking a recess at noon the House remet at 1.10 p.m. and at once resumed the discussions postponed from the morning session. The House listened to the committee reports on the six government bills including the regulations pertaining to the control of agricultural warehouses and the war time reinsurance regulations, the Bills being subsequently passed as reported by the respective Committees. The committee reports on the Bills for the flotation of extraordinary treasury bills and the regulations providing for the disposal of the revenue accruing from the issue of the above mentioned Bills were then announced by the chairman of the Committee and unanimously passed.

The House then took up the Supplementary Budget Bills. Mr. T. Yamamoto, the chairman of the Committee on the Bills, reported on the proceedings of the committee. Mr. M. Kato of the Kensei-kai, taking the rostrum proposed an amendment to the original estimate insisting on the curtailment of 20,000,000 yen in the amount of the national debt redemption funds and the cancellation of the proposed establishment of a colonial bureau, deliberating the reasons for the necessity of the curtailment. Mr. U. Suzuki, of the Kokuminto, representing his party, seconded the amendment proposed by the Kenseikai and pointing out the defective arrangements and incomplete conditions of the national defense, imperfect condition of the national productive industry and other matters which called for the immediate attention of further improvement and perfection involving an immense outlay, opposed the idea of increasing the national debt redemption funds and laying out funds for several unnecessary undertakings placed in the Budget Estimates. Mr. Mitsuchi, of the Seiyukai, spoke in support of the original and Mr. Hayami endorsed the amendment proposed by the Kenseikai criticising the principle of the Government for the compilation of the Supplementary Budget, which the member said was anything but opportune and adapted to the requirements of the moment. At the motion of Mr. Tsunematsu the debate was closed and put to vote, the amendments proposed by the Kensei-kai and the Kokuminto were defeated. Subsequently the supplementary budget estimates proposed by the Government was put to vote and passed by a great majority consisting of the whole of the Seiyukai and the Ishin-kai members and a section of the independents. After official explanations on three Government Bills, which were all referred to Special Committees, the House rose at 4.40 p.m.

The Upper House committee on settled accounts met at 10.20 o'clock in the morning on the 7th and listened to the reports on the results of the sectional committees. The Bills were all passed as reported with a few exceptions, on which the meeting passed the resolutions refusing recognition but warning the authorities against the repetition of similar measures in future. The meeting was closed at 3.30 p.m.

The Kenseikai M.P.'s held a meeting on the 7th, and passed a resolution to introduce in the present session of the Diet a resolution proposing the abolition of the Diplomatic Advisory Board on the reason that the establishment of the board was contradictory to the principle of the constitution and is liable to confound and make ambiguous the responsibilities of the Ministers of the Cabinet for the affairs of state. The resolution was formally introduced into the Lower House yesterday in the name of Messrs. S. Morita, T. Saito and Y. Furuya, all Kenseikai M.P.'s.

Despite Sunday and sultry weather the House of Peers had a very busy session on the 8th. The House met at 9 in the morning to discuss the Supplementary Budget Estimates. The session was attended by a large audience, the floor and Ministerial quarters being fully attended. At the outset Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, took the rostrum and spoke on the Budget Bills, which over interpellations were raised by Baron Ishiguro, Baron Ozaki and Count Yanagisawa, to which replied Premier Count Terauchi, Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, General Oshima, War Minister, and other Government Delegates. What was most notable was the interpellation asked by Count Yanagisawa, who among other things questioned the Premier on national morality, implicitly referring to Mr. Okada, Education Minister, who was alleged to have recommended an ex-convict as a Parliamentary candidate in a certain prefecture in the last general election. Premier Count Terauchi made a reply, merely stating that the Government shared the same opinion with the member in attaching great importance to the maintenance of national morals and was exerting itself for the maintenance and promotion of good morality. Count Yanagisawa, dissatisfied with the Premier's reply, went into the details and pointedly attacked the Education Minister.

Mr. Okada, Education Minister, appeared on the rostrum and explained his standpoint giving the reason why he recommended the candidate in the election in Shimane prefecture. Among other things the Minister stated that he had introduced to some franchiseholders in that prefecture a candidate who was convicted in connection with some criminal case some years ago, but as that candidate had since then been several times returned in the Lower House and as he believed the said candidate had sincerely repented his past conduct and was a quite reformed man, he recommended him as a good candidate for parliament. But reflecting on the matter, declared the Minister, he found that the act he had done was prejudicial to the principle of morality in that he had recommended a man with a dark spot in his past career, especially considering that he held the portfolio of Education. With these words the Education Minister expressed his sincere regret for his imprudent conduct and asked the indulgence of the House with a promise that he would atone for the regrettable matter in exerting himself for the maintenance and promotion of morality in future.

Various financial bills bearing upon the Supplementary Budget were subsequently submitted with official explanations and were committeed with more or less interpellations. The session was closed at 2.55 p.m.

After the close of the full house meeting the House held a general meeting of the Committee on the Budget Bills at 3.20 p.m. The session was devoted to interpellations on the questions pertaining to national defense and especially the naval repletion programme. The Ministers of the War and Navy respectively replied to the questions which were practically on the same line as replied to the members of the Lower House recently. At the second meeting of the budget committee held yesterday morning at 9.20 Baron Ishiguro interpellated on the Government diplomatic policy and wished to hear a detailed explanation of the Foreign Minister on the subject. Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, replying to the member's question, stated that the Government was making elaborate study as to the coming change in international situation after the termination of the present war and the measures to be taken by the Japanese Government on the occasion of the peace conference, which formed the

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 4.—Commenting on the numerous German desperate attacks on the French front during the last few days, "Le Matin" says that before the French offensive in the spring the Germans had 146 divisions available on the western front of which only 105 were effectively engaged. The lull on the Russian front has enabled them to bring up new forces, the number of divisions from East to Vosges up to June 20 being 155 divisions.

Of these 110 had been engaged; some of them as many as 23 times. Out of the 43 divisions which had not been engaged, 18 Landwehr divisions were considered incapable of taking serious part in the fighting, thus leaving 5 divisions of fresh troops.

These troops, adds the "Matin," are doubtless now operating against the French and it seems evident that the Germans who have been held on the defensive for a month are now preparing to take initiative but the French high command has certainly considered this eventuality and is ready to meet it

London, July 4.—On Monday evening, the Germans launched a series of violent attacks on the trenches which the French had recaptured on both sides of the Poissy-Ailles road. The most violent struggle lasting all night long ended in a complete defeat of the enemy. The Germans on Tuesday morning attacked a front for five hundred meters on the southeastern extremity of the Avocourt wood. The French fire smashed the assaulting waves which were unable to reach the French line.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 6.—The Germans on Tuesday evening attempted a strong offensive which prolonged all night long against the French positions north of Jolly as far as the eastern edge of the California plateau. On this immense front, they launched violent and repeated attacks of large forces, principally east of Proidment farm, west and southwest of Cerny, north of Poteandailles and also a casemate on the California plateau. The defeat of the enemy was complete, and his losses heaviest. The enemy was unable to retain a single metre of our positions.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—All the night, there was an intense bombardment from north of Laffaux Mill to Froidmont farm. Following the bombardment, attacks were made by the Germans in four different sectors on this front. After a desperate fighting, the enemy masses were driven off with very heavy losses. North and east of Laffaux Mill and east of Pantheon, the French positions are entirely maintained. Between Lefbovettes and Froidmont farm, an attack developed on a front of three kilometres, but after a struggle for several hours the enemy was ejected from the first line elements into which they had penetrated. The French brilliantly carried three strong salients on the left bank of the Meuse.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

Rome, July 5.—The Italian communiqué issued on July 5 says: Yesterday throughout the day the artillery was more active on the whole front.

On the Asiago plateau our batteries fired on the enemy columns marching in Val Galmarara.

North and south of Gorizia, our patrols made raids into the enemy lines, causing great damage and alarm.

South of Costagnavizza the enemy attack which was preceded by violent artillery preparation, was completely checked.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 6.—During the night of July 4th the detachments, by a surprise, pushed our line forward northwest of Selo in the Carso capturing some of the enemy outpost and prisoners. We maintained the ground gained notwithstanding prompt and violent counterattacks by the enemy.

On the following night the enemy after violent artillery preparation again attempted to retake the lost ground, but was mown down by our barrage machinegun fire. He retired in disorder suffering considerable losses and leaving more prisoners in our hands.

During yesterday our artillery very effectively shelled the enemy troops in the Adige valley and Travenanges valley, the Chiapovano road and near Aisovizza, East of Gorizia.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 7.—Reconnoitring parties attempted to reach our lines to-day but were repulsed in the Pasubio area on the slopes of Piccolo Lagazuor and Vadil in the Tolmino district.

On the Carso our reconnaissance patrols were able to carry out the work effectively despite the enemy patrols.

Our artillery dispersed enemy columns marching towards Seluccio and the traffic on the Calmahara valley and shelled the workers and troops. A violent enemy bombardment was concentrated on Vodice. The positions were kept under fire from the enemy lines.

In Albania on the night of July 6 the enemy aeroplanes which attempted a raid on Valena were repulsed by our anti-aircraft guns and had to leave without doing any damage.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—A French communique states that from June 21 to June 30 our chasing-planes have brought down nineteen enemy aeroplanes and a captive-balloon. In addition to this, fourteen enemy machines were seriously damaged and fell down on their own lines.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 6.—The Russian offensive has already achieved a brilliant success and promises greater one to follow. It is recognized in London and Paris that the battle now being fought will probably take some weeks to reach its conclusion. The first staggering blow on a twenty-mile front has been dealt on Bothmer, an old antagonist of General Brussiloff, but there are indications that the battle is spreading northward.

A German official communication already announces an increased fighting activity between the Baltic and Pripet, while from Petrograd comes the news of the Russian advance guard having recrossed the Stokhod in the direction of Kovel after a surprise attack by which the Russians captured Austrian trenches. The Germans have become alarmed to find the Russians well-equipped for the offensive which has already affected the Austrian pressure on the Italian front. The extension of the Russian offensive northward is bound to relieve the Anglo-French front.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 7.—The newspapers here have published details of the events which led up to the Russian offensive on the southwestern front.

On the eve of the offensive, General Goutor, the Commander-in-Chief of the Russian army on the southwest front, issued an order for an offensive, saying "rush forward, brave fighters, for the sake of freedom."

Mr. Kerenski, the Minister of War, inspected the work of the artillery on the front. While preparations are going on for an attack he was at an observation post. He visited the batteries and greeted the gunners in the name of fatherland, democracy and the Provisional Government. He said that he believed the artillery would help the revolution by doing their duty. Russia wants peace, he continued, not because she is weak but because she is strong and such is her will.

Then the War Minister visited the regiments which were to take part in the offensive to see what spirit and conscience reigned over all the regiments with regard to the gravity of the moment.

All the regiments had fully discharged their duties allotted them. The first fighting was the Eighth Atransamurlen regiment, which received the first visit of Mr. Kerenski to the front. The troops of the regiment welcomed the Minister, waving banners with the words "Away with the war." The regiment carried out its task brilliantly.

Returning from the front, the War Minister visited hospitals and thanked the wounded for their brilliant fulfillment of duty and distributed St. George Crosses among them.

The War Minister was on an observation post with General Gouter and received half-hourly reports on the operation. Several regiments, which the Government had previously intended to disband on account of insubordination, also participated in the offensive.

Petrograd via New York, July 7.—A violent fighting is going on westward of Pinsk which town is in flames.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 7.—M. Kerensky, the Minister of War, has wired to the Minister President that the Russian revolutionary army began a great and enthusiastic offensive on the southwest front. The regiments which have participated in the battle received, by the order of the Minister President, red banners and the names of regiments on June 10. The battle took place near the village of Koniouka, and prisoners and machineguns were taken.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 8.—A violent fighting has begun near Pinsk which is reported to be ablaze.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—A Russian official report transmitted by wireless message says that in the direction of Zolochev we attacked fortified positions and occupied three lines of trenches. We pressed back enemy counterattacks. Our offensive westward Koniuchy continued throughout yesterday, positions constantly changing hands. Heights northwestward of Presovce, villages of Lavrikovce and Travotloki and heights eastward of Codov have remained in our hands in the evening. We pressed back the enemy in the Jamnicapasechna sector northwestward of Stanislau and also advanced in the direction of Lianhovce and Dzvinianiatch, occupying the latter. We have captured 689 prisoners.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 8.—From authoritative sources the following details of the Russian offensive are announced:

Several Russian army corps and a Finnish division have attacked under heavy fire and occupied an enemy position and captured two lines of trenches north of Koniouklii. They resisted two counterattacks by the enemy. Certain elements of the Russians have suffered great losses especially officers. On the remainder of this sector, our artillery continued to destroy the trenches of the enemy who answered with a violent fire.

In the sector of the sixth army corps, our troops have captured all trenches on a fortified hill east of Koniouklii and occupied the village of Koniouklii and a forest west of this village and also all enemy trenches south of this village. We have taken numerous prisoners and machineguns.

On the sector of another army corps the elements of the third Trans-Armureen division have occupied three lines of enemy trenches southwest of Brzejany. Other army corps have captured two lines of enemy trenches southeast of Potoutory and southeast of Mitchischou. We took numerous prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—A Russian official report says that in the direction of Kovel in the region of Volaparska the enemy has released gas. Enemy counter-attacks on Godov and a wood westward of Koniuchy have failed. Dense attacks supported by armoured cars westward of Vyohka has been repulsed. An intense artillerying has taken place eastward and southeastward of Brzezany.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 9.—After capturing several villages westwards of Stanislau, the Russian cavalry pursued the enemy as far as the Litvka river. Seven thousand prisoners and thirty eight guns were taken.

SATURDAY'S AIR RAID THE BIGGEST YET

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—An official report says that at about 9.30 Saturday morning considerable numbers of hostile aircraft probably in two parties appeared over the Isle of Thanet and the east coast of Kent. After dropping bombs on the Isle of Thanet, the raiders proceeded to London, moving in parallel with the north bank of the Thames. Approaching London from the northeast, they changed their course and proceeded north and west and crossed London from northeast to southeast. Bombs were dropped at various places in the Metropolitan area. The number of the raiders is uncertain, but probably about twenty. Our artillery and a large number of aeroplanes attacked the raiders. Reports on the results of the engagements, damage and casualties have not yet been received.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—An official report says that according to the latest reports, the casualties caused by Saturday's air raid are twenty eight men, six women and three children killed, and seventy-four men, thirty women and thirty-seven children injured. An enemy aeroplane was brought down at the mouth of the Thames.

The Admiralty announced that a report from Dunkirk says that British fliers which were watching for the returning raiders, missed them but later encountered the raiders and destroyed three enemy seaplanes and also brought down four aeroplanes.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—Saturday's raid was the biggest one ever attempted. The enemy came over London hawk like flying low in close formation, despite the perfect veil of shells from our anti-aircraft guns. On approaching the city, the pace seemed to slow down. The raiders were plainly visible to the naked eye. They appeared like huge blackbirds, There was a perfect rain of bombs as they proceeded southwest over the Metropolitan Area. It was a splendid view from Reuter's News Agency's roof at Old Jewry. Bombs were dropped on Great Cross.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, July 8.—An official report says that the casualties caused by the air raid on Saturday are 37 dead and 141 injured. During the raid the assailants travelled at a great speed keeping lower altitude than in previous raids. They flew straight across London, dropping many bombs. Anti-aircraft guns immediately opened fire and British aviators rose to engage the raiders. One enemy machine fell down on the sea off the mouth of the Thames. The remainder of the squadron was pursued by the British who engaged the raiders forty miles off the east coast. Two enemy machines were observed to fall on the sea and the third one fell aflame off the mouth of the Scheldt.

BRITISH DESTROYER TORPEDOED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 8.—The Admiralty announces that a British destroyer was torpedoed and sunk in the North Sea on July 6th. One officer and seven men were killed.

SUDDEN POLITICAL CRISIS IN GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 10.—Germany has been suddenly plunged into an unprecedented political crisis by a sensational speech by a Catholic deputy Erzberger. At a secret sitting of the Reichstag committee, he roundly denounced the German admiralty and Pan-Germanism as great obstacles to peace. The deputy declared that the results of the submarine warfare have been exaggerated. Erzberger, who is although denounced by regular leaders of the clerical party, has a powerful following, has also demanded a real parliamentary system in Germany. The speech has elicited placatory speeches from Hollweg and Helfferich.

These have absolutely failed to convince the influential newspapers which are now clamoring for the dismissal of the Minister of Marine Capelle and even ask whether Hollweg can remain in office. The "Berliner Tageblatt" has openly declared a coalition cabinet is becoming inevitable, and that the leading members in the Government circles no longer disguise the necessity therefor. The imperialist organ "Taegleche Rundschau" mentions a rumour that a committee wants to hear the evidence of Hindenburg regarding the military situation. Further developments are expected to-day and Monday, but Hollweg has been warned that shilly-shally will not be permitted this time.

SUCCESSFUL BRITISH AIR RAID

London via New York, July 5.—The British Naval Air Service dropped several tons of explosives Monday night on docks, bridges, ammunition depots at Liesterveide with good results. Twelve to fourteen German air raiders have dropped bombs on Harwich to-day, killing eight and injuring twenty-two.

Two of the German machines were brought down ablaze while a third in damaged condition by the British airmen who suffered no loss.

BRITISH AND ITALIAN SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 6.—The Admiralty announces that during the last week the number of merchantmen arriving at British ports was 2745, and that of departing from was 2846. Fifteen steamers over 1600 tons and five under the same tonnage and eleven fishing vessels were sunk. Sixteen vessels were unsuccessfully attacked.

SUBMARINE ATTACK ON TRANSPORTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington via London, July 6.—It is officially announced that German submarines twice attacked in force the transports containing the first American expeditionary force but were outfought by American destroyers. At least one submarine was destroyed. "There is reason to believe that the accuracy of our fire has sent others to bottom. No American ship was hit nor any life was lost."

GERMAN AGENTS AND HINDU CONSPIRATORS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

San Francisco, July 8.—A great conspiracy to promote a revolution against the British authorities in India has been disclosed. The plot is on a wider scale than it has hitherto been suspected. Ninety eight persons ranging from millionaires to Hindu labourers, including prominent businessmen, former German Consuls at Chicago, Honolulu and Shanghai and former attaches to the German Embassy in Washington have been indicted. Their names will be published when the arrests have been made. The charges against them indicate that the consipracy has been organised and financed from Berlin since 1914.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

San Francisco, July 8.—That German agents in the United States and Hindu conspirators had prepared for a war on England a year prior to the outbreak of the European war, has been disclosed in connection with the announcement of 98 cases indicted for plotting to forment a revolution in India. It has also been declared that German agents were sent to Japan and China to attempt to bribe the press to procure secret treaties.

Upon the outbreak of the war the Hindu leaders and members of the German Consulates in the United States began to carry out the plans already formulated. They sent emissaries to Berlin where an India committee adjunct to the German Foreign Office under the direction of von Zimmermann was created thereafter. The plotters were directed and financed from Berlin. Large quantities of arms and munitions were purchased. Men were recruited and sent to India. Ammunition was smuggled through China and Japan. The whole conspiracy was well defined in an effort to force Great Britain to keep large forces in India, which otherwise would be used against Germany.

SHIPPING AT FRENCH PORTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, July 8.—During the week ending on July 1, the arrivals at French ports were 947: departures, 1053; sinkings, 4 over and 4 under sixteen hundred tons, and steamers unsuccessfully attacked, 3

U.S. INCREASING DIVER CHASERS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington via London, July 7.—The Navy Department is greatly increasing submarine chasers and building these on a standardised principle. Hundreds of these submarine chasers are at present under construction, and orders have just been issued for doubling the supply. The trial experiments of the chasers show that they are of great value in a fight against submarinism.

ARREST OF JOSEPH GRABER

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Scranton, Pennsylvania via London, July 7.—Joseph Graber, the organiser of the Industrial Workers of the World, has been arrested. He was charged with being a spy in the employ of Germany. The federal authorities state that German money has poured into the anthracite coal districts where a dozen strikes have recently broken out.

UNDESIRABLE GERMANS IN AMERICA

Washington, July 7.—A notification has been issued by the State Department to the effect that the continued presence here of Germans who were formerly connected with the German Embassy or Consulates, is undesirable. The notification applies, among others, to certain clerks of the German Embassy who were transferred by request to the Swiss legation when ex-Ambassador Bernstorff departed from America.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 8.—Heinrich Schaafhausen, one of former attaches to the German Embassy and later connected with the Swiss Legation looking after German interests, proves to be one of those who, the United States has determined, should leave the country. The agents of the Department of Justice have placed him aboard a Norwegian steamship. Orders have also been issued for the arrest of all German agents, financial or otherwise, suspected of activities against the United States, while a statement of the State Department disavows suspecting as being spies any of those whose presence in the country, the State Department has notified, is undesirable to the United States.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 8.—A movement is now on foot to prevent by every way possible news of value to the enemies of the United States from getting out of the country.

FRENCH SUBMARINE SUNK

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 8.—An official report says that a French submarine has been torpedoed and sunk by an enemy submarine in the Mediterranean. Several officers and crew were lost.

NORWAY'S SHIPPING LOSSES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 3.—Reuter is informed that Norway lost in June forty three steamers with the total tonnage of sixty thousand from German submarines and mines. Twenty six lives were lost.

ENORMOUS WAR-TIME PROFIT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 4.—Mr. Bonar Law, Chancellor of Exchequer, replying to complaints made in the House of Commons, said that it was absolutely disgraceful that any class in war time is able to make such profit as he was about to disclose. A man, he said, invested 8,110 pound sterling in fifteen steamship companies. Those owned by the companies were all tramp steamers, and he could receive 3,623 sterling as interest in 1915 and 3 847 sterling in 1916, exclusive of excess profits. One steamer was sold or sunk. He invested two hundred sterling in that ship, and besides handsome dividends, he received further one thousand sterling.

GERMAN CONSPIRACY AGAIN IN AMERICA

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Washington via New York, July 3.—The agents of the American Government have disclosed the German conspiracy to destroy and hinder the shipping on the great lakes thereby to delay the organization of the American war armies and to check the flow of food and munitions to the Atlantic coast. During the past month, three lake steamers were sunk and two disabled. Other acts of sabotage to the American shipping were noticed. At first it was thought that these were accidents. The Canadian Government is now co-operating with the American officials to trace the plotters.

SUBMARINE ATTACKED U.S. EXPEDITIONARY FORCE

Washington via New York, July 5.—Mr. Daniels, Secretary of War, in a statement, announcing the safe arrival of the last contingent of the American Expeditionary Force in France, says that the German submarines attacked the transports in force and were fought out by the American destroyers. One of them, at least, was sunk, while no American ship was hit, or no life was lost. The first attack was made on the night of June 22, in which the enemy discharged, at least, five torpedoes. The attack occurred in a part of the Atlantic considered usually free from the German submarines. Our heavy gunfire dispersed the U-boats. The second attack was made a few days later. Oil and wreckage of a U-boat covered the surface of the sea after we shot the periscope of one of them. There is reason to believe that other submarines were also destroyed.

DESTROYER MINED AND SUNK

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 6.—The Admiralty announces that a British destroyer of an old type was mined and sunk in the North Sea. Eighteen of the crew were saved.

JAPANESE STEAMER TORPEDOED

An official dispatch reaching the Navy Department recently from the naval attache to the Japanese Embassy in London states that the Japanese steamer Shinsan Maru was torpedoed by a German submarine in the middle of the Mediterranean and sunk on July 2. The Captain and two others are reported to be missing. The ill-fated Japanese steamer whose tonnage was 3,312 tons, was built in England in 1898 and was owned by the Shinsan Steamship Company at Dairen.

AMERICAN AVIATION BILL

Washington, July 5.—The War Department has transmitted the Government's aviation bill. The House Military Committee is contemplating immediate construction of 22,625 aeroplanes for which an appropriation of 639 million dollars will be asked.

THE MOST PERILOUS TIME OF THE WAR

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 8 (Delayed in transmission).—The French Chamber of Deputies this morning passed the order of day by a vote of 375 to 23, expressing confidence in the Government. This vote took place at a public sitting following seven secret ones during which the conduct of the recent military operations were discussed. Premier Ribot, the Ministers of War, of the Navy and of Interior, all took part in the discussion. The adopted order of the day contained the following points. Among others, the Chamber welcomes the arrival in France of the first American regiments and the offensive of the armies of Free Russia as new pledges of common victory. The Chamber addresses to the valiant troops, officers and soldiers of the Republic and of its allies a renewed expression of the gratitude of the nation.

Painleve, the Minister of War, in his speech, said that they had passed in these last months the most perilous time of the war. The old regime in Russia had led to a paralysis of that ally's armies. Treason had brought about the possibility of a separate Russian peace. Revolution stopped that possibility and swept away the intrigues but in the period of reconstruction which followed, it was possible for the Germans to throw on to the western front all her effectives. On the line of battle in France, her whole force was concentrated and yet in spite of that the German troops had everywhere been beaten back. There had been some mistakes, Painleve continued, in the last offensive and it was not necessary to hide nor extenuate them as France could look truth in the face. Losses had been heavy and price had been high for success obtained. Henceforth a policy of prudence not without energy but having regard to the limits of human achievement was necessary and that would be the policy of the Government. In General Petain, who is now the Commander-in-Chief of the all French Armies, they had such a leader as this policy demanded. He had been one of the first to recognize that it was impossible to use infantry against artillery without thorough artillery preparation and his wise and careful tactics must be followed.

On co-operation of the Allies, the War Minister declared that France would never fail nor falter in her task. All the allies have recognized that, but they know also that France had poured out her blood as vanguard of civilization. It was that which had brought the United States to her side as this country was not willing to see France extinguished in her own splendid funeral pyre.

RUSSIAN AMBASSADOR TO AMERICA

Washington via New York, July 5.—M. Bakhmetieff formally presented himself to President Wilson as the first Ambassador to the United States under the new Russian Government. Cordial greetings were exchanged.

RUSSIAN MINES TO BE PUT IN AMERICAN HANDS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

New York, July 7.—The Associated Press correspondent in Petrograd telegraphs the following:

"The Special Mining Committee of the Russian Ministry of Commerce has decided to recommend the transfer to American hands of the bulk of Russian mines and mineral deposits. M. Maliavkin, the Director of the Mining Department, has submitted to the Committee a scheme including the offer of the Island of Sakhalien to American capitalists for working petroleum and coal deposits, and the similar transfer of several districts in Siberia, and also gold mines in Altai, copper mines in the Caucasus and railroads in the Urals.

"The American Railway Commission, under Mr. John F. Stevens, which is investigating the Russian railways, has reported, advising the purchase of larger cars and locomotives. The Commission, with the Provisional Government's approval, has already ordered from the United States rolling-stock to the cost of 750,000,000 roubles."

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OVER EXPORTS IN AMERICA

Washington, July 8.—The Government control over exports has been ordered to be put into operation on July 15 with President Wilson's issuance of a proclamation tonight requiring licensing shipments of coal, coke, fuel, oils, kerosene, gasolene, including bunkers, food, grains, flour, meal, fodder, feeds, fats, pig iron, steel billets, ship plates, structural shapes, scrap iron, manganese, fertilizers, arms, ammunition and explosives.

The proclamation states that the first consideration has been given to American needs, next to the Allies' requirements and lastly to neutral necessities. It is made clear that every effort will be made to see to that no supplies reach the Central Powers.

PROMOTING INDUSTRY IN RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

[Delayed in Transmission]

Petrograd, July 5.—English promoters of industry in Russia addressing a petition to the Government, demand to take under state control their concerns. A conference under the presidency of M. Shingareff, the Minister of Finance, was held yesterday, with the participation of Foreign Minister Tereschenko and Sir Buchanan, the British Ambassador to Russia. The conference declared that state control was very desirable, and also ordered the elaboration of concrete measures in order to realise such a control. A Government decree has been issued instituting the Government Economical Council and the general economic committee for the control over the organization and production.

LORD NORTHCLIFF'S PLAN

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Washington via London, July 4.—Lord Northcliffe has submitted to the American Government a plan to regulate the speculation of cotton futures. It is understood that the British Government is seeking a co-ordinate measure to check wild movements of prices in New York.

GERMAN JOURNALIST'S PROTEST AGAINST SILLY ILLUSIONS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 9.—The "Frankfurter Zeitung" correspondent condemns such statement as that England is completely blockaded and such prophecy as that the submarine warfare will bring the war to a decisive juncture in August. The correspondent considers that the submarine in the war is one of the most effective weapons, but cannot of itself produce peace.

Regarding the statement attributed to Marshal von Hindenburg that "on land we are only to hold our ground until the submarine war has done its work," the writer says: "Whether von Hindenburg has said so or whether this has been inaccurately reported cannot be judged, but it has become a bad custom in recent times to drag the Marshal's personality continually before the public. His replies to some telegrams have been published as highly important political statements. He must have been interviewed or must have written letters, etc. to answer to these telegrams, but all these are such things with which he has nothing to do and which must be repugnant to his genuinely soldierly character."

NEW SECRETARY APPOINTED TO FRENCH EMBASSY HERE

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 6.—Viscount Robert de Dampierre, a Secretary of Embassy, whose gallant conduct on the firing line won him a war cross and who was recalled four months ago from the army by the French Foreign Office to be entrusted with a press service in Paris, has just received a new appointment at the French Embassy at Tokyo.

Before the outbreak of the war, Viscount de Dampierre had successively occupied posts at Vienna and then at Constantinople.

SERIOUS RACIAL TROUBLE AT EAST ST. LOUIS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

New York via London, July 4.—A labour dispute has led to serious racial troubles at East St. Louis. Negroes killed a policeman. A crowd of whites caught two negroes when they shot and killed. The crowd were most aggressive. They wrested arms from a militia to attack the negroes who were well armed. Mobs shot or killed at least fifteen negroes as they fled after burning houses. The flames now threaten the business district of the town. The damage is already estimated at three million dollars. Forty negroes and six whites were injured and taken to hospital. Mobs were temporarily unmanageable, but the military now controls the situation. Three hundred whites have been arrested.

COTTON TRADE IS SATISFIED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 4.—The cotton trade is most satisfied with the Government control. It is generally opined regarding cotton abroad that the Government should make big efforts to provide ships to fetch it so as to keep eight hundred cotton mills, employing three hundred thousand workers.

CHINESE MONARCHY DEAD TO ALL PURPOSES

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 3.—The "Daily News" says that it is not believed that South China will accept monarchy. The immediate result of the coup d'etat will be to rally all the Republicans under one standard. It further says that the differences between the navy and army around Shanghai have vanished on Monday morning and both have decided to uphold Republicanism.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 3.—Tang Shao-yi has made a statement in the "China Press" in which he says that the coup d'etat of Chang Hsun has affected the whole world. "I leave it to the world to decide," he continued, "whether it is right. The Chinese Republic had never a chance of real republic from the beginning. It had been checked by the reactionaries and now when the whole world is talking liberty, seeking to liberate itself from autocracy, China is reverting to the past. It is a challenge to new China."

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 3.—The Kokusai-Reuter News Agencies' correspondent learns that the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs has wired to General Feng Kuo-chang, the Vice-President, yesterday reminding him of an interview held on June 15 when General Feng stated it to be his policy strongly to oppose any monarchical movement, to support President Li Yuan-hung, to strengthen relations between North and South, to insist on the country remaining united, and to use all his influence toward having political problems and agitations of the country solved according to the law.

The Commissioner yesterday urged General Feng Kuo-chang to take punitive action against the monarchists. The General replied to-day saying that he will fight to the end, and never yield to the monarchists. General Lu Ying-siang, the Military Commissioner of Shanghai, is also strongly opposing the monarchy while ex-Premier Tuan Chi-jui is anxiously expected to come out as the leader of the movement to maintain the Republic and unity between North and South.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, June 3.—Prominent Chinese in London opine that the accession of Hsuan Tung will not cause serious trouble and that the change is not likely to alter China's foreign relations.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 4.—General Lu Yung-ting denies his having petitioned Hsuan Tung to resume the crown.

Chu Ching-lan is being offered the command of punitive expedition while the Provincial Assembly passed yesterday special defense appropriation laws providing an immediate war fund.

The people of Canton are optimistic; they do not believe that Chang Hsun will be able to control the situation for any length of time while the restoration will enlarge the chance of the Republicans for their eventual success. Citizens representing southwestern provinces will meet in Canton on July 10. The Yunnan troops in Canton are greatly excited over the news of the restoration. They declared their willingness to march immediately.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 4.—The Republicans at Shanghai have wired to Peking inviting President Li Yuan-hung, who has taken refuge in the Japanese Legation, to proceed to Shanghai at once.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 4.—At the conference of Admirals Cheng Pi-kuang, Sah Chen-ping and Lin Pao-yi, Generals Lu Yung-hsiang, Ma Hung-lieh, also Tang Shao-yi, Sun Yat-sen, Sung Hung-yi, Chan Ping-ling, Wang Chao-ming, and the ex-Secretary to President Li Yuan-hung, a resolution was passed against the establishment of a Provisional Government in Shanghai, and favouring the transfer of the central Republican Government to Shanghai. Tang Shao-yi has pointed out that until the Powers recognize the Monarchy, the Republic is the only legal Government.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 4.—A despatch from Hongkong reports that a majority of newspapers in Canton do not favour the restoration. Chinese inhabitants in Canton and Hongkong are undemonstrative. Apprehension exists for a serious clash between the North and South.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 5.—Hostilities have broken out and an engagement is reported to be taking place at Langfang, half the distance between Tientsin and Peking, where the troops have been concentrated. All trains have been held up between Peking and Tientsin since yesterday evening.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 5.—The situation is more complicated than ever. Four parties have now arisen. Firstly Restorationists; secondly, Bureaucratic Republicans headed by General Tuan Chi-jui who has announced that the eighth Chihli division is marching toward Peking from Machang, forty miles southward of Tientsin; thirdly, Feng Kuo-chang who is alleged to be intriguing for the presidency with the provisional Government at Nanking; fourthly Shanghai Republicans who have despatched the cruiser Haichi toward Chingwantao, hoping to bring Li Yuan-hung to Shanghai.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 5.—Every train in the past few days has been packed to overflowing by Chinese fleeing to Tientsin. The interruption of the communication has now caused a panic. Foreign hotels are full of refugees. A small force of American and Japanese reinforcements is endeavouring to come up from Tientsin, but the fighting at Langfang may delay the arrival of the troops at Peking. Almost the whole of General Chang Hsun's force has moved outside the city down by the Peking-Mukden and the Peking-Hankow railways. It is feared that a serious situation may arise if the pro-monarchy forces are defeated, retreat to Peking and are permitted to re-enter the city. General Chen Kuan-yuan, the Commander of the Twelfth Division stationed at Nanyuan, has disappeared. General Chang Hsun has summoned the officers of the division and demanded the disarmament of the division. The officers have refused, but a compromise has been reached, by which the troops retain their arms but give up all their ammunition. It is exceedingly difficult to ascertain the real attitude of the Peking troops and gendarmerie. However, the latter would be able to maintain order.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 5.—General Chang Hsun has interrupted the Peking-Tientsin railway at Langfang station, half-way between the two cities, apparently in contravention of the 1901 protocol. It is reported that the foreign military authorities at Tientsin are sending off detachments to reopen the communication.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 5.—One thousand of General Chang Hsun's troops and three thousand of the Thirteenth Division from the Summer Palace with an artillery have occupied the position astride the Kin-Han railway at Paomachang near the race-course four miles from Peking, and are ready to oppose Tsao Kun's troops who have reached Luiliho. It is reported that the latter number ten thousand. Fighting in this direction seriously endangers Peking. Meanwhile it is reported that hostilities have already begun at Langfang between General Chang Hsun's advance-guards and their opposing forces.

A Peking dispatch to the "Asahi" says that Kang Yu-wei by order of Chang Hsun called on Baron Hayashi at the Japanese legation on the 6th and asked the Japanese Minister to mediate between him and Tuan Chi-jui. The interview lasted for a long time and after the conference Kang Yu-wei was seen in somewhat despondent mood. It is learned that Baron Hayashi told Kang Yu-wei that it was a fault on the part of Chang Hsun and his followers to have taken recourse to an intrigue in starting the monarchical restoration movement which ought to have been carried out in an open and candid manner, and that the minister had anticipated from the very beginning the present movement would result in a decided failure and now that things had come to such a pass it was too late and useless to make an attempt at mediation.

According to a Peking dispatch the wife of President Li Yuan-hung and three other members of his family took refuge in the French legation on the 6th.

Press dispatches from Peking and Tientsin report that the commanders of foreign garrisons in Peking held a conference at the American Legation on the 6th and passed a decision that in case of emergency endangering the safety and order in the capital the Powers will organize a mixed brigade with their garrison forces for the protection of the lives and properties of foreign peoples residing in Peking. Already the Japanese garrison was detailed for the protection of a section of the legation quarter. A company of infantry with two machine guns of the Japanese garrison at Tientsin under Colonel Hoshino entrained for Peking on Thursday afternoon to reinforce the Japanese garrison in Peking. The troops will repair the damaged railway lines en route. A company of the American garrison and the French troops from Annam also accompanied the Japanese force by the same train, together with a number of railway coolies and a small force of the British troops. The dispatch of the Japanese and foreign troops to Peking has been formally intimated to Generals Chang Hsun and Tuan Chi-jui. According to a later telegram the Japanese and American troops dispatched from Tientsin completed the repairs of the damaged railway lines on Friday and resumed their journey to Peking at 1.50 that afternoon.

The dispatch of the Japanese and American garrison from Tientsin to Peking, says a Peking dispatch, was in accordance with the request of the Powers' Ministers at Peking, who after conference among them had decided on requesting the dispatch of those garrison forces from Tientsin both for the protection of the foreign residents in Peking and the repairs of the railway lines between Peking and Tientsin which had been destroyed by Chang Hsun's troops. The Japanese and American troops from Tientsin arrived in Peking after finishing the repairs of the damaged railways late on Friday afternoon. According to the report brought by these troops fighting took place between Chang Hsun's troops and the vanguards of Tuan Chi-jui's force, on the 6th. The fighting resulted in favour of the punitive army, Chang's force losing about 50 killed and wounded.

A dispatch received at the Chinese legation in Tokyo on the 7th reports that the vanguard of General Tuan Chi-jui's force defeated Chang Hsun's army at Manchuan on the Peking-Tientsin railway on Friday. The republican army was expected to arrive in Peking on Sunday. The republican army headquarters established at the office of the chief of Tientsin province has decided to recommend Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang as President pending the absence of President Li Yuan-hung who is sheltered at the Japanese legation and recommend Tuan Chi-jui as Premier, Tuan having already accepted the recommendation.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 6.—The traffic on the Peking-Mukden line has been restored. No fighting has occurred on the Peking-Hankow line so far. Liang Tunyen, Foreign Minister of the monarchical Government, has called on the diplomatic corps and requested them to mediate in order to preserve peace.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 7.—Li Yuan-hung has appointed Tuan Chi-jui as the Premier. Li has also handed over the President's seal to Tuan Chi-jui for conveyance to Feng Kuo-chang who assumes the acting Presidency Sunday morning and forms a provisional Cabinet at Nanking.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Peking, July 7.—An aeroplane dropped two bombs on the Palace.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 7.—Wu Ting-fang will arrive here to-morrow. Sun Yat-sen left on board a training ship for Swatow to-day.

A conference was held by Military and Naval officers and civil officials yesterday, not including non-official republican leaders. The conference passed a resolution not to recruit soldiers and not to allow any body to establish any new official organization in Shanghai. This is tantamount to the officials' supporting Feng Kuo-chang who is organizing a Provisional Government in Nanking.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton via Shanghai, July 7.—Lu Yung-ting, the Inspector-General of Kwangtung and Kwangsi, has ordered the Tutun of Kwangtung to prepare military necessities immediately for the expedition to North. It has been definitely decided that the Yunnanese will be the vanguards while the Liang-kwang troops under the command of Lu Yung-ting are to follow them. Lu Yung-ting is requesting Feng Kuo-chang to organize a Government.

The provincial assembly of Kwangtung has resolved to request Feng Kuo-chang to assume the presidency. Cantonese do not oppose making Canton the temporary capital while they are preferring Nanking. The Tutuh of Kwangsi will follow this policy of Kwangtung.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Chengtu via Shanghai, July 7.—General Liu Tsuhow refuses the imperial offer of the viceroyalty of Szechuan. The republicans in that province are approaching Yunnan and Kweichow to take a joint action against Chang Hsun in defence of republic. Chengtu is quiet.

Tientsin via Shanghai, July 7.—The battle at Langfang began Thursday morning. The monarchists are reported to have been retreating at seven o'clock Friday morning. Tuan Chi-jui has arrived here Thursday evening and is staying at the Viceroy's Yamen, Civil Governor Chu Chiapao has handed over the seals and left Tientsin by train with the foreign reinforcements which are expected to pass Langfang at noon. Both Monarchists and Republicans have agreed on their passage.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

[Delayed in Transmission]

Peking, July 7.—At eleven o'clock this morning an aeroplane from Nanyuan flew over the Forbidden City in the heart of Peking at a considerable height and dropped at least two bombs.

It is believed that the objective was Chang Hsun's headquarters. As far as can be ascertained one man was seriously injured.

About ninety Americans, one hundred and twenty five Japanese and a small detachment of Annamites arrived in Peking last night. Although considerably delayed at Langfang, otherwise they experienced little difficulty. The line was torn up at one or two places but the damage was rapidly repaired.

After slight fighting at Langfang in which each side had about thirty casualties, the Imperialists retired to Fengtai. The retreat must have been rapid as the Republican advance guard was out of touch with the Imperialists all day yesterday.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

(Delayed in Transmission)

Peking, July 7.—General Chang Hsun's troops have concentrated at the Temple of Heaven. The Republicans now occupy strategical positions in the southern and western outskirts of Peking. Chang Hsun remains in his residence. There is every prospect of a peaceful settlement of the situation.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 7.—Chang Hsun has resigned and the Emperor has abdicated.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 8.—Tuan Chi-jui reports that the Republicans attacked and routed the rebels yesterday morning at Swangchung, near Langfang. The Republicans have advanced ten miles and are still pursuing the enemy.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 8.—Doctor Wu Ting-fang has cabled to the China Ministers abroad stating that the whole nation is opposed to the Restoration and that all the Provinces have started punitive expeditions against the monarchists who will soon be overthrown.

Wu Ting-fang says he has resumed his duties as Foreign Minister in Shanghai and requested the diplomatic body in Peking to deny the rebels and not to recognise the rebel Foreign Minister Liang Tun-yen but to deal direct with him, Wu Ting-fang.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, July 8.—The details of the punitive expedition will soon be perfected. Li Lien-chun commands the Yunnanese troops in Kwangtung. Tao Yin and Wung Ting-chang representing the Civil Governor Chu Ching-lan are proceeding to Nanking. The Manchus and the Bannermen of Canton will support the Republic joining the Cantonese in displaying the five coloured flag.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 7 (Delayed in Transmission) —The retreat of the Chang Hsun soldiery has increased the panic among the Chinese especially in the southern city where many shops have closed their doors though they have been ordered immediately to reopen. The riceshops are only permitted to sell small quantities.

This evening, however, it appears that a prospect of a peaceful settlement will be reached if the report of Chang Hsun's resignation is correct.

Chang Hsun's soldiers are at present concentrating at the Temple of Heaven. During the week the various Ministries have been practically empty, a majority of the officials declining to attend office or accept appointments.

It should be emphasised for the sake of their future careers that many officials were appointed without consideration of the fact that they strongly opposed the restoration and viewed the movement with much misgiving.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Ichang via Shanghai, July 8.—A proclamation dated July 5 was issued with the joint signatures of the military and civil authorities. The proclamation states that the authorities have received instructions from the Military and Civil Governors of Hupeh to the effect that the Republican Government has been established and the restoration of monarchy was not made in accordance with the will of the people and should be opposed.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 8.—An edict accepts the resignation of General Chang Hsun, but the edict announcing the abdication of the Emperor, which was expected to be issued last night, has not yet been published. The edict is apparently held up pending the result of negotiations with the Republicans. Chang Hsun is holding out for favourable terms. The latter is in a strong position, all his troops being inside of Peking where the opponents fear an attempt to disarm or eject them in order to avoid disturbance.

The dragon flags are still flying and Chang Hsun's soldiers are still guarding the telegraph and post offices and railway stations, but they have been reduced in number, while the pickets and other troops and gendarmeri throughout the city have increased.

According to reports from Tientsin Feng Kuo-chang has assumed the acting Presidency. He intends to come up to the north within a week.

Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister at Peking, refused on Friday a request for mediation by General Chang Hsun between the Northern Monarchists and the Southern Republicans, it was officially confirmed here yesterday. Baron Hayashi took this action in consistency with the non-interference policy of the Tokyo Government with regard to the domestic troubles of China.

On Friday General Chang sent Wang Hsen-tse, chief of the General Staff, to the Japanese Legation, and requested Baron Hayashi to endeavour through his good offices to bring the Monarchists and the Republicans to compromise on the following terms:

(1) General Chang Hsun shall wash his hands off all political power and leave the settlement of state affairs entirely to Tuan Chi-jui and Hsu Shi-chang.

(2) The constitutional monarchy be maintained as the form of government for China.

Baron Hayashi could not entertain the request in view of the strict neutrality policy of the Government of this country and refused to comply with it. However, the Minister willingly consented to Mr. Wang's request that General Chang's peace terms be conveyed to General Tuan Chi-jui. It is however hardly likely that the Republicans will agree to lay down the arms on such terms. The Southerners are expected to be satisfied with nothing short of the restoration of the republican government.

Although no official confirmation was received here yesterday regarding the young Emperor Hsuan Tung's retirement, it is generally believed that that will be the only prologue in which the short-lived monarchical movement is likely to end. Whereabouts of General Chang who headed the movement, is reported to be not traceable. He is reported to be likely to seek refuge in some Legation, inasmuch as his base Hsuchow is said already to have fallen into the hands of the Tuan forces.

As regard the case of one Onodera, Japanese mail carrier, who suffered in the train a serious wound by the bullet from the Chinese troops, an official investigation revealed that the missile was from the Monarchist side. An official report says that the Allied Ministers in Peking in conjunction with the Japanese Minister have lodged with the Peking authorities a strong protest against such wanton outrage.

The Allied Ministers intervened in behalf of the Chinese people as well as foreigners in Peking to stop the aerial attack planned to be carried on by the anti-monarchists. Saturday's incident in which an anti-monarchist aeroplane flew over the city of Peking and dropped two bombs in the palace grounds where the Chang troops were stationed terrified the court people and the soldiers to such a degree that in order to have the palace spared from further air attack the Chang troops were withdrawn to outside the palace and at the same time the Allied Ministers were appealed to, to intercede for the sake of the safety of the people of Peking. The Ministers thereupon warned General Tuan Chi-jui that they expected him to order his troops to refrain from repeating the air raid. It is reported that the General has agreed to comply with the Allied wish.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 8.—Piquancy is added to the situation by the fact that General Chang Hsun now threatens to publish the minutes of proceedings of the first Hsuchow-fu Conference held last year, at which, Chang Hsun states that Feng Kuo-chang, Tuan Chi-jui, Liang Chi-chao and Hsu Shih-chang promised to support the restoration of Emperor Hsuan Tung.

It is stated that Tuan Chi-jui's new Cabinet includes Tsao Ju-lin as Foreign Minister, Yeh Mung-cho, ex-Vice-Minister as Minister of Communications and Chang Hu as Finance Minister.

The Chinese legation in Tokyo was some time ago in receipt of an instruction from Liang Tun-yen, Foreign Minister of the new Imperial Government at Peking, about the restoration of monarchy and the establishment of the Imperial Government, together with a copy of the Imperial edict relating to the restoration and an instruction ordering the Minister to transmit the intimation to that effect to the Japanese Government. Mr. Chang Tsung-hsiung, Chinese Minister, however, had a different idea and did not obey the commands of the new Government but in reply to enquiries from the Chinese consular authorities in various parts of Japan as to the attitude to be taken by them in connection with the situation the Minister has issued an instruction that the restoration carried out by Chang Hsun had no concern with the Republican Government of China, and the Chinese consular authorities need not worry about the situation but should act as the consular representatives of the Republic of China, having nothing to do with the new monarchical government at Peking. The legation was on Sunday in receipt of official dispatches from home informing the maintenance of the republican form of government, the assumption of presidency by Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang and the appointment of Tuan Chi-jui as Premier of the Republican Government. The foresight and wise determination of the Chinese Minister have called forth approval and admiration of the Chinese residents and a circle of his Japanese friends. A Nagasaki dispatch says in this connection that the Chinese consulate there received a telegraphical instruction from the Chinese Minister in Tokyo that all consulates in Japan shall remain the consulates of the Republican Government of China and the consular authorities shall make efforts for the maintenance of the Republican Government and also take measures to instruct the Chinese residents in the districts under their jurisdiction to the same effect. The Nagasaki consulate at once acted in accordance with the instruction of the Minister. The Chinese Chamber of Commerce at Nagasaki called a meeting of its members on Saturday night and passed a resolution of opposition to the monarchical government. The meeting sent a telegram to President Feng Kuo-chang at Nanking urging him to overthrow and punish Chang Hsun, the traitor of the Chinese Republic.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 9.—Liang Tunyen, the Foreign Minister of the Imperial Government, has tendered resignation in view of the fact that the Imperial edicts have accepted the resignations of Chang Chen-fang, the Finance Minister, and Lai Chen-ching, the War Minister.

Hsu Shih-chang who had been invited to come to Peking in order to act as a mediator, sent a message to Wang Shih-chen and Chiang Chao-chung requesting them to exert their utmost to maintain order in the capital. Meanwhile, the situation is at a complete standstill.

The troops under Chang Hsun have been concentrated at the Temple of Heaven, the Imperial Palace and around his residence. The Republicans hitherto have refrained from entering the city in order to avoid precipitating disturbances.

The train service is again practically normal.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Nanking, July 9.—Acting President Feng Kuo-chang has wired to General Tuan Chi-jui requesting him to form a Cabinet at Tientsin. Tuan Chi-jui's representative Wang Chia-hsiang is at present in Nanking conferring with Feng Kuo-chang on the subject of the transfer of the Provisional Government to Tientsin.

The defence commissioner at Hsuchow-fu has cut off his queue and surrendered. He has also telegraphed to Chang Hsun asking him to cease resistance.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Canton, July 10.—The suspicion entertained by the Cantonese toward Feng Kuo-chang has increased owing to the fact that the latter asked Tuan Chi-jui to countersign the mandate of the Vice-President for officiating as the President.

Certain republicans interviewed by Reuter's correspondent declared that the final settlement of the struggle of the old and new parties would be postponed for the present. The strength of the Southerners is insufficient to control the situation. So long as such bureaucrats as Feng Kuo-chang or Tuan Chi-jui hold power, republican institutions are impossible to exist. Some even believe that the recent restoration is simply a part of the programme which bureaucrats had drawn up to regain the control over the national government, and can not be thought that it was planned for strengthening Manchus. The reactionary Government will be stronger and the present Tutuhs will still hold power unless the Republicans are now sufficiently strong to overcome the militarists. It would be preferable that conflicts be postponed until the Republican party has been reorganised.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Tientsin, July 10.—Persistent and unconfirmed reports emanating from Chinese sources say that General Chang Hsun took refuge in the British Legation in Peking.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Tientsin, July 10.—Referring to a telegram from Wu Ting-fang declaring that he has installed himself the Minister for Foreign Affairs at Shanghai, Tuan Chi-jui states that Wu Ting-fang has been dismissed from office, and all actions taken after he left Peking are irresponsible. The Cabinet has been established at Tientsin and it will be transferred to Peking tomorrow. It alone undertakes all diplomatic dealings.

A Peking dispatch says that the corps diplomatique in Peking held a conference on Monday and discussed the question of maintenance of peace and order in Peking. The views of the Powers' Ministers concur with the wishes of the Imperial house and the request of Tuan Chi-jui, but what stands in the way of the establishment of understanding and the restoration of peace is the attitude of Chang Hsun. Consequently the corps diplomatique has decided to advise in friendly spirit Chang Hsun to disband his troops urging the necessity of doing so for the settlement of the complication. This step is believed to be most effective in settling the situation. At the same time the corps diplomatique has intimated to Tuan Chi-jui to the effect that as to the ways and means of chastising Chang Hsun for his crime the corps diplomatique could not approve the idea of resorting to such measures as to take the life of Chang Hsun, as insisted by the officers under Tuan Chi-jui.

Another Peking message reports that as the result of the conference of the corps diplomatique in Peking, comprising the Ministers of Japan, Britain, France, America, Russia, Italy and the Netherlands, on Sunday last, a decision was arrived at that the best way for settling the situation taking into consideration the wishes of both sides, the Imperial government and the republicans was to leave the matter in the hand of Tuan Chi-jui and that the corps diplomatique welcomed the coming to Peking of Tuan Chi-jui on that account as well as for the speedy restoration of peace and order in the capital and the assurance of the safety of lives and properties of the public and foreign residents. The intimation was at once sent to Tuan Chi-jui through Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister, to the consular corps in Tientsin to be handed to Tuan through Mr. Matsudaira, Japanese consul there.

The American Minister Dr. Reinsch, however, objected to this proposal and refused to join in the action on the score that such measure was liable to an interference into China's own affairs—a case of powers' interference—and acted independently. The American Minister instructed the American consul at Tientsin to advise Tuan Chi-jui to similar effect on his own accord and later notified to the ministers of other power to that effect. The corps diplomatique were waiting for the arrival in Peking of Tuan Chi-jui on Monday.

Another dispatch from Peking states that on Sunday last Hu Chang-tsung asked the French Minister to give shelter at the French legation for his family, which matter picked up a fresh question among the powers' ministers, who took the matter seriously because such request bespoke the existence of a very precarious situation in view of the fact that Hu Chang-tsung, who is directly responsible for the maintenance of peace and order in Peking, would have made such application to the French Minister. Conferences were held on the matter by the powers' ministers at once, but no good plan having come forth they decided to advise Tuan Chi-jui to come to Peking speedily and leave the matter to his efforts. Hence the dispatch of a telegraphic instruction to Mr. Matsudaira, Japanese consul and the doyen of the diplomatic corps in Tientsin, who was ordered to urge Tuan Chi-jui to go to Peking at once.

An "Official Gazette" of the Republican Government issued at Tientsin on July 6, bears the number consecutive to that of the last Gazette which was published at Peking on June 30. The "Official Gazette" contains a number of mandates including the appointment of Tuan Chi-jui as Premier and an offer of one hundred thousand dollars for the capture of Chang Hsun, alive or dead.

A Peking dispatch to the "Asahi" says that the Imperial Court at Peking dispatched a member of the Imperial family to the Netherlands Minister, who is the doyen of corps diplomatique, on Tuesday and transmitted an intimation to the effect that the restoration of the monarchical Government was not carried out at the wish of the Imperial house, but the movement was carried out by the will of Chang Hsun.

Another Peking dispatch to the same paper says that though the task of patching up the situation is left to the efforts of Tuan Chi-jui, Kang Yu-wei and his compariots are still harbouring an idea of maintaining monarchical government. The general impression, however, is that with the arrival in Peking of Tuan Chi-jui the Imperial Court will issue a proclamation of cancellation of monarchical restoration and the restoration movement will be entirely rooted out. The conference of corps diplomatique on Monday was held at the request of the Imperial Court. It is expected that the Imperial Court will issue a proclamation of cancellation of the monarchical restoration on Tuesday, the day when Tuan Chi-jui was expected to arrive in Peking. The dispatch adds that though Chang Hsun maintains a strong attitude his followers unanimously approve the disarming and disbandment of his troops.

According to a Tientsin dispatch received in Shanghai a proclamation was issued in the name of the President on Tuesday announcing that owing to circumstances President Li Yuan-hung can not assume the duties of his office for the time being, and consequently Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang temporarily assumes the duties of the President, he having already assumed the presidential duties on July 6th. This signifies the formal opening of the Government at Tientsin. In this connection a Peking dispatch says that as the result of the stoppage of fighting between the republicans and the rebel troops under Chang Hsun the Government under Tuan Chi-jui will remove its seat to Peking in a few days. Premier Tuan is believed to request the cancellation of the monarchical restoration, the maintenance of the former treatment accorded to the ex-Imperial house of the Manchu dynasty, the disbandment of the army under Chang Hsun and proper punishment of Chang Hsun.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 10.—The situation is unchanged. To all intents and purposes the monarchy has disappeared. Only a few dragon flags remain in sight. The chief problem is how to get rid of Chang Hsun's soldiers without disturbance. It has been suggested that Chang Hsun might be willing to disband his troops if the safety of himself, family and property is guaranteed but it seems too early to hope for such solution. Chang Hsun expresses his determination to hold out to the last unless permitted to return to Hsuchow-fu.

It is reported that Hsu Shih-chang has refused to come to Peking to mediate. The responsibility of settling the situation therefore falls upon Wang Shih-chen who later called a meeting of military commanders at which Chiang Chao-chung, Chang Tso-ping, Fu Liang-chc and Chief of Police Wu Ping-hsiang were present yesterday. Owing to the difficulties of disbandment, it was proposed to draft about a half of Chang Hsun's men into the regular army; thus reducing Chang Hsun's command. It is stated that Chang Hsun has agreed to this scheme but this is most doubtful.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 10.—Lai Chen-chung and Chang Chen-fang, Ministers of War and of Finance respectively, attempting to escape for Tientsin yesterday were arrested at Feng Tai. Feng Lin-ko, commander of the 28th Division, which was stationed between Shang Hai-kuan and Mukden has been arrested in Tientsin. He played an active part in the restoration, and left Peking a few days ago to return to command. The doubtful attitude of the 28th division caused a temporary suspension of traffic on the Tientsin Mukden line last week.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai July 10.—A despatch from Tientsin states that Tuan Chi-kwei and Tsao-kun decided yesterday evening to attack the Forbidden City unless Chang Hsun withdraws or surrenders within twenty four hours.

most important question of all. Though nothing definite could be stated at the present moment, it was of most grave importance that after the conclusion of the war Japan should strive for the establishment of a permanent peace in the Far East and for furtherance of that purpose it was most important to Japan to make clear her standpoint and secure a full protection and assurance of her special rights and interests in the Far East, said the Minister. Especially Japan must stick to the principle of non-separate peace compact and strive for a perfect and thorough co-operation with the entente powers with a view to realizing a final victory in favour of the entente powers. The Foreign Minister further stated that as regards Chinese affairs Japan had taken no step as to interfere into her international affairs but kept aloof from the situation in that country observing the already declared principle of non-interference throughout. The Minister took the occasion to declare that President Li Yuan-hung of China was taking refuge in the Japanese legation in Peking, that by the order of the Government the Japanese troops at Tientsin was dispatched to Peking for the protection of the Japanese residents there and that though Japan was requested by Chang Hsun to mediate between the monarchical advocates and the republicans under Tuan Chi-jui the Government refused the request adhering to its policy of non-interference, only taking the trouble to intimate Chang Hsun's intention and wish to the republicans at Tientsin.

Several interpellations were raised by Baron Megata, Count Hayashi, Mr. Egi, Mr. Kamada and other members on the questions bearing on diplomatic policy toward China the negotiations with Russia re Chinese Eastern railway, the Chosen and Manchurian railways, the national education and health, and many other questions. Replies were given by the Foreign Minister, the Premier, the Education Minister and the Communications Minister. The meeting came to a close at 4.25 p.m.

The audience who packed the galleries of the Lower House expecting to see the second battle which was to take place between the Government and the Opposition Party when the resolution of impeachment introduced by the Kenseikai against Baron Goto, Minister of Home Affairs, was to be debated and voted, when Tuesday's business session of the House of Representatives was abruptly closed at 4.30 on the motion by Mr. Tsunematsu of the Seiyukai. The session will continue to-day and after all the Bills placed on the day's order have been disposed of, the impeachment resolution will be finally taken up.

Tuesday's session was opened at 1.15. Before taking up any bill, the Government's written replies to about half a dozen interpellations were announced. In order to save time the contents of these replies were not read. One of these replies was from Foreign Minister Viscount Motono to the interpellation by Mr. Konishi of the Opposition with regard to the British prohibition of alien-land-ownership in the Straits Settlements. The Foreign Minister stated in his reply that the Government was fully aware of the losses that the British prohibition was going to inflict on Japanese enterprises in the Malay Peninsula, and negotiations were being carried on with the British Government with a view to obtain concession to the furthest extent possible.

Mr. Tsunematsu of the Seiyukai was the first member to be given the rostrum and to interpellate the Government as to whether it had any plan to improve the railway service in the vicinity of Hamada in the San-in line, and what the Government is going to do with the freights congested along the San-in lines. This member was followed by Mr. Akita of the Independent Group who interpellated over the Government's attitude on the question of conferring self-Government on the island of Tsushima. The next to take the rostrum was Mr. Yagi of the Kokumin-to who deplored some of the acts committed by the Government which he charged were due to the lack of official discipline and wanted to know if the Government was going to rectify such errors in the future. All these interpellations were addresses rather than what they were understood to be. No Ministers were present at the session to reply to these queries except the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Minister of Communications, and the Minister of Justice. And what was more, none of the interpellators seemed to care to hear what the Government had to say in reply to what they asked about, for they were all satisfied with what they had talked about in their speeches.

Interpellations concluded, the Speaker called upon Mr. Tomijima, Chairman of the Committee on revising the subsidy to the shipping companies, to submit the report on the result of the committee meeting. With a minority opinion of the Kenseikai opposing the suspension of the subsidy at this time, the Bill passed through the second and third readings. The next Bill to be taken up was the one designated to encourage the iron manufacturing industry of the country. The Bill was passed through the third reading as reported by Mr. Motoda, Chairman of the Committee. According to this measure all the iron manufacturers whose foundries produced an annual output of 1,500 tons of iron would receive government assistance.

The Bill to revise the Oriental Development Company Act was next taken up. Mr. Kobayashi, Chairman of the Committee, reported the result of the committee meeting. Mr. Koike of the Kenseikai, one of the members of the committee, carried his opposition to the floor and spoke against the Bill mainly on the ground that the Oriental Development Company's attempts in Korea were a miserable failure and the company was good for nothing. However this opposition amounted to very little and the majority party, supported by other pro-Government parties, pushed the Bill through the second and third readings. Other Bills, among which were those relating to the revision of the laws regulating the silk industry, the sale of opium, penalties in connection with the use of explosives, and income tax, were all referred to committees to be appointed by the Speaker. Another Bill introduced by Mr. Taketomi of the Opposition to establish the Bank of Manchuria was also referred to a committee. It was just this time when Mr. Tsunematsu moved that the day's session be closed and the motion was almost unanimously seconded by the whole House, apparently under the spell of oppressive heat, and the session ended at 4.30.

The third day of the general meeting of the Budget Committee of the Upper House held Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock was devoted to interpellations mainly on questions pertaining to the reform of the admisistration of the Manchurian railway and the protection of merchant marine and marine insurance by Mr. Egi, Baron Takagi, Dr. Ishiwatari and others. Replies were given by Premier Count Terauchi and Baron Den, Minister of Communications.

Dr. Sakuye Takahashi then interpellated on the question relative to national constitution and diplomatic affairs, also touching the relation between America and Russia, the mission of the special envoy to America, the contents of national defense plan etc. Premier Count Terauchi replying to the member's interpellations stated that the Government would make investigations as to whether Russia had given or was going to give special priviliges to America and that the Government could give no clear statement as to whether it would dispatch any mission to Russia nor could it make any definite statement about the nature of the mission of the special envoy to America under Viscount Ishii. Dr. Takahashi then stated that if the Government could not satisfy the member with a clear statement as to the mission of the Ishii mission and other questions put by the member he would not press the Government further, but wished that the Government would not be taken advantage of in international affairs by the American Government. Premier Terauchi, then referring to the question relating to Constitution touched in the member's interpellations, declared that although the nations of the world were craving for democracy, he believed that the Japanese nation would not be affected by such thought prevailing among other nations of the world and would never come to entertain any different ideas about political system of the country nor any doubts as to the question of national constitution.

Admiral Kato, Navy Minister, replying to Dr. Takahashi's interpellation relating to the naval repletion scheme, stated that Japan had no need of changing the already settled principle of the naval repletion programme because of the gigantic extension plan of the army and navy adopted by America nor the financial condition of the country allowed any further extension of the naval strength at present, which was a matter of absolute impossibility. The Navy Minister further stated that as regards the Japanese Navy it must stick to the principle of the eight battleship and eight cruiser unit and the idea of increasing submarines, destroyers and other auxiliary warcraft for the purpose of raiding on the enemy's commercial interests in time of war at the expense of the reinforcement of the strength of the main fleet —fighting squadron—was no good for the purpose of strengthening defense of the country.

JAPANESE MEDIATION IN CHINA

The "Hochi," however, says that now is the time for Japan to assist China as she is in need of Japanese aid. It is reported that General Chang Hsun had requested Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister at Peking, to mediate between him and the oppositionists. It is said that Baron Hayashi refused to comply with the request of Chang Hsun on the ground of Japan's policy of non-interference. If the report is true, the "Kokumin" says that there are some doubtful points.

The interference is wrong when it is made without proper reasons. The internal political affairs of other nations should not be meddled with. But when China asked for the aid of Japan, it is proper to assist that nation. When a neighbour is in difficulties and asks for aid, it is wrong for an individual to overlook the request, and it is the same between two nations.

President Li Yuan-hung asked the protection of the Japanese Legation, and General Chang Hsun requested the influence of Japan to settle the political situation of China, and it is inhuman to coolly follow the policy of non-interference. The "Kokumin" says that the Japanese Government should instruct Baron Hayashi at once to exercise his power to mediate between the two factions in China. Our non-interference policy at present will disappoint the Chinese and while our non-interference policy is excellent in principle, under the present circumstances, Japan should take proper steps to bring peace to China. If the political disturbance becomes larger, it will be not only unfortunate for the Chinese, but the foreigners residing in China will be in danger and damages will be done to commerce.

The paper hopes that the Japanese Government will decide to aid China which has asked the assistance of Japan at this moment, and endeavour to maintain peace in the Far East, or else Japan has to lose her position in the Orient, obtained after many bitter sacrifices.

THE MONARCHY MOVEMENT AND JAPAN'S DUTY

When the restoration of the monarchy was made at Peking, it was thought that the south would be the first to oppose it. However it is a known fact that the south does not possess the sufficient military force to demonstrate its opposition against the restoration, and it was predicted that the north and south would stand against each other. But the "Jiji" says that most unexpectedly the actual opposition against the restoration started in the north, and the military leaders of the north who are against the restoration held a conference and appointed General Tuan as the Chief Commander of the army to defeat the monarchists, and the republican forces had already encountered the army of General Chang Hsun near Peking.

It was an unexpected development that the northern military leaders have immediately attempted to crush the attempt of restoration, before the south took any decided step against the monarchy.

At Peking the ex-Emperor was again placed on the Throne, but President Li Yuan-hung is still regarded as the President of the Republic and there now exist two heads of the nation. The monarchists have been isolated by the rising of the northern military leaders against them, and it is difficult to predict the future development.

Even though the army of General Chang Hsun is defeated, it does not prove that the restoration was an utter failure. The Northern Military leaders who rose against General Chang Hsun have been ardent supporters of the restoration, and their present opposition was not caused by their belief that the restoration was not welcome, but by their dissatisfaction with the attitude of General Chang Hsun.

General Chang Hsun lost the sympathies of the northern monarchists by his self-important attitude in the recent attempt, but the cause being only a sentimental one, it can not be said what may happen in future.

The "Jiji" says that the protection of the foreign residents in Peking and the railway line between Tientsin and Peking is the important problem at present, and the paper hopes that the Japanese Government will not fail to take the proper step to protect the interest and properties of foreigners and insure the safety of the railway. All foreign nations depend upon Japan for the protection of their interests in China, and Japan should not fail to perform her duty at any indication of danger to the foreigners residing in the northern part of China.

MEANING OF NON-INDEMNITY AND NON-ANNEXATION

Since the Russians declared that no-indemnity and non-annexation would be the basis of the peace terms, the world has begun to seriously discuss the question, and even the Kaiser has recently announced that no-indemnity and non-annexation will be the foundation of the peace terms. But the "Kokumin" says that it is strange to discuss the peace terms while the war is still raging and there is no sight of peace.

The term of no-indemnity and non-annexation is very simple, but its meaning is very complex. The Russians proposed the terms and the Germans are supporting it, but it is not known whether they mean the same thing. The non-annexation preached by the Russians only means that the Russians do not wish the annexation of Constantinople or the Dardanelles, and by no-indemnity, they mean that the belligerent powers would not ask the indemnity for the war expenditure. But it seems that Germans are interpreting the term of non-annexation much wider than the Russians, and they hope that all German colonies in Africa, Asia and South Seas will be returned to Germany. However it is doubtful whether Germany will agree to return the conquered territories in France, Belgium, Russia, Rumania and Serbia.

Whatever may be the interpretation of non-annexation and no-indemnity by the Germans the "Kokumin" says that it is not necessary for us to consider the peace terms at present. England and other Entente powers will not be satisfied until they have crushed the German militarism, and they will not accept any term which will allow Germany to exist as she is to-day.

Not only the discussion of peace terms during the actual fighting brings no result, but it will be injurious as the discussion of such a subject will tend to discourage the army of the Entente. In the past Germany occupied a slightly favourable position, but recently the situation has changed, and with the entrance of the United States in the war, Germany may realize that she will be unable to keep on fighting, and beg for peace.

The discussion of peace terms is unnecessary and should not be indulged in by the people of the Entente powers at least, says the "Kokumin."

HOSPITALITY TO PRESIDENT LI YUAN-HUNG

The "Jiji" says that it was the Peking attitude for the Japanese legation at Peking to consent to protect President Li Yuan-hung when the President requested the protection of the Japanese Minister. General Chang Hsun is not a barbarous man, and he will not treat the President with any disrespect, but under his command, there are many Generals and soldiers who are cruelly disposed, and if the President does not consent to resign, such persons may attempt anything to get rid of the President. The Allied Ministers at Peking are said to have asked General Chang Hsun to protect the President.

The "Jiji" hopes that the Japanese Minister will accord the respect and hospitality to Li Yuan-hung, due to the position of the President of China. The success of the restoration movement is still doubtful, and Li Yuan-hung is still the President, and he should be treated by the Japanese officials as the President of the Republic. Furthermore it is necessary that the fact that the presence of President Li Yuan-hung in the Japanese Legation has no political meaning should be explained to the Chinese public.

Under such circumstances, the Japanese Government should be not only impartial and watch the development but also respect and honour President Li Yuan-hung as the head of the Republican Government of China.

DUTY OF CABINET MINISTERS

The cabinet ministers are all insincere in answering the questions put them by the members of Parliament, says the "Nichinichi," and while they should be severely criticised for their insincerity, the paper declares that the members of Parliament also can not escape from the same criticism.

It seems that the Cabinet Ministers have been trying to side-step the questions at the Diet, and the members are creating discussions simply for the sake of discussion. Among the cabinet Ministers Baron Goto and Viscount Motono are reported to be most insincere in the session of Diet.

The "Nichinichi" says that when cabinet ministers reply to the questions put them by the members, they are speaking also to the general public that stand at the back of the members, and it is the duty of the minister to answer whatever question to the satisfaction of the members of Parliament and the public. The paper sincerely hopes that ministers and members of Parliament will be more sincere in dealing with state affairs.

HIGH COST OF LIVING

The "Jiji" says that although the principal cause for the recent advance of cost of living in Japan is the rapidly increasing surplus money in the country, the insufficient transportation facilities, lack of necessary cargo space, increase of export and decrease of import are also the causes of the high cost of living. It is needless to say that the transportation facilities should be improved, but at the same time, the unusual increase of export and the decrease of import should be regulated to prevent the further increase in the prices of commodities.

The result of the encouragement of export and endeavour to lessen the amount of import, has caused the depressing effect upon the economic development of the country. A special emergency policy is required to save the nation from the unnecessary high cost of living.

GRADUATION CEREMONY OF IMPERIAL UNIVERSITY

The graduation ceremony of the Tokyo Imperial University was held Wednesday morning and 1,613 graduates of the year were given diplomas and twenty one honour graduates received the Imperial Prizes. The ceremony was attended by H.I.M. the Emperor, T.I.H. Princes Kuni, Asaka and Nashimoto, Mr. Okada, Minister of Education, Count Hijikata, Marquis Hachisuka, Marquis Matsukata, Baron Kikuchi, Baron Hozumi, Viscount Hatano, Prince Takatsukasa and other noted citizens of Tokyo.

H.I.M. the Emperor left the Imperial Palace at nine o'clock Wednesday morning, accompanied by Viscount Hatano, General Uchiyama, and Prince Takatsukasa, and proceeded to the Imperial University, Hongo.

Playing of the national anthem signalled the arrival of His Majesty at the University, and Baron Yamakawa, President of the University and members of the faculty welcomed the arrival of His Majesty. Prior to the holding of the graduation ceremony, H.I.M. the Emperor listened to lectures by professors of the University. Dr. Funabashi lectured on mineralogy, and Dr. Katsura on the Japanese product of zinc. Dr. Tanaka explained the writings of Emperor Gonara, and Dr. Kuroita lectured upon ancient historical documents. Dr. Suyehiro explained an arrangement to prevent the rolling of ships.

Following the lectures, H.I.M. the Emperor proceeded to the auditorium where the graduation ceremony was to be held, and awarded Imperial prizes to twenty one honour graduates. Ten of the Imperial Prizes went to the graduates of the Law College, four to the Medical College, four to the Engineering College, one to the College of Literature and two to the College of Science. The diplomas were awarded to 1,613 graduates by Baron Yamakawa, the President.

The graduates of this year were 998 from the College of Law, 155 from the Medical College, 199 from the College of Engineering, 85 from the College of Literature, 32 from the College of Science, and 144 from the College of Agriculture.

H.I.M. the Emperor returned to the Imperial Palace immediately after the conclusion of the ceremony, and Mr. Okada, Minister of Education and Baron Yamakawa proceeded to the Imperial Palace in the afternoon to express thanks to His Majesty for attending the graduation ceremony.

DAIRIES TO RECEIVE STRICT CONTROL

The effect of the present war on all lines of trade in this country is very observable nowadays. For instance, the dairies in this country are now greatly hit for the scarcity of milch cows, in consequence of great numbers of cows having been recently sacrificed for making canned meat to be exported to the Allies. Now it is learned that even in Tokyo city the retail milkmen are greatly suffering from the same cause, who number as many as 1300-1400, because many of the dairy owners in the city and suburbs have sold away the cattle in their possession to realize a tremendous profit, as indeed they did, out of their stock which, it is said, were sold, for instance at 300 yen per head whereas it did not cost more than 80 yen if the cows were of the Holstein species. The Metropolitan Police authorities are, therefore, determined to exercise a strict control over the sale of milk in regards to its quality, in consequence of the situation, as it is open to fear that some of the milkmen may be tempted to dilute the milk they are to sell to make amends for the deficiency.

LAYING THE DUST WORKERS

One of the hardest lots, if not the only one though, that ever fall to the people of the working class may be that of the water-sprinkler in the city. From early in the morning say seven o'clock till half past five in the afternoon, and that especially in this hot burning summer season such a poor water-sprinkler is in his trammels of drudgery for the scanty remuneration of only fifty and at best sixty sen a day. According to the authorities of the city of Tokyo there are about three or four hundred like coolies in the pay of the city at usual time of the year and in summer time this number is increased up to six hundred for the obvious reason that the streets require more watering. These water-dispersers are instructed to give water to the division of the streets which is assigned to each of them at least four times in a day and it is told that under the existing condition of the arrangements belonging to this branch of the city's works it is totally impossible to hope that this number of times that water should be given off in the streets each day is to be increased. Out of the total area of 2,600,000 tsubo occupied by the city roads at present one million tsubo (including 200,000 tsubo taken up by the tramway tracks) is set apart as the area to be besprinkled with water. Each water-carrier has 1700 tsubo set to him over which he must range with water every day. The water carrier draws up the water for his cart from the well specially constructed for this purpose which is situated at convenient intervals along the streets by a hand-worked pump, which operation, at the lowest calculation, takes 6-10 minutes each time and to cover the whole area of 1700 tsubo which is the district of his round the water-sprinkler must go over the area with twenty cartfuls of water at a time, in truth which then takes two hours and a half altogether. But when the pump is worked through the instrumentality of mechanical power the time taken by the operation of drawing up the water sufficient for 2 cartfuls is reduced to no more than fifteen minutes and this economising of the time taken by the operation consequently will cause the increase of the number of times as the water is sprinkled in the streets per day. In this connection it is worthy of remark that the city authorities of Tokyo have ever tried to adopt the advanced systems used in East England or America. And later they tried the brine to facilitate the water in laying dust but as this method brought on heavy costs it was afterward confined only to such cases as on the occasion of the procession of the Emperor through the streets. It is, however, now reported that the city authorities have resolved on a plan to employ automobiles in near future for the specific purpose of facilitating the work of watering the streets.

OSAKA'S NEW SANATORIUM

The Osaka Municipality's newly established sanatorium for consumptive patients is reported to open about the end of this month. We are told that it is the most satisfactorily furnished medical institution of this kind in Japan and can accommodate two thousand persons; its site was laid out on Tone Hill one cho east of Hotarugaike Stopping place for the suburban trams, covering 35,000 tsubo, of which 2,000 tsubo is fully occupied by the office, dispensary, consultation-room, sick-rooms bath-room, and an entertainment hall with a fine stage for the performance of plays and movies' show. The most conspicuous plan is that the hospital has around it a large garden full of natural beauties where the patients enjoy their 'constitutionals' among the green trees all the year round and can take the newest treatment of sun-basking in the divan built on the highest place in the garden commanding a bird's-eye-view of the surrounding localities.

A HINT TO THE S.P.C.A.

The vernacular papers state that there is now a queer, but decided tendency towards the increase in the number of cats and dogs left abandoned on the high ways of Tokyo, especially in the wards of Fukagawa and Honjo which have the main slums and sinks of the metropolis. This is attributed to the soaring price of rice and the heavy cost of living which are keenly felt among the lower classes now, and it is told that some care-takers of cats and dogs are anxious to get rid of them so as to make their pockets less tight.

Abandoned cats and dogs, it is reported, are now too numerous to induce the police to take pity on them and though homeless animals are found little attention is paid to them by the authorities.

HOW RAGMEN EARN THEIR LIVING

How the utilization of the waste is really carried out nowadays may be easily realized when the following facts are all considered. The ragmen in the city of Tokyo and suburbs number at present over 1000 and most of them live at Iriya and Man-nen-cho in Shitaya-ku, and at Nippori outside the city. All the waste odds and ends they pick up bring, curious to say, a goodly sum of money to them. For instance, any old rush mattings bring from one sen to three sen, which are used for making the mattings to cover the kind of Japanese sandals called "setta," and any empty cans used for packing food are much appreciated by this class of men, because the lead melted off the cans are collected into a mass and the tin plates are sold to the manufacturers of toys. All the rusted cans are sold away to the foundries at Senju-ohashi to be melted there. The worn-out "tabi" with a rubber sole also brings money when the rubber is sold away in a heap and the cloths of the "tabi" are sold away to paper manufacturers. If these "tabis" are only tolerably worn out the ragmen give some mending touches to them to make them up complete and then sell them by the roadside at night at such a place as Man-nen-cho. Waste fulled cotton cloths bring 2 sen to 5 sen according to their quality and are used for the sheets of cheap cushions etc., after being dyed. Long hairs as of women which usually drop off when women have hairdressing are collected and sold to artificial hairmakers at about 6 yen per kwan.

Castaway old clogs bring 1 sen for an odd pair and when they have been mended and finished up and each pair well matched by selecting suitable fellows of each different pair in case the pair is not whole, they are sent away to the rag market at Ichikawa in Chiba prefecture to be sold there. The Japanese rain umbrellas of rude make when they are broken and in disuse but once in the hands of the ragmen they bring one or two sen and when they have been repaired they are sold cheap in such an emergency as an unexpected shower to the people who have nothing at hand to protect them. Any waste piece of mouseline fabric is an unfailing source of money to the ragmen because it invariably sells well, being useful, as when it is hacked and powdered it can be woven into fabric again.

FRENCH NATIONAL DAY

The French National Fete Day, which falls on to-day will not be officially celebrated this year in either Yokohama or Tokyo. Both the Embassy and the Consulate-General in Yokohama will be closed to-day, and there will be no reception at either place.

A subscription campaign will take the place of the celebration this year. To-day all Frenchmen and friends of France are asked to subscribe to the fund for war orphans. The money will be used in the education of children whose parents have died during the war.

A celebration of a non-official nature will take place at the Kaihin Hotel at Kamakura on Saturday evening. A Soirée-Dance will be given to celebrate the National Fete day, and a kermesse will be given for the blind of the Allied nations who are victims of the war.

YOKOHAMA TRAM FARES INCREASED

The Yokohama Tramway Co. has recently applied to the Government for general enhancement of its fares, but owing to no prospect of its being permitted, it asked for that of commutation tickets. Permission was given therefor on the 5th by the Tokyo Government, and immediately transmitted to the Company by the Yokohama Municipal Office. According to the new tariff, twenty-four such tickets will be given at one yen, i.e., 4 sen per trip, against 3.5 sen as heretofore. Forty-nine and seventy-four tickets are also to be issued at 2 yen and 3 yen respectively. Time for cheap fare in the morning was revised. Supplementary conditions for the said permission order the Company to speedily improve the service on the lines already laid, to notify the authorities concerned of the date for the completion of new lines, fixing it within three months at least, to wind up in due course transactions and lease of lands and houses, hitherto conducted by the Company, and to issue discount tickets for students and pupils at the rate less than 3.5 sen. The Company has not yet decided to leave the current discount tickets valid for two and half or three months.

RUMANIAN GOVERNMENT'S REQUEST FOR PHYSICIANS

The Rumanian Government had requested the Japanese Government to send one hundred physicians through the Italian Embassy at Tokyo, and the Departments of Education and Home Affairs have been considering the proposal. It is reported that the Japanese Government made further inquiries about the condition of the employment of the physicians, and upon the receipt of the answer from Rumania, the matter will be decided. The Government at present is discussing whether the physicians to be sent to Rumania will be selected from public applications or to be appointed by ten selected physicians. As the Rumanian Government is in need of the service of physicians, it is believed that the Japanese Government will comply with the request and send the Japanese physicians to Rumania as soon as the satisfactory arrangement is made.

NEW REGULATIONS TO GOVERN RICE SALE

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce has recently decided to issue a regulation to enforce the sale of rice by weight instead of quantity. The Department has asked the opinion of Mayor of Tokyo regarding the new regulation, and Dr. Okuda, the Mayor, called the leading merchants of Tokyo to a conference Saturday morning. It is reported that those who discussed the matter with Dr. Okuda Saturday are of the opinion that the change of the system will be difficult.

The Association of Rice Merchants in Tokyo has already resolved to protest against the new regulation and the association is determined to prevent the enforcement of the regulation. They believe that the change of the system will be detrimental to their business.

The Department of Agriculture and Commerce believes that the present system of selling rice by quantity is very inconvenient, and under the system, it is difficult to detect the shortage, which is often practiced by the rice retailers on purpose. However with the introduction of the weight system, any shortage can be easily found.

Appropriate, always.

With certain dishes, such as Game, LEA & PERRINS' SAUCE is always appropriate. It is the recognised sauce for such use.

In fact, for everything with which a sauce can be used, LEA & PERRINS' is invariably the BEST. It has a refinement of flavour that suits the most delicate dishes and appeals to the most exacting palates.

NEWS & NOTES

The Yokohama Municipality has notified Messrs. Samuel, Samuel & Co. for the redemption of £4,440 on January 31st, 1918, of £317,000 municipal sterling bonds.

A donation of 600 yen has been given by the passengers of the Tenyo Maru, now in Yokohama, to the local branch of the Patriotic League of Britons Overseas to be allotted to the War Relief Funds.

Over two hundred members of the House of Peers and House of Representatives were invited to inspect the Naval station at Yokosuka on Tuesday, and arriving at Yokosuka, twelve of them were taken on board submarines, and they had the first experience in diving under the water.

The prefectural authorities of Osaka have recently formed a plan to enlarge the Nishinoda mechanics school and the Imamiya mechanics school under their control in order to furnish more accommodations for the increasing number of applicants for the entrance into those two schools owing to the greater necessity than before for mechanics in that locality at present. Though the authorities have another idea to establish a school of the similar character to the other two yet it is said they are likely to adopt the first measure for financial reasons.

The Behring Strait is reported to be full of floating ice this season, and many Japanese fishing boats have not been heard of and anxiety is felt about the fate of the ships.

The Tenri Maru, 826 tons, left Hakodate over forty days ago, and after encountering many ice floes, the ship managed to return to the port on the twelvth. The steamers Taisei Maru, 1231 tons, and Inabayama Maru, 983 tons, have not been reported although they left Hakodate over thirty days ago. All sailing boats which attempted the trip to the Strait have all returned, being unable to reach their destination on account of the floating ice.

The railway authorities of this country made an announcement recently that no reduction will be allowed hereafter in the fares as has hitherto been the case during summer time for the benefit of such passengers as travel a long distance to go to sea-side resorts, etc. but instead only to those passengers who intend to go on a mountaineering trip during the summer will the same unstinted favour as before be shown by the authorities by way of encouraging the habit of mountain-climbing among the nation at large. It is learned that the railway authorities are not over anxious to gain a considerably increased income by this new measure, because in their estimation the net profit due to them will not amount to more than 30,000 yen, in all from July 1 to September 15.

The number of applicants for the installation of telephones in the present year was 36,000 but the number of lines available is reported to be only 3,500. Hence a process of elimination has to be undergone according to the most necessary applicants. Investigations for this purpose are now taking place but since the time of application was early this year the investigations are expected to be completed about the end of August when information of installation will be forwarded to the fortunate ones who in the eyes of the authorities have been included as one of those in dire need of the means. The Department of Communications is at present planning to increase 9 new telephone exchanges within a few years. Already there are ten exchanges in the city. The next exchange which will be added before the end of the year will be the Takanawa central which is now undergoing construction.

The China Mail Steamship Company will make Hongkong and New York the terminal points of its operations, instead of Hongkong and San Francisco, according to a Chinese paper in Hongkong. This does not mean that any of the present ports of call in Japan or China will be omitted, but simply that the length of its ships' voyages will be extended. After arriving at San Francisco the Company's vessels will proceed to New York, via Panama Canal, touching at way ports in Central America and the United States. Captain Dobson, former commander of the China, who left San Francisco for London on May 18th to take command of the Nile, is expected back in the United States with that vessel soon. Apropos, it may be noted that the Nile will be renamed the Peking and the Congress, recently bought by the China Mail, be renamed the Nanking.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE IMPERIAL DIET

The Kenseikai suffered another defeat in its fight against the Government at the session on the 11th of the House of Representatives. The resolution introduced by the Opposition Party to impeach the Minister of Home Affairs, Baron Goto, met a summary defeat when the pros and cons of the House were counted on the resolution after the debate which lasted about two hours and which was participated in by six members representing the different parties. As expected, the debate on the resolution did not lack in presenting a number of noisy scenes which entertained the audience in the galleries a great deal. Speaking as a whole it was doubtful whether more than a handful of the members were sincere about what they were growling or shouting about.

As soon as the business session was opened at 1.15 p.m. a number of Bills placed on the day's order were taken up and properly disposed of. The Speaker Mr. Ōoka then announced the resolution introduced by the Kenseikai would be discussed.

Mr. Hayami of the Kenseikai, taking the rostrum, went on to explain the reason for introducing the resolution. The secret pamphlets circulated by Baron Goto containing the translations of the foreign correspondence and comments on the alleged activity of the Japanese in China at the time of the Sino-Japanese negotiations, Mr. Hayami charged were for the purpose of undermining the political power of the Okuma Cabinet. The Baron's secret attempt thus to gain his power constituted a vilification of the nation's honour as well as a stumbling block for diplomatic welfare of the country. After committing such a disgraceful act against the nation, to cling to a Cabinet chair proved the Baron's want of conscience, Mr. Hayami declared, and the Baron ought to go.

During his speech the members of the pro-Government parties became excited to a high pitch when Mr. Hayami used such words as "shameless." "unmoral," "no common-sense" etc, in characterizing the Home Minister's conduct. At their vociferous demand that Mr. Hayami retract his coarse utterances, the Speaker ordered him to retract his words. This Mr. Hayami complied with, but used many phrases closely resembling them in the rest of his speech.

Mr. Horikiri of the Seiyukai then took the rostrum and spoke in opposition to the resolution. The Seiyukai member ironically deplored the introduction of the resolution by the Kenseikai who under the Okuma Cabinet had done the things barred naked in the secret pamphlets. He defended the publication of the pamphlets of such nature was not improper when they were to be used in order to save the country from a miserable diplomatic failure, and declared that any man had the right to oppose the Government by such means.

The second member to speak in support of the resolution was Mr. Kajishima of the Kensei-kai. He denounced the Baron as having brought to light what the latter considered wrong acts of the country, referring to the example of Eucken and Heckel of Germany at the outbreak of the war. Mr. Kajishima then turned his attack on the Seiyu-kai for its defense of the Home Minister in order to point out the errors committed by the former Cabinet. Stung by this attack, the Seiyukai members emulated one another by making loudest noise possible to make a mockery of the speaker.

Mr. Kodama of the Independent Group, who next took the rostrum and spoke against the resolution, was followed by Mr. Seki of the Kenseikai. Mr. Seki denied the accusation that his party was indulging in useless political strife unmindful of the grave world situation. His party was fully awaken to the present tendency the world over, and that very fact actuated his party to continue its fight against conservatives and bureaucrats to which Baron Goto belonged, declared Mr. Seki. He denounced the Home Minister for publishing and circulating the secret pamphlets, which act Mr. Seki said was nothing but a secret intrigue against the Government of the time, and for not fighting the Government in the open like a man. In reviewing a passage in the Home Minister's address before the Prefectural Governors' Conference in which the Baron asserted he would try to be an example in regard to official discipline, Mr. Seki described the Baron as having made himself a "laughing stock" in the people's eye. The use of this phrase by Mr. Seki gave to the pro-Government members another chance to exercise their lungs and for several minutes they kept Mr. Seki's voice drowned in their deafening cries denouncing the speaker for employing such words.

Mr. Seki was followed by Mr. Fukui of the Seiyukai who spoke in opposition to the resolution in a sarcastic manner. He declared the question at issue was of a minor significance and said he was sorry to witness repeated defeats of the Opposition Party. Mr. Fukui declared that Baron Goto rather deserved an eulogy than a denunciation, for what the Baron had done was to remove the cause which obstructed the country from going diplomatically straight.

Baron Goto, Home Minister, who silently listened to the speeches for and against him for two hours was given the rostrum just as Mr. Tsunematsu of the Seiyukai moved for the closure. In defiance of constant disorderly noise made by the Kenseikai, the Home Minister explained that the circulation of the pamphlets was not in violation of the publication law and he had circulated them with anything but bad intention. The Home Minister, in challenging tone, gave expression to his confidence that the party claiming only one-third of the membership of the House never could succeed in their attempt to oust him from the position. He concluded his speech by advising the Kenseikai to be equanimous and to introspect itself.

When Baron Goto finished his speech amid loud hand-clapping by the pro-Government members and hisses and heckles by the Kenseikai, the Speaker of the House asked the members to rise in turn to show their pro or con. As everyone expected the resolution was defeated by a large majority,—almost 2 to 1, the minority party losing the second battle on the floor.

When the impeachment resolution was defeated by an overwhelming majority, the members of the Kenseikai and the Kokumin-to camps retired en bloc, the half of the seats being vacated. At the motion of Dr. Tsunematsu the order of the day was changed and the house took up the bill providing for partial revision of the income tax law. Mr. Okuda, chairman of the special committee, reported on the result of the committee investigation. Mr. Ichiki, Vice-Minister of Finance, opposed the proposal and Mr. Mayekawa supported the Bill, which was subsequently adopted as reported by the Committee, omitting further reading.

The resolution proposing the establishment of an investigation committee for state owned properties introduced by Mr. Raitaro Sawa was next taken up and Mr. Sawa spoke on the resolution, which was unanimously approved as introduced without further reading.

The resolutions pertaining to the grant of state subsidy to the stipends of primary school teachers, the valuation of land in the Hokkaido, partial revision of the textile fabrics consumption tax and the grant of state subsidy on the construction of sheltering harbours for fishery purpose, all introduced by the members, were then taken up and committeed. The House rose at 4.35 p.m.

The Lower House committee on the settled accounts met on the 11th and discussed about the settled accounts relating to the accounts of the government railways. The day's session was, however, devoted to interpellations which were replied to by the Government Delegates. The Special Committee of the same house on the Bills providing for the revision of the regulations pertaining to the control of the Hypothec Bank, the Farmers and Mechanics Banks, the Hokkaido Colonization Bank, the Industrial Guilds also met yesterday morning and passed the Bills as submitted by the Government without amendments. The committees on the Bills for the revision of the Income Tax Law, the Manchurian Bank Law, the Transit Tax Law and the regulations pertaining to the control of the sale and handling of explosives held meetings yesterday and resumed interpellations. The Bill for the revision of the Transit Tax Law was rejected; other Bills being referred to further discussions.

In a written reply to the interpellation by Mr. Y. Imai of the Independent Group, the Foreign Minister Viscount Motono made the following statement yesterday relative to the Imperial Government's attitude towards the monarchical movement in China.

As has been repeatedly declared the Government will observe the non-interference policy towards the internal strife in China unless the Empire's interests become endangered. Frivolous rumours contradictory to this policy can not be trusted. So far the course of events in China has necessitated no change in this policy.

The House of Peers met on the 11th. The attendanve of the members was very small, many members attending the meetings of the Sectional Committees on the Supplementary Budget Estimates and the social committees on various other Bills. At the Ministerial seats were in evidence the Ministers of Communications, Agriculture and Commerce, Finance and Justice. Baron Den, Communications Minister, and Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, spoke on the Government Bills respectively relating to suspension of the grant of shipbuilding encouragement funds and the encouragement of iron industry, which were both referred to committees. Next Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, and Mr. Nakashoji, Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, spoke in turn on the official Bills providing for partial revision of the regulations pertaining to the control of the Oriental Development Company and the sericultural industry, the bills being committeed. Baron Uchida submitted the reports of the committee on the settled accounts of the revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year 1914, and the revenue and expenditure belonging to special accounts for the same fiscal year and a resolution relating to the above settled accounts, which reports were adopted without a hitch, the resolutions warning the Government for inadequate or unlawful expenditures being also unanimously approved.

Eight petitions adopted by the Petition Committee were then submitted and at once carried without discussions. The House rose at 10.40 a.m.

The Sectional Committees on the budget bills of the Upper House held meetings yesterday morning and afternoon. The morning session was devoted to interpellations on various items and the fresh undertakings provided for in the Budget Estimates, but nothing of special significance occurred.

The Government was again subjected to heated attacks in the House of Representatives on the 12th by three memebrs representing three different parties. The acts which called forth these attacks, even from a member of the pro-Government party—Ishin-kai was the Government's sending to the House written replies to several re-interpellations placed on the order of the day. The three members gave vent to their dissatisfaction with the written replies to what they had re-interrogated about and severely criticised the Government for evading to give them explanations to their heart's content by sending such replies before the re-interpellators were given a chance to fully explain what they wanted to question about.

The session opened at 1.15 p.m. The Speaker Mr. O-oka ordered a clerk to read more than half a dozen written replies by the Government to the re-interpellations placed on the day's order. The Government's replies included those to the re-interpellations over the establishment of the Advisory Board of Foreign Affairs, Japan's attitude relative to the restoration movement in China, and several other internal as well as foreign subjects. One or two replies were somewhat lengthy, while most of the rest ran in such manners as "the question has been already replied to," or "no further reply can be given on the question."

Mr. Takamatsu of the Kokuminto was the first member to attack the Government from the rostrum for this sort of treatment and declared that party lines should be buried in order to bring the Government to its sense of duty. Mr. Takamatsu, in spite of the fact that he belonged to the party which aligned with the Government when the Opposition Party attempted to hammer down the Government by introducing two want-of-confidence resolutions, expressed his deep sympathy with Mr. Koyama of the Kensei-kai who received a very blunt written reply from the Minister of Education Mr. Okada to his re-interpellation over the Minister's "double faced act," to borrow Mr. Koyama's phrase, in denying in the Lower House the accusation that he had assisted a man of criminal record in the recent election while admitting and apologizing for it in the Upper House.

Mr. Koyama next went up on the restrum and, apparently encouraged by the preceding speaker's sympathy, denounced the Minister of Education. Mr. Koyama urged then all the parties to support his contention against the Minister as its significance ought not to be disregarded on party differences. But the Seiyu-kai, the majority party, was too bigotted to listen to the speaker's appeal and tried to drown his speech in dinning shouts at every chance it could find.

The Seiyu-kai, moreover, sent up one of its members, Mr. Fukui to the rostrum to defend the Minister of Education on the ground that the Okuma Cabinet was not free from doing the same thing Mr. Okada was being accused of.

Mr. Tsuchiya of the Ishinkai also was dissatisfied with the Government's written reply to his re-interpellation on the Government's plan with regard to the Laboratory for the Researches of Contagious Diseases, and hotly criticized the Government's insincere attitude.

Mr. Inouye, Chairman of the Committees, then was called upon to report on the decisions of the committees on revising the laws regulating the industrial guilds, the Hokkaido Development Bank Act, the Industrial Bank of Japan Act, the Banks of Agriculture and Industry Act. These decisions of the respective committees were passed through the second reading adopted without submitting them to a third reading.

Mr. Kobayashi spoke on the Bill proposing a partial revision of the textile consumption tax law, which was introduced by the member. The Bill was referred to a special committee together with several other Bills of similar significance. At the motion of Mr. Tsunematsu the order of the day was changed and the House took up the Bill for the abolition of the regulations pertaining to the control of the sale and handling of explosives. The bill was approved as reported. The Government Bill providing measures for the control of industrial properties in war time and five resolutions introduced by the members were reported on and carried without a hitch. The House next listened to the reports of the Petition Committee, which were approved en bloc, altogether 43 petitions being adopted by the Committee.

Mr. Takao Saito, a Kenseikai member, taking the rostrum, explained the resolution proposing the abolition of the Advisory Board of Foreign Affairs, which was the next item on the day's order. The Kenseikai member stated the reason for the resolution, mainly dwelling upon the inconsistency of the establishment of the Board with the spirit of the Constitution in that the new organ, placed under the direct control of the Emperor and above the Cabinet, performs a function similar to that of the Cabinet or Privy Council, and therefore ignores the existence and the right of the Cabinet and Privy Council. The member in the course of his speech attacked the measures of the Ministry which he said apparently attempted to conceal its incapacity and failure in diplomatic affairs and evade its responsibility by taking such unconstitutional measures as to establish the Advisory Board with a view to attributing all responsibilities for diplomatic affairs of the country. As the member went on and directed his attack toward the attitude of the pro-Government parties, an uproar was started by the members of the pro-Government parties and a great confusion followed, plunging the House into a veritable scene of seething cauldron. Mr. Yokota, a Kenseikai member, motioned to refer the Kenseikai member to the punishment committee. The motion being seconded by a Kenseikai member and approved by a majority the Kenseikai member was referred to the punishment committee. The House then rose at 5.45 p.m.

The Lower House Committees on the Bills pertaining to the war time measures for the control of industrial rights and properties ownership, the abolition of the regulations for the control of the sale and handling of explosives, and the construction of sheltering harbours for fishery purposes met yesterday and approved the bills as submitted after a few interpellations.

The Opposition Party for a third time lost its fight against the Government in the House of Representatives on the 13th. The resolution introduced by the Kenseikai to abolish the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs which was established some weeks ago was rejected as exptted on the 13th session by a large majority after a debate lasting about two hours.

INTERNET ARCHIVE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

The Kenseikai waged its battle against the Board mainly on the ground that the body of such character was incompatible with Constitutional provisions as well as that the establishment of such body provided a means for the Cabinet to evade its responsibility for state affairs. The parties opposed to the Kenseikai resolution denied these contentions and defended the Board as the right thing needed in the face of the critical world situation which confronted the Empire.

Before the resolution was put to the debate, the House took up a number of cases in connection with those members whose disorderly conducts or whose use of improper words at the previous day's session caused a punishment committee to be appointed. Mr. Ohtsu of the Kenseikai regretted that the pro-Government members should behave in such a manner as to make it impossible for any speaker to make his speech heard, and denounced the Speaker Mr. Ooka for ordering Mr. Saito, a Kenseikai member, to submit himself to a punishment committee despite the fact that Mr. Saito, in compliance with the order of the Speaker, retracted the word he had used. Then the Speaker Mr. Ooka announced that a written move be made by Mr. Koizumi of the Kenseikai that Mr. Takami of the Seiyukai be referred to a punishment committee for his disorderly conduct in the House while Mr. Saito was explaining the resolution to abolish the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs. Mr. Takami on that occasion ran up to the stenographers' platform to obstruct Mr. Saito's speech. This move was immediately put to a vote and was defeated by 139 against 185, thus Mr. Takami escaping his deserved punishment by the sheer force of a majority.

Then the House went into a secret session at which Mr. Koyama, Chairman of the Punishment Committee charged with discussing a means to deal with Mr. Saito, reported on the result of the committee meeting. After the House was again opened for the audience the Speaker announced the committee decision and ordered Mr. Saito to apologize formally for uttering the improper word. This was complied with by Mr. Saito who from the rostrum read his apology. Mr. Ooka, the Speaker then announced that Mr. Yokoyama of the Kenseikai would be referred to a punishment committee for his disorderly conduct during the secret session when he is said to have obstructed the discussion of punishing Mr. Saito.

Mr. Saito was then given the rostrum to continue his explanation for introducing the resolution to abolish the Foreign Affairs Board. Mr. Saito was followed by Mr. Uyehara of the Kokuminto who refuted the contention of the preceding speaker. Mr. Morita and Mr. Furuya of the Kenseikai, Mr. Nakanishi of the Seiyukai, and Mr. Ohtsu of the Ishinkai, took the rostrum in turn and argued for and against the resolution along the lines too familiar to be reported.

When the argument was closed, Premier Count Terauchi stepped forward and in a few words refuted the chief points raised by the Opposition members, expressing his confidence that the House would not be misled by the Opposition arguments.

When the Resolution was put to a vote it was rejected by a large majority, only the Kenseikai and a couple of the Independent Group members being for it and all the rest against.

After the Opposition resolution proposing the abolition of the Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs was defeated by a great majority the House changed the order of the day to listen to the report on the result of the conference of the two Houses on the Bill pertaining to the measures for the encouragement of iron industry introduced by the Government. Mr. Motoda taking the platform reported that the conference by mutual concessions had arrived at the decision to revise the amount of the yearly production of iron materials as 5,250 tons instead of 3,500 tons amended by the Seiyukai. The remaining bills on the day's order were carried forward to the next session as the sitting already lasted past the usual time limit, the house subsequently rising at 6.05 p.m.

The House of Peers met at the usual hour on the 13th. Usual reports over, the House at once proceeded with the order of the day. At the outset the House elected the delegates for the conference of the two Houses on the Bill pertaining to the measures for encouragement of iron industry, the election resulting in the return of Marquis Hosokawa and nine other members. The committee investigations on the bills relating to partial revision of the army and navy officers, pension law, telephone undertakings loan, the agricultural warehouses, war time marine reinsurance, the suspension of the subsidiary grant for shipbuilding encouragement, and a few other bills were reported on and adopted as reported by the respective committees after second and third readings. Count Ogimachi, chairman of the special committee on the bill for a partial revision of the regulations pertaining to the control of the Oriental Development Company, reported on the result of the committee investigation and announced that the committee passed the bill as amended by the Lower House. Interpellations were raised by Mr. Kurooka, Baron Sakatani and Mr. Niwo, to which Count Ogimachi and Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, replied. After further interpellations were asked by Mr. Niwo and replied by the Finance Minister the bill was adopted as reported by the committee after going through the second and third readings. The result of the committee investigations into the bill for revision of the law pertaining to the control of sericultural industry was reported by Marquis Oiwakado, chairman of the committee on the bill, the proposal being passed after going through the second and third readings as reported. The House then took up the bill proposing a partial revision in the provisions of the income tax law, which was sent from the Lower House. Baron Megata asked to know the opinion of the Government on the proposed revision of the law. Mr. Shoda, Finance Minister, in reply, stated that the Government could not consent to the proposed revision. The bill was then referred to a special committee. The House rose a little past noon.

The general meeting of the Upper House Committees on the Supplementary Budget Estimates met at 9.25 in the morning with Baron Asada in chair. After listening to the reports of the chairmen of the sectional committees on the results of the committee deliberations, Baron Megata, Mr. Sakamoto and others interpellated on the bills, to which the Finance Minister and the Home Minister replied. Subsequently the bills were submitted to the discussions of the general meeting in a group and unanimously carried as reported on by the sectional committees. The meeting was closed at 11.10 a.m.

The House of Representatives met for the last day's session on the 14th and the manner in which it dispatched what business remained was like that in "rush hours." Though the audience in the galleries was small, the session presented a noisy scene or two which were no less amusing than those witnessed before.

The session opened at 10 o'clock in the morning and immediately went on to take up the bills relating to the revision of laws and acts governing industrial guilds, the Hokkaido Development Bank, the Industrial Bank of Japan, and the Agricultural and Industrial Banks. After a brief discussion all these bills were adopted in a bunch at the second reading, the third reading being omitted. Then Mr. Ishikuro, Chairman of the committee, reported on the result of the committee meeting on the settled accounts of the general and special revenues and expenditures for the year of 1914. After a debate lasting about an hour it was decided to leave it for a further consideration as it was of such a nature that it could not be lightly disposed of.

Placed next on the day's order were three proposals by three different parties concerning a same thing of giving aid out from the national treasury to the expenses of primary schools. During the discussion of these proposals the House took a recess for luncheon.

The afternoon session opened at 1.20 and continued to discuss the educational proposals. Mr. Matsumoto of the Ishinkai, while speaking for the proposal introduced by his party, unexpectedly turned his attack on the Kenseikai proposal and the party which presented it. He poured forth a number of harsh phrases denouncing the Kenseikai and declared that the Kenseikai was a party of "hakai-shugi" or destructivism. As Mr. Matsumoto uttered these words amid the dinning noise made by the Opposition members, the word "hakai-shugi" sounded to them as "shakai-shugi," which is the Japanese equivalent for Socialism. The Opposition members, misunderstanding that they were characterized as being Socialists, became exasperated to a highest pitch and vociferously demanded that the Speaker

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 10.—The French Monday communiqué says that we have brilliantly repulsed a strong attack against Pantheon. We counter-attacked against the trenches the enemy had occupied yesterday between Lesbovettes and Chevrigny spur. After a very lively fight we broke up the enemy's energetic resistance, driving him out of our first line of elements on a front of fifteen hundred metres, thus regaining the greater part of the gains the enemy had won yesterday between Pantheon and Froidmont Farm.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—Marshal Haig reports; The enemy, after twenty-four hours' most intense bombardment, determinedly attacked our position on the Niuport front on Tuesday evening, and concentrated its heavy artillery fire on the Levelles defences in the Dunes sector near the coast. This coast is isolated by the destruction of bridges on the Yser. The enemy here penetrated our position on a front of 1400 yards and the depth of 600 yards, reaching the right bank of the Yser near the sea. The enemy, gaining some of our advanced positions farther south opposite Lombartsyde, was driven out by our counter-attack.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 15.—Marshal Haig in his Friday evening communique reports that we have driven off enemy parties westward of Yneant. We carried out successfully bombing operations against railway stations, hutments and aerodromes night-time on Wednesday. There was unceasing aerial activity on both sides daylong on Thursday. The fighting was the most severe since the commencement of the war and resulted greatly in our favour. In continuous engagements between large formations consisting sometime of thirty machines, we brought down fifteen German aeroplanes, three of which within our lines, and drove down sixteen uncontrollable. Other British aeroplanes took many photographs and dropped a large number of bombs on enemy aerodromes, dumps and railway stations with good results. Nine of our machines are missing.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

Rome, July 9.—To-day's Italian communiqué says: Patrols' activity was considerable along the whole front yesterday. Successful encounters with small enemy parties were sustained by our reconnoitring patrols in Mount Majoka Posina in the area of Passodi, in Mount Croce Dicomelico in the upper Chiarzo and on the Carso Front in front of Castagnavizza.

The artillery was particularly active in the Tolmino sector on Vodice and Faiti.

In Albania, in the evening of July 7th, another enemy air raid was repulsed by our fire. Numerous bombs dropped by the enemy caused no damage nor victims.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 10.—The Italian Communique of 10 July says: During the night of July 9 the enemy after an intense bombardment, taking advantage of a violent thunderstorm made an attack on our positions on Vodil. These assaulting parties were destroyed by our fire which arrested an advance of the supports. Other small attack against our positions in the upper Cordevole and on Wiccolo Lagazuoi were similarly frustrated. The artillery was more active than usual yesterday on Trentino Carnia front; was normal on the Julian front. The activity of our and the enemy reconnoitring parties led to sharp encounters.

The enemy party which approached our lines on the Vodil north Tolmino was promptly repulsed.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 13.—The Italian communique issued to-day says; The artillery activity was considerable yesterday. Our guns dispersed the enemy infantry columns on march from Piazza to Pedrazzo Terranolo valley and the wagon movement in the Idrea valley. At Spechiers in the valley, one of our hospitals, though bearing a Geneva cross visibly displayed, was repeatedly shelled by the enemy. One of our patrols in Sief, on the upper Cordevale district, raided enemy post and put the garrison to flight. Another patrol, reconnoitring southeast of Agnavidzza, brought back two enemy trench mortars.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 14.—The Italian communique issued on July 14 says: On the night of July 13, in the Upper Cia valley, the Tranoi detachment of the Val Camonioa Alnini surprised and destroyed an enemy's advanced post at a height of 2238 metres, capturing many prisoners and war materials. Yesterday the artillery was active between Adige and Astico. On the remaining front, our guns disturbed the enemy movements on the snowfield of Cima Cee, Travigno valley, on Mount Zebio and on the Chiapovano Santalucia road while the enemy shelled our position on the middle Isonzo and Carso. Aerial activity was considerable during the whole day. All our machines returned safely. An enemy machine was brought down in an air fight. It fell between Miramare and Trieste.

Rome, July 15.—The Italian communique issued on July 15 says:

Between lake Garda and Reno Vallarsa, numerous enemy patrols were repulsed by our gun fire. The enemy parties, attempting to approach our positions at the Hill 126 in Grazigna, were driven back by hand grenades. The artillery activity which had been generally moderate along the whole front, became very intense for short intervals between Doss Faiti and Castagnavizza. There was a considerable aerial activity in Carnia and also on the first line of the Julian front. An enemy machine was brought down in an aerial combat, and fell in flames east of Castagnavizza.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, July 5.—Western front. Artillery fire is going on in the Kovel direction. The Russian scout parties seized in the Zolochoff direction near Godoff 11 German machine gunners. A German cuirassed motor car was driven back by the Russian artillery near Byshki. East and south-east of Brzezany firing continues with alternating strength. The enemy's counter-attacks from Medjichuv have been repulsed by rifle and machine-gun fire. In the fights of July 1 and 2 the Russian troops seized according to a preliminary account 300 officers, 18,000 soldiers, 29 guns and 23 machine-guns.

Caucasus front. Genshivin was seized by the Russian troops in a fight.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 6 (Much delayed in transmission).—At a meeting of the representatives of all the regimental battalion committees from the garrison in Petrograd held here on July 5, a resolution was carried by an enormous majority. In part the resolution states "We shall intensify our activity in preparing companies of reinforcement; we shall not fail to lend our brothers all aid which is in our power."

The Minister of War, Mr. Kerenski, to ensure harvest has decreased the formation in all the garrisons in the rear of special detachments in order to help rural population in agricultural work.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, July 7.—Western fronts. There is strong artillery firing on both sides in the Zolotchoff direction. Northwest of Rybniki several short but hot encounters occurred between the Russian and the enemy's troops. The enemy's artillery developed a strong fire against the Russian positions east of Lipica Gurna and Lipica Dolna. Firing continues on the rest of the front. The Germans exhibited near Bilischi white flags inviting the Russian soldiers to fraternizations. The only reply was the fire of the Russian artillery. Firing continues on the rest of the front.

Caucasus front. In the Sakkis direction near Bistan and the Abishirvan river the Russian troops are fighting with the Turks.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 7.—The offensive of our troops between Zolotchof and Brzezany shows a considerable activity on a front about four versts. Important results may be expected every moment such as breaking the enemy front in the direction of Zolotchof. The offensive movement of armies on the west front has taught that most of the elements of our south armies have also begun offensive. The activity of the army extends to the Carpathian region southwest of Stanislau.

The battles proceeding now on both sides of the Ens, to envelop this important strategic point which opens the way to the depth of Galicia and Hungary.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 9.—The Russians have captured Halicz north of Stanislau, Galicia.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 10.—A Russian official report says that in a successful offensive westward of Stanislau, General Korniloff captured on Sunday several villages, 131 officers, 7000 men, forty eight guns including twelve heavy guns and also many machineguns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via New York, July 10.—Several villages and one thousand prisoners were taken yesterday in Eastern Galicia. In two days the Russians have penetrated to the depth of six and two-thirds miles westward of Stanislau.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd via Chosen, July 10 (Delayed in transmission).—The Russian communique of July 10 notes our success on a front of 40 versts south of Halicz between Lesupol and Bogorodchank on the Byatritza. Our army, commanded by General Korniloff, has dislodged enemy's fortified position, capturing a number of villages and advancing deep into the enemy's lines. Southwest of Stanislavf, the Russian infantry has penetrated the enemy lines for 10 versts deep and cavalry for nearly 25 versts, reaching the river Loukva. Lesupol which is now occupied by the Russian troops is situated 10 versts south of fortifications of Halicz. The fate of Halicz seems to be decided. It is doubtful whether Halicz will be stormed as it is already enveloped from the rear. The break on the Austro-German front effected by the Russian troops, separated the enemy forces operating in the region of Halicz from those operating in the Carpathians, giving the possibility of the Russian troops to extend their actions up to the Louvka district. A general impression is that the attack by General Korniloff in this region has destroyed one and a half of the Austro-German army corps, inflicting on the enemy a heavy blow. In the direction of Zolotchof, Brzezany and Dolintz, intense fighting continues favourably for the Russians. General Korniloff during the two days' fighting broke the enemy lines along a front of 20 versts to the depth of 10 versts. On July 9 he captured more than 1000 Austro-Germans, three field guns, a number of trenchmortars and engineering war material.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—A Petrograd despatch says:

The operations on the Bystritza river are culminating in a victory of General Korniloff whose line covers a front of more than 20 miles. The Russian infantry has already advanced seven miles while the cavalry marched forward sixteen miles. The Austro-German front between Halicz and Carpathians has been broken and the Russians in the neighbourhood of the Dniester have turned toward Halicz from south and from south-east and now menacing the Halicz bridgehead. Between July 2 and July 8, General Korniloff captured fourteen thousand prisoners and 55 guns of which 12 are heavy guns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—A Russian official says that General Korniloff's offensive continues despite the energetic resistance and stubborn counter-attacks of the enemy. He has captured further villages more than one thousand prisoners and a great quantity of war-material.

A Petrograd despatch announces the capture of Halicz by the Russians.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 12.—An official report says that the Russians have reached Posiecdlesiuvka-Kosacz line. They took more than ten thousand prisoners and eighty guns between Monday and Tuesday.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 12.—According to news received at the Ministry of War, the Russians continue successful advance after they captured Kaloucz, taking a great number of prisoners.

In view of the democratisation of the army, the Provisional Government has decided to attach to the Commander-in-Chief of each army a military commissary to be appointed by agreement with the Generalissimo. The commissaries shall follow the instructions of the War Ministry to direct and uniform the solution of all political questions arising in the armies and coordinate the work of all army commissaries.

Newspapers here publish that the trustees of Nicholas Romanoff, the abdicated Emperor of Russia, are being engaged in pourparlers with Petrograd office of the State Bank referring to subscription for the liberty loan. The abdicated Emperor intends, it is reported, to subscribe 500,000 roubles for the liberty loan.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—A Russian official report says that General Tchremisoff has captured Halicz. He advanced and reached the left bank of the Lomnica. The Russians have also advanced on the front between Bozoi and Zolotvin and captured over two thousand prisoners and thirty guns in a day's fighting.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Helsingfors via Petrograd, July 12.—The Finnish Diet has accepted the second reading of the Bill granting the supreme right to the Finnish Diet. The text of the Bill contains no words such as "Russia." "Russian sovereign right" or "Russian interests." Exception is made for international relations and war questions in very vague terms. According to rumours the third reading of the Bill is fixed for Saturday next. At the present moment, the question of the independence of Finland as well as other important questions relating to the relations between Finland and Russia are under discussion at the special conference of the Diet, together with the delegation from Petrograd including M. Tcheidze, the President of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates in Petrograd.

[OFFICIAL TO THE RUSSIAN EMBASSY]

Petrograd, July 12.—Western front. During July 11 the operations on the Dniester and the Lomica continued in developing. After a stubborn resistance and a bloody fight the enemy was dislodged from Kalusch and this town was seized by the Russian troops. West of Bogorodjany on the Grabuvka Rosulnia front the enemy is availing himself of a most intersected region in order to keep back the Russian troops.

Petrograd, July 13.—The Russian troops in the Dolin direction continued the pursuit of the enemy, who was beaten by General Korniloff's army and retreated to the north west. On the Jesupol Stanislavov Bogorojany front General Tcheremissoff's valiant troops took the town of Galiez. Having crossed to the left bank of the Dniester the Russian troops reached the Lomnitza valley. After a short fight Bludniki and Babin were seized. The troops advancing from Bogorojany Zolotvin succeeded in breaking the enemy's resistance. 2,000 prisoners and 30 guns were seized during the day.

The number of prisoners taken between July 8 and 11 reached 150 officers and 10,000 soldiers. Also 80 guns, 12 heavy among them, and a number of trench and machineguns as well as large ammunition quantities were seized.

Artillery firing continues on the rest of the front and has become more lively in the Zolochoff direction and South of Brzezany.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 13.—The Russians have taken Kalusz where the Headquarters of the enemy in Galicia has been stationed. Many prisoners have been taken.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—According to information received by the War Minister, the Russians have captured Kalusz, the enemy's general headquarters and twenty miles southwest of Halicz.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—A Russian official communication says: We have continued our pursuit of the enemy in the direction of Dolina, and have occupied Halicz at midday Tuesday. Our advanced detachments have crossed the left bank of the Dniester and reached the valley of Lomnica. They have also crossed the valley and are now occupying the villages of Blandniki and Babin. We have captured more than ten thousand prisoners in the fighting at Dolina since Sunday. We have also captured 80 guns, large numbers of trench-mortars and machineguns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 15.—A heavy and successful fighting has taken place on the Lomnitza. The Russians have forced the lower reaches, capturing the adjacent heights. The enemy was also dislodged from heights northeast of Kotnez. The Russians hold the crossing of the upper Lemnitza near Perekhinsko southeast of Dolina.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 15.—A Russian official report says that we have crossed to the left bank of the Lomnica and captured heights, driving back the enemy northeastward of Thilus. We occupied the villages of Studzianko and Podhorkia. We are now engaging the enemy southwest of Kalusz.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 16.—An official report says that the Russians have advanced on a front of nearly fifty miles from Halicz to the Carpathians, crossing the Lomnitza and Dniester Rivers and capturing several villages and important positions.

ALLIED TROOPS EVACUATE GREECE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, July 10.—It has been announced that the Allied troops are about to evacuate the Greek territory which was recently and temporarily occupied as a precautionary measure. The evacuation does not include the Salonika region.

THE DESTRUCTION OF KRUPP'S GUNWORKS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, July 12.—A telegram from Maastricht to the Dutch paper Lesnouvelles says that the Dutch workmen employed at Krupp's gunworks have been paid off on account of destruction of buildings and adds:

It has been confirmed that the destruction was due to the attack by the allied aeroplanes on Friday night in which 40 to 50 machines participated and bombs were dropped with such a success that a quarter of the works was destroyed. More than one hundred were killed, several hundreds injured and material damage is estimated at million francs. Eyewitnesses say that the defence guns made a terrific din in the sky while the workshops were set afire. At the beginning of the bombardment troops endeavoured to prevent panic. Women and children fled to the country. Among the victims were five French prisoners killed and forty injured.

AIR RAID ON CONSTANTINOPLE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—The Admiralty announces that the British Naval Air Service on Monday night made successful attacks on the Turco-German fleet lying off Constantinople. When located, the Goeben was surrounded by warships and submarines. The airmen attacked from a height of 800 feet, hitting the Goeben directly and other ships. Big explosions and several fires occurred aboard. The airmen also attacked and directly hit the war office. The enemy appeared completely surprised. The airmen returned safely.

London, July 12.—A British official communique says: Our aeroplanes made a raid on Constantinople and dropped bombs on an enemy warship in the harbour. In consequence a disastrous fire occurred on board the warship Goeben. Bombs also hit the Turkish war office.—"Asahi."

ENEMY'S UNJUSTIFIABLE AIR RAID

(Delayed in Transmission.)

Rome, July 11.—An Italian communiqué says: Yesterday our parties carried out successful raids at various points of the enemy's front. In Siet (Upper Cordevole) district, the garrison of an enemy advanced post was surprised and destroyed. In Carso, northwest of Seloa we occupied a fortified position near our lines. The enemy artillery was particularly active on Trentino front. Our guns also replied effectively and disturbed the movement of the troops traffic on the Asiago plateau. Between Temnizza and Vojscizza, an enemy machine was brought down. On the Asiago plateau, numerous enemy reconnoitring aeroplanes were repelled by our fire and machines. This morning enemy aeroplanes carried out bombarding raids on Cividale (Friuli) without justification militarily. There were a few victims among civilians while slight damage was done to some buildings.

SATURDAY'S AIR RAID CASUALTIES

London, July 9.—Reuter's representative who visited to-day the district which was bombed in Saturday's airraid, says that he would like to be accompanied by the German airmen on his visit to the bombed district, for they would have been most certainly disappointed to see a comparatively little damage done. At only one spot they would have found anything to cheer their hearts. Here out of shower of missiles, only one bomb scored a hit others falling wide of their mark. A casual person might have walked through the area and failed to notice anything unusual except the crowd of curious sightseers. Sightseers are fewer than usual to-day. It would seem that interest on airraid is wearing off. A police inspector has informed Reuter's representative that in his district where a great percentage of damage to property was done, there were only few casualties and nobody was killed. This, however, was not due to the want of trying by the German raiders as they dropped plenty of bombs.

The indomitable spirit of the British people was clearly observable in women workers, close enquiries showing that not a single girl was absent from her duty to-day. Many whose places of employment have been demolished were reported as usual this morning. Numerous individual acts of heroism are recorded.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 10.—The Press Bureau announces that casualties in the air raid on Saturday are now estimated at thirty men, eight women and five children killed and ninety eight men, forty six women and fifty three children injured.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—At a secret session in the House of Commons, Mr. Lloyd George stated that twenty-two German aeroplanes, each carrying 800 pounds of explosives, came over London Saturday, and three of which were destroyed. The Germans have organized protecting squadrons in order to assist the raiders return home, and six of these were destroyed; therefore no attack was made with impunity. He pointed out that a complete protection of the air was never to be secured, and that we must make the visits of the German raiders as much costly as possible for them.

ONE THOUSAND FACTORIES TURNING OUT AEROPLANES

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—The Minister of Munitions, in an interview, stated that one thousand factories are now manufacturing aeroplanes, the output increasing by leaps and bounds. The output at present has exceeded that of last year by three times, and by the end of December next, it would double that of last April. The monthly output of aeroplane engines has more than doubled that of 1916 already, and it would be redoubled before December 31 next. The Ministry's aeroplane programme was one of maximum production.

ALLIES MAKING PROGRESS WITH SUBMARINE FIGHTING

London, July 9 (Delayed in transmission).—The military correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung recalls how, from the beginning in opposition to the opinion of many apparently well-founded people, he warned the German people not to expect too soon a decisive result from the submarine warfare. After a brief reference to the "brilliant" successes of the U-boats up to the end of April and the success which was to be expected from the May campaign, he says that "it must be admitted in offensive and defensive means of combating the submarines both as regards the technique and method, our enemies have made progress." Then he describes some of those methods such as nets mines, smoke clouds to conceal vessels, and remarks that "Only by continuing construction of new submarines, and perfecting the technical points, we may be permitted to maintain the offensive to our advantage."

EXTENSION OF BRITISH DANGER ZONE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, July 12.—The "Telegraaf" asserts that the extension of the British danger zone in the North Sea includes the so-called safe channel by newspapers, and says that this inclusion has been effected in view of German misusing this channel in order to maintain communications between Heligoland Bight and Zeebrugge and between Rotterdam and German harbors. It further states that the shiploads of coal from Rhineland and from Westphalia which cannot be transported by German railways are sent to Rotterdam whence by German ships conveyed to Emden and Cuxhaven. Great Britain cannot tolerate obviously such practices, it says, and concludes that Germany, but not Great Britain, would be asked to change her methods.

SUBMARINE TOLL RAPIDLY FALLING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 15.—During the week ending July 8 there were 3067 arrivals at and 1009 departures from French ports. Three vessels over 1600 tons and one under the same tonnage were sunk, and nine ships were unsuccessfully attacked.

SHIPPING AT ANGLO-ITALIAN FORTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—The Admiralty announces: During the last week the number of merchantmen arriving at British ports was 2898 and that of departure 2798. Fourteen vessels over 1600 tons and three under the same tonnage were sunk. Seventeen ships were unsuccessfully attacked and 7 fishing boats were sunk.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome, July 13.—During the week ending July 8 527 vessels arrived at, and 435 vessels departed from Italian ports. Two steamers, 10 small sailing ships and one overdue steamer were sunk. One was attacked but escaped.

THE GERMAN CRISIS

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 11.—The Associated Press correspondent at Berne reports that, according to the Berlin newspapers, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg has told the Reichstag:

"I repeat that the formula of peace without annexations is unacceptable to us. We cannot declare our terms of peace. We must fight to conquer."

The German Chancellor has declared the attitude of Erzberger, a Catholic deputy, who had denounced the German Admiralty and Pan-Germanism, as unpatriotic.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich via London, July 12.—There is no doubt that a German crisis has been precipitated by the unexpected Russian offensive and its effects. The Austrian Emperor Karl is perturbed not merely by the offensive but by the wholesale surrenders of the Czech troops to the Russians. Besides the food troubles, Austria is felt obliged to take steps to alleviate the situation. His advisers have convinced him of the fact that the only chance of arresting the Russian offensive and opening peace negotiations with Russia was in declaring by the Central Powers against the policy of annexations. Emperor Karl pressed this view point on Marshal Hindenburg and Assistant Chief of Staff Ludendorff on their visit to Vienna. The Emperor also discussed the question with Erzberger, member of the German Reichstag, and other German visitors. In consequence, there was no want of flutter in Berlin when Hindenburg and Ludendorff returned. The Kaiser conferred with Hindenburg and Ludendorff for a long time, and talked with Bethmann-Hollweg and afterward with Bavarian Minister Count Lerchenfeld. Subsequently, Hollweg conferred with the leading deputies.

Meanwhile there have been held private conferences between party leaders, the day ending with a meeting of the Prussian Cabinet, but the most momentous happening took place on Monday when the Crown Council met for the first time since July 1914, consisting of all the Imperial and Prussian Ministers, the Kaiser presiding. In view of the above revelation of the origin of the crisis it is strange to find Dr. Bethmann-Hollweg on July 8 repudiating in a committee meeting of the Reichstag the formula of peace without annexation and indemnities and in the most strong terms declaring the war must be continued energetically. In view of the press [illegible] most bitterly against Dr. Bethmann Hollweg and articles like that of Prince Lichnowsky former Ambassador to London, representing the Kaiser as constitutional monarch, it looks as though Bethmann-Hollweg is about to be made a scapegoat for the climbdown of the Kaiser both as regards the internal reform and the questions of annexations.

[The first part of the above message was received on Friday and was published in these columns Saturday morning. The second part did not reach us till yesterday morning. In view of the importance of the message and in order to give a consecutive reading of it, we have reproduced the first part.—Ed. J. W.]

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—Great outcry is raised by the German Liberal papers at the operations of the foreign publishing bureau which is owned by Krupp's and other Pan-German capitalists. They have already bought several papers and intend buying many others, especially the provincial Liberals. They also intend to extend their operations abroad especially to the East.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—The situation in Germany is in a state of flux. Unconfirmed report says that the Kaiser has accepted the resignations of Helfferich and Zimmermann but there are indications of important changes probable. French commentators anticipate that Hindenburg will become military dictator. It appears that there is an anti-Bethman movement starting which has been inspired from Vienna. Both German National and Liberal papers ostentatiously have abandoned the Pan German standpoint and are making energetic demands for democratic reforms.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—Another curious contribution to the campaign against Bethmann-Hollweg is the remarkable article by Prince Lichnowsky, former Ambassador to London, who roundly declares the system of one-man Government obsolete, and demands a constitutional parliamentary government despite the resistance of the junkers and conservatives; otherwise the country will go to pieces. The Prince says that the Kaiser is far more constitutional than he is supposed to be: he never intervened personally in public affairs within the knowledge of the Prince apart from impulsive telegram.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdan, via London, July 13.—An important news to-day from Germany is the announcement made by a Catholic organ, the "Germania", that the Centre Party has decided by overwhelming majority, to support Catholic deputy Erzberger, who favour the formation of a coalition cabinet which will include leaders of all parties.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, July 14.—Michaelis, Under-secretary of Finance, has succeeded Bethmann-Hollweg.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 15.—A wireless message from Berlin announces the resignation of Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor. He has been succeeded by Dr. Michaelis who is now the Prussian commissioner in the Office of the Food Controller.

Official quarter here on Sunday was advised from Berne, Switzerland, to the following effect in connection with the reported political disquietude in Germany:

The newspaper extras issued here (Berne) on the 13th say that Chancellor von Bethman-Hollweg has resigned and the Imperial Reichstag is not likely to meet on the 19th as has been scheduled on account of the political situation created by the Chancellor's resignation.

Another official information received at the same quarter on the same day says that the Reichstag on July 11 postponed the discussion of the war budget in spite of the strong opposition offered by the Conservative Party, and the war-budget committee also postponed its meeting because Chancellor Hollweg refused to make report on the result of the Crown Council. On the same day the Crown Council was again held the Crown Prince Fredrich Wilhelm participating in it. Then the Kaiser that day issued an Imperial Edict to the President of the Prussian Cabinet, announcing that an equal franchise system would be adopted in the election of the Lower House of the Reichstag and ordering to go on speedily preparing for putting that system into practice at the coming election. It is also reported that a compromise has been reached among the Central, the Socialist, and the Progressive Parties as to the form of concluding peace and the reformation of Germany's internal political system.

According to this official information, the Berlin rumour on the 13th had it that Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, Navy Minister Admiral von Capelle, Foreign Minister Herr Zimmermann, Home Minister von Helfferich, and a number of members of the Prussian Cabinet would be replaced by others. Conservative papers are reported to be declaring that Bethmann-Hollweg has completely lost the nation's confidence but others observe that he is likely to remain in the Chancellorship.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich via London, July 15.—In the Reichstag, Dr. Helfferich, Secretary of the Imperial Treasury, has disclosed that one of the principal causes of the coal crisis was miners' strikes.

Copenhagen via New York, July 16.—Advices from Berlin say that the Reichstag has gone on strike. The members of both Houses' main committees have decided to suspend their labours until the political situation has been cleared up. The German Emperor has summoned Marshal Hindenburg and General Ludendorff to a conference.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Amsterdam via London, July 16.—The Reichstag has adjourned indefinitely.

The German conservative press utters a cry of despair over granting a secret universal suffrage to Prussia and considers that the situation is hopeless. Several Prussian Ministers are seemingly against the reform and consequently have resigned. The German radicals rejoice over the prospect of the Prussian reform but wonder how the legislation will pass the Prussian Diet which is filled with conservatives and industrial magnates.

GERMAN PROPAGANDA OF SPREADING FALSEHOODS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 11.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Arthur Balfour, in replying to questions, has confirmed the reports that the German agents are spreading falsehoods in Spain and Russia.

Concerning Britain which is represented as endeavouring to produce a revolution in Spain and to restore the monarchy in Russia, Mr. Balfour stated that both were untrue, absurd and inconsistent with the policy of Great Britain which leaves other countries to manage their own affairs.

Regarding China, Mr. Balfour said that there was no danger to foreigners. The Legations at Peking had warned the Peking authorities that the communication between the Capital and the sea must be kept open.

SITUATION GROWING DESPERATE IN AUSTRIA

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 10.—A despatch from Zurich says that in the course of a debate in the Reichsrat on the food situation in Austria, the deputies from all parts of the Empire declared the situation of the mass of the population as fast becoming desperate. Prince Lubonirski said that Galicia which was once the granary of Austria is now completely bare. Food, he said, must be sent in to prevent the people starving. Another deputy said that the peasants of eastern Galicia had neither seed corn nor food. A Slav deputy said that in Dalmatia and Istria the people were absolutely living from hand to mouth. The German nationalist deputy Waldner declared that Carinthia is faced with famine. A Czech deputy said the last crops had been grossly overestimated by the officials. Extravagant requisition had been made on the peasantry which had meant taking not only food but their seed corn. A German Socialist deputy said it was impossible to tell how long the working classes would bear the present privations. Recently a conference of officers from all the military commands has been held to discuss measures in the event of disorders but, said the deputy, once let the workers believe that their patience is regarded as being due to cowardice and battalions will be of no avail. The economic misery and wrath of the lower classes cannot be kept down with bayonets.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Zurich via London, July 12.—In the Austrian Reichsrath, the president of the Food Board made a depressing statement to the effect that the conditions of the food situation have become worse by the shortage of potato and that the foodcrops are of the poorest and leave a small margin for the consumption of the civilians after meeting the military necessities and shortages for sugar, meat and agricultural produce. The tone of the press comment is generally despondent.

INDO-GERMAN CONSPIRACY IN AMERICA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

San Francisco via London, July 11.—The United States District Attorney, in a statement on the conspiracy case mentioned yesterday, said that preparations for a war against England had been made in America a year before the outbreak of the war. He proceeded to summarize the plot as follows:

"One hundred and five men were involved, of whom ninety eight have now been indicted and seven named as fellow conspirators. When the war broke out emissaries were despatched to Berlin where an India committee adjunct to the Foreign Office was formed under Dr. Alfred Zimmerman's personal attention. The activities of the conspiracy included large purchases of arms and ammunition, the recruitment and despatch of men to India, the organisation of military expeditions, and the carrying on of smuggling of arms and munitions from America and Siam through China and Japan. The principal motive was to force Great Britain to maintain strong forces in India and to prevent the transfer of the forces to fighting front." Agents were sent to China and Japan with the object of buying the press to procure secret treaties in favour of Germany in connection with the plot.

THE MOST MEMORABLE 14TH JULY IN FRANCE

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 16.—On the day of the national fete of France, Paris greeted the soldiers fresh from the fighting line.

On all Fourteenth of July in history never has there been a celebration so impressive as on that day this year. 8,000 soldiers who paraded were representative of the armies who have borne the burden and heat of the greatest of wars. Heroes of the Marne and Yser, Artois, Champagne, Somme and Verdun; with their decorations glittering on their breasts marching under their shot-torn banners to the cheers and applause of a million people, made the Fourteenth of July 1917 forever memorable. During the whole time of the ceremony and march aeroplanes hovered overhead. Numbering in all 150 they provided a wonderful spectacle flying and manœuvring above the crowds, they were a continual subject of surprise and admiration.

Numerous messages were received by the President including one from the King of Greece.

BRITISH ROYALTIES BACK HOME

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 15.—Their Majesties the King and Queen returned here yesterday evening. They have been for twelve days in France and Belgium. The King and the Prince of Wales went to the front. The Queen inspected hospitals. This was her first visit to the battlefields. Their Majesties visited the King and Queen of the Belgians.

UNITED STATES EXPEDITIONARY ARMY 690,000 STRONG

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—General Scriben, Chief Signal Officer, and other experts are offering evidences before the military committee of the Lower House, urging a speedy passage of a bill providing for 22,625 aeroplanes at the cost of 363 million dollars. It is believed that the first American army to be sent to Europe will be 690,000 strong.

U.S. AT WAR ONLY WITH GERMANY

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 12.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Robert Cecil has stated that the United States is not at war with Bulgaria, Turkey and Austria, and also stated that no South American Republic is actually engaged in war against Germany.

PREPARING FOR 4TH WINTER OF WAR

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 13.—Col. Sir Edward Willis Duncan Ward, permanent Under-Secretary of State for War has made appeals to women to begin making comforts for the troops for the winter of 1917-18.

LABOUR MINISTER SKOPELEFF APPEALS TO THE WORKMEN

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

(Delayed in Transmission)

Petrograd, July 11.—Minister of Labor Skopeleff has addressed an appeal to the workmen of all Russia, summoning them to help the State to fight the economical war. The appeal points out that such steps as seizing of factories and the violence committed with regard to directing the staff, would ruin the economical life of the country, and notes, on the other hand, the measures undertaken by the State in order to control and regulate the productivity, and to ensure the welfare of the working classes. The Minister concludes by advising the workmen that it will be their duty to think not only of their own weal but of the sacrifices necessitated for the consolidation of the revolutionary triumph and the realization of the final ideals.

In view of the report which appeared in the "Vossiche Zeitung" of June 19 to the effect that one British ship from Karachi brought information of its having witnessed in the middle of May a battle between Russian warships in Vladivostok which fight was quelled by Japanese and Russians who restored the order and carried away the Russian ship and that during the mutiny many officers were killed, the Marine General Headquarters has announced that the said information is altogether absolutely false.

According to preliminary accounts, the Russians have captured about 20 big guns.

The Halicz Garrison consisted of two German Divisions the 75th and the 73rd, considered to be the best among the German armies.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 14.—In connection with the newspaper information about the spirit in the 5th Army, the latest report from the same Army states that disaffection among the troops has disappeared. A commission has been appointed to investigate the reasons leading to such disaffection. There is full ground to believe that the movement had been provoked by German agents.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 16,—An official report says that the Russians have advanced on a front of nearly fifty miles from Halicz to the Carpathians, crossing the Lomnitza and Dniester Rivers and capturing several villages and impotant positions.

ADVANCED TIME BY ONE HOUR

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd, July 16.—By order of the Provisional Government, at midnight of July 13 the clock time was advanced by one hour in all Russia. According to a statement by the Ministry of Commerce, the above measure will result in a large economy of fuel, especially in the Donetz basin. In large towns, the economy of fuel for July and August will reach seven per cent.

GENERAL MAUDE'S REPORT ON BAGDAD

London, July 10.—Describing the fall of Bagdad General Maude says in his report:

On the morning of March 10 our troops again engaged the Turkish rearguard within three miles of Bagdad and our cavalry patrols reached a point two miles west of the Bagdad railway station where they were checked by the enemy's fire and a gale of blinding dust storm limiting the vision to a few yards. Under these conditions a reconnaissance or co-ordination of movements became difficult. About midnight the patrols reported the enemy was retiring. The dust storm was still raging but following the Decauville railway as a guide our troops occupied the Bagdad railway station at 5.55 in the morning and it was ascertained that the enemy on the right bank had retired to the up stream of Bagdad. The troops detailed in advance occupied the city. The cavalry moved on Kadhimain four miles to the northwest of Bagdad where they secured some prisoners.

On the left bank of the Tigris General Marshall had on March 9 elaborated preparations for forcing the passage of the Diala river.

Two battalions got across at four in the morning of March 10 in the face of considerable opposition. A bridge across the Diala was completed by noon and our troops passing on drove the enemy from the riverside villages and finally faced the enemy's last positions covering Bagdad along the Tel Mumammed ridge. The operations resulted in the capture of 300 prisoners, a large quantity of arms and ammunition and equipment and inflicted severe losses on the enemy.

On March 11 it was reported that the Turks were retiring and on the same day General Marshall entered Bagdad amid manifestations of satisfaction by the inhabitants.

A state of anarchy had existed for some hours, the Kurds and Arabs looting the bazaars and setting fire indiscriminately to various points. Order was restored without difficulty and the British flag was hoisted over the city. In the afternoon a gunboat flotilla proceeded upstream and anchored off the British residency.

Not over a fortnight before we entered Bagdad the enemy had been removing stores and articles of military value and destroying property which they could not remove, but an immense quantity of booty partly damaged and partly undamaged, remained. This included guns, machineguns, rifles, ammunition, machinery, railway workshops, railway material, rolling stock, an ice and sodawater plant, pipes, pumps, cranes, winches, signal and telegraph equipment and hospital accessories. In the arsenal were found some cannon of considerable antiquity and all the guns (rendered useless by General Townshend) which fell into the enemy's hands at the capitulation of Kut in April 1916.

Describing the operations subsequent to the fall of Bagdad General Maude says on the right bank of the Tigris the retreating enemy had entrenched a strong position south of the Mushaidie railway station, some twenty miles north of Bagdad. It was decided to attack the Turkish right flank with the whole force, as such movement was aimed directly at the enemy railhead and the general reserve would turn the main position east of the railway.

Our troops advanced on both sides of the railway, supported by an artillery barrage whilst the cavalry operation on the western flank took the enemy's position on the reverse with rifle and machinegun fire.

Communication was maintained with our gunboats which co-operated by shelling points in the Turkish line.

Ridge after ridge was captured in spite of the infantry and artillery fire which sometimes was intense, until the Black Watch and Ghurkas by a brilliant charge carried the main position inflicting severe casualties on the enemy. The Black Watch and Ghurkas rushed the station at midnight and pursued the enemy half a mile beyond. The enemy's flight now was so rapid that touch was not obtained again, and on the 16th our aeroplanes reported stragglers over a depth of twenty miles the nearest being twenty five miles north of Mushaidie. On the 14th a post was established on the right bank of the Dialan opposite Dagubah thirty miles northeast of Bagdad which was held by the enemy. On the night of March 17 and 18 a column effected a surprise crossing over the Dialah and entered the town on the following morning inflicting some casualties on the Turkish detachment and capturing some prisoners and stores. Bagubah is the centre of the district, is rich in supplies and its occupation was an essential preliminary to further operations to assist our Russian Allies who were advancing through Persia by way of Kermanshah and Kasrithirin with the 12th Turkish corps falling back on Kifri before them. On the 19th of March our troops occupied Feluja, thirty five miles west of Bagdad at the Euphrates driving out the Turkish garrison.

The arrival of the Russians at Khaniken was now momentarily expected and the column concentrated at Bagubah with the object of holding the enemy's retreating columns to their ground, till such time as the Russians could come up or, alternatively, of inflicting loss on them should they weaken their front and endeavour to cross the Dalah.

The advance of our Allies has been delayed in a difficult pass east of Khanikin mainly owing to weather conditions and the consequences up to close of the period under review is that we had not gained touch with them but our column still maintained its position harassing the Turkish retreat and securing a number of prisoners. The total number of prisoners taken during the period from December 13 to March 31 was 7921.

Summing up his report, General Maude says that water transport worked unceasingly with the result that an endless chain of rivercraft passed up and down the river, thereby assuring the maintenance of troops at the front. Our long line of communications complicated the delivery of supplies of all sorts and the fact that throughout the period under review the troops at the front were well maintained in all respects constitute a fine record for all services concerned. Since the termination of hot weather, the health of the troops has been uniformly good. Our well-equipped hospitals have been more than adequate to meet calls made upon them by sick patients. Throughout the operations the evacuation of the wounded was carried out on model lines. Arrangements made for the comfort and rapid transfer of patients from field units to hospitals on the lines of communication reflect much credit on those concerned.

General Maude speaks of the splendid work done by the Red Cross Society which with its personnel and bountiful provision of motor-launches, ambulances and gifts has been means of alleviating much suffering.

General Maude also expresses his thanks for the prompt measures in which the necessarily large demands of Mesopotamia have been sent overseas from England, India and Egypt.

PRESIDENT WILSON APPEALS TO BUSINESS INTERESTS

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

New York, July 13.—President Wilson gave out a statement appealing to the business interests to aid the nation unreservedly for the prosecution of war. He warned them that the making of unusual profits is not tolerated. He also pointed out the condition that the shipowners of the country should refrain from unnecessarily high freights, adding significantly that those who wont respond in spirit to those fighting in the battle fields be dealt with by the public opinion and the law. He expressed confidence that business interests are generally loyalists and that the shipowners would reconsider the charges when they should realise the situation.

AMERICA'S BIG SHIPBUILDING PROGRAMME

Washington via New York, July 16.—Colonel Goethals who is in charge of the shipbuilding programme, has announced plans for the immediate construction of two Government plants to build 400 steel ships of 25,000,000 tonnage in eighteen to twenty four months by commandeering 1,500,000 tons which are now being built on private account and by the requisition of neutral shipping constructed to be ready to sail from American yards. In addition to the above, 348 wooden ships of 1,218,000 tons and 77 steel ships of 642,800 tons have already been contracted for, while 100 wooden ships are now under negotiation.

U.S. AERO BILL PASSED

(Delayed in Transmission.)

Washington, July 14.—The House of Representatives has passed a bill appropriating 352 (?) million dollars for the construction of 22,000 aeroplanes for war service.

[Owing to mutilation of the original despatch, the figures of the appropriation are subject to correction later. The bill originally asked for 363 million dollars for building 22,625 aeroplanes.—Ed. J.T.]

SITUATION IN CHINA

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 11.—Chang Hsun's manifesto recounts the reason inspiring the restoration. The manifesto says:

"Instead of being supported in sincere and honest endeavour for the benefit of my country and sovereign, I have been forced to battle with pledged associates and lifelong friends in arms, even the friends of generations' standing. By these friends I have been placarded as a truculent seeker for power, a prize being put on my head and now without consideration or negotiations accorded to the vanquished by every civilized nation, I am told that I must be exterminated as a robber or criminal."

Chang Hsun continues that this claim is not fitting. He insists on sincerity and honesty in his purpose. Let Heaven judge if he desired undeserved honour, by dying in battle. He does not wish to shame what he believes to be a righteous cause by surrendering as a criminal. He is as solicious of the welfare of the people in Peking as the opponents, but he is more solicitous of the welfare of Ching house, himself and those following Chang Hsun. In conclusion, the manifesto says: "For the present I will be on the defensive. I shall keep peace in the city. I shall not fire till fired on. I shall deal honourably with the envoys, but till I am dealt with fairly and reasonably, I will not move the present position or abandon the moral obligation to the Imperial Household. Before I consider any concessions, honest settlement must be arranged and proper guarantees be given for the observance of the terms. I appeal to the honourable diplomatic representatives of the Treaty Powers in the interest of humanity and peace, to further consummation of such arrangements and pledge myself to faithfully observe whatever agreements I find it possible to make with the opponents."

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 11.—Upwards of fifty thousand troops are now assembled around Peking.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 11.—Dr. Wu Ting-fang has definitely decided to resign the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and hand over the seal to the Tientsin's appointee. Wu Ting-fang's dismissal is contained in a mandate issued by Feng Kuo-chang. Republican headquarters at Tientsin state the Republicans intend to attack the Forbidden City when arrangements are completed.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 12.—In the early hours this morning. Reuter's correspondent made a tour in the city. All the streets were deserted and shops and houses were closely shuttered. Only strong pickets of police, gendarmerie and troops were visible. The Changhsunites at the Temple of Heaven and the Temple of Agriculture apparently all had withdrawn inside the grounds and none was seen outside. The correspondent visited the western and southern gates but there was no sign of stationing of the Republican troops. All has been quiet hitherto. The only dragon flags still flying are those hoisted over the barracks of the tenth Changhsunites.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 12.—Chiang Chao-chung, Wang Shih-chen and Wu Ping-hsiang to-day made the final effort to persuade Chang Hsun to surrender, but the latter refused saying that he would fight to the end.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 12 (Much delayed in transmission).—At 7 this morning, the attack is still proceeding at both areas. The firing is less furious though still persistent. The Republican snipers on the roofs around Chang Hsun's residence are keeping up a steady fire. Artillery fire is now intermittent. Two aeroplanes flew over Chang Hsun's residence at 6.15 and then proceeded southward. They dropped one bomb.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 12 (Much delayed in transmission).—General Chang Hsun took refuge at the Dutch Legation at 11 this morning.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 12 (Delayed in transmission).—Changhsunites at the Temples of Heaven and Agriculture surrendered between nine and ten this morning. After Chang Hsun's escape desultory fighting continued between Chienmen and Tienanmen, and also in the northern part of the Imperial city. The Republican artillery made excellent practice against Tienanmen with shrapnel, and also against the residence of Chang Hsun which was entirely destroyed by fire, though the surrounding houses were practically untouched. Casualties have not yet been ascertained but at least seven foreigners were wounded, many bullets and some of shells falling in the Legation Quarter.

Chang's family was brought to the Austrian Legation about nine this morning. Chang Hsun was brought in a motor car by an Austrian wearing a red-cross armlet at eleven and taken to the Dutch legation. Later Chang was escorted to the former German barracks by the Dutch Minister and General Munthe, the commander of the Chinese corps for the protection of the Legation quarter.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Tientsin, July 12.—The Republican attack on Peking began at four o'clock this morning. Artillery, machine guns and aeroplanes were employed. Five or six foreigners who were watching from the city wall have already been wounded. The legations are bringing in the foreigners and taking all precautions. It is reported that all telegraphic wires are now interrupted.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 12.—General Ning Hai of the Generalissimo's Office has arrived at Shanghai with the President's seal. He asserts that Li Yuan-hung personally wrote the mandate appointing Feng Kuo-chang Commander-in-Chief of the punitive forces, but did not appoint Tuan Chi-jui Premier.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 12.—The attack on Peking began at four o'clock this morning with the artillery, machine guns and aeroplanes. Five or six foreigners have already been wounded.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 13 (Delayed in transmission).—In view of the enormous quantity of the ammunitions used by both sides large numbers of troops must have engaged in yesterday's battle. Casualties of yesterday were remarkably small. Changhsunites lost about four killed and twenty wounded at the Temple of Heaven and six killed and ten wounded at Chang's residence. The Republicans lost even less than Changhsunites. The heaviest casualties were apparently among non-combatants, for according to the police reports, some thirty civilians were killed and many wounded by stray bullets.

The shooting of Changhsunites was particularly good. For instance, along the eastern wall of the Imperial city they attempted to repel the attackers by holding rifles above their heads and firing over the wall blindly. The Republicans made a number of holes on the surface of the wall opposite the residence of Chang Hsun, through which they fired machine guns and quickly cleared Changhsunites, driving the opponents northwestward where Chang Hsun men were hunted and disarmed. A number of Chang Hsun men escaped after discarding their uniforms and arms on the ground around Chang's residence.

Tienanmen was also littered with abandoned ammunition and equipment. Although Changhsunites at the Temple of Heaven surrendered at ten in the morning, it was late in the evening that their disarmament had been completed. It is understood Chang Hsun men will be given three months pay and be sent back home, disbanded. The situation is now quiet, though telephone and telegraphs are disorganised and the train service is again irregular. The police are taking strict precautions. A number of areas is closed after dark, but practically no looting has occurred.

Shanghai, July 13.—Three thousand of General Chang Hsun's soldiers in the Temple of Heaven have surrendered.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 13.—The Republican Headquarters at Tientsin report that Chang Hsun's troops in the Temple of Heaven have surrendered after two hours' fighting. They are now surrounded. They will be disarmed this afternoon. When Chang Hsun heard this news he fled to the legation quarter and took refuge in the Dutch Legation. His wife and family have taken refuge in the Austrian Legation.

Fighting still continued this morning in the Forbidden City, the remnants of Chang Hsun's men holding out. A huge fire is raging in the Forbidden City. Information indicates that three thousand of Chang Hsun's men who have surrendered, will be disarmed and sent back to Hsuchow-fu. They are expected to entrain from Fengtai at four this afternoon.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 13.—A correspondent at Chengtu telegraphs from Mienyang under date of July 11 that fighting broke out at Chengtu on July 6 between the Szechwan and Kweichow troops. The city is burning, and the situation is critical. Most foreigners are at the hill resorts.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 14 (Delayed in transmission).—Tuan Chi-jui called on Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister to Peking, this afternoon and thanked the latter for the protection afforded to Li Yuan-hung. Tuan then audienced with Li Yuan-hung who shortly afterwards left the legation and returned to the private residence, after expressing his thanks to Baron Hayashi.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 14.—Three special trains arrived here this morning conveying Tuan Chi-jui and his body-guard and staff. Tuan was in the last train, being accompanied by a large number of prominent personages including Liang Chi-chao, Yeh Kung-chow, Tang Hua-lung and Hsun Shih-ying.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 14 (Delayed in Transmission).—A number of incidents occurring in the past few days substantiate previous reports that Chang Hsun received Austro-German help in the restoration movement. In fact it is believed in some quarters that he was actually bought by Germany. This assertion appears to be borne out by the fact that just before the restoration Chang Hsun circulated a telegram denouncing Liang Chi-chao and Tang Hua-lung for favouring the declaration of war with Germany; declaring that they created numerous difficulties in China's foreign relation and stirred up internal disturbances for personal gain. He demanded that they be declared outlaws.

The rather theatrical rescue of Chang Hsun's family and escape of Chang Hsun were obviously prearranged. It is reliably reported that a foreigner remained with Chang Hsun on Wednesday evening and Thursday morning. This was probably an Austrian or a German who was brought in by Chang Hsun when things became too hot.

The Legation commandants had resolved that no Chinese be permitted to enter the Legation quarter without a special pass. Whether this regulation was complied with in the case of Chang Hsun cannot be verified as he naturally was brought in at an entrance guarded by the Austrian marines.

Altogether the German made another serious blunder and greatly angered the Chinese who considered that they were largely instrumental in the recent disturbances, causing much suffering of innocent people.

Unfortunately the Dutch are also coming in for some criticism.

After the surrender of Chang Hsun's men at the Temple of Heaven, they demanded three months' pay before the evening, otherwise they would continue fighting. Tuan Chi-kuei the Republican commander was, therefore, compelled to borrow eighty thousand dollars from the Yokohama Specie Bank, being unable to obtain the money in time from Tientsin.

This explains why the Chang Hsun men were not disarmed until evening also the remarkably small casualties on both sides.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 15.—Tuan Chi-jui assumed office to-day, but the announcement of the personnel of his Cabinet is not expected for some days. It is stated that the delay is due to the unwillingness of Liang Chi-chao, Tang Hsu-lung and other members of the Cabinet to accept portfolios, because they wish to avoid an accusation of office-seeking. It is hoped, however, that these difficulties will be quickly overcome and a strong administration will be established in order to cope with the serious opposition of the south which is apparently already growing.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 15.—President Li Yuan-hung has entered a French hospital. He has been for sometime under treatment for a slight internal complaint.

The President has despatched a long telegram to all provinces declaring that he would resume the office. Mandates have been issued appointing Wang Tah-sieh Foreign Minister, Lu Kuan-hsiang, Minister of the Navy, Sah Chen-ping, Inspecting Commissioner of Seacoast, Tuan Chi-jui concurrently Minister of War, from which office Wang Shih-chen has been permitted to resign

Further mandates announce Lai Chen-chun, Chang Cheng-fang and Feng Teh-lin having been deprived of all appointments and honour and handed over to court for punishment. The post of Provisional Defence Commissioner has been given to Wang Shih-chen.

[Lai Chen-chun and Chang Cheng-fang, ex-Ministers of War and of Finance were arrested on July 9 on their way for Tientsin, attempting to escape from Peking. —ED. J.T.]

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 16.—It would appear that President Li Yuan-hung has been induced to go to the French hospital, not by illness but rather by a startling incident which occurred at his residence about five o'clock this morning when one of his guards ran amok with a sabre and killed a colonel and two soldiers, wounded a captain and another soldier. Then taking the pistol of his victims he fired several shots.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 16.—Hsu Shih-chang has arrived here.

CHINA APPROACHED ON WAR SUBJECT AGAIN

At the Foreign Office here on Tuesday it was confirmed that the Allies suggested to Premier Tuan Chi-jui on the 14th that it might be better for China to decide to participate in the war on the side of the Allies. The Allied Ministers in Peking took this step in view of the German and Austrian activities which became manifest in the just died out restoration movement. A considerable amount of evidence is said to have been gathered which all go to prove that the Chang Hsun scheme had behind it a Teutonic backing of no small extent.

The Allied Ministers met and discussed the measure to be taken and after the conference the French Minister was asked, as he is the senior member of the Allied diplomatic corps in Peking, to go and see the Premier. The French Minister called on Premier Tuan on the 14th and suggested to him that it might be better for China herself to join the Allies in their war against Germany for there was no telling of what the Germans and Austrians might do in their desperate attempt to create troubles in China. The Chinese Premier is reported to have replied that he was agreed with the Allied opinion and would do his utmost to realize China's final decision to oust the Teutonic influence from her soil.

According to information received at official quarter from Peking Tuesday, President Li Yuan-hung has again taken refuge, this time in the French Hospital in the Legation Quarter in the Chinese capital, owing to the dangerous atmosphere which surround him.

It is reported that early Monday morning a private belonging to the troops guarding the President's residence ran amok and began to shoot at random. One of these shots hit the President's mansion. The mad soldier was immediately seized upon by his companions and was shot to death on the spot. The President, however, fearing that there was danger lurking around him, at once left his home and drove to the French Hospital.

The French Minister ,upon the receipt of the news hesitated for several minutes before allowing the Hospital authorities to receive President Li, and first consulted Baron Hayashi, Japanese Minister, if it was proper to give shelter to the Chinese President. To this consultation Baron Hayashi replied in the affirmative, and President Li Yuan-hung was received into the French Hospital.

According to the same source of information President Li is not likely to consent to retain the Presidency any more. He is reported to be completely worn out and tired of endless political strife. There is, it is said, a strong likelihood of President Li's going abroad for recuperation, probably to the United States by way of Japan.

According to the Peking Correspondent of the "Asahi" an incident occurred at the residence of President Li Yuan-hung on Monday morning, when a fight took place among the soldiers detailed for the guard of the President's residence, one officer, two non-commissioned officers and a gendarme were killed and another officer wounded. The incident had no political significance whatever, its origin being a dispute over the distribution of booties taken from the residence of Chang Hsun at the recent fighting by the troops detailed as the guard at the President's residence, who participated in the recent attack on Chang Hsun's residence as vanguards. President Li Yuan-hung, hastily concluding the outbreak as an assault on his person, took refuge in the French hospital. He was to return home on Monday night.

URUGUAY WELCOMES U.S. SQUADRON

Monte Video via New York, July 13.—The arrival of the American squadron yesterday was marked with display of flags, suspension of business and cheering crowds. The American commander visited the office of the Foreign Minister with whom expressions of solidarity of friendship between Uruguay and the United States were exchanged.

THE STOCKS OF COTTON LESS THAN SUPPOSED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Manchester via London, July 14.—It is understood that the census of the stocks of cotton in the spinners' hands reveals the fact that the quantity of the stocks is lower than supposed. It is probable that the Control Board will recommend the curtailment of production of the mills to four days weekly. This directly affects one hundred thousand operatives.

order Mr. Matsumoto to retract such improper words. When Mr. Matsumoto again took the rostrum and explained that the word he had used was "hakai-shugi," and not "shakai-shugi," the Opposition members were dumbfounded and were ridiculed by all the members hostile to them.

After this little piece of farce was ended the Upper House amendments to the Supplementary Budget were taken up and with little debate the amendments were approved unanimously. Then the House went into a secret session to take up the matter relating to the punishment to be meted out on Mr. Yokoyama of the Kenseikai for speaking improperly in the previous day's secret session. Mr Yokoyama was reprimanded.

When the session was again thrown open for the audience a number of written replies from the Government were read. Among them was the Foreign Minister's reply to Mr. Takagi's re-interpellation with regard to Japan' attitude toward Russia as affected by the recent revolution. The Foreign Minister's reply was that the revolution affected Japan's attitude toward Russia not in the least, and he was doing his best to promote the friendly relations with Russia. As to Mr. Takagi's advice that Japan send a special envoy to Russia the Foreign Minister said he did not see any need for it at present. Another reply from the Foreign Minister was to Mr. Koyama's re-interpellation over the British prohibition of Japanese land-ownership in the Straits Settlements. Viscount Motono told in his reply that he could not interpret the British prohibition as discriminately aimed at the Japanese. However, in consideration of the damages the prohibition was going to inflict on Japanese enterprises, the Imperial Government was negotiating with the British Government with a view to alleviate the damages to the smallest degree possible.

Mr. Uyehara of the Kokuminto then went up to the rostrum and severely criticized the Government for its blunt reply to his re-interpellation about the case in which Mr. Takahashi, former consul at Seattle, figured. Then Mr. Saito of the Seiyukai reported on the result of the committee meeting having charge of about twenty-three petitions, and all the petitions, were adopted as reported by the Chairman.

By this time Premier Count Terauchi and the rest of the Cabinet Ministers had taken their seats in the rostrum. The Thirty-ninth Session of the Imperial Diet had finished its business. The Speaker of the House, Mr. Ooka, then arose and announced that the House was in receipt of a note from the Premier that the closing ceremony would be held in the House of Peers on the 15th, and thanked the members of the House for their support which enabled the House to dispatch many pressing measures during so short a session.

The result of the business of the Lower House in the session just closed, according to what was reported by Mr. Terada, Chief Secretary after the close of yesterday's sitting, was as follows.

A.	Bills introduced by the government..	44
	Supplementary Budget estimates...	10
	(Passed)
	Bills asking for Ex-post-fact consent	3
	(Approved)
	Other bills	31
	(Passed as submitted—25; Passed with amendments—4; Undecided —2)
B.	Bills introduced by the members of the House	6
	(1 passed; 1 Passed with amendment; 1 Combined with other bills; Undecided—3)
	Appeal to the Throne.....	1
	(Passed)
	Resolutions	13
	(7 Passed; 1—Passed with amendment; 3—Combined with other bills; 1—Not put to vote; 1—Undecided)
	Important Motions	10
	(5—Approved; 4—Rejected; 1—Withdrawn)
	Settled Accounts Bills	2
	Unsettled Bills sent from the upper house	2
	Petitions	698
	(625—Adopted; 7—sent to the government; 70 sent to committees; 1—Adopted without submitting to the deliberations; 1—Rejected)
	Interpellations	40
	(1—Withdrawn; 1—Replied both by letter and oral explanation; 38—Replied by letters).

The last meeting of the special session of the House of Peers was held on the 14th with Prince Tokugawa in the chair. Usual reports over, the House proceeded with the order of the day of which the most important was the supplementary Budget Estimates. First on the day's programme was the bill providing for the measures for encouragement of iron industry, which was at the previous session referred to the conference of the two Houses for settlement. As the result of the conference an amended Bill was submitted and was adopted the Government having consented to the amendment. Baron Asada, chairman of the committee reported and the Bills being put to vote with three advisory conditions of the House were unanimously passed as reported by the committee.

After a recess the House remet at 2.15 p.m. Count Seikanji chairman of the special committee on the bill submitted to the House for its consent to the outlay appropriated from the surplus funds brought over from 1915 and two other financial bills, reported on the results of the committee deliberations on the bills, announcing that the committee after deliberate considerations had decided on giving consent to the measures taken by the government. Put to vote, the House unanimously approved the decision of the committee. The result of the committee investigations into the Government Bill proposing the purchase of chartered and private owned light railways was reported on by Viscount Akimoto, the chairman of the committee, and at once adopted omitting further reading. The bill proposing the abolition of the regulations for the control of the sale and handling of explosives which was introduced in and sent up from the lower house was next submitted and at once referred to a committee. The House then listened to the report of the chairman of the petition committee, who announced that the committee after deliberations on sixteen petitions sent in had adopted fifteen petitions save one concerning the postponement of the collection of income tax in Okinawa prefecture. The report of the committee was unanimously approved.

The programme being over the chair announced the closing of the session and after listening to the report of the secretary who announced the holding of the ceremony of closing the session of the Diet on Sunday morning at the House the meeting dispersed at 2.30 p.m.

The result of the special (39th) session just closed of the House of Peers, according to the report of the secretaries, was as follows:

A.	Bills introduced by the government.	29
	Approved	27
	Amended	2
	Bills introduced by the lower house.	2
	(Undecided)
B.	Ex-post-fact consent	3
	(Approved)
C.	Supplementary Budget estimate proposals	10
	Approved	9
	Amended	1
D.	Settled Accounts	1
	(Passed)
	(2 resolutions passed)
E.	Petitions Approved	23

The ceremony of closing the 39th session of the Imperial Diet was held at the House of Peers on the 15th. The ceremony was begun at 10 o'clock, all members of the two Houses and the Ministers of State and Government Delegates being in attendance. H.I.M. the Emperor was not present but was represented by Premier Count Terauchi, who read the Address from the Throne appreciating the harmonious co-operation and earnest deliberations of the members of the Houses. Prince Tokugawa, President of the House of Peers, proceeded to the Throne and received from the Premier the Imperial Rescript. The ceremony was closed at 11.20 a.m.

Premier Count Terauchi gave a lunch on the 16th at noon at the Imperial Hotel inviting Prince Tokugawa and Mr. Oka, President respectively of the House of Peers and of Representatives, all members of the two Houses, Mr. Arimatsu, Director of the Legislative Bureau, and other Government Delegates, the Chief Secretaries and Secretaries of the Houses. Besides the Premier there were also present all the Ministers of State, on the host's side. Count Terauchi made a brief address appreciating the diligence of the members during the session just closed. Prince Tokugawa responded to the Premier's speech on behalf of the guests.

In the evening the Premier gave a dinner at his official residence inviting Mr. Inukai and other representatives of the Kokuminto, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, and all the other Ministers of State, Mr. Arimatsu, Director of the Legislative Bureau, Count Kodama Chief Secretary of the Cabinet and Mr. Okada, Chief of the Metropolitan Police, being also in attendance. The Premier greeted the guests in happy words to which Mr. Inukai, the Kokeminto leader, replied on behalf of the guests.

The Premier will give a series of similar dinners for a few evenings inviting the representatives of the Seiyukai.

U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTS

The United States Government is reported to have been considering to announce exceptions to the new regulation preventing the export of certain American products, but the "Chugai" declares that until the details of the exceptions are made public, it is difficult to discuss the effect of the new regulation of the United States. However Japan is now obtaining many important materials from the United States and the restriction of the American exports will greatly effect the Japanese industry, and the matter is to be carefully considered by the Japanese.

The purpose of restricting the American exports is to supply the rapidly increasing demand in the United States, to supply the Entente powers with necessary war materials and food stuffs, and to prevent the entrance of the American products to the enemy countries through neutral nations. The restriction was principally placed upon coal, fuel, food stuff, fertilizer, medicines and fodder, and it can be seen that the purpose of the restriction is to supply the Entente powers with food and war materials, and to prevent the increase of the cost of living in the United States. The United States intends to strictly observe the restriction and prevent the shipping of any material to the enemy countries through neutral nations.

While the purpose of the United States in adopting the policy of restricting the export is to be recognized, Japan will suffer from the suspension of various materials from the United States. Japan is already suffering from the shortage of various materials, and especially builders in Japan have not sufficient shipbuilding, railway and structural materials, at present. As Japan is one of the Entente powers, the United States will most probably make exports to Japan of certain products as exceptions to the restriction law, but on this matter, the "Chugai" believes that it is necessary that a satisfactory negotiation be made between the two governments.

The end of the war is not yet seen, and as the war progresses the United States may restrict export more strictly, and the restriction of export by the United States Government is a serious matter to the Japanese industry, and the paper hopes that the industrial men and the Government of Japan would carefully consider the problem and make a satisfactory arrangement with the United States.

THE ALL-IMPORTANT QUESTION OF FOOD SUPPLY

The insufficient supply of food stuffs and the increase of the cost of living are the present phenomena of the world, and not only the belligerent nations but also the neutral countries are endeavouring to regulate the supply of food stuffs and prevent the advance of the price of commodities, but the "Jiji" regrets to say that in Japan alone, both Government and the House of Representatives have not given any thought to the subject, and it seems that the Government officials and members of Parliament have not felt the situation.

The 39th session of the Imperial Diet considered many bills and drafts of laws, and for three weeks, many important bills were discussed, but not a word was said about the food supply or the high cost of living. The public demand for some plans to prevent the further advance of the prices was not heeded by the Diet.

The United States remained neutral until recently and she stood in a very favourable position financially, and not only has she gained enormous profit on account of the war, but she has almost unlimited supply at home. But still the United States did not neglect the necessity of regulating the food supply, and as soon as war was declared against Germany, she enacted laws to restrict exports, to regulate the city prices and to prohibit the illegal business transactions, and she did everything possible to regulate the food supply. The United States Government is determined, if necessary, to restrict the food consumption of the people.

In Japan the necessity of regulating the food supply is more urgent than in the United States, but the Government is not giving any thought to the matter, and is quite ignorant of the conditions of the public. The "Jiji declares that the bureaucratic Government officials of Japan are the people living "above the cloud," and they do not understand the conditions of the "underworld." It is regretiable that the Government officials take no interest in the welfare of the common people.

It is not only the Government, that does not understand the condition of the people and gives no thought to the question of food supply, but the Imperial Diet has also been ignorant of the actual condition of the public. The Diet should draw the attention of the Government to the present condition, and introduce a bill to regulate the food supply, but in the 39th session of the Diet there was none who even questioned the Government on the matter.

The members of parliament being the representatives of the public, should give some attention to the vital question of the common people, not giving their entire energy and time to the factional political fights. If the members of Parliament will not consider the interest of the public, they will finally lose the support of the people.

AMALGAMATION OF CHOSEN AND S.M. RAILWAYS

The plan to amalgamate the Chosen Railway and the South Manchuria Railway, has been voiced for some time, and there will be no one who will oppose the plan, says the "Asahi." As there exists the South Manchuria Railway Company, a private enterprise, which has made a successful development, there is no necessity of placing the Chosen Railway under the Government control, and if the Chosen Railway is added to the South Manchuria Railway, the whole system will greatly benefit from the amalgamation.

But the plan of the Government in amalgamating the two railways is contrary to the wish of the public, and instead of joining the Chosen Railway to the South Manchuria Railway, the Government intends to place both the South Manchuria Railway and the Chosen Railway under the control of the Governor-General of Kuantung.

Manchuria has been governed by three authorities, and there have been many ill effects from having three governments in Manchuria. It has been regarded that the office of the Governor-General in Kuantung is useless, and abolishing of the office will make the governing of Manchuria easier. But the new plan of the Government is to increase the power of the Governor-General and to place the South Manchuria Railway and Japanese Consuls in Manchuria under the direct supervision of the Governor-General. The "Asahi" can not understand the reason why the Government desires the change in the organization of the South Manchuria Railway, which under the present system, made a wonderful success in the past. It is believed that the Terauchi cabinet desires to exercise its bureaucratic power even to the Japanese colonies in other land.

It is in short nothing but an attempt to extend the government system of Chosen to Manchuria. Count Terauchi considers that his administration in Chosen was successful, but actually he only managed to keep peace in Chosen. It was because of the historical relations, the racial characteristics and the geographical situation that made it possible for Count Terauchi to rule Chosen with some show of success. It is absurd to attempt to extend the same system to Manchuria, simply because it was successful in Chosen.

BETTER TREATMENT FOR DISCHARGED WORKERS

Recently the "Heiki Sezo Kaisha" of Osaka was compelled to shut down its works on account of the suspension of orders from Russia, and 3,200 workmen employed were suddenly discharged. The "Hochi" says that all factories and corporations established for the trade or enlarged to meet the recent boom in business should be all prepared to meet with the similar fate when the present war finally comes to an end.

The majority of 3,200 workmen who were recently discharged had been obtaining the income of about 65 yen a month, and they were able to save money if they tried, and most of them will not suffer immediately from the sudden discharge. Furthermore, as other factories in and around Osaka are short of hands, they will be able to obtain work in other shops and factories.

But the "Hochi" says that when the war ends and the reaction of the present business prosperity arrives, the discharged workmen will not be able to obtain other works so easily as at present. The workmen as well as the employers should give proper attention to meet this situation which is surely to come within one or two years.

The majority of the factory owners are not considering the welfare of the workers, and the "Hochi" declares that some part of the profit of the factories should be given to the workmen, but at present all the profit is monopolized by capitalists and officials of factories, and none is given to the working men. The Osaka factory which suddenly discharged the entire workingmen, gave only five days' wages to them, and those who did not save any part of their wages in the past, will soon face starvation. If workingmen are discharged in this manner, a large number of them who are to be discharged when the present prosperity stops, will not be able to support themselves.

Factories which obtained enormous profit since the outbreak of the war will not suffer much from the conclusion of the war or even the suspension of works, but workingmen will directly suffer, if they are not given special consideration.

The incident of the Osaka factory is a good example, and the "Hochi" hopes that all factories will give a part of their profit to their workmen so that they will not starve as soon as they are discharged.

NEW LABORATORIES TO BE ESTABLISHED IN TOKYO

Two excellent scientific laboratories, one chemical and the other medical, will be established near Tokyo in near future by the sole effort of Mr. Seishichiro Nakamura in Chin-nam-po, Korea. Mr. Nakamura is a millionaire in Chin-nam-po where he has successfully amassed a big fortune by years' assiduous labour. A message from Seoul states that he has decided to establish a private medical laboratory at Oimachi, in the suburbs of Tokyo, and a private chemical laboratory at Kamata not far from Tokyo at his own expense, and it is reported that he will give 2,000,000 yen for this purpose. Of the sum 300,000 yen will be appropriated for initial expense and the remainder will constitute the permanent fund, the interest on which will be used for the maintenance of these two laboratories. Mr. Nakamura intends to appoint Professor Yogoro Kato, of the Tokyo Higher Technical College, as president of the chemical laboratory and engage Dr. N. Shibata as president of his medical laboratory, and will also establish in Seoul a local laboratory which will be connected with his laboratories near Tokyo. It is stated that these laboratories when completed will not be so purely academic as others, but organise work on an enterprising scale in view of the activity in the industrial world in Japan, though the work will not be undertaken merely for profit.

NEW ELECTRIC BILL PASSED

In the meeting of the Tokyo City Council on the 10th the bill which had been introduced by Mayor Dr. Okuda for the purpose of regulating the charges of the electric light provided by the three independent electric companies of the city by way of abolishing the useless competitions in future among those three companies was carried with the votes of 40 to 23.

The new bill which has thus passed the city council contains the alterations in the rates of charges for the electric light besides some other items concerning the new plan, and the following are the main points in the said bill which should be brought to the notice of the people of Tokyo at the earliest opportunity:

(1) By the new system the only kind of filaments that should be used for the electric lamp must be that of tungsten, not of carbon as sometimes has been the case heretofore.

(2) The new rates of charges shall be as follows:

Candle Power	Yen
5	0.45
10	0.55
16	0.60
24	0.70
32	0.80
50	1.00
80	1.40
100	1.60

LATE U.S. AMBASSADOR G.W. GUTHRIE'S FUNERAL

Commander Viscount Tamura, who escorted the remains of Mr. Guthrie, late American Ambassador in Tokyo, to Pittsburg returned home on the 12th by the O.S.K. liner Panama Maru from Tacoma. Being interviewed on board the liner, Viscount Tamura said the warship Adzuma conveying the late Ambassador's body arrived off San Francisco at dawn on May 25th, and was conducted inside the harbour by the American warship Oregon. Besides Mrs. Guthrie, who arrived at San Francisco one day ahead by the Pacific Mail Colombia, Mr. Ryan, of the State Department, Captain McBay of the Navy and Colonel Ludoraw of the Army, despatched from Washington, and a Committee of the San Francisco Municipality, headed by the Chief of the local Marine Division, as well as Japanese Consul-General Hanihara boarded the Adzuma, and soon afterwards the remains were delivered to the American funeral committee. The remains were escorted by one battalion of Japanese marines, three battalions of American marines, and three bands. The Captain and all officers of the Adzuma, off duty, also accompanied them. They were transported to Oakland by a ferry-boat, and were met there by an elder brother and sister of the late Ambassador, and three relatives of Mrs. Guthrie. All through the tip to Pittsburg four American non-commissioned officers were with the late Ambassador's body. On arrival at Pittsburg on May 29th, it was met by the Mayor and many other local notables, and immediately driven to a church and transferred to the memorial hall on the evening of the 30th, together with wreaths sent by T.M. the Emperor and Empress of Japan, Princes of the Blood, Cabinet Ministers and the Corps Diplomatique in Tokyo. From 50,000 to 60,000 local citizens paid last respects to the late Ambassador's remains. Japanese Ambassador Sato arrived at Pittsburg on the evening of the 30th, and the funeral took place on the 31st. The cortege, largely automobiles, was nearly one mile in length, and the populace packed either side of the streets.

The Mayor of Pittsburg asked Viscount Tamura to stay a while there, but he accompanied Ambassador Sato to Washington on the evening of the 31st. Mrs. Guthrie repeatedly requested him to convey her deepest thanks to the Japanese Government and people.

INCREASE OF POSTAL DEPOSITS

According to investigations made by the Department of Communications, the total amount of postal savings deposits at the end of last month reached 351,421,114 yen, the number of the depositors totalling 15,804,867. This was an increase of 13,607,199 yen in the amount of deposits and 172,134 people in the number of depositors as compared with figures for May.

NEW ITALIAN AMBASSADOR TO TOKYO INTERVIEWED

Marquis Xan. Confaronieli, the new Italian Ambassador to Tokyo, has already arrived in New York on his way to his new post here, and is still staying there. The "Tokyo Asahi" correspondent at New York interviewed the new Italian Ambassador at the hotel where the ambassador is staying a few days ago and had a familiar conversation. According to the interview which the Asahi correspondent has transmitted to his paper, the new Ambassador is a very amiable man, sincere, free-talking and attractive in his manner. He has long been in diplomatic service, having held successively diplomatic or consular posts in Russia, France, Austria, Switzerland and America. Before the outbreak of the war he was Ambassador at Washington, where he represented his country for four years. When Italy declared war against Austria and then against Germany, he was recalled and joined the colours with the commission of lieutenant of cavalry. On account of his distinguished services at the front he was within one year after he joined the army promoted to captain. As Italian Ambassador to Japan, he said he would make it his mission and object to further promote and cement the friendly relations between Italy and Japan. Asked to give his opinion about Italy's object of the war, the military strength of Germany and the possible change in the international situation and relations in Europe after the war the ambassador observed strict reticence in spite of his extreme democratic thoughts and inclinations, and refused to utter any opinion of his about matters concerning diplomatic secret. The Marquis is coming to Japan without being accompanied by Marchioness Confaronieli who while endeavouring for the sake of her country serving as volunteer nurse with Mademoiselle Confaronieli impaired her health on account of excessive work and could not accompany her husband to Japan, having postponed her departure for several weeks. The only son of Marquis and Marchioness Confaronieli who is eighteen years old, is said to be fighting at the front for his country.

NEARLY MAD WITH WEEPING ECZEMA

Face and Neck in Awful State. Itching Very Bad.

HEALED BY CUTICURA

"My son's face and neck were in an awful bad state. They were covered with a thick crust of scales and the itching was very bad and when he opened his mouth it nearly drove him mad. He had to lose time from work. I was told it was weeping eczema.

"A neighbor who had been healed of a shaving rash by Cuticura Soap and Ointment told me to use them. I sent for a free sample and then bought more and after using three tablets of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Ointment he was healed." MADAME BUTTERFLY AS STAGED AT THE IMPERIAL Madame Butterfly with Miss Ritsuko Mori as O-Cho-san and Mr. Stanley Hughes as Lieutenant Pinkerton is the feature of the new bill opened at the Imperial Theatre Sunday evening. The opera of Giacomo Puccini made O-Cho-san famous all over the world, but Madame Butterfly staged at the Imperial is not the opera by Puccini, and is only a drama.

To have the tragedy of the Japanese Geisha girl and an American Navy officer, staged in a Japanese theatre, has the valuable advantage of having the proper stage settings and giving it the necessary atmosphere. But Madame Butterfly now being played at the Imperial is a new interpretation of the famous story. In text it followed the original text of John L. Long and David Belasco, and in details there are slight differences from the familiar libretto of L. Illica and G. Giacosa.

Madame Butterfly played by Miss Mori is an entirely new Madame Butterfly, being at least fifteen years ahead of Madame Butterfly of the opera. In Puccini's opera, indescribable charms of the Japanese womanhood characterized Madame Butterfly, but Miss Mori played Madame Butterly of to-day. In stage settings also, the Imperial Theatre made the play a happening of to-day, and many of the charms of the opera were lost in the production.

Those who have not heard the opera, may enjoy the play, but to those who are familiar with the opera, it appears as if some vital force was lacking. The beauty of Puccini's opera lies not only in the spot of the story, but also in the music, and in the play, the absence of the exquisite music is strongly felt. The music of the opera is played by the orchestra, but it is only fragmentary and not properly rendered.

Miss Mori, however, played the part well, and moved many of the women audiences to tears, but her Madame Butterfly is quite a different person from Madame Butterfly played by Madame Farrar or even Madame Tamaki Miura. Not being used to speak her parts in English, she becomes unnatural whenever she began to speak in English. However Miss Mori is the only actress of the Imperial Theatre who can play the part with any ease and confidence, and only it is regrettable that she failed to bury her own characteristics under those of Madame Butterfly.

Mr. Stanley Hughes scored many successes in amateur theatricals, but the part of Lieutenant Pinkerton did not suit him, and in parts his words had the unpleasant tone of recitation. Being different from the opera, the play did not give Mr. Hughes opportunities to prove his ability. Mr. Dunn plays the part of American Consul Sharpless, and Mrs. Dunn takes the part of Mrs. Pinkerton. Sonosuke, the old school actor of the Theatre surprised the audience with his knowledge of English in taking the part of Goro, the interpreter.

While there may be many defects when compared with the opera, the play is delightful when viewed independently from the opera, and the management of the Imperial Theatre is to be congratulated upon selecting such an interesting play for the production which will break up the monotony of the usual bills at the Imperial.

"Tsunbo Zato" a comic Japanese drama is also a success. Sonosuke and Chojuro exhibit their dancings in the drama, and the story is so comical but played with all the dignity of the Japanese drama that it held the attention of the audience from the beginning to the finish. It is a story of a deaf servant and a blind man who were left to take care of the master's house in his absence. Fearing the arrival of a thief, they arrange a signal that when the blind man hears any suspicious noise, he would pull the sleeves of the deaf man who will immediately raise the alarm. The blind man fools the deaf servant by pulling his sleeves when there is no thief. When the servant learns the truth, he determines to revenge himself and proposes to dance, and to signal the blind man by rubbing the blind man's face with his hand when he wants him to applaud. Instead of rubbing with hands he rubs the face of the blind man with his feet. Finally the blind man learns of the trick and sings songs and between songs, he heaps all sorts of insults upon the deaf servant and signals him to applaud. They finally begin to fight, and were found by other servants of the house in the midst of the fight.

"Kamakura no Ichiya" and "Natsumatsuri Onna Danhichi" are the rest of the bill. "Kamakura no Ichiya" is an interesting modern play of two acts, and "Natsumatsuri Onna Danhichi" is an old play rewritten to suit the actresses. In the last play, Namiko, the actress, plays the leading part of "Ogaji" exceedingly well.

COMMANDER OF U.S. ASIATIC FLEET ARRIVES

Admiral Knight, Commander of the American Asiatic Fleet, arrived in Yokohama at noon on Sunday on board his flagship Brooklyn from Manila accompanied by the warship Cincinnati, on the mission of returning the courtesy of the Japanese Government which conveyed the remains of the late American Ambassador to the United States on board the cruiser Adzuma. On the arrival at the port Admiral Knight was received by Captain Nagata and Commander Hasegawa, respectively representatives of the Navy Minister and the Chief of the Naval Board of Command, and Commander Horne, naval attache of the American Embassy in Tokyo, who went down to Yokohama to welcome the Admiral. The Admiral and his staff officers visited Tokyo yesterday and paid a formal call at the Navy Department, returning to Yokohama in the afternoon. In a few days Admiral Knight and his staff officers will again come to Tokyo and pay respects to the Emperor to convey the thanks of the President of the United States for the courtesy extended to the late Ambassador Mr. George W. Guthrie by the Court and the Government of Japan.

The American Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Post Wheeler will give a reception at the American Embassy on Wednesday, to-morrow, for all Americans in honour of Admiral Knight, Commander of the Asiatic Fleet and his staff officers from 5 o'clock to 7 o'clock in the afternoon. The orchestra of the flagship Brooklyn will furnish the music. All Americans are invited to attend.

NEWS & NOTES

The Siamese Government has prohibited export of silver.

The N.Y.K. Calcutta office has subscribed half a million rupees toward the Indian War Loan.

The Foreign Exchange Banks notify that they will be closed to business on Monday, July 30th, Meiji Tenno Sai.

Deferred telegrams for America, via Atlantic, will now be again accepted at Japanese post offices.

The reserve fund of the Dai Iichi Ginko (First Bank) has been increased to 11,200,000 yen from 10,500,000 yen.

A large nursery for medicinal herbs will be shortly laid out in Chiba prefecture by the Home Department.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Police Office has recently ordered the district offices to supervise the selling of unhealthy beverages, and it is learned that a variety of drinks has been seized and their manufacture suspended by the police.

On Wednesday afternoon a hailstorm, lasting for about three hours, occurred on Mt. Fuji attended with peals of thunder. The hailstones then witnessed were as large as peas. The uppermost part of the peerless mountain, above the ninth stage was turned into white.

Operatives of the Tozai Denki Kaisha, Nishi-Hiranuma-cho, Yokohama, have been demanding an increase of individual wages by 30 per cent. on the ground of increasing prices of commodities. The Company declined to entertain such demand, unless on the basis of "contracted unit," and locked out on Monday about 300 workmen.

The Money Orders and Savings Bureau in the Communications Department is now preparing many magic lantern slides representing the scenes and statistical figures which are calculated to contribute to the promoting of knowledge in the systems of postal saving, postal small-capital life insurance, etc., in order to encourage the people to resort to these prudential institutions. These slides will be lent out to any local associations which may make use of them for the purpose indicated.

Arrangements have been made in the former German Garden Club, Shanghai, which is open to the public, to serve dinners in the garden, on the verandah, or in private dining rooms, if applications are made a day before to the Manager of the Hotel de France. On the 21st inst., the Belgian national holiday, a concert was given in the garden and special dinners were served.

The Yokohama office of the International Sleeping Car Company reports, that the traffic from Japan on the Trans-Siberian railway at the present time is exceptionally heavy. In addition to large commissions of various kinds—Government officials and business men—constantly booking through the office, some hundreds of Russian exiles are also booked through each month.

Although P. & O. liners have been entirely withdrawn from India, China and Japan services, two ships of the British India S.N. Co., with which the P. & O. is affiliated, will continue to ply between India and Shanghai. About one-half of 250,000 bales of cotton, which the P. & O. have recently contracted to convey to Japan, still remain to be transported, but the two ships may be able to take them all until the appearance of new cotton.

With a view to reclaiming the frontage of Kanagawa, the Asano Shipbuilding Co. has recently negotiated with a certain landowner for the purchase of required tracts at Hashimoto-cho, Yamanouchi-cho and Takaki-cho, Kanagawa, but the negotiations were dropped, in consequence of higher price demanded by the latter. The Yokohama Dock Co. then opened negotiations with the landowner, and registered on Wednesday the transfer of such tracts.

FALLEN MONARCHIST CHIEF'S RELATIONS WITH GERMANS

With regard to reports of Chang Hsun's association with the Germans the Peking correspondent of the "North China Daily News" writes to his paper as follows:

There has been so much talk in Peking of the intervention of Germans in recent events that it is worth while to state some of the facts. It is well known that Chang Hsun, ever since his establishment at Hsuchowfu, was closely associated with Germans. In 1913 there was a rumour in Peking that he had been supplied with ammunition from Tsingtao, at the moment when there was a doubt as to whether he would side with Yuan Shih-kai, or with the rebel army from Nanking. The German Legation flatly denied the story, and I remember well being satisfied with the personal assurances on the point of a Secretary whom we all knew and liked. In light of what we now know of German methods I consider that his assurances were worthless. At any rate, Captain Salzman, now the military correspondent of one of the German newspapers, was immediately thereafter allowed to accompany Chang Hsun's forces in their march south to Nanking.

What actually happened at the time matters very little, but it may be assumed with certainty that Chang Hsun has been a regular buyer of ammunition and arms from German sources. In proof thereof an empty shell-case was picked up in Peking on Thursday beside one of his guns marked "Dusseldorf 1914." His men had equipment of various kinds made in Germany. Too much need not be made of that, however, for exactly the same can be said of the regular Chinese army.

Chang Hsun made no secret of his friendly feelings for Germans, and is reputed on good authority to have stated on arrival in Peking that he favoured resumption of relations with Germany, and that he would have restored them if it had been practicable. That Mr. Cordes should welcome such a personage in Peking is, therefore, natural, and doubtless the German Bank would gladly have made advances to him if it was thought that he had any serious chance of pulling through. Nobody, however, thought that from the moment of the Restoration. The universal opinion was that the Manchus could only last for a few weeks at the outside. Whether in these circumstances Mr. Cordes was green enough to spend seven figures of dollars upon Chang Hsun is a matter between him and his Kaiser.

It is emphatically stated that Chang Hsun's family, and later in the morning Chang Hsun himself, were brought to the Legation Quarter by Germans, one a German officer in uniform. It has to be remembered that in both cases an entry was effected through a gate under the control of Austrian marines, and that while various people saw the motor car flash past I have not yet met anybody who positively identified all the passengers. Moreover, Peking was pretty nervous and the Legation streets at the time were being freely peppered, so those venturing to move about were more concerned in keeping cover than in observing what passed by. It is, however, a fact that certain civilian Germans were in close relations with Chang Hsun during the last few days of his reign, and there can be but little doubt that they kept him in touch with the Austrian Legation. The fact that he and his family first went there, when either the British or Italian Legation was nearer and safer to approach, proves where he found sympathy. Moreover, all of his wounded were by arrangement brought to the German Hospital, where he has since been permitted to visit them.

The story goes that the German Legation Guard, interned near the Summer Palace, were allowed back into the Legation Quarter, with their arms, and that they actually assisted Chang Hsun in his operations. One of these is supposed to be the German officer who brought Chang Hsun in. This story is explained as follows. It is true that the Germans were brought back to Peking, and placed under the charge of the Dutch Minister, on the ground that if fighting took place around Peking, they would be safer inside than out, which may or may not be true. Once inside, however, it is claimed that they became fellow-foreigners in a difficult position in the midst of a battle. The Dutch Minister therefore permitted them to resume their arms, and they were ready to share in the defence of the Quarter if necessary, just as much as their Austrian comrades, who were under the order of Colonel Neville of the American Legation Guard, the senior Commandant. During the day two of these Germans were permitted to go into the city and bring back some German residents living in an unsafe quarter of the town. The Dutch sailors looking after the Germans did not know where those particular people lived, and as time was important the German soldiers were employed for the purpose. There are no officers among the Germans interned, but the officer's story is explainable by the fact that one Koenig, once in the German Army, till now in Chinese employ, donned uniform for the day doubtless for his own protection, and was believed to be the officer who brought Chang Hsun to the Austrian Legation.

As to the larger question of whether German money was responsible for the flotation of Chang Hsun's monarchy, I cannot actually obtain positive evidence here. It certainly would have suited the German book to see Chang Hsun in power, and no doubt he would have been helped if there had been any prospect of the investment proving profitable.

NEW DIRECTOR OF COLONIZATION

It is reported that Mr. Takeshi Shirani, now chief of the civil administration department of the Kwantung Government-General, will be appointed the director of the Colonization Bureau which has been newly established under the direct control of Premier Count Terauchi. But it is said at the same time that Mr. Hideyoshi Arimatsu, chief of the Legislation Bureau, will be appointed to the post to act for Mr. Shirani who is obliged to remain for a time yet in his present post owing to the probable inconvenience to the progress of work of the department he is the head of, in case he leaves it all of a sudden.

RESUSCITATION OF FOURPOWERS LOAN TO CHINA

Negotiations over the Four-Powers-Loan for 100,000,000 yen to China are likely shortly to be resuscitated between the Peking Government and the Ministers of Great Britain, France, Russia and Japan in Peking. Although the Chinese Government has not so far approached officially as yet the Minister of any of the four Powers, it was learned from a reliable source here that Mr. Liang Chi-chao, the Minister of Finance, a few days ago sounded the sentiment of the Japanese Minister over the question. The reason why the Chinese Finance Minister is trying to ascertain Japan's attitude is attributed to the fact that the rest of the Powers concerned are all engaged in the active war in Europe, making it next to impossibility to make loan to foreign country. With the world situation as it is to-day, Japan is the only country which is in a position to be able to assist China in her dire need for funds.

It is believed here that the abortive attempt of American financiers to participate in the great loan is not likely to be revived. The negotiations held in New York some weeks ago are said to have failed in inducing the financiers there to take part in this international undertaking, mainly owing to the Washington Administration's attitude toward the loan. The Wilson Government is tightly saddled on the policy of not backing any American financier participating in such loan and the financiers are said to be unwilling to hazard risk without the Government's assurance for protection. A conclusion is drawn from these facts that the expectation to have the American co-operation in this loan has a slight hope of being fulfilled, though the negotiations with the New York bankers can not be said to have finally terminated.

What the attitude of Japan will be cannot be learned as yet, though there are reasons to believe that she may give a favourable consideration on the Chinese request to open the negotiations over the loan. What could be gathered yesterday indicate that Japan's attitude on the question has not changed from that of last year when it formed the subject of discussion between the Chinese Government and the Ministers of the four Powers.

Just at this stage of China's endeavouring to restore the country to the normal condition of former days, naturally there are not a few barriers that block the way for a smooth conclusion of the negotiations over the international loan. Even should Mr. Feng Kuo-chang go to Peking from Nanking, which is still being doubted, and assume the Presidency, China is not likely to be free from more disturbances. The Southern Nationalists, for instance, are threatening to break up the country into two.

It is, however, a plain fact that China is in pressing need of funds in her efforts to set up the house in a proper order and put the administrative machinery in motion. She must seek, therefore, sources from which a sufficient amount of revenue can be obtained. As one of the means for that purpose she is reported to be anxiously sounding the sentiment of the representatives of the Powers in Peking relative to the re-opening of the negotiations over the famous loan; she may resort to another means, i.e., she may revive her proposals to the Allies which she put to them when she nearly decided to join the war in April. Among the items contained in her proposals there was one concerning the postponement of the payment of the Boxer indemnity. There was another item which had to do with her customs tariff rates. However, the increase in her revenue from the raise of the tariff rates is estimated at 3,000,000 per annum and this after the year's accounts have finally been settled at the end of the fiscal year. But the postponement of the payment of the indemnity will yield, according to an authority on the matter, something like 30,000,000 yen and this comparatively immediately.

That China is determined to take part in the war seems undeniable. At the same time it must be expected that Premier Tuan is very likely to propose to the Allied Ministers in Peking to again take up the requests he made several weeks ago, not necessarily because he wants to enter the war on some conditions favourable to his country, but under the dire necessity of his Government to obtain financial means to maintain his Administration.

Peking, July 24.—Since the failure of the warning presented to the Chinese Government by Dr. Paul Reinsch, the American Minister to Peking, the American Government has decided to observe most circumspect attitude with regard to the Chinese questions. In the present clash between the Peking Government and the southern provinces the American Government is apparently inclined to take attitude similar to that of the Entente Powers as much as possible.

It is reported that the American Consul-General at Shanghai is in sympathy with the views of the Entente Powers and has recognized the Shanghai Press as the organ of the opposition party or the southern leaders. Apparently America means to stand aloof from the situation.—"Nichinichi."

TOKYO BOY SCOUTS' SUMMER EXERCISES

Not content to spend the summer vacation idly, the Tokyo Boy Scouts decided to have their daily exercises in the compounds of the Hachiman Shrine, Imado, Asakusa every day.

On the 23rd the Boy Scouts of the vicinity gatherd in the compounds, and went through various exercises, and among the exercises is a novel gymnastic which consists of varions movements with a wooden sword. The Boy Scouts will gather in the compounds twice a day throughout the summer vacation, at eight in the morning and at five in the evening, and they will go through the "wooden sword" exercise. The exercise was invented by Commander Anahara of the Asakusa Boy Scouts, and it is well liked by the boys, and every day they will be seen exercising with their wooden sword inthe compounds of the Hachiman shrine in the morning and afternoon. Commander Anahara expects to keep the boys in good physical condition through summer and away from mischiefs by gathering them twice a day for their exercises.

NEW METHOD OF FACULTY READING DISCOVERED

All persons who are born under unfortunate stars may alter them according to their will and to think over the steps to be taken is human nature. A new method of character reading has been found by one Mr. T. Sakurai who has recently opened an office at Yuraku-cho in the compound facing the Imperial Hotel. Whether such a thing could be relied on is a different thing for columns of newspaper reports have stigmatized these men as freaks and what not. In the face of all such we are not trying to uphold the said character or faculty reading according to the countenance of persons as one of perfection but since the system as introduced to us by actual experiments have been so interesting we have decided to make a report to our readers. According to Mr. Sakurai, each change in the physical and mental conditions of any person leaves a trace in the countenance of the person experienced. Unlike the readers of which we see in common elsewhere he tells you straight-forwardly to the year when such and such has taken place in one's career. He tells you that the lines on your countenance signify that you are not intended for certain profession, whether you are suffering from certain ailments and what not. He professes that inasmuch as he is not an almighty he is not perfect but he is confident that he will relate to you 99 per cent of your past and future events.

According to this said faculty reader, his system is nothing new. It is all found in the old Chinese books. He explained that the Chinese are great people. He further describes there is nothing mysterious about it, the word of the Invisible Being and all those arts as upheld by many of his circle. They have been all produced as a result of long investigation according to statistics. It has not yet been found, he continued, why such and such a lineal feature caused certain conclusions, but these are to be seen and whenever such appear the conclusion that he makes will not stray but hit the mark. The scribe is an ardent disbeliever in such arts but it was performed before his eyes upon the traits and happenings of different persons. The deductions thus arrived at according to the facial features of the persons were told pointblank and much to the surprise of those attending. For instance he said of the scribe that he was the second child of his father although he may be registered as the first born according to law. Private affairs, leanings, present mood were unheaved much to the writer's surprise so that he is now somewhat inclined to believe in the methods of Mr. Sakurai. If the reader thinks this is going to the limit experiment for himself. As aforesaid, there is no mystery or power behind professed in the process. It is simply a matter of minute reading of the nervous system although Mr. Sakurai did not put it in that light, but reading between the lines of his words in short, it seems so. He went into a detailed explanation of the symptoms that take place in the feature of a consumptive, of those suffering from kidney disease or from glucosuria.

It may be boosting the said person to quite degree when such a length of space is devoted to such topics when the law in many countries have been enacted against such persons. However, after hearing the explanation of Mr. Sakurai, it is believable that with certain amount of investigations in this line one may be able to descry symptoms of certain diseases whether mental or physical. Even in the medical profession certain colour or changes in ailed persons are traces of certain troubles so in the present case no doubt each change in the conditions of animals that much change may be shown in his countenance which is the sign board of his internal conditions as a certain journalist has put it. We do not encourage our readers to make a trial but they may test the case personally to form their own opinions.

H.I.M. THE EMPEROR LEADING A BUSY LIFE

Notwithstanding many people in this country are now spending the summer at sea-resorts or other comfortable summer resorts, free from the worry of their daily business H.I.M. the Emperor of Japan is still engaged in the important State affairs, attending the Emperor's state administration office in the Imperial Palace every day. His Majesty attends the above-said office at 10.30 o'clock every morning and not infrequently the Emperor again appears at the office in the afternoon if there are any important state affairs that require particular attention on hand. In fact the prearranged scheme of the Emperor had been to leave the capital for the Imperial villa at Tamosawa, Nikko this year for the summer at the middle of this month in company with H.M. the Empress, but this had to be postponed owing to the fact that on the 30th of this month the fifth anniversary of the death of the Emperor Meiji will be ceremonized besides owing to the press of many diplomatic affairs waiting solution.

Such being the case His Majesty the Emperor has decided to put the plan in execution early next month. His Majesty's favourite pastime is horsemanship; every Saturday and Sunday nowadays, therefore, the Emperor practises riding on his pet horses named "Fujisono" and "Dap" at Fukiage-gyoyen in the compounds of the Imperial residence. At other times His Majesty takes quiet, pleasant strolls in the palace precincts. And also sometimes the Emperor plays billiards and Japanese chess.

It is also the liking of the Emperor to enjoy the music played by his Imperial consort upon piano of an evening now.

As to the diet of the Emperor it is said that His Majesty takes oatmeals and bread in the morning and light European foods at noon and in the evening Japanese meals are served to the Emperor. It may be here added, as many are acquainted with this, that the present Monarch of Japan has an exceptional fancy to the "ayu" fish, so much so that already this year the Emperor ordered the fish to be cooked for his table and was much pleased with the fish when it was presented to him.

THE RECENT RAID ON DISHONEST MERCHANTS

The first day of the prosecution of merchants using unlawful measures by the police on Friday has been a great success, and on the first day the police confiscated 1,005 measures not conforming to the regulations, among the measures used by rice dealers of Tokyo. On the 20th 683 rice dealers of Tokyo were found with unlawful measures, and they will be punished by the law. Among the measures confiscated by the Police there were many which were filed down by the users, others which had corners filled up with wax, and also a large number of merchants were using measures not inspected by the Government authorities.

By the law, the users of the unlawful measures are punishable by imprisonment less than one year and fine of less than five hundred yen. The result of the activity of the Police on Friday showed that 150 unlawful measures were found in Kanda, 96 in Ushigome, 93 in Shitaya, 76 in Asakusa, 76 in Honjo, 65 in Fukagawa and 75 in Kyobashi. No ward in Tokyo was free from the unlawful measures.

The Police, encouraged by the results obtained in the city, will start the confiscation of the unlawful measures used in the suburbs of Tokyo.

While the well-to-do people do not suffer much from the use of the short measures, the poor people who are purchasing rice in small quantities daily, have been suffering from the use of such measure when the price of rice is exceedingly high.

It is on account of such ill practice on the part of rice dealers in using measures, that the Government is planning to issue the regulation to order the sale of rice by weight. At present the matter is under consideration by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, and the Tokyo-fu authorities.

GERMAN GOLD IN CHINA

German gold is being used in China to hold her back from declaring war on Germany! This is the belief in well informed circles here. That the latest monarchical movement had at its back a German and Austrian influence was pointed out in these columns a few days ago. The Germans in China, having failed to harvest anything out of the Chang Hsun scheme, now seem to have turned to the leaders of South to create another trouble.

It was learned yesterday that there is a strong rumour in circulation in Shanghai to the effect that Dr. Sun Yat-sen has offered a handsome amount of money to the commanders of the Chinese warships anchored there if they oppose China's joining the war. Deep suspicion surrounds him as to where he obtained that money from. One allegation made against him is that he got it from Germans.

Another rumour is that the Germans are bribing the members of Parliament to vote against the declaration of war against Germany when it comes up to the national assembly. The Germans are said to have promised the parliamentarians that they would pay a certain amount of money should they obstruct the adoption of the declaration.

MEDICAL CONTINGENT GOING TO RUMANIA

Since the negotiations over the employment of Japanese physicians to work in Rumania have been recently concluded between the authorities of Rumania and this country Dr. Kuranosuke Mogi, director of the surgery department of the Sai-sei-kai who has been consequently chosen as the leader of the proposed Japanese medical contingent is now hurrying on preparations to select suitable candidates for his party. Already about three hundred applicants have been obtained and out of these 138 are graduates of medical colleges of Government universities, and among the applicants there are a Doctor with full title, three physicians who have studied abroad, and two who have already filed treatises with the educational authorities for the purpose of obtaining the title of doctorate.

Dr. Mogi intends to select from these many applicants, in most cases, the university graduates, only provided they are found sufficient in order to preclude any internal trouble in the party which often happens through the inadequate knowledge of each member as regards one another and the misunderstanding between the leader and the rest of the party, as the Doctor is well-acquainted with many of them in regard to their character and technical skill. Dr. Mogi says: "I am inclined to say, in the capacity of an individual, that we rather feel that we do not want any pay for our exertions in that helpless, ill-fated country if once we are called upon by the poor countrymen of Rumania. We can not, however, do this owing to circumstances, but it is at least a great consolation for us to think that the sum of 60,000 yen has been proposed to be given by the Committee for the Relief Fund for the sick and wounded soldiers of the Allies organized in this country in compensation for the above, though the above sum is too small to make any material help to them."

EXPERIMENTS FOR SERVICE AUTOMOBILES

To experiment with the service automobiles, the Army started on the 18th thirteen automobiles and one motorcycle on a trip through the mountain of Ganyetsu. Lieutenant-Colonel Amaya is to superintend the experiment.

Five of the thirteen cars are passenger cars to carry officers and staffs, and eight are service cars to carry provisions and munitions. When they left the station at Yotsuya, the service cars were loaded to the full capacity. They will be continuously experimented during the ten days' trip through the mountains.

The Army authorities have been experimenting with various makes and types of motor car to find the most suitable for the military service in Japan, and the Arsenal at Tokyo has built a few machines to fit the road and mountains of Japan. The Army will make several more experiments and trials before deciding upon the proper type of the car to be used in the Army.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF ALLIED AIR SERVICE

Lieutenant Takeda, who returned on the 20th from ourope where he had been studying aviation for over one year, is praising the activity of the aviation corps of England, France and Russia.

Lieutenant Takeda left Japan for Russia in June, 1916, and after staying some time in Russia he proceeded to France. During last summer he visited England, and since last fall he has witnessed many fights in the battlefields from aeroplanes, and took many photographs during his flights. He has been decorated with the Croix de Guerre.

In Russia, he says, there are six aviation schools, and instructors are all French officers, and he was surprised with the activity of the Russian aeroplanes in the front. From September to December, 1916, he studied at various aviation schools of France, and from February to May, 1917, he took part in the aeroplane activity of the French forces.

In France there are twenty aviation schools and in England ten, and the expenditure spent by one school equals to the total amount spent by the Japanese Government in the aviation corps. In French and English military aviation schools, only about one-third of students are officers, and the rest is non-commissioned officers and soldiers.

Lieutenant Takeda was deeply touched by the interest shown by the public of France and England in aviation, and not only the Governments are spending enormous sum of money in the perfection and development of the aviation corps, but the public are also contributing money towards the expenditure of the aviation corps. Even sacrificing their daily necessities these people are willing to give aid to the development of Military aeroplanes.

In France there are Captain Shigeno and Major Isobe, and eight other Japanese in the French flying corps, and in England there are also two Japanese aviators in the military service. All these Japanese aviators are accorded the highest courtesy, and they are making brilliant showing in the battle fronts.

NEW BUILDINGS FOR CITY OFFICE

A section of members of the Tokyo Municipal Assembly have decided at their recent meeting to suggest to the city authorities to build the new buildings of the Tokyo City Office by way of commemorating the 50th anniversary of the removal of Japan's capital to Tokyo. The promoters hope to have the work of construction started at the cost of 1,500,000 yen as a continuing undertaking for five years and are expected to negotiate shortly with other members of the assembly for the appointment of a committee for the erection of the new city office.

NEW SWIMMING POOL

A new swimming pool has been recently laid out by the Tokyo Skating Company on the former site of the roller skating rink at Sukiyabashi, Kyobashi-ku, city for the benefit of general public. This new swimming pool is open from 8 a.m. till 11 p.m. every day, charges being ten sen for each person per hour. The place is now attracting a great number of customers every day because of the recent hot weather.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 17.—After a bombardment the enemy has made a series of coup de main between the Somme and the Aisne but has been completely repulsed. The French have progressed south of Ailles and took prisoners. After a most violent bombardment in the regions of Mont Haut and Teton large forces of the Germans have attacked the positions which the French had captured on July 14 with greatly superior numbers. The enemy's efforts at Teton were unsuccessful. The assailants who have sustained heaviest losses were unable to break into the French lines. An obstinate fighting continued all night long at Mont Haut. The enemy who had at first succeeded in retaking a greater part of the captured ground, was driven back by brilliant counter-attacks immediately afterward. Only some portions of the trenches remain in his hands.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 17.—Reuter's correspondent at the French headquarters writes on July 15; While the flags were waving and rockets blazing all over France in honor of national fete yesterday, the battle for new points on the Champagne front was renewed on Moronvillers heights,—a chain of five flat-topped hills linked by high saddles which dominates the eastern sector the battlefield from Nogentlabesse to the farther bank of the Suappe. The highest point in the chain is Mont Haut, nearly 1,000 feet high which is flanked eastward by Teton Casque, westward by Mont Blond and Mont Cornillet.

The first great battle of April last brought the French over the crest of the ground, except Mont Cornillet the whole of which the French have held, the northern slopes of the chain for some time remained in the hands of the Germans. These Germans obstinately clung on just below the crests in the hope of regaining them by lucky dash and at two points; namely, on the saddle between Mont Blond and Mont Haut, they held strong positions which afforded them at least some partial views over the French side of the battlefield.

Below the Germans had brought three divisions into the line and in anticipation of attack which was to be made on the whole five-mile front, they carried out much work on their shelters and trenches. In northern part of these shelters and trenches, the attacking battalions and reserves were massed for assault.

The most difficult part of the enterprise, the capture of Mont Haut, was entrusted to the Hanoverian Division which was specially reserved for the task. The Germans, whose artillery had been strongly reinforced, furiously bombarded the French positions night and day until the signal for the assault was given at 8 in the evening. The objectives of the attacking battalions were carefully restricted to an advance of 300 yards on a front of 600 as ordered.

On Teton Casque, during the three to four hours preceding the attack, the ground on both sides, dividing the crests, received as severe a shelling as so limited area ever received in the war. The Germans poured avalances of high explosive into the French positions on Mont Blond, while the French swept the German works over the crest with tornadoes of fire. The bombardment reached a pitch of insane violence during the hour just before the attack.

The crests and slopes of Mont Blond and Mont Haut smoked as if all fires of Hades were breaking through the clouds which, mingled with smoke and dust, hung in the air in solid banks. Great mountains and curtains of smoke kept to lead up behind the crest line where the French shells were bursting in the German trenches. It was scarcely conceivable that men could live in that hideous turmoil, still less that they should coolly await order to leave the remains of their shelters to dash through its midst. When the moment came, they made one bound of it. Nothing could be seen of the French waves of assault in the hurricane of shellbursts but the news was flashed back within half an hour that the French infantry had taken the whole of their objectives on the saddle between Mont Blond and Mont Haut, besides on Mont Haut itself in three to six minutes. A panicky outburst of German rockets of red and yellow light signals from behind the crest immediately after the attack revealed the progress the French was making and that the Germans were calling for help with all fireworks they possessed.

A French General commanding, afterward described the battle from an observer's viewpoint that as a fourteenth-of-July firework show, this was justified because during the whole battle, the evening sky was continually lit up by rockets of flares of all sorts of colors, showing the Germans were hardpressed and desperately needing reinforcements and more artillery support. Meanwhile, the French trenches on the slopes of Mont Blond being transformed into a sea milky vapor in which even shellbursts were invisible, what resembled serpents of white moke with heads of fire wandered methodically to far across the battlefield, dragging after them a thickening cloud of woolly vapor made of their own expanding bodies which gradually hid the ground effectively as if a roof was built over it.

The Germans evidently felt the loss of vision keenly, for five of their sausage balloons appeared on the skyline extraordinarily low and so close that a special squadron of German aeroplanes had to be sent out to protect them. Taking all risks, they hung on the sky more than one hour, going down hurriedly when the French aeroplane neared them. It was the last desperate effort on the part of the Germans to see what the French were doing in the sea of smoke but they could make out nothing. Several hundred prisoners were captured. The French at present hold the gains intact and the German plans for the recapture of Moronvillers heights were successfully forestalled through the capture or destruction of the enemy's departure line.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 17.—Fighting heroically in an all-night battle against the enemy overwhelmingly superior in numbers the French troops shattered a series of desperate counterattacks on the positions won on Saturday in Mont Haut and Teton sectors after losing some ground in the first German onslaught, finally remained in possession of all of their gains of July 14.

While the Germans failed to reconquer any of the positions lost at Teton, they at first succeeded in recovering considerable ground in the Mont Haut sector but were afterward driven back completely. Losses sustained by the Germans were almost incredible. Of three dense waves of men sent forward two were cut up by the French fire. The third reached the French line only to be annihilated in counterattack.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 18.—The French Tuesday afternoon communique says that the Germans have seriously reattacked Teton, but our fire has smashed the assaulting waves which had to return in disorder to their own trenches, leaving numerous dead. We have entirely maintained the gains on July 14. We made a lively attack this morning west of Hill 304 and entirely recaptured all the positions which have remained in the hands of the Germans after the actions on June 28 and 29. Prisoners have not yet been counted.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Paris, July 18.—In the Verdun region, there was again a scene of magnificent success for the French troops yesterday. Sweeping forward west of Hill 304 on a front of two and a half kilometers, they carried all before them to a depth of one kilometre. The position conquered by the French including the second line had been powerfully organized for defence, and desperate efforts were made by the enemy to hold them.

In the first irresistible rush, the French carried in a few minutes all trenches they lost on June 28 and 29, and following up this success with extraordinary dash, they swarmed over the German first line beyond, inflicting terrible losses on those who attempted to stem their advance.

The Germans made a desperate stand to save the second line but resistance was rapidly crushed and the whole line was occupied. The French front thus advanced runs from southeastern corner of Avocourt wood through Canard wood to the western slopes of Hill 304.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 19.—According to a semi-official report, yesterday's advance on the left of the Meuse was of considerable importance. It has released

Hill 304 which the enemy had been closely pressing upon, and also it has done much to clear the approaches to Verdun.

The fury with which Germans are attacking Champagne has created a belief that the internal situation of the Central Empires is urgently demanding some sort of victory.

Artillery duel is going on with great intensity on the Belgian front.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—The French communique of Tuesday evening says:

There was a reciprocal artillery activity in the region of Cerny, Ailles and the California plateau in Champagne. The enemy renewed attacks north of Teton and again gained footing at certain points we had captured on July 14.

Artillery duel continued violently in Mont Haut where we are organizing the captured ground. The operations which we carried out on the left of the Meuse, west of Hill 304, have developed into a full success. After a heavy artillery preparation, our troops with irresistible dash, attacked a front of 2500 meters. On both sides of the Esnesmalan court road, the whole of the first German line which was elaborately organized for defence, fell into our hands.

Shortly afterwards, on the second enemy line, after desperate fighting in which our troops manifested splendid keenness and also carried an advance-post, we attained a kilometre depth of the line. This advance runs from the southeastern corner of Avocourt Wood to the western slopes of Hill 304 passing through Tanard wood. Our fire annihilated several counter-attacks during the afternoon. The enemy suffered most heavily. We counted four hundred and twenty five unwounded prisoners.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 20.—Active reciprocal artillery fire is going on along the whole front. After violent bombardment, Germans attacked on Wednesday evening south of Saint Quentin a front of 800 meters and gained footing on the French first line but by counter-attacks at dawn the French drove them out from a greater portion occupied by the German elements.

After a most intense bombardment, the Germans on Wednesday evening counter-attacked the French new positions at Avocourt wood but the French fire stopped them before they reached the French lines.

London, July 20.—A despatch from Reuter's correspondent at the French Head-Quarters under date of July 19, describes the French success on July 17 on the right bank of the Meuse as a brilliant example of perfectly staged infantry operation. The objective of the operation was the recovery of the flat-topped saddle between Hill 304 and the Avocourt wood, which had remained lost since June 28. The exact position and capacity of every enemy gun were known. The French bombarded furiously for many days, reducing the German companies who lost fifty per cent. of their strength on June 28. There were seen only 50 to 60 rifles despite reinforcements. The attack was postponed twice, owing to the abnormal condition of weather. The Germans, believing the attack would not be materialised, were relieving the exhausted survivors when the French, following a hurricane of bombardment made with five hundred guns on a front of a mile and a half, carried out an assault.

Prisoners tell that the greatest confusion was caused when the enemy realised that the French had reached his third line before he knew the first line was captured. The French have now established themselves on a front of three hundred yards on the northern slope which was in the Germans' hands before June 28, and now dominate better than ever the German positions. The victory was gained with singularly low casualties.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 20.—The French communique issued on Thursday evening says: The artillery was particularly active between the Somme and the Meuse. The Germans south of St. Quentin reattacked Hill Moulin-sous-touvent, which completely failed. Following a long and extremely violent bombardment, the enemy attacked the positions from northeast of Craonne to east of Hurtebise, throwing into struggle the Fifth Division of the Guard which was swept forward in thick waves. At several points the attacks completely failed on the two flanks but they only succeeded in reaching some elements on the first line of trenches in the centre where our counter-attacks stopped their advance, inflicting the heaviest losses to the enemy.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 21.—Enemy attacks or attempted attacks followed very violent bombardments at many points in the sectors of Cerny, Hurtebise and Craonne and north of Brayeenlaonnois, but the accurate fire and vigilance of our troops have caused the enemy plans to fail.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, July 21.—Struggle continues most violent in the regions of Hurtebise and Craonne. The Germans renewed attacks until late at night. The enemy on Thursday evening reattempted a general assault with important forces on the line of our plateau before Craonne and Vauclerc. Hand-to-hand fighting occurred on the whole front which our troops defended with magnificent courage. Our resistance of tenacity overcame the most furious assaults by the enemy. We entirely maintained our positions everywhere.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris via London, July 22.—The battle continued all the day long on Sunday with the extreme violence in the regions of Hurtebise and Craonne. The enemy was thrown back often from the casements on the plateau to which they had clung with enormous losses. The enemy held a footing on the first line of the California plateau during the afternoon. The fighting continues desperately.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 23.—There was a violent enemy bombardment on the Aisne front from the Chevrigny Spar to the south of Corbeny. The Germans at daybreak of Sunday powerfully attacked this front but were shattered and thrown back to their own trenches.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 24.—German attacks accompanied by violent bombardments continued Sunday night in the California plateau from before Craonne to the casements. After the finish of extremely violent attempts, the enemy succeeded in penetrating the first line but the French by an immediate vigorous counterattack ejected him from all but a small portion of the ground. The struggle on the California plateau only ended late at night. Despite all efforts the enemy was unable to drive off the French from the plateau.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

Rome, July 16.—The official communique to-day says that along the whole front yesterday we were much more active. In the evening, after subjecting the enemy lines to heavy fire from the Versic front to the valley of Jamiano, we carried out a successful raid to the zone to southeast of the Hill 247 despite violent hostile reaction. The enemy positions were destroyed and we brought in machine guns, war materials, ammunition and 275 prisoners including eleven officers.

On the Trentino and Carnia fronts direct hits were obtained by our artillery on the enemy hutments in Passo del Monticeple (Tanali), causing fires and disturbing working parties in the Concalaghi region on the Tonezza plateau and on Wischbery in the Seisera valley.

On the Julian front our artillery fire which was concentrated on Biglia Bodiedo also shelled with well directed bursts of fire the enemy trenches between Canale Morsoo and dispersed motars and supply columns moving on Santo Lucia on the Chiapovano road and on Dausizza plateau.

At dawn this morning one of our big bombarding squadrons accompanied by escorting aeroplanes ,carried out a raid on the enemy's lines of communication east of Selo where numerous troops were discovered and effectively bombed. Our machines which flew very low in order to drop bombs, all returned safely, notwithstanding the enemy's anti-aircraft fire and hostile machines, one of which was brought down and others driven back. This morning enemy seaplanes dropped bombs between Isonzo and Carso. There were a few victims and slight damage was caused.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 18.—The Italian communique of July 17 says: On the second peak of Colbricon (Fiemme alps), we blew up with mine important fortification works and saps which the enemy were preparing against our positions. In the crater about thirty enemy were found dead. Hostile patrols attempting to approach our lines were repulsed at Valtollina at the head of the Cedic Torrent in Carria in the upper valley of Gegane and on Pal Piosolo. The remainder of the front is as usual, harassed by our artillery fire.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 19.—The Italian communique of July 18 says:

The enemy parties attempting to approach our positions at Buchensteine Piana Groce pass in Canore at Cigini were all repulsed. We captured a few prisoners. The enemy artillery especially shelled our lines in the Zugna region. In Pasubio Vodice east of Gorizia, our artillery replied effectively; also concentrating our fire on the Pabrasina station, causing a fire. There was a considerable air activity on the whole front. Our airmen brought down two of enemy machines; one on the east of Sandaniele and the other in the low south of Tolminoone. Our aeroplanes were obliged to land within our lines.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 19.—The Italian communiqué issued on July 19 says: During the night of the 18th, the enemy storming parties, being supported by the heavy artillery and machine-gun fire, attacked our positions west of Versic. The attack ended in failure completely, owing to the vigilance of our infantry and the prompt action of our artillery.

In the Cuilicar valley we repulsed by means of counter-attack the enemy parties which had, after artillery preparations, attacked one of our outposts.

On the Julian front, the artillery was more active. Our guns destroyed a fortified position on Patock (Mont Nero), and dispersed the enemy troops which were observed in the rear of Mont Santo.

Yesterday the enemy parties which was on the communication lines on the Bansizza plateau in Carso were dispersed.

The enemy shelled our positions east of the Santa Caterina on the Posso Faiti, and southwest of Versic.

Aerial activity was intense along the whole front. One of the enemy machines was brought down in an air-fight. It fell near Asiago.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 20.—The Italian communication of July 20 says: In Malgavalpra on the Maso torrent, the garrison in one of our advanced posts brilliantly repulsed a strong enemy patrol which attempted to attack, driving them back with losses and capturing a few prisoners. Our artillery caused fire in one of the enemy's tunnels on Colbricon; also destroyed by trenchmortar-fire the defenses of advanced post on Montepiana and dispersed the working parties rebuilding Potice redoubt and damaged the redoubt yesterday on Montenero and shelled an intense traffic near Santa Lucia. The enemy artillery generally showing a little activity started a harassing fire against the positions in the Plezzo Basin on Vodice on Dossofaiti and west Versic.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 21.—The Italian communication of to-day says: In the Laghi Posina region, one of our storming detachments put to flight enemy detachments and destroyed their defences, brought back war material and ammunition. Enemy parties attempting to reach our advanced positions at Malgarudole and Forcadilanza were repulsed. One of our airmen attacked a squadron of five enemy machines, bringing down two of them.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 22.—The Italian communique of to-day says: During the night of July 20, the enemy was reinforced and renewed an attack on our advanced post at Malgavalpra on the Maso Torrent, but was completely repulsed. Yesterday fighting was generally less intense. The enemy carried out harassing fire on some points to which our batteries promptly replied with effective bursts of fire.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 14 (Delayed in transmission.)—Minister of War Kerensky has left for the south front.

A despatch from Helsingfors says that the third reading of a bill referring to the supreme rights of the Finnish Diet, which was fixed for Saturday, has been postponed until Tuesday.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 17.—A Russian official report says: We captured in Sunday's battle 16 officers and nine hundred soldiers of Germany and Austria as well as a number of machine guns. Between July 1st and 13th we captured 834 officers and 35,809 men, 93 guns, 28 trench-mortars, 403 machine guns, 43 mine-throwers, 45 bomb-throwers, three fire-throwers, two aeroplanes and other materials.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 18.—Mr. Shingareff and Mr. Manoueloff, Ministers of Finance and of Education, respectively, and Prince Shahovskay of Public Assistance, have resigned. Mr. Prokopovitch has been appointed Minister of Commerce and Mr. Teharhousky, of public instruction.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via London, July 18.—In announcing the abandonment of Kalusz by the Russians, the War Office says that the Russians have secured a crossing over the Lomnica River and have driven the enemy from Novica.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 18.—A military demonstration against the Government which was proposed by the extremists on Monday night as a protest against the disbandment of mutinous regiments at the front, has ended in a wild and panicky shooting at Nevshy Prospekt. There were a dozen casualties, and those wounded were taken to hospital. The disturbance ended in a few minutes, and the troops returned quietly to their barracks.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 19.—Thousands of sailors, soldiers and workpeople arrived from Kronstadt. The sailors carried the banners in which were inscribed "Down with Authority!" "Long Live the Commune!" A provocative firing was started in the street, and was followed by random machinegun shots, causing a general panic.

The Military Governor of Petrograd has announced that in accordance with the Government's order to clear the city of the armed persons disturbing order and threatening the security of the citizens, the troops have been ordered to proceed at once to re-establish order.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—A Russian official communication says that the Russians have repulsed a persistent attack northeastward of Kalucz and adds; For tactical reasons, we have transferred ourselves to the right bank of the Lomnica, leaving Kalucz and securing an important river crossing. A strong enemy threw us out of Novica but later our reserves recaptured it.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 19.—The Executives of the Workmen's Soldiers' and Peasants' Delegates have issued a manifesto and declares that all must assist the soldiers at the front line. "To refrain now is to deliver them to destruction and betray our fatherland to revolution."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 21.—A Russian official report states that a lively artillerying took place in the direction of Vilna. The enemy persistently attacked twenty miles south of Brody. At first all the attacks were repulsed but one regiment between Batkow and Manajow left their trenches voluntarily and retired with the result that the neighbouring units were forced to retire. The Austro-Germans have occupied a portion of the first line eastward of Brzezany and also at Bluoniki westward of Halicz.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 22.—A German official report says; Pursuing the Russians, we have crossed the Zlonsow-Tarnopol road on both sides of Jezierna for a width of forty kilometers. Further fighting is expected. The Austro-Hungarians recaptured the positions northward of Brzezany they lost on July 1.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 22.—A Russian official report says; The enemy made further offensive in the direction of Tarnopol. Our troops lacking stability elsewhere and obeying no orders, continued to retire.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 22.—A Russian communique says: An intense artillery duel is going on southwestward of the Dvinsk. The enemy continues the attack westward of Tarnopol. Our troops continue to retreat beyond the Sereth river. The enemy has occupied Miazorbelia which is a suburb of Tarnopol. Despite our superiority in number, the retreat is almost uninterrupted, owing to the instability of the troops which are under the influence of the Maximalists' propaganda and disregard the orders from the command. The enemy has compelled us to evacuate Sabino and to retire to the right bank of the Lomniza river.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 22.—A German official report says: We pressed on and reached the Brzezany-Tarnopol railway at several points, everywhere defeating newly brought up Russians in encounters. The seventh Army near Brzezany is also yielding to the increasing pressure on both flanks. Prisoners and booty are enormous. The Russians who strongly attacked our positions between Krevo and Smorgon, were heavily broken down and fresh fighting has broken out.

H.I.J.M. GUNBOATS IN MEDITERRANEAN

GERMAN AIR SQUADRON OVER FELIXSTOWE AND HARWICH

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 23.—A British official report states that a squadron of fifteen to twenty one aeroplanes approached Felixstowe and Harwich at eight o'clock on Sunday morning and dropped some bombs, but our heavy anti-aireraft fire caused the formation to split. A part of the raiders returned overseas. The other part, proceeding southward along the Essex coast, constantly engaged the gunfire and proceeded homeward without dropping more bombs. Our aeroplanes pursued the raiders out to the sea, heavily engaging, but the visibility was low and observation was difficult. Eleven persons were killed and twenty six injured at Felixstowe and Harwich.

BRITISH DESTROYERS' BIG HAUL

London via New York, July 18.—It is officially announced that the British destroyers have captured four German steamers in the North Sea and damaged two others which reached the Dutch coast.

A despatch received by Reuter's News Agency from Ymuiden, the Netherlands, says that four other German ships have been sunk and several others damaged.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—The Admiralty announces; Some of our light forces patrolling the North Sea Monday morning, sighted a number of German steamers. We signaled them to stop and abandon the ships and fired across the bows. The order was disregarded and the ships made for the Dutch coast. Two reached the shore badly damaged by our fire, the remaining four were intercepted and captured by our destroyers which placed the prize crews aboard and brought them away by their own steam. Two of these ships' crew abandoned the ships and other two crews were made prisoners. These four ships now in harbor in this country are, the Pellworm (1370 tons), Brietzeg (1495 tons), the Marie Horn (1088 tons) and the Heinz Blumberg (1370 tons).

LAST WEEK'S SHIPPING

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—The Admiralty announces; During the last week, the number of merchantmen arriving at British ports was 2828 and that of departures, 2920. Fourteen vessels over and four under 1600 tons were sunk and twelve were unsuccessfully attacked. Eight fishing boats were also sunk.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, July 20.—During the week ending July 15, 1037 steamers arrived at French port, while the clearance numbered 1029. Three steamers above and two below sixteen hundred tons were sunk. Four vessel were unsuccessfully attacked.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Rome via London, July 20.—During the week ending July 15, 558 ships arrived at Italian ports while the clearances numbered 499. One steamer and four small sailers were lost.

REMODELLED PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 14 (Delayed in transmission).—M. Tzeretelli, Tereschenko and Kerenski, Ministers of Communications, of Foreign Affairs and of War, respectively, have personally informed from Kief, on July 13, the Provisional Government that the pourparlers with the leaders of the Ukrainian Council have reached favourable results. The Council has taken a decision which, according to the view of the Ministers, is acceptable for the Government. Following the decision, the Government has sequestrated metallic works at Moscow, providing 85 per cent of all the metal output in the Moscow district.

The Ministry of Industry has issued instructions to organize a temporary directing board in order to ensure an uninterrupted activity of works.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 16.—Newspapers here announce that Mr. Shingareff, the Minister of Finance, L. Monouyloff, the Minister of Public Instruction, and M. Shohovskoy, the Minister of Public Assistance, have resigned. Their resignations have been caused by the divergence of opinion on the decision of the Provisional Government referring to Ukrainian question.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 19.—The Provisional Government has addressed the commissioners in the provinces of all Russia a telegraphic circular in which, answering the question apropos of the rumours referring to the arrest of members of the Provisional Government, it calls such rumours false.

The appeal to overthrow the Government by an armed force had the character of irresponsible action of the elements of the extreme minority and was received hostilely by population.

In full agreement with the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, the Provisional Government will undertake some measures for preventing any event which might endanger the state interests. As soon as the street disorders are cleared, the Government will proceed with pourparlers in order to organize a cabinet with the same representation of political currents as in the former cabinet before the resignation of the Ministers.

The Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates has issued an appeal in the course of which it declares in the most energetic terms that all armed demonstrations tending to impose the wish of small minority from one town on all population in all Russia are dishonorable. It further calls such actions treacherous to the revolutionary army defending the revolution at the front.

All the newspapers that appeared this morning mentioned nothing about the disorders which took place on July 16

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 19.—Some military units and workmen under the influence of a propaganda of a faction of socialists, democrats and extremists of the socalled bolchewicks organised armed demonstrations and caused disorders in the streets of the Capital on July 7. They marched through the streets with banners, calling out, "Overthrow the Provisional Government," and declaring "All power must be transferred to the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates." In the course of the armed demonstrations, a number of persons were wounded or killed.

In connection with this disturbance the Government, in agreement with the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates took the most decisive measures in order to suppress the mutiny.

The military headquarters in Petrograd positively stated on July 18 that the disorders could be considered as quelled. All military units have addressed a declaration expressing their readiness to assist the Government in its efforts to re-establish order in Petrograd.

During the morning of July 7 all centre seized by mutineers, such as Kschesinsky Palace and a part of Peter and Paul fortresses were occupied by the Government troops, and the mutineers surrendered. No bloodshed occurred. A quantity of explosives and guns was found around the palace and fortresses.

A Government commissioner who has arrived from the front has declared to the press representatives that the mutiny in Petrograd caused the highest indignation to the armies at the front. The similar attitude of the population was noticed along all the way to Petrograd.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 20.—The situation in Petrograd appears to be improving. The first machine-gun regiment and four last armoured-cars which had been guarding the entrance of the headquarters of the Leninists, have been surrendered to the authority of the Executive Committee. The local Commander of Petrograd announces that the disorder may be regarded as definitely ended.

All military organisations have given their assurances of readiness to support the efforts of the Government to reestablish order in the capital.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 20.—A proposal to transfer the seat of the Provisional Government to Moscow, was discussed at the extraordinary Cabinet Council which was held on July 18.

Petrograd via London, July 20.—Five thousand Ukrainian soldiers seized the Kieff Arsenal but in consequence of the prompt measures taken by the Government, they have evacuated the arsenal and order in the city has been restored.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Kieff via London, July 20.—The National Assembly and the soldiers of Ukraina has telegraphed to the provisional Government assuring their support against attempts for a civil war.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 21.—An attempt was made in the town of Polotzk to assassinate M. Kerensky, the War Minister, but the shot missed.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

London, July 21.—Prince Lvoff, the Russian Premier, has resigned. He has been succeeded by M. Kerensky, the War Minister.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 21.—Prince Lvoff, the Premier, has resigned, and M. Kerensky has been appointed Premier in succession to Prince Lvoff. M. Kerensky also temporarily retains the offices of Minister of War and Minister of Marine. M. Tsiretelli has been appointed Minister of the Interior, retaining the office of Minister of Posts and Telegraph. M. Nekrasoff has been provisionally appointed Minister of Justice.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 21.—A despatch from Petrograd dated July 21 says that Prince Lvoff's resignation was followed by a stormy Cabinet meeting lasting till dawn. M. Kerensky, who has just returned from the front, criticised the Ministers' and the military authorities' handling of the recent situation. He declared that they should have used their fullest powers to suppress the mutiny. He was about to dismiss the Commandant of Petrograd, but refrained upon learning that the Ministers were wholly responsible. M. Kerensky intends arresting all guilty of relations with Germany. He has already arrested several notorious Maximalists. Mutinous regiments have been disbanded, and further troops have arrived from the front. Banks have re-opened.

Despatches indicate an intense artillery battle in the Smorgon and Krevo sectors where the Germans massed hundreds of guns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 21.—The well-informed circles in London are not surprised at the changes of the Russian Government. It is recognised that the recent Ministerial resignations rendered the position of Prince Lvoff very difficult. It is believed that M. Kerensky's appointment is a good step. He is described as Russian Cromwell, and it is sincerely hoped that he will be able to stop the isolated cases of unwillingness to fight at the front.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 20 (Delayed in transmission).—Mr. Kerensky, Minister of War and Navy, has been nominated the President of the Cabinet, conserving at the same time the post of Minister of War and of Marine. Former Minister of Communications Nekrasoff has been appointed a Minister without portfolio. Minister Nekrasoff is to perform the duty of the president in the absence of Minister Kerensky.

The Provisional Government has issued a proclamation in course of which it says that the Provisional Government regards as its first principal task the extension of all forces in the country in order to fight the foreign enemy and to defend the new state of order from all the anarchic counter-revolutionary attempts, not stopping before most determinate measures have been adopted. At the same time, by its foreign policy, the Government will again affirm that the revolutionary army can go into the battle with full confidence that not a single drop of Russian soldiers' blood would be shed for the aid of foreign nations, contrary to the conception of right held by the Russian democracy which before all the world it had declared as its peaceful watchwords. In this view, the Provisional Government, while carrying out the principles of foreign policy announced in its declaration of May 19, intends to propose to all the Allies to hold an allied conference some time in August to revise the common direction of foreign policy of the Allies and co-ordinate actions in carrying out the principles announced by the Russian revolution. The order just issued by the Provisional Government to the Armies to resume activity, stating that the revolution is faced by the danger of invasion of foreign enemy, calls the troops to go forward on the first order to their military chiefs and obtain necessary instructions.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 21.—The newspapers here publish a letter of Prince Lvoff, the retiring Premier, addressed to the Provisional Government, explaining the motive of his resignation.

Prince Lvoff states in his letter that on July 20 after the suppression of the armed mutiny in Petrograd provoked by extreme socialistic currents, the Provisional Government has resolved to carry out a programme proposed by the Socialist Ministers for further activity of the Provisional Government. The programme is acceptable to him only in parts which form the repetition and development of the principles announced in formal declarations of the Provisional Government. The programme is not admissible in full as it deviates from the principles of the Provisional Government and serves the realization of purely socialistic aims, especially in parts referring firstly to the immediate declaration of a republican form of government in Russia, which constitutes an usurpation of the supreme rights of the constituent assembly, and secondly to the realisation of the proposed agrarian programme, which also encroaches the right of the constituent assembly.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 21.—The Provisional Government has ordered the disbandment of all military units which have taken part in the recent armed mutiny.

M. Karensky, the Minister of War, left here on July 20 for the southwestern front. The War Minister has addressed Novel, Helsingfors and other ports the following radio-telegram:

It is positively established that the disturbances in Petrograd were organised with the participation of the agents of the German Government. At present the disorders are completely suppressed. Steps have been taken to arrest all persons stained with their brothers' blood and crime against their country. Arrests have also been extended to sailors who have infringed their civil and military duty. It is the duty of all true sons of democracy to rally around the Provisional Government and the organisations of democracy of all Russia and to make their country drive off the enemy and his allies.

General Korniloff has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of Russian army on the southwestern front in succession to General Goutor.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 22.—The Government crisis is nearly over. The Socialist Ministers have come to agreement with the Executive Committee which sent an ultimatum to the Government demanding the immediate proclamation of republic, the abolition of all class divisions, ranks, badges and medals, the reform of the land, financial and economic system, firm measures against counter-revolution, and the dismissal of all unfaithful generals.

The resignation of Prince Lvoff was due to disagreement with the Socialists on the question of land reform.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via London, July 22.—The remodelled Provisional Government has issued a proclamation. Beginning with the words "Citizens, the fateful hour has struck," the proclamation declares that the Kaiser's armies have broken the Russian front, facilitated by the criminal levity The blind fanaticism of some people and the treachery of others both have threatened the very foundation of new Russia. The hidden forces of a counter-revolution now raise their heads, but the Government is confident in the recuperation of the country and the strength of the people. The Government will act with all energy and resolution which the exceptional circumstances demand. The proclamation further says that the first and capital problem at this moment is the application of the strength to the struggle against the foreign foe and to the defence of the new Government against any anarchical or counter-revolutionary attempts. In this connection the Government will not hesitate to take the most vigorous steps possible.

Simultaneously, the Government re-demonstrate by its foreign policy that the army can only fight with a firm conviction not to shed Russian blood for foreign ends, and reconfirm the universally proclaimed sentiments of democratic right in pacific announcements. The Government, therefore, is summoning the inter-Allied conference in August to decide the general orientation of the Allies' foreign policy and coordinate the actions in regard to the application of the principle of the Russian revolution. Russia will be represented at the conference by democratic representatives as well as diplomats.

Steps are proceeding for the constituent assembly elections which are to take place on September 9. The chief internal problem is the introduction of the autonomy for municipalities and zemstvos on the basis of direct, equal, secret and universal suffrage.

A Government decree will be promulgated shortly abolishing the classes, ranks and all the official decorations except those for great military deeds.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 24.—Appalling official account of the situation on the southwestern front has been received by the Russian Government. The account says that a fatal crisis has occurred in the morale of the troops. Most of the units have been completely disorganized. The offensive spirit has entirely disappeared and orders remain unheeded while exhortations by comrades are replied to by threats of shots. Some elements have voluntarily evacuated the positions without waiting the approach of the enemy. Sometimes, urgent orders for reinforcements are discussed for hours. For a distance of hundreds of versts, long files of robust, shameless deserters are proceeding rearward. Frequently an entire unit would desert, causing catastrophe. The commander-in-chief on the west front has ordered that the deserters should be fired upon, that they must be dealt with in merciless action as they are the cowards who sell Russia to revolution.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 24.—The joint congress of the Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates and Council of Peasants, in an all-night sitting passed a resolution, saying that the country is threatened by military debacle and internal anarchy and that the State and revolution are endangered. The resolution proclaims that the Government should be the government of safety and of revolution, according it an unlimited power to re-establish and reorganize the army and the public order.

CARSON PRESENTED FREEDOM OF BELFAST

London, July 21.—Sir Edward Carson has been presented the freedom of the city of Belfast, Ireland.

Speaking in the city, he referred to the nation's ignorance of the Admiralty's work. It angered him to see big newspaper headlines, "What's the navy doing?" He said such writers did not recognise the navy policing at least two hundred million square miles of the seas. They did not realise that every morsel of food they ate was due to the navy's ceaseless exertions. He never encountered men more able, more courageous, more loyal and of stronger determination than the men of our Navy. Contrary to common practice, the Navy loathed and detested advertisements.

Sir Edward Carson proceeded to say that the nation longed for peace but would never agree thereto while Prussianism reared its head above the water longing to trample under foot our liberties inherited for long ages.

U.S. SENATE PASS COMPROMISE FOOD BILL

Washington, July 21.—The Senate has passed a compromise food bill placing feeds, foods and fuels under the Government control under a board of three members. The difference between this measure and that passed by the House of Representatives on June 24th will necessitate the appointment of a joint conference committee.

U.S. SENATE PASSES AVIATION BILL

Washington, via New York, July 22.—The Senate has passed the Government aviation bill. It will now go to the President for signature.

[Note. The bill asks for 352 million dollars for building 22,000 aeroplanes and passed the House of Representatives on July 14].

MICHAELIS' SPEECH A FRESH CHALLENGE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 21.—The new German Chancellor, Dr. Georg Michaelis, speaking in the Reichstag, eulogised Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg and repeated the latter's arguments about Germany being forced to the war by the Russian mobilization. The submarine warfare, he stated, is not contrary to international law. England has forced on us the use of this weapon of ours, with which we must try to shorten the war. We regard America's intervention as without serious concern. The burning question in our hearts is how much longer the war lasts. Peace must lay the foundation of lasting reconciliation of nations to prevent them from being plunged into further enmity through economic blockades. We must see to it that our opponents' league in arms does not develop an economic offensive alliance against us.

Dr. Michaelis has admitted that the present time, with regard to food conditions, is the severest ever experienced and July has been the worst month in record, but he is confident that relief will shortly set in. It is desirable that the relations between the Government and the Parliament will be closer on the subject of the recognition of constitutional right, but the Imperial administration for the conduct of Germany's policy should not be narrowed.

Copenhagen via New York, July 21.—Dr. Michaelis, the new German Chancellor, addressing the Reichstag on Thursday, declared his adhesion to the submarine campaign by asserting that it was lawful and it was justifiably adopted as a means of shortening the war. He praised the retiring Chancellor, Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, whose work history would appreciate. He said that the Russian mobilization had forced the war upon the unwilling Germany and Britain's starvation blockade had forced us to use the submarine.

Dr. Michaelis said that Germany wished to conclude peace as "combatants who have successfully accomplished their purpose and have proved themselves invincible." He further added cryptically: "We must, by means of an understanding in the spirit of give and take, guarantee the conditions and existence of the German Empire upon the continent and overseas."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 21.—The English papers are unanimous in regarding Michaelis's speech as a declaration to fight to a finish. The papers state that the Allies will unhesitatingly accept the challenge. They can afford calmly to watch the struggles of autocracy to keep its head above the rising democratic flood.

AUSTRIA REGRETS HOLLWEG'S RESIGNATION

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 18.—Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg's resignation is generally regretted in Austria where it is regarded as pan-German success.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE'S CRUSHING REPLY TO DR. MICHAELIS

London, July 21.—Speaking at the Belgian Independence Day feast at the Queen's Hall on July 21, Mr. Lloyd George, the Premier, said that Belgium has suffered for the past three years humiliation, servitude and anxiety, but at the end she will emerge greater than ever. Belgium's deliverance is surely coming (loud applause) and civilization holds that when it does come, Belgium must be complete. (Cheers.)

Turning then to the speech recently made by the German Chancellor, Mr. Lloyd George asked what hope did it contain for an honourable peace? It was a dexterous facing of all ways in a speech. It was a speech of a man awaiting the military issue; let the Allies bear that in mind. (Hear! hear!) There were phrases in that speech that the German military powers will understand, the phrases about making the frontiers of Germany secure. That phrase annexed Alsace-Lorraine and drenched Europe in blood since 1914; that phrase, if they dare, will annex Belgium and Poland, and again precipitate Europe to welter in blood within a generation unless it is wiped out on the battlefields of Europe. The speech contained the phrases for democratic minds, for example the members of the Reichstag are to get into offices but they will not be State Ministers, only clerks. (Laughter).

After saying that on the whole, the Chancellor's speech meant that the military party had momentarily won the situation, the Premier proceeded to reaffirm that the form of Germany's Government was Germany's own affairs, but what manner of government it would be that we can trust to make a peace with that was our business. (Hear! hear!) Democracy is in itself a guarantee of peace and if you cannot get it in Germany then we must secure other guarantees as the substitute. The chancellor's speech has shown that Germany for the moment is elected for war.

Belgium is not even mentioned. Its phraseology is full of menace to Belgium. It makes the German frontier secure, that is, it takes Metz and Strassburg and will take Liege, and control Antwerp in order to secure the German economic interests. The determination of the Allies is that Belgium must be restored as a free, independent people (loud cheers) but not a protectorate. I have read Dr. Michaelis' speech as my duty once, twice and three times to seek anything from which I could hope to end the bloody struggle and I see in it a sham independence for Belgium, a sham democracy for Germany and a sham peace for Europe.

And I say that Europe has not sacrificed millions of gallant sons to re-establish in the soil consecrated by their blood a mere sanctuary of sham. (loud cheers.) The Chancellor tries to dupe his people with illusions. Germany will find that these like others will be dispelled in "the harrassing six weeks" that's gone. (laughter). The circumventions of the blockade by opening a road to Bagdad; that's gone. And the Zeppelin raids, —where are they? Now its Turks and U-boats make both equally barbarous good company to each other. Owing to the submarines, we are told that we cannot last much longer.

It is a sorry disillusion for Dr. Michaelis at the outset of his career but truth compels him gradually but surely to see that we are increasing production and diminishing losses on the sea. For example, comparing the three weeks in July with the corresponding period in April, we have not lost a half number of ships (Loud cheers). That is not all. We will turn out in 1917 four times the number of ships we built in 1916 (cheers). In the last six months of 1917, we will turn out as many ships as we did during the whole last year (loud cheers). I want to give these figures to the German Chancellor so as to help him obtain the right interpretation of his own statement (loud laughter). We will turn out in 1918 six times more than we did in 1916 (cheers).

We are a slow people; we are not quick in taking up anything, but rather difficult to beat when we begin. The Germans underrated our intelligence, industry and determination but they would starve us. They have said so (laughter). I'm sorry but as Premier, I must again tell truth that they are far from starving us, owing to the exertions of food supply for 1917-18 on the basis of the present consumption we have secured (loud cheers). We are arranging a programme for the cultivation that will make 1918 secure even if the losses increased. I don't want Germans to harbour the delusions that they are going to put us out in this fight until the liberty has been re-established throughout the world.

Mr. Lloyd George next referred to the Chancellor's statement that America had not the ships to bring an army across the Atlantic, and reminded Dr. Michaelis that Germany once said that Great Britain had no army. If Great Britain, while maintaining, equipping, even building up equipment for an army of millions, while maintaining the largest navy in the word ,can organize herself in the third year to turn out millions of tons of new shipping, is America with twice our population, endless natural resources, going to be beaten for the lack of effort? I predict that if the German Chancellor survive the war, he would form a different opinion and make a different speech, and that's the one we are waiting for.

A great German newspaper said the other day that Germany is fighting for the freedom and independence of Fatherland. That was never true; is less true to-day than ever. The freer Germany is, the bettter we would like it. Her rulers, not the allies, are the enemies of freedom for Germany. We could make peace with free Germany but cannot with the Germany dominated by autocracy (cheers). Since the Russian revolution and the Russian offer to concede the independence of the nation under the Russian flag, the last shadow of pretext of Germany that she is fighting for freedom has vanished. It is now a struggle between a group of democratic freemen and a group of nations governed by military autocracy. That's the whole thing.

The premier concluded by saying that there has been a more significant change announced a few hours ago than the substitution of one Michaelis with Bethmann-Hollweg; namely,—a brilliant young Russian statesman, an outstanding figure in the revolution, a man whose inspiration has regenerated and revived the Russian military power, who succeeded in the leadership of the Russian democracy,—Mr. Alexander Kerensky who has come to the control of the Russian Government. (cheers) "In the coming great struggles in the east and west," he said "every German soldier must know in his heart that if he fail, he is dying for the military autocracy fighting the free peoples. On the other hand, every Belgian, French and Russian knows that he is risking his life for the freedom and independence of his native land. Every British, American and Portuguese soldier knows that he is fighting, side by side, with others for international right and justice in the world. It is that growing conviction more than the knowledge of our unexhausted resources which gives us the heart to keep up fighting to the end, knowing that the future of mankind is in our trust to maintain and defend (loud cheers).

BRITISH CABINET AGAIN RECONSTRUCTED

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—It is officially announced that Sir Edward Carson has been appointed a member of the War Cabinet without portfolio; Minister for Munitions, Dr. Addison, to Minister of Reconstruction, Mr. Montague, Secretary for India, Mr. Churchill, Minister for Munitions, and Mr. Eric Geddes, First Lord of the Admiralty.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—The ministerial changes are generally received cautiously. Premier Lloyd George is congratulated on the originality and boldness of the changes but it is pointed out that the country, while wishing the new ministers well, will judge them entirely by results. The promotion of Mr. Geddes is most unexpected, but a tribute is being paid to his ability and the choice is regarded as sound.

The "Morning Post" thinks the appointment of Mr. Montague a scandal, and says that the appointment of Mr. Churchill proves that "if we have not invented an unsinkable ship, we have discovered an unsinkable politician."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 19.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Bonar Law has announced that the Government has decided to drop the Mesopotamian enquiries and to leave the soldiers to be dealt with by the Army Council in the ordinary way and to refuse the resignation of Baron Hardinge, Viceroy of India, which has been offered for the second time.

VIOLATION OF SPANISH WATERS

(Delayed in Transmission.)

London, July 17.—In the House of Commons Lord Robert Cecil stated that since April 1st German submarines had arrested or attacked over twenty British, allied or neutral ships in Spanish waters. The most serious representations had been made to Spain which had assured Great Britain that the Spanish Government would do its utmost to prevent the violations of Spanish waters.

NEW GOVERNMENT AT PEKING GETTING TO WORK

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 17.—Wu Ching-lien, the speaker of the House of Representatives, Chang Chi, the former president of the Senate, and other Kuomin-tang leaders have issued a press article for publication in foreign papers in Shanghai. The article, after dealing with the alleged activities of Germans in China, says: "There is a danger of impression being created that the Kuomin-tang is opposed to China's declaration of war against Germany. We categorically deny this. It is within the knowledge of the Allied Legation in Peking that some Kuomin-tang leaders were the first to advocate the entrance of China into war and to urge on the then Premier Tuan Chi-jui the necessity of formulating a war policy bringing China on the side of the democracies."

"While a few prominent members of the Kuomin-tang believed that departure from neutrality might increase internal difficulties in China, there is no doubt that a majority of the party has favoured China's intervention in the war and we are in a position to state that even those who oppose it would immediately acquiesce in a war decision if made by a government whose loyalty to republican principles and opposition to militarism are not in doubt. The political creed of the Kuomin-tang logically and inevitably commits the Kuomin-tang to support the policy which would range China with a liberal Power to risk war against Germany.

"China must be governed, similarly with the world's democracies, according to freedom, but not by the sword. Therefore we opposed the autocracy of the late President Yuan Shi-kai, and are now opposing his successor, Tuan Chi-jui. We insist on democracy.

"China is facing the same issue as that in Europe. The issue is the struggle between the Government of sword and the will of the governed. The training experience of Tuan Chi-jui as a servant of Manchu autocracy, disables him from governing this country as a democratic state."

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 19.—Only the most meagre reports from Szechuan are available, but these indicate that the situation is most serious.

It is stated that Tai Kan with the Kweichow troops has retired to Chienchow. Szechuanese Commander Liu Tsung-hao occupied the whole city. It is not clear how the fight began, but according to the latest reports, the Szechuanese attacked Kweichowites, surrounded the inner city where the latter fought desperately for ten days and were finally forced to retire.

A most serious report is that the Yunnan and Kweichow troops are marching for Chengtu to avenge the Kweichowites. The de facto Government has ordered all these troops to remain where they have arrived and proceed no farther. Nevertheless, it is feared that extensive fighting is inevitable.

The report that Li Yuan-hung has returned to his residence is incorrect; he is still in the French hospital.

Press dispatches from Peking report that the formation of the new Chinese Cabinet under the Premiership of Tuan Chi-jui has been received with favourable impression by the diplomatic corps generally, though the attitude of the American Minister is not one with the entente Ministers. The Ministers of the Entente Powers are apparently confident that under the Premiership of Tuan Chi-jui the new Government will soon decide on China's entry into the war on the side of the Entente Powers. At the same time they are watching with keen interest the attitude of the southern and western provinces, which are opposed to the Republican Government under Premier Tuan, and what measures Premier Tuan will adopt in trying to conciliate the southern and western leaders for tiding over the situation. The diplomatic corps while placing hope in the ability and influence of Premier Tuan are watching the development of the situation in somewhat apprehensive mood.

As regards the question of China's entry into the war, the negotiation is understood to be making much headway since the appointment of Wang Ta-hsieh as Foreign Minister. In this connection the Entente Ministers are daily holding conference with Premier Tuan Chi-jui and Foreign Minister Wang Tah-sieh.

The "Asahi" correspondent at Peking wires that Premier Tuan Chi-jui is for hastening the declaration of war on Germany and effecting the unification of the opinions of the nation by the sympathy and bonafide assistance of the Entente Powers, and as to the recognition of the declaration of war by the National Assembly, the Premier is of the opinion to submit the matter after the reassembling of the Legislature for ex-post fact consent. With this decision the Premier is waiting for the arrival of Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang in Peking, whom he will consult and at once carry out his determination. Wang Tah-sieh, new Foreign Minister, in a formal call made on him by the Allies' Ministers including the Japanese Minister on the 19th declared no change in the diplomatic policy of the new Government and that the new Government will expedite the solution of the pending question re China's entry into the war as speedily as possible. It is understood that in the interview with the Allied Ministers the Foreign Minister declared to the same effect as the intention of Premier Tuan stated above as to the new Government vis-a-vis Germany.

Observations in well informed quarters, according to the "Asahi" correspondent, are that if the southerners strongly oppose the Tuan Government the Premier will take recourse to military force for the solution of the question instead of having recourse to conciliation and compromise, and in such eventuality the Premier will send troops under Liu Tsun-hou to Szechuan in order to provide for the Yunnanese troops who are already invading into that province.

According to a Peking dispatch President Li Yuan-hung is still staying at the French hospital and apparently has no intention to return to his home. He is waiting for the arrival of Feng Kuo-chang in Peking and after handing over the office and the seal of the President to Feng will leave for Tientsin. A Tientsin dispatch states that Mrs. Li, wife of President Li, accompanied by two children and twenty servants, returned to Tientsin from Peking on Thursday afternoon and entered her home in the British settlement. Rumour has it that President Li will soon also come back to Tientsin, but it seems his life is in constant danger.

A Nanking dispatch says that Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang has received a note from Premier Tuan Chi-jui that President Li was strongly determined not to return to Peking but to quit the post, whereon Feng Kuo-chang has decided to go to Peking, leaving Nanking on the 26th with his family. According to a Peking telegram Feng Kuo-chang has conditionally proposed to the Peking Government to take two divisions of troops when going to the capital. The Government however does not like an influx of such a large force into the capital now that the troops stationed in Peking have been withdrawn with the restoration of order and peace.

Shanghai, July 21.—General Ting Hwai who recently arrived from Peking with the President's seal and four other seals belonging to the President's office and who had been residing at the Kalee Hotel where he had closely been watched because he refused to hand over the seals either to Feng Kuo-chang or to Tuan Chi-jui without a written order from Li Yuan-hung, was arrested this afternoon, charged by the mixed court as a theft of the seals of the Government of China. He was handed over to the Chinese authorities later.

Kang Yu-wei has arrived at Shanghai.

Canton, July 20.—Dr. Sun Yat-sen is recommending making Canton the provisional capital of China and inviting the President, the Parliament and the Navy to Canton to organise a Republican Government. The Tuchun and Civil Governor are considering the matter.

The provincial assembly has again resolved on a punitive expedition. Many leading members of the Kuomin-tang have arrived and are holding informal meetings.

The Cantonese anxiously hope that Feng Kuo-chang reconvene the old parliament and reorganise a republican cabinet to avoid the separation of north and south. The Cantonese would support the southern Government only when it is absolutely necessary, recognising the weakness on either side. There have been many receptions given in honour of Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 21.—Admiral Cheng Pi-kuang went on board the cruiser Hai-Chi this morning. It is reported that he is leaving for Canton with the first squadron. At noon he sent by wireless a proclamation declaring that the Navy is supporting the Parliamentarians, demanding the recognition of the provisional Constitution and declaring the acts of the Peking Government since the dissolution of Parliament as illegal.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 22.—A special despatch from Canton says that the Kwangtung and Kwangsi officials have telegraphed to President Li Yuan-hung advising him to resume the Presidency immediately and thus to avoid the necessity of the establishment of a central Government in the south. People here sincerely hope that the Bureaucrats will yield, realizing that the separation is unprofitable.

Meanwhile the Kuomin-tang is quietly working to effect a united provisional Government in the south.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Shanghai, July 22.—The news of the cruiser Hai-Chi is premature. The Hai-Chi steamed down this morning, but is still off Woosung, possibly owing to the threatening typhoon. Nevertheless, the Kuomin-tang has issued Admiral Cheng Pi-kuang's manifesto demanding the maintenance of the provisional Constitution, the re-assembly of the Parliment and the punishment of the rebellious Tuchuns according to law, and also declaring as illegal the present Peking Government and all the mandates issued since the dissolution of Parliament. Cheng Pi-Kuang insists on his being the proper Minister of the Navy. It is noteworthy that his appointment by Li Ching-hsi as Commander-in-Chief of the naval forces remains uncancelled.

Tang Shao-yi is proceeding to Canton on board the Hai-Chi.

KOKUSAI SPECIAL SERVICE

Peking, July 23.—The declaration of independence of the first squadron under Admiral Cheng Pi-kuang is regarded in Peking as of the most serious nature, though the Government circles do not display alarm at the southern movement and assert that they are prepared to use military force if necessary. Nevertheless, it is hoped that a peaceful solution will be reached, but the recall of the old Parliament seems to be out of question.

Meanwhile President Li Yuan-hung is receiving numerous telegrams urging him to resume the Presidency, including one which was sent yesterday from Vice-President Feng Kuo-chang. Feng Kuo-chang's message, however, is apparently only complimentary, for it is known that General Li Yuan-hung is determined to retire. Other messages urge him to go to the south to assume the Presidency of the Southern Republic.

Yesterday a number of officials on the Presidential Office left for Nanking to welcome General Feng Kuo-chang, who is expected to come up to Peking very soon. His departure is apparently delayed by the disturbances in Northern Kaingsu caused by the Chang Hsun's men. It is reported that General Feng Kuo-chang may come via Hankow.

THE APPOINTMENT OF M. KERENSKY AS PREMIER

The political disturbance of the last week led to the resignation of the Russian Cabinet, and M. Kerensky, the young man who became the man of the hour since the Russian revolution, became the Premier of Russia. The appointment of M. Kerensky as the Premier, has been received with a surprise in Japan, says the "Asahi." He is only thirty five years old, and except that he was a member of the socialist party, he had no previous record of political activity. It is indeed a surprising news to hear that such a young man was appointed as the Premier of a great nation, but the "Asahi" says that if we look back fifty years ago, the similar things happened in Japan at the time of the restoration. Those who planned the restoration and became the high Government officials upon the restoration were all unknown men of from thirty to forty years of age.

Japan was ruled by young men in the early part of the Meiji era, but fifty years after, old men took turns in governing the country, and the Elder Statesmen came into existence. While judging from the present condition of Japan, the appointment of M. Kerensky as the Russian Premier may sound astonishing, yet when we come to think of the early years of the Meiji Era, Japan was also ruled by the young men who had no political experience.

Some say that the appointment of M. Kerensky is only a transitory phenomenon, but M. Kerensky has been the central figure since the first stage of the revolution, and he has been giving his best service for the aim of establishing a sound Government for the Russian people; while the incident may be transitory, it can not be denied that M. Kerensky possesses unselfish courage to help the Russian public and to effect the favourable change of the Russian Government.

With the appointment of M. Kerensky, the coalition cabinet of the Democratic and Socialist parties has collapsed, and the present cabinet is purely the Socialists' cabinet. There are, however, the problems of Finland and Ukraina, and among the radical socialists, there are still many who are strongly advocating an early peace, and the grave problems await the solution of the new Cabinet under M. Kerensky.

In criticising the present conditions of Russia, the Japanese public is mostly believing that the future of Russia is gloomy, but the "Asahi" declares that the complete revolution of such a large nation, and the great task of establishing the new and sound Government, can not be accomplished within a short period. The Japanese are simple people, and the whole population is of one race, and the political institution of the country is also simple, but still it took over ten years to effect the restoration. With Russia, which has many complicated political and racial problems, it is natural that several disturbances would take place even after the revolution, and according to the belief of the "Asahi" in three or four months, the new Government will gain sufficient footing to rule the country.

The paper further says that all Entente nations will have confidence in the future of the new Russia, and will give the best possible aid to the establishment of the sound Government in Russia.

POLITICAL SITUATION IN GERMANY

The "Hochi" believes that the resignation of Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg will not have immediate effect upon the war policy of Germany, and the change of the attitude of the Kaiser towards the public of Germany will not bring immediat peace.

The people of Germany began to feel the effect of the strenuous war, and the submarine warfare and the aeroplane attacks did not score the expected victory, while the entrance of the United States in the war, and the recent activity of the Russian forces discouraged the German public, who placed all blames upon the Chancellor who was forced to resign from his post.

The superstitional belief in the German Kultur is the force that brought about the present war, but the ambition of the Kaiser and the aspiration of the German officers for fame, had been also instrumental in causing the war. It can not be doubted that for the fame and ambition of a few, the interest and comfort of the public were sacrificed. The victory of which the Germans were so sure at the beginning did not come, and now Germany is fighting against almost the entire group of the civilized nations. The public of Germany began to realize that the Pan-Germanism, and German Militarism are not practicable, and the public opinion rose against the war, and the democratic thought obtained influence.

The Progressives, Socialists and Liberals became all against Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg. The shrewd Kaiser placed all the blames upon Bethmann-Hollweg, and in order to regain the confidence of the public, showed the attitude to respect the opinion of the public and democratic tendency. It is believed that the Kaiser is now planning to regain the confidence of the public, by yielding to their wish, and on the other hand to strengthen the determination of the people to continue the war. Consequently, the "Hochi" believes that the resignation of Bethmann-Hollweg will not bring any immediate change in the situation of Germany.

However tyrannical the Kaiser may be, he will not be able to oppose indefinitely against the reasonable wish of the public, and the day will shortly come, when the Kaiser has to surrender himself to the wish of the people. In all nations, it has been proved that the wish of the people can not be oppressed for any period, and any nation that tried to oppress the people has been ruined.

Now the Reichstag is on strike, and it is reported that the Kaiser had called the Crown Prince and Marshal Hindenburg for a conference, and it can be seen how grave the situation is at present in Germany. Whether the Kaiser will be able to oppress the wish of the people, or he will surrender himself to the people, is a question not only important in the development of the war but also in the general tendency of the world.

GERMANY'S DESIRE FOR PEACE

It is three years since the outbreak of the great conflict of Europe, but still the end of the war could not be predicted, but the "Nichinichi" declares that it can not be denied that the people of all the belligerent powers are trying their best to bring about peace. At present the attention of the people of the world is not directed to the development at fronts, but to the possible time of bringing out the peace terms. In all nations the hope for early peace became evident.

Especially in Germany, the people are wishing the early conclusion of the war, and the recent speech made by Dr. Michaelis, the new Chancellor before the Reichstag, tells the true condition of Germany. From his speech it can be guessed how Germany is suffering from the problem of food supply and other questions. It is not only Dr. Michaelis who suggested the desire for peace, but also Bethmann-Hollweg, the former Chancellor, made several speeches regarding peace, and he proposed the peace terms whenever an opportunity warranted it. He tried to conclude a separate peace with Russia, but it failed.

Despite the suffering and difficulties she is confronting, Germany is still boasting that the peace should be concluded upon the base of the present map of Europe, and while she is wishing a peace, she had recently passed the war expenditure of 15,000,000,000 marks in the Reichstag.

Not acknowledging her difficulty to continue the war, Germany is still trying to keep up her advantage. But the "Nichinichi" says that however strongly Germany may boast and pretend, it will be impossible for her to maintain the present advantageous position, and among the German public many began to voice their wish for an early peace.

The "Nichinichi" hopes that the Entente powers will keep on fighting Germany and obtain their end, despite the declarations made by Germany.

WAR EXPENDITURE OF BELLIGERENT POWERS

In the past three years of the European war, all belligerent powers spent enormous war expenditures, and according to the latest statistics, up to this May, England, France, Russia and Italy spent 98,300,000,000 yen and Germany and Austria spent 52,500,000,000 yen, and the total expenditure of the both sides will amount to 150,800,000,000 yen, says the "Asahi." However the above figure does not include the amount spent by Belgium, Japan, Servia, Roumania, Portugal, Turkey and Bulgaria, and the total war expenditure of all belligerent nations will far exceed the 150 billion yen.

It is natural that such an enormous expenditure will affect the economic condition of all nations participating in the present war. One noteworthy effect of the war is the increase of the issue of notes in all countries, and consequent increase of the cost of living. Among the belligerent nations there are some which will find it difficult in future to obtain the necessary war expenditure, as they have used up all available sources of revenue.

Considering the financial conditions of the belligerent powers, it is plain that England now possesses the strongest financial foundation. England has been careful from the very beginning of the war in selecting sources for war expenditure, and obtaining the most of the amount from taxes, the Government limited the amount of bond issue as much as possible. However on account of the increase of the war expenditures, she has to obtain 38,000,000,000 yen from bonds and loans, from taxes she obtained only 8,000,000,000 yen. In February the British Government floated the loan of 10,000,000,000 yen and her success in obtaining the money surprised the whole nation, and it is believed that if necessary she can float the similar amount of loan again in near future.

On the other hand, Germany secured 29,600,000,000 yen by bonds and loans, and it is doubtful how long she can continue the present system of securing fund for the war. Germany could not follow the method of securing the most of the war expenditure from taxes, as the German public had been already heavily taxed, and the increase of the tax would cause the dissatisfaction of the public.

The "Asahi" regrets that the financial condition of Russia is not favourable. The Provisional Government attempted to float the bond of 3,000,000,000 rubles, but she was only able to secure one third of the total amount, and she had to issue 2,000,000,000 rubles notes. It is regrettable for the success of the Entente powers that the financial condition of Russia is in such a condition. But the United States is now determined to aid Russia, and also England will help Russia as much as possible, and the "Asahi" believes that with the help of the United States and England, she will be able to adjust her financial position.

MAL-ADMINISTRATION OF COMMUNICATIONS

Recently complaints for the delay in the despatch of mails, forwarding of telegrams and telephone connections have been strongly raised by the public, and at present all means of communications controlled by the Government are causing delays, and the "Jiji" blames the Government for the present congestion of communications, and for the lack of facilities to handle the increased number of communications.

The telegram from Nagasaki to Tokyo, which formerly reached the destination within two hours, is now taking more than twenty hours, and the Special Delivery mails delivered within Tokyo are not reaching the addressee within seven or eight hours. If any one desires a telephone connection with Osaka and apply for the connection at eight o'clock in the morning, he can not obtain the connection until seven or eight o'clock in the evening. These are only a few incidents of delay, and business men and others are suffering exceedingly from the delay of telegrams and mails. Speedy despatch is the first essential facility of the communication, and especially with the telegrams, if they are not delivered speedily, they are useless, and at present the Government is pocketing the telegram charges without giving the service.

It is said that these delays are caused by the rapid increase of mails and telegrams, due to the unprecedented prosperity of the business world, but the "Jiji" declares that the Government failed to make the proper facilities for handling the increased number of communications, and the Government is solely responsible for the present inconveniences caused by the delay. Despite the increase of mails and telegrams, the Government authorities never attempted to increase the number of employees handling such communications. Not only they did not employ extra number of employees, but they did not raise the pay of these employees notwithstanding the advanced cost of living. Consequently many employees unable to support themselves with the Government pay left the employ of the Department of Communications and sought other employments. Consequently instead of increasing the number of employees to handle the increased number of communications, the Department now has a far less number of employees than before the war.

Those employees still remaining in the office are driven to work overtime and as they are forced to handle exceedingly large number of communications, many of them became ill, and every day a large number of them are not attending to their work on account of illness.

Even under such a condition, the Government authorities do not attempt to adopt any measure to remedy the situation, and are considering the inconvenience of the public with cool disregard.

The Government is monopolizing all means of communications, and they are the sources of a large revenue to the Government, and while it is proper for the Government to maintain proper number of employees and have proper equipments to handle the possible amount of mails, and telegrams, up to the present the Government paid no attention to this direction.

It is necessary to increase the number of telegraph and telephone wires throughout the country, and enlarge the equipment of the Department of Communications, but the "Jiji" says that the urgent need is the increase of the pay of the Post Office and Telephone Exchange employees. Unless their pay is sufficiently increased, it will be difficult to obtain the necessary number of employees, and furthermore the present employees will find it more difficult to support themselves with the present pay, and they will leave the Department of Communications. The "Jiji" hopes that the Government will realize the importance of the communication facilities, and will consider the convenience of the public and try to improve the present condition.

GOV'T. INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE

The Japanese Government is fond of organizing various Investigation Committee, and the purpose of the establishment of Investigation Committees is to study and discuss certain problems, and while the Committees are appointed for good purposes, there is no Committee which actually benefited the nation and the public, says the "Nichinichi."

The Terauchi Cabinet has many weak points, and to cover up these weaknesses, the Cabinet, has organized many Investigation Committees, but as the Cabinet organizes so many Investigation Committees, it is sure to bring many failures. These Investigation Committees are appointed solely for political purposes.

The recent Advisory Board on Diplomatic Affairs has been severely criticised by the public, and some said that it was unconstitutional while others declare that the establishment of such an organ will hinder the diplomatic activity of the Foreign Department. The Cabinet says that the Board was established to unify the national opinion in the diplomatic matters, but the "Nichinichi" says that it has been proved that the Cabinet can not unify the national opinion regarding the Board itself.

Furthermore, the Terauchi Cabinet established another Investigation Committee recently on the educational affairs. It is nothing but the old committee in a new dress. The Educational Committee organized under the Yamamoto Cabinet was regarded as almost useless, but the Terauchi Cabinet gave it a new name and placed it under the direct supervision of the Cabinet.

The Okuma Cabinet established many investigation Committees, but the Terauchi Cabinet went one step further and organized more Committees. The system of the investigation committee is entirely wrong, according to the "Nichinichi." Every Committee now consists of people of all walks, and the members are officials, scholars, and businessmen, and under one committee are included the people whose interests would conflict, and consequently they never arrive at any satisfactory conclusion. If it is a scientific committee, the entire committee should be made up of scholars, and placed under the supervision of Imperial University or the Imperial Academy. If it is a legal investigation committee, the members should be selected from members of House of Peers and House of Representatives, and others. Or in case of the economic and financial investigation, the Chambers of Commerce and businessmen should be selected as members. But under the present system, every Committee is made up with officials, scholars and businessmen, and it can never be expected that the Committee will be of any service to the nation.

EXORBITANT PRICE OF RAW MATERIALS

By the effect of the European war, it became difficult to obtain various materials from foreign countries, and all raw materials have gone up in prices, but the "Hochi" regrets that the dealers in raw materials are reaping enormous profits by selling materials at unjustly high prices, and small factory owners are now at the mercy of these dishonest importers.

According to the recent investigation made by the Tokyo-fu office, these dishonest dealers in raw materials are selling their wares at twice and three times the reasonable prices. The small industrial men and factory owners are unable to import materials direct from manufacturers and they are now at the mercy of these merchants.

Recently, the Metal Platers' Union, with 270 members, organized a Corporative Society, and arranged to purchase all the materials from one importer at 5% above the invoice price, and by making this arrangement, these platers are now able to secure their materials at one-third of the price they paid to other importers before. The "Hochi" says that this movement is to be welcomed, and other small factory owners are urged to follow the example of the platers.

Meanwhile the paper hopes that the Government will supervise such merchants who control the import of materials and who sell them to small factories at unlawfully high prices, sometimes four or five times above the cost.

RESTRICTION IN THE SUPPLY OF CITY WATER

Citizens of Tokyo will no doubt experience some inconvenience when the use of the city water comes to be restricted by the metric system which is now suggested by Dr. Okuda, Mayor of Tokyo. This new method which Dr. Okuda is credited to be advocating has no other object in view than putting a check to the waste of water as is often practised by some of the unwary citizens But it is said that the city authorities do not stand in any need of adopting the new method seeing the good business they are doing with the city water which is one of the bountiful sources of the revenues of the city. Therefore whether the new system will come to be really introduced or not will depend upon the general prospect of the finances of the city office, not the profits out of the city water trade alone. It is expected that a final decision will be in any case arrived at by the city council shortly as to the advisability or inadvisability of the new method to be applied to the use of the city water which is now said to be contemplated by Mayor Okuda.

In this connection another rumour is current that Dr. Okuda is contemplating to raise the charges for the city water in future but this is denied by the chief of the City Works Department of the city office though he is not assured by the Mayor himself about the untruth of the rumour.

ADZUMA BACK AT YOKOSUKA

The cruiser Azuma which conveyed the remains of the late American Ambassador Mr. George W. Guthrie to America safely returned to the admiralty port of Yokosuka on the 21st at 8 a.m. after seventy-five days absence from the naval port, successfully completing her mission. The cruiser left Yokohama on the afternoon of April 28 carrying the remains of the late Ambassador and after touching at Honolulu reached San Francisco in the morning of May 25 when the remains of the late Ambassador was landed and handed over to the reception committee dispatched by the American Government. During twelve days' stay in San Francisco the crew of the warship was accorded very hearty reception at the hands of the Japanese residents and one day they were invited to a reception given by the American navy at the instance of the chief officer of the naval barracks of the place. The warship met the Navy Day on May 27 while lying at anchor in San Francisco, when the crew celebrated the glorious victory of the battle of the Japan Sea by giving a reception on board the warship inviting about three hundred leading Japanese residents. At Honolulu the warship spent three days and nights on her outward run and 13 days on return way having had to repair damaged propeller. Captain Niiro and all under him are enjoying excellent health.

KAGESHIMA SUNK OFF WEST COAST OF ENGLAND

The steamer Kageshima Maru, 4,566 tons, of the Department of Agriculture and Commerce, was sunk by a German submarine off the west coast of England on July 20th, according to a report received by the Navy Department Thursday. The captain and eight of the crew were safely landed at Brest on July 23rd.

The steamer Kageshima Maru was formerly a Russian steamer confiscated during the Russo-Japanese War, and it is now owned by the Department of Agriculture and Commerce and chartered by the Shosho Yoko for the period of ten years. The steamer was a subject of discussion at the recent extra session of the Diet.

The Shosho Yoko chartered the steamer for ten years in March, 1913. The steamer entered New York on June 6th, and after undergoing repairs at the port, left for some unknown port. As she is not restricted to any definite route, and is carrying any available cargo to any port, her recent movement was not known. She was commanded by Captain Ayabe and had a crew of forty four, including sixteen Chinese. As the report from England says that thirty eight of the crew were saved, it is believed that there must have been some casualties among the crew. But another report says that Captain Ayabe gave the position to Mr. Tamai at New York and at the time of the accident, she was commanded by Captain Tamai. The Shosho Yoko knows very little about the recent movement of the steamer, as she was following an undefinite route.

As regards the Japanese steamer Tozan Maru, which became missing in the North Sea some time ago and whose fate has remained a mystery since, it has been ascertained that she has been destroyed by the German submarines together with five British steamers in the North Sea, states a report received at official quarters recently.

TABLE OF SHIPPING LOSSES

According to the latest investigation, the total number of the allied vessels sunk by the enemy up to April this year since the outbreak of the war reached 2,931 with the aggregate tonnage of 5,547,059 tons. It is estimated that the Allies lost a shipping of about 500,000 tons in the month of May this year, so that they have so far lost a shipping of about 6 million tons in the war. As for the loss of shipping suffered by the enemy any accurate figure is said not to be available, but it is taken for granted that the Germanic allies have lost a shipping of about half a million tons up to the present. The loss of the allied vessels may be classified as follows:

		Vessels	Tons

PROTEST AGAINST NEW CINEMA LAW

Twelve representatives of the Cinema Theatres in Tokyo called upon the Police authorities on July 25th and demanded that the enforcement of the regulation going into force from August first regarding the pictures to be shown to children, should be postponed for one year.

The cinema men say that on account of the European war, they are unable to obtain the suitable pictures for the children, and if the regulation is enforced from August first, they must shut down their theatres, as they will confront the difficulty to obtain the pictures especially to be shown for the children.

Furthermore the cinema men demanded that the restriction of the hours for showing the pictures for children should be changed. The new regulation says that picture shows for children should only be opened from noon to nine p.m. The theatre proprietors declare that the sudden change of the hours of the theatres will be detrimental to their business.

The police authorities, after listening to the demand of the theatre men, have promised to consider their demands.

NEW YOKOHAMA PIER COMPLETED

The new extensive pier in Yokohama will be handed over to the Customs officials early in August by the engineers of the Finance Ministry, and be opened to business by the 20th prox. Docking charges there will be the same as those required for customs quays, but admission fees will be imposed on the general public to go there in order to prevent the congestion of traffic. Altogether, about ten officials will be appointed for the new pier, and details re the expenses for its maintenance and cognate matters be settled before its opening. Restrictions will also be imposed on heavy vehicles and loads. The opening ceremony of the new pier will, however, be deferred to autumn.

DROUGHT IN MANY PLACES

Drought is now reported from many parts all over the country in consequence of the scarcity of rainfall for some days past. The city of Nagasaki is now in dire straits for lack of water which has become an almost chronic case in that city whenever no drop of rain is experienced for any length of time in that district. Also the city of Kobe is now on the verge of being short of water from the same cause so that the local people are now considering to make some attempts to cause rainfall by such means as lighting bon-fires on Mt. Suwa in the locality or firing blank-cartridges of guns, which are the usual expedients in the like case. Many parts in the prefecture of Saitama are also suffering from utter shortage of water so that many farmers are much worried about the growth of the young rice plants on account of the absence of water for irrigatory purposes. Many districts in Gumma prefecture are now thrown into a similar condition, so that the farmers of the drought-stricken localities are now launching a movement to get the water for their farms from the Lake of Haruna through the permission of the local authorities. Yamanashi prefecture is suffering no less inconvenience from the shortage of water and the city of Kofu and vicinity are feeling the severity of this situation in the intensest degree, in consequence, it is reported poor vintage is foreshadowed this year in that district which is a country traditionally famous for the production of grapes and wine.

NEW WATERWORK PLANNED

A scheme has been launched to construct a waterworks in the southwestern suburbs of Tokyo in order to supply water to Omori, Osaki, Shinagawa and other suburban districts which go on developing now, the promoters being Messrs. Ono, Toyoda and others of Tokyo. The inhabitants in these suburban places suffer much from an inadequate supply of drinking water at present so that they will receive facilities when the planned waterworks is constructed. Arrangements, it is reported, are being made for the organization of a company at a capital of one million yen to undertake the construction and the company is expected to be formally inaugurated in September. The water source will be the Tamagawa river, the reservoirs being laid out at Kamedzuka village. The promoters wish to supply water to 60,000 dwellings at the outset.

VIOLATORS OF ELECTION LAW

According to investigations made by the Department of Justice, the total number of persons so far prosecuted on a charge of violating the Election Law in the last general election has reached 22,741, showing an increase of 12,265 persons compared with the figure for the preceding general election in 1915.

KAMAKURA FREE FROM DYSENTERY

It will be a pleasure to the general public to know that the epidemic of dysentry in Kamakura which had caused much terror recently and threatened for some time to assume gloomier aspects in that town has been totally stamped out, with the recovery of all the patients of the epidemic, who had totalled 60 and of whom thirty-nine left hospital on Wednesday and the rest the following day.

There are now staying in Kamakura, by the way, about 844 visitors who are spending these hot days in that town. Of this number, about 371 persons are staying in their own or rented villas, 73 in temples, and 404 in hotels or private homes. In view of the happy extermination of the epidemic an increased flow of summer visitors into the famous resort is now expected. It is reported, therefore, that on the fifteenth of next month about 300 students of the Army Preparatory School in Tokyo will arrive in Kamakura to take swimming exercises in the waters on the coast of Zaimokuza, where they will spend two weeks in doing so. H.I.H. Prince Kayo, it is said, will be in the party.

LECTURE AT WAKYO GAKUDO, KANDA

General Booth Tucker, Commander of the Salvation Army of India, who has recently arrived in Japan, will deliver a lecture this evening at the Wakyo Gakudo, Kandabashi.

General Tucker was born in Bengal, India, and he studied at the Cheltenham University, England. Thirty-six years ago, he met General Booth, and immediately entered the service of the Salvation Army. His work in India has shown remarkable results, and the development of the Salvation Army in India is solely due to the untiring noble efforts of General Tucker. The General married a daughter of General Booth, but unfortunately, Mrs. Tucker died some years ago.

STATION PORTER'S CHARGES

The Railway authorities are now contemplating the plan of increasing the charge of the "Red Cap" from two sen a person to five sen. Although the charge was prescribed at two sen each, travelers have been in the habit of giving more to porters, and they have become used to the habit of receiving large sums for their service, and the regulation has been entirely ignored.

To remedy this situation the authorities are considering the plan of increasing the charge to five sen each, and to prohibit "red caps" to receive cash payments. The travellers, when this change in the regulation is made, must purchase the "porter ticket" at the station and give the ticket to the porter, and the payment of cash will be prohibited.

TAX SYSTEM UNDER INVESTIGATION

The Department of Home Affairs is not slow in compiling figures and making other considerations in view of a large scaled revision in the tax system of the nation. In order to decide the plan in a fundamental manner a report was asked of the various revenue offices of the country based on the following questions:

1. Are there any taxes in the respective offices lacking of impartiality or need of cancellation?
2. Are there any means by which a change in the levy may be made in order to increase state revenues?
3. What shortcomings are there to be seen in the Prefectural Tax system?
4. What should be the limit of tax abolishment?
5. What points should be stressed for the sake of the lower classes?

NEWS & NOTES

Rouble has again heavily dropped, i.e., 37.7 sen per one rouble.

Traffic on the Peking-Mukden Railway has again been interrupted, owing to floods.

The Bank of Chosen is establishing another branch in Tsingtau, besides that already opened in Kirin.

The foreign exchange banks in Yokohama notify they will be closed to business on Monday, August 6th, the summer holiday.

The Yokohama Chamber of Commerce completes its removal to the new Memorial Hall on Sunday, occupying three rooms at the west corner.

The trans-Pacific freightage between Calcutta and the Pacific coast of America has been raised all round to $95, against $55 for tea and $50 for gunnies as heretofore.

Instead of attaching a special car to passenger trains the Railway Board despatches special trains from September 1 for prompt transportation of freight at the rates twice those of ordinary loads.

A meeting of the Yokohama Women's Auxiliary of the American Relief Committee will be held at the U.S. Naval Hospital 9 a.m. on Monday. All American women are requested to be present, as material for work will be distributed.

The Second Military Aerodome at Kagamigahara, Gifu prefecture, is nearing completion. Three hangars and several other houses have been built. It is unofficially said that Captain Tokugawa, who is a veteran military aviator and very popular with the Japanese public, will be appointed the Commander of the Second Imperial Aviation corps.

An exhibition respecting current events, especially warfare, will be held at Junisha, Yodobashi, a Tokyo suburb, for a long period from August 10th to November 3rd. The projectors are Mr. Shoji Yamane, Member of Parliament, and others and it is said that among the supporters are the Departments of War, Navy, Communications and Agriculture and Commerce. Visitors will derive much information, as the projectors announce that they will give an accurate portrayal of the development of modern ideas in warfare.

In consequence of the Government's decision to enforce gendarmerie system in Manchuria, Colonel C. Kumabe, hitherto in charge of the metropolitan province of Chosen, has been promoted Maj.-General and appointed Chief of Gendarmerie Corps in Kuantung.

A dispatch from Mukden says that some men of the Kuhara Mining Company started on a business expedition in Mongolia on Sunday. This plan was formulated by the company as early as the beginning of this year. According to the manager of the Kuhara Mining Department in Osaka, last February twenty explorers, divided into five parties, set out for Mongolia, and have now completed their work.

There was great excitement at the French Hatoba, Yokohama, on Monday morning, at about ten o'clock, when a monster turtle, caught off Honmoku early this morning, was brought ashore. The turtle is said to be largest ever caught in Tokyo Bay, being six feet long and weighing nearly half a ton. Two local Chinese tailors purchased the monster for 110 yen, and after painting their names on its back, they took it to Honmoku, where it was allowed to return to the deep. While at the Hatoba the turtle was given a large quantity of Japanese sake by the Chinese, who believe the turtle to be a harbinger of good luck

In consequence of the closing of Russian frontiers till August 15 (inclusive), the R.V.F. str. Penza, leaving Tsuruga on Tuesday afternoon, refused to carry any passengers to Vladivostock, except a Russian Army Captain and three bluejackets of a Russian torpedo-boat submarined off Port Said in May. With 103 passengers the O.S.K. str. Hozan Maru from Tsuruga made Vladivostock on Monday, but they were specially allowed to land, as they had sailed prior to the announcement of the new embargo. Apropos of this, it is understood that Japanese may leave Vladivostock with certificates of the Japanese Consulate-General and go to Russia with certificates of the Russian Embassy in Tokyo besides ordinary passports.

IMPRESSIONS OF JAPAN TO-DAY

(By Admiral Austen M. Knight, Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Asiatic Squadron in "Osaka Asahi.")

I am glad to comply as far as is within my power with the request of the "Asahi" for my impressions of the Japan of to-day compared with the Japan of forty-two years ago at the time of my previous visit here. It will be readily understood that the impressions of nearly half a century ago as registered upon the mind of an eighteen year old boy are necessarily vague and sketchy. It will be understood also that the impressions gathered during the first week of my present visit are necessarily superficial in the extreme.

It must be remembered also that at the time of my first visit, I had very few opportunities to see anything of the real life of Japan itself. As a midshipman, I had no claim to recognition in official circles, and the social life of the people of the country was absolutely closed to foreigners. The result is that such recollections as I may be able to bring back to mind will be connected chiefly with the foreign elements which entered into the life of the cities which I visited. I realize that this will greatly reduce their interest for readers of the "Asahi," but I give them for what they may be worth.

The first, and by far the most important, change that strikes me is the change in the attitude of Japan toward the world at large, a change which shows in every aspect of life which I see about me—social, commercial ,and political. The Japan which I knew in 1874-75 was a great nation and a wonderfully interesting nation, but it was a nation living in the main for itself alone, self centered and self-satisfied. It had interests outside of itself, but these were all of secondary importance. It was essentially an inward-looking nation, friendly, but indifferent, to the rest of the world.

The Japan of to-day, I find to be more alertly alive to world affairs than almost any other nation with which I am acquainted. It has become an outward-looking nation with a horizon which takes in every part of the world and finds an interest in every phase of world activities. I doubt if any nation has ever undergone so great a change in so short a time. The effects of this are seen in whatever direction one may look. They are seen very conspicuously in the splendid buildings of Yokohama and Tokyo, which no doubt have their counterpart in other cities, and in the modern systems of paving, lighting and draining the broad and handsome streets. These, however, are only the outward and visible signs of a spirit of progress which is manifested no less conspicuously in the whole organization of the nation and the life of the people.

As I stand on my flagship in this spacious harbour, I find myself surrounded by splendid steamships, three-fourths of which carry at their peaks the flag of Japan, now known in every port of the navigable globe. Near the spot where the Brooklyn lies, the Kearsarge lay for two months in the spring of 1874 exposed to winds and seas, often uncomfortable and frequently dangerous. Now to seaward of the Brooklyn there stretches a magnificent breakwater providing a harbour within which a hundred ships like the Kearsarge might find safe and sheltered anchorage.

As I look toward the city, I see a series of splendid docks at which great steamships carrying the flag of Japan are loading with cargoes for every part of the world.

Within plain sight are the extensive works of a great shipbuilding establishment created as if by magic within a few months.

Nothing is familiar about the harbour, except the Bund which I find to be little changed and where I recognize among other familiar landmarks the Grand Hotel which in the old days was the rendezvous for officers of the United States Navy and the home of the families of many of these officers.

Another familiar feature of the landscape is the "Bluff," which, however, becomes less familiar on nearer approach. Apparently it is still the residential district of the foreign settlement, but this settlement has increased wonderfully in extent and in the evidences of wealth which are manifest in its beautiful homes and yards and gardens. To speak of gardens brings to mind one of the disappointments connected with the present as compared with the past. If my recollection is accurate, that part of the city below the "Bluff" and stretching away from the Bund was in the old days more open than at present and its houses as a rule surrounded by attractive grounds. Apparently the demands of business have led to filling up these spaces which I recall as one of the pleasantest features about the city. A more acceptable change has come with the filling in of the large area of marshy land which I remember as existing still farther inland to the westward.

In speaking of the changes on the "Bluff," I should not neglect to mention the disappearance of the opportunities for sport which I remember as having enjoyed in shooting over the extensive fields beyond the residential section, where pheasant and hare were plentiful and foxes occasionally to be found. This was only one of the many sports easy of enjoyment in the old days, but I suspect beyond reach in the neighbourhood of the city at the present time. Among these sports the paper-chase was one of the most popular among Americans and English. The race course is in the same location as formerly, but I doubt if horse-racing has anything like the popularity that it had forty years ago, when the races were looked forward to by the whole society of Yokohama and Tokyo as the great social event of the year.

It is my impression that the Emperor at times honored the race meet by his presence and delivered the prizes, although he certainly was not present at the only meet which I ever had the good fortune to attend. The horses for the races were mainly imported from North China, as were also those used by the British Polo Players. For other purposes than racing and Polo, Australian horses were much used being considerably larger and more powerful and better suited for pleasure riding and for use in carriages and drays. I recall many pleasant hours spent on horseback on the shady roads leading, as I remember, to the south and west from the city. I recall especially one rather dangerous fall that I had in coming down the steep road from the "Bluff."

I remember the Bund very much as I find it to-day, except that upon my second visit to Yokohama in the summer of 1875, a great part of the sea-wall had been washed away by the waves in a typhoon and the Bund was for the time more like a swamp than a street. The streets in the foreign settlement were in the main broad and well paved. At night they were lighted partly by oil and partly by gas, the gas works having been rather recently established. There was of course no electricity in the Japan at that time nor was it in general use for lighting and power in any other part of the world. Indeed, I feel like saying as I run through these details of changes that the changes in physical features of Yokohama and Tokyo have not been very different from those in other parts of the world. Both of these cities have increased greatly in size, in beauty and in comforts and conveniences and living, but in this respect they differ little from other cities.

The foreign part of Yokohama in 1874 was not very different from cities with which I was familiar in the United States. Nor is it very different from those cities to-day.

So far as the Japanese parts of Yokohama and Tokyo are concerned, they seem to me to have changed but very little and the life that one sees in moving about the streets has most of the interest and attraction of the old days. It is a pleasure to find this to be the case for I had often heard it said that Japan was becoming Europeanized and Americanized, and I was prepared to find that much of the charm which I associated with the costumes and the customs of the country had given place to the far less attractive costumes and customs of other lands. In the few excursions that I have had the opportunity to make into the country districts since my arrival, and in moving about the streets of the cities, I have found the same simplicity and charm which I remember as so attractive from the early days.

Communication was not good either between different parts of Japan or with ports of other countries. Several steamship lines ran between ports of Japan and those of Europe and America, but their trips were made at long intervals and the arrival of a mail steamer was regarded as a great event. The principal steamship lines were the P & O. the French Line, and the Pacific Mail. A new line called the Occidental & Oriental was put shortly after my departure from Yokohama to San Francisco on the "Belgic" of this line. The other steamers of this line were the "Oceania" and the "Celtic," all of them having formerly belonged to the White Star Line crossing the Atlantic. About this time the Pacific Mail added to its fleet two splendid steamers, the "City of Tokyo" and the "City of Peking." These were counted at that time as rather wonderful ships but they seem very small to-day. All of these lines were owned by foreign companies.

Only two Japanese lines existed at this time, so far as I remember. And these were engaged in the coasting trade exclusively. One of these was Mitsubishi, but I do not remember the name of the other. One of the most striking contrasts produced by the forty years which have elapsed is presented by the spectacle to-day of great steamship lines flying the Japanese flag and trading to all parts of the world.

There was a railroad in the early days between Yokohama and Tokyo. It is needless to point out the contrast between this short single track road of 20 miles and the splendid communication system of modern railroad existing to-day.

Not only were the steamship lines of the early days owned and controlled by foreigners but the same was true of the great business houses which carried on the business of the country with China, Europe and America. The great firms of Walsh Hall & Co., Jardine Matheson & Co., and others monopolized the wholesale business of the East, which is now in a great measure controlled by Japanese merchants. The firms which I have named, while some of them are still in existence, have been succeeded to a great extent by those Japanese firms, the names of which are familiar to you. This is one of the most important indication of the complete change which forty years has brought about in the commercial life of Japan.

In the old days the money in current use was silver and copper, the Mexican dollar being the unit. As it was impossible to carry about large sums of this currency, the chit system was universal, I. O. U.'s being given at stores, clubs and elsewhere, and the accounts settled at the end of the month.

The social life of the foreign community was exceedingly pleasant, residents of different nationalities mingling with each other with great cordiality. Relation with the Japanese officials were pleasant, but were confined to matters of business and did not extend into the home.

In one respect, and only one, Japan remains unchanged. This is in the marvelous beauty of its scenery. My earliest recollection is of Fuji-yama as I saw it on a beautiful April morning as the Kearsarge approached Yokohama from the Southward. A slight mist hung about the land and above this the snow-clad summit of Fuji appeared as if floating in the air. I have seen the mountain many times since but never when it seemed so beautiful.

The development of the educational system of this country has been very remarkable, and it is a pleasure to recall the fact that America has had a share in the development of your schools and universities.

To speak of the wonderful development of your Army and Navy would be to speak of something which speaks for itself, and to which no word of admiration from me could add anything of value. In referring to the Navy I am reminded of a very dear friend who was associated with the days of which I am speaking. I refer to a Japanese student, Matsumura, who in 1869 came to the Naval Academy at Annapolis in America as a midshipman, and joined the class of which I was a member. During the four years of his association with his American class mates, he endeared himself to them by his kindness and courtesy and won their admiration by his quickness of intellect and his very conspicuous practical ability. Shortly after my arrival in Yokohama in the spring of 1874, I met him and passed many pleasant hours in talking over old times. At this time he was in command of an ironclad which the Japanese Government had purchased from the United States. At a later date Matsumura became Superintendent of the Japanese Naval Academy and I am sure that if his health had not failed he would have played a great part in the naval history of his period.

It is a great pleasure to return to Japan after so many years and to find myself greeted with the cordiality not only by the Government of Japan but by the people. On all sides I find evidence of friendliness and I already feel assured that our visit here will add a little to the friendship which has long existed and I am sure will continue to the United States.

FENG KUO-CHANG, CHINA'S VICE-PRESIDENT

Feng Kuo-chang, the Chinese Vice-President, it was reported here Monday left his residence in Nanking on Tuesday morning at 1.30 o'clock, accompanied by his first wife and is understood to have arrived in Peking about noon Monday. On his way to the capital, the Vice-President was escorted by about two thousand soldiers who rode in the cars ahead and behind that of Mr. Feng.

With the arrival of the Vice-President in Peking, the interest in the politics of China will again be centered on the capital. Mr. Feng is expected to make his last and hopeless, attempt to persuade Mr. Li Yuan-hung to change his mind and resume the Presidency. It is regarded here as beyond the pale of possibility to see Mr. Li once more in the shaky Presidential chair, and Mr. Feng is certain to be obliged to consent to assume the Presidency ad interim.

On the other hand, information reaching here indicates that China's early entry into the war is now almost assured. Premier Tuan is reported to be hurrying on with war measures, and has already decided upon the steps to be taken after the declaration of war against Germany in disposing of the Germans resident in China, and the German vessels interned in various ports. At the same time the Premier has also sounded the sentiment of the four Powers from whom he will soon formally try to obtain a large loan of from one to two hundred million yen. Though it is usually called "the Four Powers Loan," the bulk of this great loan will very likely be taken up by Japan for the obvious reason that the other members to this undertaking have too much of their own affairs on hand just now to make a loan to China. And judging from the opinion prevailing among high governmental officials here, the Japanese Government is ready to take up the discussion of the loan with the Chinese Government as soon as Mr. Feng assumes the Presidency. In discussing this loan question, one of the most important conditions Japan may demand will be, it was learned yesterday, to get the firm assurance of the Peking Government that the loan, or even part of it, will not be used in military subjugation of the Southerners who are opposed to the Tuan Government on political grounds.

NEW CINEMA RULES STRIKE HARD

The doors of the cinema halls were opened Wednesday under the newly framed regulations by the Tokyo Metropolitan Police. The noisy calls of the criers sitting cross-legged, at the passers by, telling them of the thrills of the respective films in their halls were no more to be heard, and to the patrons of the Asakusa shows before the passing of the new regulations, the district struck them as if they had gone to a new place. The three divisions were made according to the regulations and the result on Wednesday was that although the male seats were occupied to 90 per cent. of the total capacity, the female and the married couple seats were only occupied at about one per cent. of the total accommodation. Many a youngster was turned down on account of the ticket seller not recognizing that he or she was within the age limit. What the outcome of the new scheme will be, remains to be seen, but the action of the police was an awkward stunt and void of business sense.

PETITION AGAINST U.S. BAN ON IRON EXPORT

The industries in Japan which need iron as material began to appeal to their Government for assistance in their struggle to keep their heads above the water. On Friday several representatives of the Osaka Chamber of Commerce called on Mr. Shidehara, Vice-Minister for Foreign Affairs, and presented to him a petition with regard to the American Government's prohibition of the exportation of iron from the United States. The petition, copies of which were also presented to the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture and Commerce, sets forth how the American prohibition of the exportation of iron deals a serious blow on ship-building, iron manufacturing, and other industries of Japan. Since the importation of iron from England was stopped Japan has been, continues the petition, looking to America for the supply. Cut off from this supply from America, ship-building, iron manufacturing, and other industries of the country will be forced into a desperate situation. Furthermore as Japan's deficiency in turning out vessels is certain to prove detrimental to the commerce and trade among the Allies, the Imperial Government is requested, the petitioners urge, to cause the United States Government to make a thorough study of the case with a view to obtain special exemption for the iron on which a contract has already been concluded and to unfasten the prohibitory grip as much as possible on the future exportation.

Inquiry in this connection at the Bureau of Commercial Affairs of the Foreign Office yesterday brought to light that negotiations are in progress between Ambassador Sato and the Washington Government since some time before the prohibition of the exportation of various kinds of commodities became effective on July 15, and the Japanese Ambassador is endeavouring to obtain special exemption for the iron on which contracts of purchase had been concluded between the Japanese and the Americans. Officials of the Bureau said that the negotiations will take some time more, expressing hope that a satisfactory settlement would be reached. According to the investigation made by the Japanese firms in New York engaged in purchasing iron in America, there is about 400,000 tons of iron on which contracts of purchase had been signed previous to the prohibitory act coming into force on July 15.

ALLIES REAFFIRM DETERMINATION

It was announced here Wednesday that the Allies' Military Conference at Paris unanimously adopted at its last day's session on July 26, a resolution embodying the Allies' determination to stick to their previous resolutions to carry on the war with redoubled vigor to a finish. The Paris conference was held on the 25th and 26th of last month primarily for the purpose of discussing the military operations to be applied to the Balkans, but the representatives of the Allies took this occasion to let the world know again that the Allies are as firmly determined to win the war as ever. To discuss ways and means of enforcing the resolution adopted by the latest conference at Paris, another conference will shortly be held in London, in which many ministers of state of the Allies will participate. Japan will be represented in the coming London Conference probably by Ambassador Viscount Chinda.

The Allies' resolution adopted by the Paris Conference is as follows:

"The Allied countries have decided to strengthen the closer relationship of alliance among themselves to protect the rights and interests of all nations, especially of those in the Balkans, and also have decided not to lay down their arms until they will have succeeded in the persuance of their fundamental object, to make impossible the recurrence of the unlawful and unjust aggrandizement, for which the imperialism of the Central Empires must be held responsible."

NATIONAL CONVENTION FOR RUSSIA

To call the Russian people bravely to face the impending crisis, to formulate proper measures to cope with the disorderly conditions prevailing in the interior as well as at the front, to unite the whole country to protect the revolution, and to organize a coalition Cabinet to be founded on all classes of the land, the Russian Provisional Government proposes to hold an urgent national convention on the 18th of July, in Russian calendar, in Moscow, says a report received here Tuesday from Moscow.

This great convention is to be participated in by members of the present Cabinet, members of the Lower House, representatives of the soldiers and workmen of all the cities, of the Federated Associations of Agrarians, of the local assemblies, of the credit associations, of the business guilds and of the Imperial Universities. The proposal is reported to be being very favourably received in Moscow and the press there is enthusiastically supporting the convokation of the convention.

Later advice received here says that the meeting of the urgent national Convention has been postponed to the 5th or 6th of August on account of the impossibility of the delegates arriving in Moscow before the scheduled date and also of the necessity to re-organize the Cabinet previous to holding the convention.

QUESTION OF JAPAN'S POLICY TOWARDS CHINA

Vernacular papers of July 28 gave prominence to the alleged formulation of Japan's policy towards China which is reported to have been decided at the Cabinet's regular meeting on Friday. Judged from what could be gathered, however, the press report was not quite accurate and in authoritative circles it was pointed out that the China policy of Japan is not a thing to be formulated afresh at this time, the fundamental policy of the Terauchi Government towards the neighbouring republic being too well known both in the country and abroad.

The Cabinet meeting on Friday is understood to have discussed various phases concerning China. But what is more important was the discussion of the China question at the 9th meeting of the Advisory Board on Foreign Affairs which was held in the afternoon of the same day.

According to a certain person in a position to be able to learn the nature of discussion at the conclave of the foreign affairs board, a decision was reached at the meeting of July 29, to put into a more active execution the policy of the present Government toward China. To assist China in properly restoring order and stability and to cement the closer relationship between her and this country, strictly refraining from meddling in her internal politics, is the main principle of Japan's policy.

"A strong and orderly China must be brought about to the good for both China herself and Japan," this remark made by one member at the meeting is said to have swayed the day.

CITY OFFICE TO HELP EMPLOYEES

In view of the increasing difficulty of living owing to the high cost of commodities which is all the more keenly felt by the small-salaried people in general in the city and especially as a result of having discovered a very striking fact that the employes of the city office and all the other local offices under the control of the city office who are receiving the monthly salaries under forty five yen are in a worse condition than are generally expected when the investigations were recently actually made the city authorities of Tokyo have come at last to consider to give some allowances to the petty officials of such offices to relieve this unfortunate condition of theirs. The city authorities have come to do so, especially prompted by the worthy and timely examples set by the city authorities of Kyoto who have recently carried out the magnificent plan, and also by the Emperor himself who gave a sum of money to the Imperial Household Department to be distributed among the petty officials in the employ of the Department in order to save them from the privations of poverty caused by the high cost of living, and again when they came to know that the city authorities of Osaka are also contemplating a similar plan. The plan of relief as now projected by the authorities of Tokyo will be submitted to the consideration of the meeting of the city councillors next month and then will be decided to finally take its definite form. But anyhow it is learned that those who will come to enjoy the benefit from this new plan, in the employ of the municipal official establishments will be such as the low-salaried officials and commissioners in the employ of the city office and ward offices, and "boys," servants, elementary school teachers, tram conductors, tram motormen, etc.

GERMAN PRISONERS AT NARASHINO CAMP

The Tokyo-fu office has recently despatched Mr. Akiho, Director of the Tokyo School for Apprentice and Mr. Takizawa, Director of the Aoyama Normal School to the Detention camps of the German soldiers at Narashino to study the life and condition of the war prisoners. The two investigators submitted their report to the Tokyo-fu office which has considered that the Japanese public has many things to learn from the German war prisoners, and decided to print the report and distribute it to all schools in the Tokyo-fu.

At Narashino there are at present, fourteen German officers and 474 soldiers and every one of them is not spending their days idly, and what surprised the Tokyo-fu investigators was their eagerness in utilizing their time not only for improving their own faculties, but also for economizing their expenditures. Many of the war prisoners are keeping chickens, and cultivating vegetables, while the most of them are studying arithmetics, languages, short hand, telegraphy and mechanical science, with their comrades as instructors. Among the officers there are a few who are seriously studying the Japanese language and history of Japan. For their own amusement they constructed a billiard table with an old bicycle tire and a few boards, and another made a violin out of a beer case. They are making their own bread and soap, and they do their own cooking. Their economy in cooking is most significant.

The report includes all the details of their daily life, and the Tokyo-fu authorities believe that such an economy and eagerness to learn, should be copied by the Japanese public, and will shortly distribute the copies of the report to all schools in the district.

VIOLATION OF FACTORY LAW AT HONJO WARD

The Metropolitan Police was surprised to find that a majority of the factories in Tokyo are not conforming to the factory regulation. on July 25 the Police of Honjo started to investigate how the factories in the ward are following the factory regulation which came into force since last October. To the great surprise of the police, it was found that out of 130 factories visited and inspected by the police, 100 were found to be violating the law, and only thirty were following the regulation.

Among the factories which were violating the regulation, there were 57 which did not keep the complete list of employees, 52 which did not follow the regulation regarding the relief and compensation for the sick and injured workmen, 19 which handled the savings of the workmen without receiving the sanction of the authorities, and 15 which violated the law regarding the treatment of the minor employees.

Surprised at the result of one day's investigation in one part of the city, the Metropolitan police will start a thorough investigation as to the enforcement of the factory law.

THE EUROPEAN WAR

ON THE FRENCH FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 24 (Delayed in transmission).—The French vigorously counterattacked the enemy who, since the hard fighting on July 22, occupied the first line of trenches on the casemates and California plateau except a small work which both sides abandoned. The French overthrew the enemy on the casements and even advanced their line at several points. German counterattacks were wholly unsuccessful.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 25.—There were violent bombardments on the nights of 23rd and 24th in the region northwest of Brayeenlaonkois. Two enemy attempts to reach the French lines were repulsed. The enemy attack between Cerny and Allies was resultless.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 25.—Bombardment on the French positions in the Hurtebise and Craonne regions continues most violently, especially on the California plateau. There was no infantry activity. A German attack northwest of Mont Cornillet was completely repulsed. The French batteries were most active against the organisations in the Moronvillers region.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 25.—Official report issued by French headquarters, describing a fresh attack on Chemin des Dames on July 22, says that the enemy have given battle on a large scale practically every second day since April 20 when the French captured the position. The most powerful attack since July 3 opened with an amazingly violent bombardment from tremendous accumulations of units which lasted one hour over a front of ten miles. An infantry attack which covered two miles was directed against the casemates on the California plateau. The attempt against the casemates failed but troops stormed and gained a foothold on a line of the California plateau after a tremendous struggle. The fighting was still progressing in the evening.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 25.—The Crown Prince has suffered another great defeat at the hands of the French, probably the greatest that his regions have sustained since they began their desperate efforts to capture the plateaux west of Craonne.

On Sunday for the ninth or tenth time this month the Germans threw great forces against these coveted positions. After costly sacrifices they were able to penetrate the first French lines but yesterday by a brilliant counterattack the French drove them from both the California and Casemates plateaux and even advanced their own line at several points.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 26.—The Germans resumed their attacks obstinately on Wednesday evening on a front of three kilometres, from the region in the east of Hurtbise to the region in the south of Labovelle. The enemy, although it threw large forces into action, was only able to penetrate, after incredible efforts and highest losses, into some elements of French first line. South of Ailles, French fire smashed repeated assaults at Hurtbise farm and farther south.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 27.—The tremendousness of the German fruitless and costliest efforts to capture the heights of Aisne, which the French regained has now fully been realised. It transpires that two German armies under von Boehms and von Bulows comprising eight divisions, of which three Prussian, three Westphalian, one Bavarian and one Baden approximately one hundred thousand men in number, participated in the general assault from Cerny to as far as the California plateau. The German losses were heaviest and the celebrated twentieth Brandenburg regiment almost disappeared. The French losses were comparatively light.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 27.—A despatch from Paris dated July 26 says that a French semi-official report shows that there was a smashing attack of the best French style on July 24 in which the French regained in one hour the dominating positions on the Craonne plateau which the enemy took four days to conquer at the cost of sanguinary losses. The German higher command, following its customary method, does not mention this defeat. On the contrary, it is actually stated in yesterday's communique that the French attack on the Craonne plateau has failed and comment is needless.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 27.—A German official report says that there was an artillery battle on the coast of Lys. We stormed a French position on a front of 1800 metres to the depth of four hundred metres southward of Ailles. We took 1150 prisoners.

Our artillery partly closed up a breach of the Russians and caused our line to advance southward of Smorgon. We compelled the Russians to retreat and regained almost the whole of our former position. We captured Buczaco, Thumacz, Ottynia and Delaton. The Russians on the Carpathian front are retreating in the direction of Czernowitz.

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 27.—"Le Matin" writes: "The Berlin communique may well boast that the thirteenth German regiment, in spite of our counterattack on Chemin des Dames, has not abandoned even an inch of ground and that the fifty-fifth German regiment composed of contingents from Westphalia and Lippe has repulsed us. Nevertheless the slight withdrawal we were obliged to make is to-day completely repaired and we have retaken our former positions on a line of heights for which the German headquarters and in particular the Crown Prince, who renews his sanguinary experiences of the Verdun battle, have sacrificed a number of entire regiments in vain."

KOKUSAI-HAVAS

Paris, July 27.—The correspondent of the Havas News Agency at the French front telegraphed on July 22 as follows: "Germans' furious attacks have been shattered and their progress checked. Now we are counterattacking. The casemates on the Craonne plateau are now a veritable volcanic crater. No words could describe either the horror or the grandeur of this spectacle. Five hundred German guns, fired as fast as could be served, have concentrated their fire upon this front of less than three kilometers in the effort to prevent our troops from maintaining their positions.

"Barbed wire has disappeared, broken into fragments or buried eight yards underground. Defences exist no longer. Fighting is going on in the midst of shells and grenades with bayonets and riflebutts. The struggle continues but Germans are unable to withstand the fury which inspires our magnificent soldiers. Germans retreat or are killed where they make a stand. At the close of the day, all of our positions with the exception of a few meters of trench section on our right have been regained. Germans have sustained cruel losses and their dead are strewn in compact heaps on the battlefield."

The "Times" correspondent refers to the conduct of the French troops as follows:

"Once more they have earned imperishable gratitude of all the Allies. This offensive against the Craonne plateau, judging from the persistence and fury of the attacks and the number and quality of the troops engaged, is a strategical operation to the success of which the Crown Prince and his advisers attach enormous importance. The Craonne plateau has become one of the most famous battlefields of the war."

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 28.—Fighting, accompanied by an intense bombardment on the Hurtebise plateau south of Ailles, continued all day long. The enemy made no progress at all.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 28.—A French communique issued this afternoon says that the Germans employed a full division supported by a fresh division in their attack of July 25 from the region east Hurtebise to south Labovell. The smallness of results emphasises the severity of the defeat. After an intense bombardment, the Germans made five successive attacks on the mountainous region southwest of Moronvillers but failed under our fire.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 29.—The French afternoon communiqué says: "A violent enemy attack west of Hurtebise on a front of six hundred metres collapsed. Subsequently, our infantry attacked the enemy positions between Hurtebise and the district south of Laboiselle, achieving progress at all points, especially in the monument district. Following an intense bombardment, the enemy attempted to recapture the trenches between Avocourt and Hill 304, but the attack failed with heavy losses.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 29.—Despite the fighting in Champagne where the Germans employed five divisions in fruitless attacks

Digitized by INTERNET ARCHIVE
Original from UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

in the past week, interest remains to be centred in Flanders. French correspondents in the western front, describing the cannonade of the Germans probing everywhere from the sea to south of Arras, say that it means raids of gun fire in vain attempt to divine the British plans. It is the enemy's dread of the British attack that actuates his desperate blows in Champagne. French experts say that the enemy, knowing he will shortly be gripped by the throat, is trying to recover important positions in Champagne in order to protect his flank. These experts anticipate that the British offensive will not materialise for some time.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 29.—Reuter's correspondent at the British Headquarters, in his despatch under date of July 29, says: During this week of intense heat, there have been incessant reconnaisance work, much sharp local fighting and tremendous artillerying northward of Armentiers and near Lean, causing among the Huns great anxiety and heavy casualties. The wind was generally favourable to use gas and we profited thereby to the fullest extent.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 30.—Reuter's correspondent with the French headquarters, summarising the events on the western front since the Somme battle in July, 1916, shows that the Anglo-French have taken one hundred and seventy-thousand prisoners of whom thirty five thousand are officers. They have captured nine hundred and forty eight guns, seven hundred and eighty trenchmortars and twenty five hundred machineguns. They have forced the enemy to abandon one hundred miles of the front. The relative superiority of the Anglo-French armies has steadily increased. The recent combats show that the French morale is higher and their fighting spirit is keener than ever.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London via New York, July 29.—An official report says that the British, in conjunction with the French, attacked the enemy on a wide front northward of the Lye river early this morning, and captured the first objectives, taking numerous prisoners. A satisfactory progress is reported.

ON THE ITALIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 24.—The Italian communication of July 23 reports that between Chiesa and Astico a great activity of reconnaissance patrols led to encounters, resulting in our favor. The communication further states;

"In the Avisio valley our artillery set fire to the enemy battery on Mount Camorciao and with well-directed barrage stopped the salvage operations.

"In Carnia, large enemy parties which had come within the range of our machine-gun fire on Mount Granuda on the upper Dogna and on Mount Robon on the upper Subach were promptly put to flight.

"Armed and working parties successfully shelled and dispersed the enemy in the region between Lusnttz and Malbaghetto and in the Fella valley.

"At various points on the Julian front, the enemy artillery provoked energetic activity against our battery. Last night, notwithstanding the difficult atmospheric conditions and the enemy's defence, our aeroplanes effectively bombed the enemy batteries on Mount Hermada and railroad works on the Opcina-Gabrovinea line."

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 24.—The Italian communique issued on July 24 says: Yesterday the enemy showed increased activity on Trentino front. Hostile parties disturbed our parties near Tierno. They also attempted to surround one of our advanced posts and approached the positions in Valzanca, St. Pellegrino Valley and Aberbacher region. The enemy artillery shelled frequently on various points of our line. In the valleys of Valtellina, Camonica and Giudicarie our infantry patrols completely repulsed the enemy everywhere. In Rembianco, we succeeded in surprising an enemy detachment and driving them off with machine-gun fire, as afterwards ascertained. On Carnia front, the artillery engaged in disturbing some working parties of the enemy. Some patrol encounters took place on heights east of Gorizia and the artillery fire was unusually violent in Mrzli and Vodil areas. Two of our bombing planes, accompanied by a chasing plane, carried out a bombing raid on hutments and railway works at San Daniele on the Carso. The operation was successfully carried out, and all the machines returned safely.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 25.—An Italian communique issued on July 25 says that on the Trentino front the enemy made surprise attacks on our advanced posts near Lake Leppio in the Possi region, east of Lake Garda and in the Cosmagnon (Passubio) area; but all were promptly repulsed.

Our artillery shelled a redoubt in the Lares region (Adamello) and obtained a direct hit on the Austrian Headquarters on the Senzza plateau.

We dispersed the enemy's working and armed parties in the Astico and Galmarara valleys and caused an outbreak of fire in one of the enemy's ammunition dumps on Col Bricon.

On the Julian front artillery firing on both sides took place being more frequent and intense in the Plezzio basin where enemy hutments were destroyed on the Carso and east of Jamiano.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 26.—The Italian communique of July 26 says: During the night of the 25th isolated enemy attack southwest of Oastagnoizza was broken by our fire.

Last night one of our airships made a surprise visit on St. Lucia, dropping a ton of high explosives on the railway works and doing a considerable damage.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 27.—The Italian communication of July 27 says that at Malgva Zurez (east of the Lake Garda) as well as in Cordevole on the upper Boite valleys, our patrols successfully engaged in minor attacks. Attempts on the part of the enemy detachments at the head of the Dogna valley on the Mount Robon and at Dosso Poiti were repulsed by our advanced posts. Artillery duel which was not very active on the Trentino front continued violently yesterday on certain points on the Julian front, especially between Dosso Poiti and Castagnavizza.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 28.—The artillery fight is going on daily, and it was very brisk yesterday between Zugnatorta and Vallarsa in the upper Dogna valley and on Mount Rombon and Dossofaiti, says the Italian communique of July 28. Infantry activity was confined to patrol skirmishes.

One of our airships effectively bombarded the railway between St. Lucia and Bazza, Dimodrea and Pooina military works, and caused much damage.

Large flight chasers this morning dropped nearly three tons of high explosives on electric power station at Idria and hutments in the Chiapovano valley.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 29.—The Italian communique issued in the night of July 29 says: The enemy detachments descended from Selle pass in the Santo Pellegrino valley on our lines and being supported by the artillery, attacked our positions with machine-gun and rifle fire. They, however, were promptly and effectively dispersed by our machine guns.

During yesterday there was increased activity of the artillery between the valleys of Camonica and Astico.

An air squadron, escorted by chasers, again raided a military establishment at Idria. Notwithstanding the heavy fire from the enemy anti-aircraft guns our machines dropped four tons of high explosive. On their return journey, the chasers brilliantly engaged with a large number of enemy machines, which had risen. Having brought down two of them, ours returned safely to their base. The battleplanes also succeeded in reaching the base in safety.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Rome, July 30.—An Italian communique issued on July 30 says: On Trentino front, a minor fighting in our advantage is proceeding in Upper Valfulva where we have taken prisoners in Loppi depression on Mount Piana. The artillerying has been accentuated on the Lagarina valley. On Julian front, a considerable air activity was seen, and an enemy machine was brought down in the east of Tolmino.

ON THE RUSSIAN FRONT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 24.—A Russian official report says:

We attacked in the direction of Vilna, penetrating a depth of two miles, in some places. In the neighbourhood of Prevo, we captured more than one thousand prisoners. The instability and moral weakness of some of our detachments are jeopardizing the development of further success. Great numbers of our officers fought gallantly fulfilling their duties. The enemy continues offensive between Sereth and Strypa. We have occupied four villages. An intense enemy artillery fire is going on southward of Pefezoreca Velka.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 24.—Reuter learns that the Germans have occupied Tarnopol.

KOKUSAI-WESTNIK

Petrograd, July 24.—The Petrograd women's battalion participated in a counter-attack on Smorgon-Krevo front and took one hundred prisoners including two officers. Mrs. Botshkareva, the chief of the battalion was wounded.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Jassy via London, July 25.—A Rumanian official report says: We took the offensive in Southern Carpathians and occupied villages of Meresci and Villocsany, taking prisoners one hundred officers and men. We also captured nineteen guns including heavy calibre guns. We broke into a strongly organised line of the enemy along a wide front.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 26.—A Russian official report says; on July 24 and 25 the Rumanians captured over one thousand prisoners, thirtythree guns, ten minethrowers and a large amount of other materials. On the Rumanian front the Russians also captured one thousand prisoners, and twentyfour guns.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 27.—The "Morning Post" correspondent at Petrograd telegraphs that General Korniloff has promptly acted on the resolutions of the Soldiers' Committee that execution is the only cure for military traitors, with the result that the whole of the Eleventh Division at the front was blown to pieces by its own artillery. This army was lavishly equipped with aeroplanes, aviators and British armoured cars and its artillery was posted ideally, yet the infantry shot its own gunners in order to get horses as they retreated.

As the result of the artillery captured, there was no hope of saving the eighth army and it was doubtful whether the eighth army could escape. At that critical moment a disgraceful debacle was stopped by the gallantry of the British cars commanded by Locker Lampson, which remained to fight the advancing Germans, absolutely unsupported.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 28.—A Russian official report says that eastward of Tarnopol, we have retired under the pressure of the enemy to the Gnieziczno and Gneizna rivers. A superior enemy force has penetrated our positions northeastward and southward of Trembowla, and forced our retirement. In the Trembowla region we have begun activity eastward of Sereth. Certain of our units still continue voluntary retirements while others are devotedly fulfilling their duties. Our retirement between the Sereth and the Dniester and between the Dniester and Carpathian continues.

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

Petrograd via New York, July 28.—General Poloubeff, the Military Governor of Petrograd, has resigned. Mr. Kerensky, the Premier, has recently severely attacked the Military Governor for his failure to stop the rioting in the capital. General Erdelli, the commander of the eleventh army, has been appointed Military Governor of Petrograd.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Petrograd via London, July 29.—The Provisional Government has again imposed the press censorship in regard to military and naval information.

TRUTH COMING OUT IN GERMANY

KOKUSAI DIRECT SERVICE

London, July 29.—A reference was made by Haase, a German socialist, in the course of his speech in the Reichstag last week, to a meeting which took place on July 5, 1914, as requiring an explanation before the origin of war could be understood. The "Times" is authoritatively informed that the reference is related to the meeting at Potsdam which was attended by the Kaiser, Bethmann-Hollweg, Tirpitz, Falkenhayn, Stumm, Archduke Frederick, Berchtold, Tisza and General Hoetzendorf, and which decided the points of the Austrian ultimatum despatched to Serbia eighteen days later, and also agreed to accept the consequences of a war with Russia. The Kaiser afterwards went to Norway for the purpose of throwing dust into the eyes of the French and Russian Governments. Three weeks later, when it became known that Great Britain would not remain neutral, Bethmann-Hollweg wished to withdraw, but it was too late. The subject was more explicably raised in a secret session of the Budget Committee of the Reichstag eight weeks ago when a Minister did not deny the facts though he refused to make any statements thereon. This fact caused a sensation which was possibly one of the factors underlying the recent political crisis in Germany.

DUPLICITY OF WOLFE'S BUREAU

Amsterlam via London, July 28.—The "Vorwaerts" has made violent attacks on the Wolfe's new bureau on the ground that it gives totally different versions of statements about the Reichstag for foreigners and Germans respectively. The paper further accused the bureau for destroying the Reichstag peace resolution also the speech by Mr. Lloyd George at Glasgow, and says that in consequence Germany appears treacherous and urges the Michaelis Cabinet to act on this matter.

GERMAN WOMEN ALSO FIGHTING

Petrograd via New York, July 30.—A Russian women's battalion, after participating in fighting near Smorgon on July 25th in which they were badly cut up, took many German prisoners. Among the German prisoners were several women. This is the first proof that German women are also fighting on the Russian front.

A GERMAN SUBMARINE REPORT

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 25.—A Berlin official report says: The British submarine, C 34 was sunk by an enemy submarine. One stoker who survived was taken prisoner.

KOKUSAI-REUTER

Paris, July 29.—The Russian communiqué issued on July 27 says: "Owing to an enlarged breach made in the northern part of the enemy front, we seized the whole old position on a width of thirty kilometres and to a depth of fifteen kilometres. We then took prisoner two hundred and forty five men while two howitzers, nine guns and a quantity of munitions were also captured."

TRIES TO SECURE REVOLUTION IN RUMANIA

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 30.—Reuter's News Agency learns authoritatively that Germany has made a really big effort to secure a revolution in Rumania. The methods are somewhat similar to those employed in Russia, including an immense propaganda among the army which was urged to follow Russia's example. All efforts were unavailing. Moreover, during the last week not fewer than fifty Germans in Russian uniforms were arrested, tried and shot by the Rumanian authorities.

GERMAN REPORT ON BOTH FRONTS

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 25.—A German official communique says that artillery duel in Flanders is going on for all day and night long with an unprecedented intensity. The enemy's thrusts are increasing. The French repeated attacks unsuccessfully in Chemin des Dames. We repulsed 21 attacks in the past few days. We penetrated Courieres wood, and inflicted heavy losses in bitter fights with results in our favour.

On the whole east front from the Baltic to the Black Sea, the Russians twice vainly attacked on a wide front near Jacobstadt. Six Russian divisions attacked five times southwest of Dvinsk, and in tough, hand-to-hand fighting, the Russians withdrew with terrible losses. The renewed Russian attacks failed on a wide front of Krevo which we again hold. Eight Russian divisions attacked us south of Smorgan but remnants returned.

The strategical effect of our operation in east Galicia is becoming powerful. The enemy is retreating from the northern Carpathian front. We are pressing forward on a front of 250 kilometers from the Sereth to the wooded Carpathians. We forced a crossing on the Sereth south of Tarnopol, repulsed desperate Russian mass-attacks near Trembowla. We advanced beyond Podhajce, Halicz and Bystrzyou Solotwinska. The booty is not yet ascertained. Several divisions report of having captured 3,000 prisoners each.

GERMAN SUBMARINE BURNS ITSELF

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 28.—A despatch from Paris says that a German submarine has run aground west of Calais. After setting the boat afire with the whole of the petroltanks they had previously opened, the crew landed and were made prisoners.

GERMAN S S, BATAVIER'S FATE

KOKUSAI-REUTER

London, July 29.—The Admiralty announces that a British submarine captured the German steamer Batavier II. on Friday in the North Sea. Owing to gun fire damages, it was impossible to bring in and the vessel was scuttled.

PACIFIST MACDONALD INTRODUCES A RESOLUTION

London, July 27.—In the House of Commons, Mr. Ramsay MacDonold, on behalf of the quintet pacifist members of the House, introduced a resolution asking that the House endorse the sentiments of the Reichstag resolution cabled on July 16, and restate the peace aims, also that the forthcoming Allied Conference on war aims include democratic representatives besides diplomats.

Mr. Asquith traced the origin of the said Reichstag resolution to which, he declared, too much importance was attached. Peace was of supreme interest for mankind, he said, but all-important condition was that it must not defeat the purpose for which the great nations warred and did not render wasteful the great sacrifices.

Mr. Asquith welcomed the forthcoming Allied Conference which was initiated by Russia where the aims will be re-stated because of the new facts with practical bearing which recently have emerged; namely, the cessation of the Russian autocracy and the entry of the United States.

The allies forces comprise an overwhelming majority of the free peoples of the world, he said, and the policy of this great unprecedented aggregation of the free peoples was solely the freedom of the world. No peace is worth having which would restore the precarious status quo ante bellum and which would leave the small states at the mercy of the dynastic intrigue or military coercion. The governing principle should be the interests and wishes of the people affected by the change in the re-arrangement of the map. He asked explicitly whether Germany is prepared to adhere to the policy and principle of the Reichstag resolution, although Germany has not disclosed that she is prepared.

Mr. Asquith further stated that such avowal would bring peace within sight. In the meantime, we would not help the advent by giving an impression that we are faltering in our determination or are doubtful to carry out our burden we have taken up.

Mr. G. J. Wardle, on behalf of the Labourites, associated himself with Mr. Asquith in the desire for peace based upon the achievement of the purposes for which we have started the war. He declared that Mr. MacDonald's resolution is a great mistake. British labour forces have never participated in any imperialistic or jingoistic aims but in real war of self-defence (cheers). British labour forces have inflexibly resolved, he added, on the victory, while Mr. MacDonald and his friends have expressed the objects as a pious hope. The labour forces have realised that these objects are only obtainable by fighting (cheers). The German people are not only seeking to destroy their own shackles but to impose them upon other people.
